On the second count, however, the jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs for $150 damages for the defendants' failure to release the deed of trust of record. Both parties filed motions for new trial, and the court sustained the defendants' motion for a new trial of the second count, but overruled the plaintiffs' motion for a new trial of the first count, whereupon plaintiffs duly perfected an appeal to this court. It is not necessary to go over the testimony in this case any further than to state that it appears that, subsequent to the giving of the deed of trust which secured a note given by plaintiffs for $1,500, one of the plaintiffs, John Warner, the husband of the other, went to the office of Hammell & Karleskind, real estate agents, who are two of the defendants here, and, talking about the debt, was told that he and his wife owed the firm $65 for commissions in placing this loan, which it seems was a renewal of a former loan on the same property. Whereupon John Warner gave his note for the $65. The secured loan not being paid when due, and plaintiffs having been notified that the holder of the note desired payment, the property was advertised for sale; the note not having been paid. Before the advertised sale took place, Mrs. Warner went to the office of Hammell & Karleskind and was shown the account, which covered the note, interest, costs of advertising, and a fee of $5 for drawing up the advertisement. She was also asked what she was going to do about the $65 note, which was then shown to her. It appears from the evidence that this was the first time Mrs. Warner knew of this note. She became angry when it was shown to her, and tore it up. One of the defendants picked up the pieces and fastened them together, and taking up the matter with Mrs. Warner, according to her testimony, the firm agreed to accept $25 in payment of the note, which she agreed to pay, but according to the testimony of the defendants she agreed to pay them $40 if they would give her two or three weeks to pay the difference between the money which she had brought with her and the amount which they claimed. Thereupon the note for $65 was turned over to Mrs. Warner or her husband, and she paid defendants $1,550, which was all the money she had with her. According to the statement which was given her at the time there was due on the note $1,500 principal, $37.50 interest, $26.86 for advertising the sale, and a fee of $5 for drawing up notice of sale, a total of $1,569.30, and also $40 on the note of John Warner, her husband, a total of both accounts of $1,609.36. According to the defendants, there was still due them $59.36 on the whole transaction, or $19.36 on account of the deed of trust and the legal costs connected with the advertised sale under that. It is claimed by the plaintiffs that the $1,550 which was paid was a settlement and was received in full in payment of the whole transaction, and that one of the partners had told the attorney for the Warners that it was all a mistake to claim anything from them, that they had paid up in full. On the other hand, the defendants claim that the $1,550 was paid on account merely, and that there was still due them on the deed of trust and the legal costs connected with it $19.36, or on the whole transaction between them and the Warners $59.36. They also gave evidence to the effect that the partner who had said the matter was settled was mistaken, and that the day after he had made that statement to plaintiffs' attorney over the telephone another partner had called on that attorney and explained the mistake. The court as chancellor found for defendants, while the jury found for plaintiffs. Thereupon the court, on motion of defendants, set aside the finding of the jury and awarded a new trial as before stated. The record contains the recital that the court sustained defendants' motion for new trial, "because the verdict is against the evidence and against the weight of evidence, and against the law under the evidence." In the record proper it is set out that the motion was overruled, obviously a clerical error, as other parts of the record and briefs and argument of counsel show that defendants' motion for a new trial was sustained "for the reasons set out in the first point of defendants' motion."

L. P. Crigler and D. Murphy, for appellants. J. L. Hornsby, for respondents.

REYNOLDS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). Argument is made by the counsel for the appellants that, as the court had overruled demurrers interposed to the evidence at the close of plaintiffs' case, as well as at the close of the whole case, that its action was tantamount to holding that the plaintiff had made out its case. That does not follow. It has been held by our Supreme Court that: "Strictly speaking, sustaining a demurrer to the evidence in an equity case means the same that it means in a law case. It means that there is no evidence tending to sustain the plaintiffs' case, and therefore none for the trier of fact to weigh. In a law case the court might with propriety overrule a demurrer to the plaintiffs' evidence and the jury might with equal propriety find for the defendant; and the same is true in an equity case. The court might overrule the demurrer to the plaintiffs' evidence, and yet, when the case is submitted on the evidence, find for the defendant. In each case it means that as a matter of law there is some evidence to be weighed, but as a matter of fact the evidence when weighed by the trier of fact is not satisfactory." Anthony v. Kennard Building Co., 188 Mo. 704, loc. cit. 718, 87 S. W. 921, 924. There is no incongruity, therefore, in the action of the court in at first overruling the demurrer to the evidence taken on each count and subsequently finding for the defendants, and in refusing to take the case from the jury on the last count of the petition, and then setting that verdict aside. As will be noticed from the statement of the facts, which we have given very briefly and which we do not think it serviceable to extend, we find no error in the action of the trial court in awarding a new trial. The evidence was conflicting, and it was for the trial judge, if he considered the verdict contrary to the weight of the evidence, to set it aside.

Its judgment is affirmed, and the case remanded for further proceedings. All concur.

COOK et al. v. SPENCE et al.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 2, 1909.)

1. COURTS (§ 17*)—JURISDICTION OF SUBJECT-MATTER.

A court of general jurisdiction is possessed of jurisdiction of the subject-matter if it has jurisdiction to hear and determine causes of the general class of the one under consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 46; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

2. APPEARANCE (§ 19*)—WHAT CONSTITUTES—ACQUISITION OF JURISDICTION.

Though the circuit court of B. county had no original jurisdiction in unlawful detainer touching lands in S. county, it yet had power to hear and determine the general class of actions of unlawful detainer, and, where the parties appeared in the circuit court of B. county on a change of venue, and proceeded to trial, the appearance of the parties gave the court jurisdiction over the person by consent, and the defendant thereby waived his right to object to the jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appearance, Cent. Dig. § 79; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1232*)—AFFIRMANCE OF JUDGMENT—EFFECT—APPEAL BOND.

Where a judgment was affirmed on appeal and determined to be valid, and the covenant of the sureties on the appeal bond was to pay a "valid" judgment, if such should be obtained against their principal, the judgment was within the covenant of the sureties.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Stoddard County; J. L. Fort, Judge.

Action by Laura Cook and another against K. O. Spence and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant sureties appeal. Affirmed.

Wommack & Welborn, for appellants. N. A. Mozley and H. H. Larimore, for respondents.

NORTONI, J. This is a suit on an appeal bond. The plaintiffs recovered, and defendant sureties appeal. The principal in the bond abandoned the case after judgment against him in the circuit court, and the sureties only prosecute the appeal. The bond sued on was given upon the appeal of the case of Cook v. Penrod from a justice of the peace to the circuit court of Stoddard county. It appears that Cook instituted an action of unlawful detainer against the defendant Penrod before a justice of the peace of Stoddard county. The plaintiff having prevailed in that action before the justice, the defendant, Penrod, perfected his appeal from the judgment of the justice to the circuit court. In connection with that appeal, the present defendants, Spence and Harper, executed the appeal bond now in suit as sureties for the defendant Penrod. Afterwards, Hon. Robert L. Wilson was selected as special judge to try the issues in the unlawful detainer case. It appears the case was tried before Judge Wilson, and he gave judgment for the defendant therein. From that judgment, an appeal was perfected to this court. This court reversed the judgment referred to and remanded the cause, as will appear by reference to Cook v. Penrod, 111 Mo. App. 128, 85 S. W. 676. Thereafter Judge Wilson, acting as special judge in the cause, declined to further proceed with the same; in other words, he disqualified himself, on his own motion, from sitting as special judge therein, and ordered the venue changed to the circuit court of Butler county. After the case of Cook v. Penrod for an unlawful detainer reached the circuit court of Butler county, and when it was upon the docket for trial, the defendant, Penrod, through his counsel, sought and obtained a continuance to a succeeding term of the Butler circuit court. Thereafter the cause came on for trial in Butler county, and the defendant, Penrod, together with his counsel, appeared and participated therein. The trial resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff for the possession of the real estate in controversy which was situate in Stoddard county, together with certain interests, damages, rents, and costs amounting in the aggregate to $964. From that judgment the defendant, Penrod, appealed to this court, as will appear by reference to the case of Cook v. Penrod, 129 Mo. App. 377, 108 S. W. 583.

The principal argument advanced in this court for a reversal of the judgment on that appeal was to the effect that the circuit court of Butler county was without jurisdiction to proceed and give judgment in the cause referred to, for the reason that Hon. R. L. Wilson, the special judge, was without authority under our statutes to order a change of venue from the circuit court of Stoddard county on his own motion upon feeling himself disqualified because of interest, etc. On that appeal this court stated the question for decision, and expressed its views thereon in the following language: "The only point in the brief which need be adverted to as involving a question not previously decided is the contention that, as Hon. R. L. Wilson had disqualified himself to sit as special judge on account of his interest in the case, he had no authority to change the venue to Cape Girardeau in the first instance and Butler county in the second. Whatever merit there might have been in this position, if properly taken and held, the point was undoubtedly waived by the appearance of Penrod in the circuit court of Butler county and his contest of the issues there. Before he raised any objection to the jurisdiction of said court, he had been granted one continuance, and subsequently was granted another, and afterwards participated in the trial. Neither did he make any objection to Judge Wilson's ordering the venue changed to Butler county. Hence it follows he waived the point he now makes by not raising it at the time in the Stoddard circuit court. Haxton v. Kansas City, 190 Mo. 53, 88 S. W. 714." The judgment in the unlawful detainer case was affirmed by this court on the reasoning above, and the present plaintiff, who was plaintiff in that action, instituted the present suit on the appeal bond given by Penrod upon appealing the case from the justice of the peace of Stoddard county in the first instance.

Upon a trial of the issues in the present action on the appeal bond the circuit court gave judgment for the plaintiff. From that judgment the sureties on the appeal bond alone appeal, and insist that there has been no breach of their obligation for the reason the circuit court of Butler county was without jurisdiction to give a valid judgment against Penrod, the principal in the bond in the unlawful detainer suit of Cook v. Penrod, above referred to. Quoting from appellant's brief, they say: "The defense below, and the one to be urged here, is that the circuit court of Butler county did not have jurisdiction to render a judgment in the principal action which would be binding or affect these defendants as sureties on the appeal bond of W. R. Penrod. It may be simply stated that if the circuit court of Butler county had jurisdiction and authority under the law to render the judgment, which it did render, and thereby make these defendants liable as sureties on said appeal bond to pay said judgment, or any part thereof, then the judgment of the circuit court in this case is right, but, if the Butler circuit court did not have jurisdiction to render said judgment, then the judgment in this case is wrong and should be reversed." This being a suit on the appeal bond, it is important to examine the condition of that obligation. The bond referred to is in the penal sum of $500, and conditioned as follows: "Now, if the said William Richard Penrod shall prosecute his appeal with effect and without delay, neither commit nor suffer to be committed any waste or damage on the premises whereof restitution is adjudged, and shall pay all rents and profits, damages and costs that may be adjudged against him, and shall otherwise abide the judgment of the circuit court in said cause, then this recognition to be void"— and, of course, otherwise the bond shall remain in full force and effect.

Now it appears from the condition of the bond above quoted that the present defendants as sureties covenanted to pay all rents and profits, damages, and costs that might be adjudged against the defendant, Penrod, in the unlawful detainer action. From an inspection of the record we ascertain that a court of competent jurisdiction—that is, the circuit court of Butler county—entered a judgment against the principal in the bond, Penrod, for the sum of $904, damages, rents, interest, and cost in that proceeding, and that none of this amount has ever been paid by him. That judgment when attacked in a direct proceeding by appeal was affirmed in this court, as will appear by reference to Cook v. Penrod, 129 Mo. App. 377, 108 S. W. 583, and the identical argument now advanced against the jurisdiction of the Butler circuit court therein was rejected. It is very true that under our statutes the circuit court of Stoddard county alone was possessed in the first instance of jurisdiction of the appeal from a justice of the peace in an unlawful detainer action concerning land situate in that county. However this may be, the circuit court of Butler county is a court of general jurisdiction, and was possessed of jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the action after it became lodged there. The doctrine in this state is that a court of general jurisdiction is possessed of jurisdiction of the subject-matter if it has jurisdiction to hear and determine causes of the general class of the one under consideration. Although the circuit court of Butler county had no original jurisdiction in the first instance pertaining to the controversy in unlawful detainer touching lands situate in Stoddard county, it nevertheless had jurisdiction of the general class of such actions and power to hear and determine them when presented. Posthuma v. Ghiselin, 97 Mo. 420, 10 S. W. 482; Columbia Brewery Co. v. Forgey (App.) 120 S. W. 625. We regard it wholly immaterial as to how the cause of Cook v. Penrod in unlawful detainer found its way into the circuit court of Butler county. It may be that Judge Wilson, the special judge, was without authority to order the venue changed from the circuit court of Stoddard county. This question we will not examine, and on it we express no opinion. It is sufficient to say that the circuit court of Butler county is possessed of power to hear and determine the general class of actions of unlawful detainer and that the parties appeared in that court and proceeded to trial of the issue in that cause. Of course, the appearance of the parties gives jurisdiction over the person by consent, and the defendant, Penrod, thereby waived his right to complain. The judgment in that case is valid as to him. Cook v. Penrod, 129 Mo. App. 377, 108 S. W. 583. However all of this may be, we regard this matter as immaterial at this time when the judgment of the circuit court of Butler county in the case of Cook v. Penrod is subjected to a collateral attack as in the present proceeding. That judgment was affirmed when assailed by a direct attack on appeal, and it was determined to be a valid and binding judgment upon the parties. The covenant of these sureties on the appeal bond was to pay a valid judgment, if such should be obtained against Penrod, their principal, in the bond. It may be that the question as to the validity of that judgment is not res adjudicata in the present action in so far as these sureties are concerned who were not parties to that suit. Be this as it may, this court has declared that judgment to be valid against Penrod and will adhere to that ruling.

The judgment in that case being valid as to Penrod, it is within the covenant of the sureties, and they should respond in accord with the condition of their undertaking.

The judgment in the present case is for the right party, and should be affirmed. It is so ordered. All concur.

F. H. SMITH CO. v. LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 2, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 16, 1909.)

1. SALES (§§ 291, 296*) — "STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU"—NATURE OF RIGHT.

The "right of stoppage in transitu" exists where the goods have not been paid for and the buyer is insolvent, but the right presupposes the vesting of title, but may be exercised before the expiration of the term of credit or the maturity of the buyer's note, at any time before the goods come to the possession of the buyer.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6669-6672.]

2. SALES (§ 291*)—STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU—NATURE OF RIGHT.

The refusal of a buyer to honor drafts drawn by the seller for the price is not in itself evidence of the insolvency of the buyer essential to justify the exercise of the right of stoppage in transitu.

3. CARRIERS (§ 94*)—NONDELIVERY OF GOODS—ACTION BY BUYER—EVIDENCE.

Whether a buyer suing a carrier for non-delivery of goods had advanced money to the seller on account of the goods is a question of fact for the trial court to determine.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 94.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 386*)—TRIAL BY COURT—REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTIONS.

The court may refuse a requested instruction contrary to the facts found.

5. SALES (§ 218½*) — DELIVERY — PRESUMPTIONS.

The delivery by the seller to the buyer of a bill of lading is strong presumptive evidence that title passes to the buyer named as consignee, but this presumption may be overthrown by evidence, and must be determined by the facts peculiar to the transaction itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 218½.*]

6. CARRIERS (§ 93*)—DELIVERY—LIABILITY.

A carrier, who has issued a bill of lading in favor of the buyer of goods, acts at its peril when, as carrier or as warehouseman, it diverts the goods, and it must ascertain the facts, and its justification in diverting the goods turns, not on its knowledge or want of knowledge of the facts, but on the facts themselves.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Moses N. Sale, Judge.

Action by the F. H. Smith Company against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Action by plaintiff, appellant here, against the respondent, to recover the value of three car loads of poplar lumber, plaintiff averring in the first count of its amended petition that the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railroad Company, on the 23d day of May, 1906, received from the Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company, at Atlanta, Ga., consigned to plaintiff, a car load of poplar lumber for transportation and delivery to plaintiff at East St. Louis, Ill., and issued its bill of lading for the same, the lumber being contained in a car marked "Wabash, No. 66923"; that the bill of lading shows on its face that the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railroad Company was to deliver the car to the defendant, Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, and that that defendant was to deliver the car of lumber to plaintiff at East St. Louis; that defendant received and accepted the car for transportation to plaintiff at East St. Louis, but that it has failed and neglected to deliver it to plaintiff; that the plaintiff has made demand on defendant for the lumber contained in the car, and defendant refused to deliver said car load of lumber to plaintiff. The petition further avers that plaintiff "has purchased said bill of lading and the lumber contained in said car, and that he is the lawful and rightful owner of said lumber and said bill of lading." Averring that the lumber is of the reasonable value of $417.76, plaintiff demands judgment for that amount, with interest. The second and third counts are similar to the first, with the exception that the lumber claimed in the second count was in a car marked "Penna., No. 76109," and valued at $441, and in the third count the car is marked "Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis—6552," and the lumber valued at $423.05.

The action seems to have been dismissed as to the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railroad Company, and thereafter prosecuted against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company alone. The latter company answered by a general denial, and by the specific averment that plaintiff did not at any time own or have any interest in, or have the right of possession of, the lumber described in the several counts of the petition. The case was tried before the court, a jury having been waived; and, while a great deal of testimony was introduced, the case appears to have been ultimately submitted on an agreed statement of facts. A comparison of that with the testimony shows that this stipulation covers practically all the essential facts. It is only necessary to add to it that, in addition to the facts there agreed upon, it is not disputed that before sending the telegram referred to in the stipulation as of date May 29th plaintiff, on May 28th, had sent to the Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company, at Atlanta, Ga., a telegram as follows: "Cannot accept drafts drawn; stop shipping poplar; grade not right."

This stipulation is as follows:

"A number of cars were shipped by Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company, and drafts were, on presentation by St. Louis bank, either paid or accepted by F. H. Smith Company, and bills of lading covering such cars were received by F. H. Smith Company, and the cars delivered to the F. H. Smith Company by the railroad on surrender bills of lading.

"Three Cars in Question.

"Wabash 66923. Lumber by Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company was delivered into this car at Atlanta, Ga., May 23, 1906, consigned by said lumber company to said F. H. Smith Company, East St. Louis, Ill. Bill of lading was issued on that date accordingly. Drafts for $141.36, dated Atlanta, Ga., May 22, 1906, payable on June 7, 1906, to order of Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company, stating on its face 'one-half car from Atlanta, Georgia, W. R. R. 66923,' drawn on F. H. Smith Company, Commercial Building, St. Louis, Mo., drawn by Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company, of Atlanta, Ga., and another draft for $141.37, dated May 22, 1906, payable June 6, 1907, to order of Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company, for one-half car from Atlanta, Ga., W. R. R. 66923, drawn on F. H. Smith Company by Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company, were transmitted for collection at Atlanta May 22, 1906, and were received and presented May 24th and 25th, respectively, by the National Bank of Commerce to F. H. Smith Company for acceptance, and acceptance and payment by F. H. Smith Company were refused, and drafts were at once returned to shippers at Atlanta. On May 24th F. H. Smith Company, which had on that day received bill of lading for this car, turned same over to defendant, requesting reconsignment from East St. Louis, Ill., to St. Louis Car Company, St.

Louis, Mo. On May 28th the Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company instructed the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway Company, the initial carrier, and the defendant, the next connecting and final carrier, to hold shipment subject to the order of the shipper, telling them that the shipment was the property of the shipper. The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company held the car pursuant to this instruction until June 6th, when it was ordered diverted, and was diverted by defendant on the order of the shipper to Steger, Ill. On May 29th F. H. Smith Company telegraphed Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company at Atlanta, Ga., as follows: 'Will accept no more drafts or any more poplar. Stop. This imperative.' On May 29th the car arrived at destination in East St. Louis, Ill., where the car was held by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, as above stated, subject to instructions from shipper. On May 31st Mr. Creelman, of the Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company, met Mr. Smith, of the F. H. Smith Company, at St. Louis, and a settlement of some sort was reached in regard to cars that had been shipped, and, as the F. H. Smith Company contends, in regard to car Wabash 66923. The Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company, however, says that no settlement was made on that day, or at any time, for this car. On June 6th the car was diverted by defendant to Steger, Ill., as above stated. The drafts for this car were never paid or taken up by F. H. Smith Company.

"Pennsylvania 76169. Shipped by Kennesaw Company to Smith Company from Atlanta to East St. Louis May 22, 1906, by way of Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis and Louisville & Nashville Railroad; consigned straight to F. H. Smith Company; bill of lading issued. Draft for $208.58, dated May 21, 1906, payable June 5, 1906, on account car Pennsylvania 76169, was presented by National Bank of Commerce in St. Louis to F. H. Smith Company on May 24th, and acceptance or payment thereof refused. On May 24th F. H. Smith Company, having bill of lading for this car, inclosed same to Louisville & Nashville agent here, instructing diversion from East St. Louis, Ill., to St. Louis Car Company, St. Louis. May 28th shipper instructed Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis and Louisville & Nashville to hold this car subject to instruction from shipper. Car ordered by Louisville & Nashville so held. May 29th car arrived at destination at East St. Louis, Ill. On May 29th F. H. Smith Company telegraphed Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company at Atlanta, Ga., as follows: 'Will accept no more drafts or any more poplar. Stop. This is imperative.' On May 31st Mr. Creelman met Mr. Smith, as above stated, and some sort of settlement was reached. According to plaintiff, it covered this car; according to Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company, it did not cover this car. On June 6th this car, which had been held since May 29th, as instructed, subject to order from shipper, was, on the order of the shipper, diverted from East St. Louis to Steger, Ill., by the defendant.

"N. C. & St. L. 6552. Shipped from Atlanta, Ga., to East St. Louis, Ill., May 23, 1906, by Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company to F. H. Smith Company by way of Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis and Louisville & Nashville Railroad; bill of lading issued, consigning shipment to F. H. Smith Company. On May 25th draft for $289.81, payable June 9, 1906, to the order of the Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company, 'in full car from Atlanta, Georgia, N. C. & St. L. 6552,' was drawn on F. H. Smith Company by Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company, and was presented on May 28, 1906, by National Bank of Commerce in St. Louis to F. H. Smith Company. F. H. Smith Company refused to accept or pay draft, and the draft was at once returned by the bank to shipper. On same day, May 28th, F. H. Smith Company advised Louisville & Nashville Railroad that it held bill of lading for this car, but did not surrender bill of lading with its advice, which was by letter, and asked diversion of shipment from East St. Louis, Ill., to St. Louis Car Company, St. Louis, Mo. On the same day, May 28th, shipper instructed Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis and Louisville & Nashville not to deliver car to F. H. Smith Company, unless instructed so to do by shipper. May 29th car arrived at destination, East St. Louis. May 29th F. H. Smith Company wired Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company at Atlanta, Ga., as follows: 'Will accept no more drafts or any more poplar. Stop. This is imperative.' May 31st the Creelman-Smith settlement above referred to took place at St. Louis. On June 6th the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, having held the car subject to shipper's instructions, received instructions from shipper to divert from East St. Louis to Steger, Ill., which it did on that date."

At the close of the testimony plaintiff prayed the court for the following declarations of law: "(1) The court declares the law to be that, if the plaintiff, who was the consignee named in the bills of lading, had the bills of lading in his possession, and had advanced money to the shipper on account of the lumber contained in these cars, then the defendant had no right to divert these cars from the plaintiff, and the judgment must be for the plaintiff. (2) The court declares the law to be that, if the plaintiff, who was the consignee named in the bills of lading, had the bills of lading in his possession, and had paid the shipper for the lumber contained in the cars covered by the bills of lading, no matter whether the plaintiff at one time refused to pay for the said lumber or not, if, as a matter of fact, the said lumber was paid for, then the defendant had no right to divert these cars from the plaintiff, and the judgment must be for the plaintiff." The court refused to give them, plaintiff excepting. Thereupon the court gave an instruction to the effect that plaintiff was not entitled to recover from the defendant, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. Exception was duly saved to the giving of this instruction, and, the court finding for defendant, entered judgment accordingly. Plaintiff having filed its motion for a new trial, and that being overruled and exception duly saved, has duly prosecuted its appeal to this court.

REYNOLDS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). At the outset of the case, it might be as well to observe that the very essential element involved in the right of stoppage in transit—that is to say, insolvency of the buyer—is not present in this case. The right of stoppage in transit (to quote from a very concise elementary work, Brown, American Law of Sales, p. 185) "exists where the parties live at a distance from each other; the goods are in course of transportation for delivery; have not been paid for; and the buyer is insolvent. In such circumstances the seller may retake the goods at any time before they come to the possession of the buyer. The right, like that of lien, presupposes the vesting of title, but it may be exercised before the expiration of the term of credit or the maturity of the buyer's note." There is no evidence in this case tending to show the insolvency of the buyer, plaintiff here. All that appears is that it refused to honor the drafts, not in itself evidence of insolvency. The case, therefore, turns upon the question as to whether or not there was a consummated sale and delivery of the lumber by the Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company to plaintiff, and whether that sale was subsequently set aside and repudiated by the parties to it, and, conceding that to have been done, whether a settlement and agreement was made between the parties at the interview which took place between them on the 31st of May, or before the 6th of June, by which title to the lumber in controversy again passed to the plaintiff.

It is argued by counsel for the appellant that, as by virtue of the bills of lading, executed by the carrier, plaintiff had acquired title to the lumber, and the defendant became the agent of the plaintiff to deliver the lumber to it, delivery by the consignor to the carrier was equivalent to delivery to the plaintiff. Plaintiff endeavored to cover this position by the instructions asked, but which the trial court refused to give. In the written opinion filed by the learned trial judge, which is in the record before us, he states as a reason for his refusal to give the first instruction that it "is inapplicable to the facts in the case, as there is no proof before me that the plaintiff had advanced any money to the shipper on account of the lumber contained in the cars in controversy. The proof is directly to the contrary that every draft drawn on account of the shipments in controversy was refused and returned to the drawer, and that was the state of affairs when the shipper notified the railroad company in effect that it, the lumber company, was the owner of the property in question. If any money was advanced on account of these cars, it was advanced after May 29th." As the question of whether plaintiff "had advanced money to the shipper on account of the lumber contained in these cars" was a question of fact, it was within the province of the trial court to determine it, and it was within his province to refuse to declare, as this instruction did, contrary to what he found to be a fact. Hence this declaration was properly refused.

Passing on to the second declaration of law asked by plaintiff, the trial judge states that he refused that "because, as I have stated, the mere possession of the bills of lading is not conclusive evidence of ownership. Neither do I regard it as immaterial, as stated in the instruction, that plaintiff at one time refused to pay for the lumber. It makes a great deal of difference in my opinion as to whether the lumber was paid for or not under the contract which the plaintiff company had with Creelman; and, if the lumber as a matter of fact was paid for after May 28th or 29th, certainly the duty rested upon the plaintiff to advise the railroad company as to its rights." It will be seen that the learned trial judge, in passing on each of these instructions, holds that possession of bills of lading is not conclusive evidence of passing of title or vesting of title in the holder. This position is earnestly controverted by counsel for appellant, and he cites many authorities which he claims are in support of his contention. Those cited are 1 Hutchinson on Carriers, pp. 210, 211, pars. 193, 194; Benjamin on Sales (7th Ed.) § 804, par. 789; Mechem on Sales, §§ 740, 788, 789; Tiedeman on Sales, last paragraph, § 85, p. 121; second paragraph, § 332, p. 537; as well as the case of Wigton v. Bowley, 130 Mass. 252. In fact these citations are the ones relied on by counsel for all his contentions. An examination of the authorities cited, and even of the quotations from them by counsel, fails to sustain his contention. All of the authorities cited, and, so far as we know, all authorities, agree that, while the delivery of the bills of lading is strong presumptive evidence that title has passed to the party named therein or his assignee, yet this is a presumption which may be overthrown by evidence, and is to be determined by the facts peculiar to the transaction itself. Thus in Southern Express Co. v. Dickson, 94 U. S. 549, 24 L. Ed. 285, the Supreme Court of the United States holds that the consignment by bill of lading is prima facie evidence only of the investiture of ownership of the goods in transit in the consignee.

Our court, in Frazier v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Ry. Co., 104 Mo. App. 355, 78 S. W. 679, has distinctly held that the issuance of a bill of lading in the name of the consignee would not have conclusively conveyed to him title or right of possession to the goods shipped; "for a bill of lading is but prima facie evidence of the intent of the vendor to part with the title or interest in the property for which it was issued, and extraneous evidence is admissible for the purpose of showing the true intent of the parties." Scharff v. Meyer, 133 Mo. 428, 34 S. W. 858, 54 Am. St. Rep. 672, is cited in support of this proposition. So also in Strauss, Pritz & Co. v. Hirsch & Co., 63 Mo. App. 95, the Kansas City Court of Appeals held that the vesting of title to goods may depend upon the purchaser's performance of some condition, in which case possession before the performance thereof does not pass title. In Strother v. McMullen Lumber Co., 200 Mo. 647, 98 S. W. 34, our Supreme Court has held that the general rule laid down in the books is that the passing of title is one of intention, and that such intention must be deduced from the contract, construed in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, including the nature and character of the business and the subject-matter to which the contract relates. The discussion of the authorities in this Strother Case by Judge Gantt, who delivered the opinion, is so full that it is not necessary to refer to any other in support of the position taken by the trial judge on it as to the first declaration asked and repeated in his objections to the second declaration asked.

When we come to consider the second instruction, however, as a whole, and which the court refused to give, we are compelled to hold this refusal error. Under the facts in the case the lumber was most certainly delivered to plaintiff by turning it over to the railroad company, the initial carrier, consigned to plaintiff, and sending the latter the bill of lading, and prima facie that carried title. But it appears by the evidence that plaintiff had notified the Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company the day before not to ship any more lumber pending the adjustment of certain differences between these parties. There is a question that suggests itself to us from the evidence—whether this direction applied to this particular shipment, or was to apply to others subsequently to be made. Passing that, however, as not settled by any finding, and as rather ambiguous, the most that can be said in favor of the Kennesaw

Hardwood Lumber Company is that the title to the lumber was not to vest in plaintiff until it had accepted the drafts drawn on it, payable June 6th, but to be accepted at sight. Possibly the evidence in the case would justify the conclusion that title was not to vest in the plaintiff company until it had paid, or certainly until it had accepted, the drafts. The inference may be drawn from the evidence in the case that the sale was on credit, with the understanding that the drafts due from 5 to 10 days ahead should be accepted at sight. Assuming, however, that the trier of the fact might find that it was a condition precedent that the draft should be accepted on presentation, and might further find that plaintiff's notification to the Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company not to ship any more lumber, and that it would not accept drafts, applied to these particular shipments, and amounted to a repudiation of the sale, so that the title did not vest in plaintiff, and left the title in such shape that the Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company, as consignor, might order the railroad company to divert shipment to some other consignee, there is certainly evidence for plaintiff tending to prove that on May 31st the lumber in dispute was included in the settlement made, and that plaintiff then paid for it. If this is true, as plaintiff still held the bills of lading, or, more correctly, still held one, and had turned over two of them to the railroad company defendant, with orders to ship the lumber to a consignee designated by plaintiff, certainly title to the lumber then vested in plaintiff on May 31st. In the second declaration of law asked by the plaintiff the court ignores this proposition, in refusing to declare that if plaintiff had paid the shipper for the lumber contained in the cars covered in the bills of lading, then the lumber became the property of the plaintiff, and defendant had no right to divert it by shipping it to the order of the Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company. We cannot agree with the finding of the learned trial judge that plaintiff, or any one else, was bound to notify defendant of this new deal, and that failure to do so justified the defendant in diverting the shipment on the order of the shipper. Under the facts in evidence the railroad company held these cars, and did not reconsign them to the Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company's order until June 6th; and, if there had been any settlement on May 31st, it is very certain that there was no title at that time in the Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company, but title was in plaintiff, and the defendant company, in obeying the order of the Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company to ship to some other consignee, did so at its peril. The defendant would only be exonerated from liability to plaintiff in case the Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company, on June 6th, was the owner of the title to the property and plaintiff was not. If there had been a settlement on May 31st as to these very cars, then the title on June 6th was in plaintiff, and when defendant reconsigned the lumber at the shipper's order, it converted it as against plaintiff. The learned trial judge, declining to pass on the question as to whether or not the settlement of May 31st covered the lumber in these cars, and resting his refusal to give the instruction on the proposition that the defendant was not chargeable with notice of that settlement until it had been communicated to it, was in error. Having issued bills of lading in favor of the plaintiff, the defendant, either as a common carrier or as a warehouseman and bailee, acted at its peril when, in disregard of the bills of lading and on the order of the consignor alone, it diverted the shipment. It was bound to ascertain the facts in the case, and its justification must turn in this case, not on its knowledge or want of knowledge of the facts, but on the real fact itself. The second declaration of law prayed for by plaintiff presented that hypothesis of the case, and there was error in refusing it.

The plaintiff under the facts in the case, to repeat, held prima facie title under its bills of lading, and when the railroad company defendant, on June 6th, obeyed the Kennesaw Hardwood Lumber Company's order to reconsign it, it did so at its peril. It was bound to know, bound to inquire, and bound to find out for its own protection, whether it was justified in ignoring the apparent title held by plaintiff as holder of the bills of lading, and that is a fact which must be submitted and passed on under the evidence in the case by the trier of fact. For this reason the finding and judgment of the circuit court is set aside, and the cause remanded for new trial.

Action by Charles J. Heinz against the United Railways Company of St. Louis. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Boyle & Priest and F. J. Whitelaw, for appellant. Blevins & Jamison, for respondent.

GOODE, J. This plaintiff was hurt December 5, 1907, in a fall from one of defendant's trolley cars. The exact point where the accident occurred is in dispute, but it was somewhere about the intersection of Hickory street and Jefferson avenue, in the city of St. Louis. Jefferson avenue is a north and south thoroughfare, and Hickory street an east and west one. Where the two streets intersect, there is a jog in Hickory; its intersection with the east line of Jefferson avenue being some 50 feet south of where it opens into Jefferson on the west side of the latter thoroughfare. Plaintiff lived on west Hickory street, but the evidence for him is that he attempted to alight at the northeast corner of east Hickory street and Jefferson avenue, and was just at said spot. Plaintiff and three other men who had been attending a lodge meeting in the southern part of the city boarded a north-bound Jefferson street car at Arsenal street and traveled northward. When they passed Rutger street, which is the first one crossing Jefferson south of east Hickory, plaintiff rang the bell for a stop at east Hickory, and, as the car drew near that crossing, the conductor also rang a bell signaling the motorman to stop. Plaintiff went out of the car through the front door, stepped down to the lower step, the car being at that time still moving, but at the speed of a slow walk, and, just as plaintiff attempted to put his foot on the ground in his descent from the steps, the speed of the car was accelerated by a sudden movement forward as though the motorman had released the air which held the brakes. Plaintiff was thrown to the street, his nose broken, his tongue cut, and he was dazed and otherwise injured.

Testimony for the defense, as given by the motorman and conductor, is that, instead of plaintiff alighting at the intersection of east Hickory and Jefferson, the car had passed east Hickory, and was about halfway between it and west Hickory, and in the act of slowing down to stop at the latter street to allow plaintiff to alight, when he stepped off the car, and fell to the ground. It is apparent the evidence is contradictory as to the cause of the accident. Plaintiff's averments of negligence related to the sudden acceleration of the speed of the car as he was in the act of getting off; and the testimony for him would suffice to prove this occurred, thereby proving his injury was due to the negligence of the motorman, inasmuch as he was getting off at the front of the car under the motorman's eyes. Of course, it was incumbent on the motorman to allow him to alight and not to start the car as he was in the act of doing so. On the contrary, if plaintiff attempted to get off while the car was in motion, but slowing down, and fell as he did so without any careless increase of the car's speed, no case was made against defendant. We are urged to deny a recovery on the ground of lack of evidence to support the case stated in the petition. This cannot be done without ignoring as worthless plaintiff's own testimony, and that of other witnesses who corroborated him, more or less. Whether any inconsistencies or discrepancies occurred in the testimony for plaintiff was for the jury to weigh.

The only other exception which need be noticed is the instruction on the measure of damages. It should be stated by way of premise the petition alleged plaintiff lost two weeks' time and his earnings of $2.50 a day during that period; that his injuries were treated by a physician, and, on account of the services of the latter, plaintiff had become indebted to him for the reasonable value of the treatment, to wit, $50. The instruction on the measure of damages told the jury to assess damages for any loss of earnings the jury might believe had been occasioned by the injuries and the reasonable expense, if any, he had incurred for medical treatment. The exception to the instruction is based on failure to limit recovery for loss of earnings and medical services corresponding to the damages charged in the petition to have been sustained in consequence of those items. We do not see how, in the face of the decisions of the Supreme Court in Smoot v. Kansas City, 194 Mo. 513, 522, 92 S. W. 363, and Tinkle v. Railroad, 212 Mo. 445, 471, 110 S. W. 1086, a reversal of the judgment on account of the instruction on the measure of damages can be escaped. In the first of those cases the Supreme Court condemned as erroneous an instruction which did not limit plaintiff's amount of recovery for loss of time to the amount claimed in his petition, and in the second case it was said a similar instruction ought to be corrected on the second trial. The decisions of Tandy v. Transit Co., 178 Mo. 240, 77 S. W. 904, and Lindsay v. Kansas City, 195 Mo. 166, 93 S. W. 273, relied on by plaintiff, are not in point. In those cases there was testimony tending to prove the injured party would sustain loss of time in the future—that is, after the filing of the petition and even after trial—and for this reason it was held instructions on the measure of damages, which did not limit recovery to the loss of time alleged in the petition were not erroneous, since that allegation covered only time lost up to the day the petition was filed. But in the present case whatever time plaintiff lost and whatever expense he was put to for treatment by a physician had all been lost and incurred prior to the filing of the suit. He testified he had lost two weeks' time from work as alleged in the petition, and had incurred a doctor's bill of $50. There was no chance then, for other damages to accrue on account of those items continuing to entail damage after the case had been begun.

The point falls within the scope of the decisions of the Supreme Court first cited; and the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded for new trial. All concur.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Matt G. Reynolds, Judge.

Action by Carl Flucks against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company. From an order granting defendant a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wright & Cutler, for appellant. E. L. Clardy and H. O. Herbel, for respondent.

GOODE, J. This appeal was taken from an order allowing defendant a new trial on the ground of error in the first instruction granted for plaintiff. Before reciting the instruction, a summary of the facts of the case and a statement of the averments on which plaintiff sought to recover ought to be given. Plaintiff took passage on one of defendant's trains on December 5, 1906, at 8:30 p. m., at Union Station, in St. Louis, to go to Little Rock, Ark., and then to Morrilton, in the same state. The train was a fast one, known as the "Cannon Ball." It left the station on time, ran southward toward Carondelet, where, about 30 minutes after its departure, plaintiff was hurt by being thrown across the arm of a seat as he was placing his hat in an overhead rack. When he entered the coach, he found all the seats taken except a chair at the rear end and next to the aisle. The adjacent chair by the window was occupied by a gentleman named Denny, with whom plaintiff fell into conversation, not attempting, at first, to deposit his hat in the rack. As said, he did this about half an hour after leaving Union Station, rising to his feet, and leaning over Mr. Denny toward the side of the coach, for the purpose. His first attempt to lodge the hat in the rack failed in consequence of there being some other articles in the rack which left little room for the hat. He attempted a second time to place it there, reached upward, and, while in the act of depositing it, the train ran around a curve at a speed estimated by plaintiff and Denny to have been 40 or 50 miles an hour, whereupon the train gave a lurch, throwing plaintiff first to the right and then to the left, so that he fell across the arm of the chair on the opposite side of the car, and was hurt. He continued on his journey, suffering considerable pain, and there was evidence to prove one or two ribs were broken, evidence, too, which tends to prove a speed of 40 or 45 miles an hour where the accident happened would have been too high for safety, and would have caused the train to lurch considerably. The speed allowed at the curve where plaintiff testified the accident happened—that is, Ivory curve, near Ivory avenue—was 20 miles an hour. It is the contention of defendant, and perhaps there is some evidence to support it, that another curve north of Ivory avenue was where the accident happened, but this seems to have been an immaterial fact. The testimony showed the particular curve was constructed for high speed; that is, so that trains might be operated around it at high speed. The negligence averred in the petition is the car was caused to give a sudden, violent, unusual, extraordinary, and, to plaintiff, unexpected, lurch through the carelessness and negligence of defendant's agents and servants in charge of and operating the train in running the same into and around the curve at a high and excessive rate of speed. It was further averred that, by reason of the lurch of the car, plaintiff was thrown across the aisle and against the arm of the seat on the opposite side with great force and violence, rendering plaintiff unconscious, and breaking and injuring five of his ribs.

The first instruction given for plaintiff, for error in which the court granted a new trial, reads as follows: "The court instructs the jury that if they find and believe from the evidence that plaintiff was a passenger on one of defendant's passenger trains leaving St. Louis, Mo., on the evening of December 5, 1905, and that he was riding in a chair car used by defendant for conveying passengers, and that in said car defendant had provided racks above the seats to be used by passengers, and that defendant invited its passengers in said car to use said racks for placing therein their hats and small packages, and if the jury further find and believe from the evidence that after plaintiff had been accepted as a passenger, and after said train had run a short distance from Union Station, St. Louis, Mo., plaintiff arose from his seat in said car for the purpose of placing his hat in one of said racks, and, when standing and in the act of placing his hat in said rack, the car gave a sudden, violent, unusual, extraordinary lurch, causing plaintiff to be thrown across the aisle and against the arm of a seat with great force and violence, thereby injuring him, and that said lurch was directly caused by the carelessness and negligence of defendant's agents and servants operating said train in running it into and around a sharp curve at an unusually high rate of speed at said place, and the plaintiff was in the exercise of ordinary care for his own safety, then your verdict will be for the plaintiff." One defense was plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in rising and leaning forward and upward while the train was running at a high speed. The argument has been pressed on us that plaintiff ought to be held to have been guilty of contributory negligence as a legal conclusion in view of his own testimony. We do not take this view of the case. The rack was placed in the car for passengers to deposit articles in, and there was no presumption of want of due care in plaintiff because he rose while the train was running rapidly to put his hat in the rack. It is the duty of railroad companies to operate their passenger trains so as to avoid unnecessary jars and lurches that may injure passengers while moving about in a coach. The issue of plaintiff's negligence was at most one for the jury.

The objection to the quoted instruction in our opinion is that it assumes the operation of the train around the curve "at an unusually high rate of speed" was negligence. It will be perceived on reading the instruction the court did not leave it to the jury to say whether the speed with which the train ran into and around the curve was a dangerous rate, but this was the essential fact to be found. Ordinarily the train might have run around the curve at 10 or 12 miles an hour, so that running at 15 or 20 miles an hour would have been unusual speed, though safe. Now, the latter part of the instruction allowed a verdict if the jury found, among other things, "that said lurch was directly caused by the carelessness and negligence of defendant's agents and servants in running into and around a sharp curve at an unusually high rate of speed." Defendant's servants were not negligent if they ran around the curve at a higher speed than was usual, provided they kept within the margin of safety; and they were negligent if they ran only at the usual rate provided it was an unsafe one. The instruction begs the very point at issue in assuming that running at an unusual speed was necessarily careless conduct. This instruction presented a theory of the entire case that was radically wrong, and the error could not be cured by other instructions presenting a right theory. Sullivan v. Railroad, 88 Mo. 182; Mansur-Tebbets Imp. Co. v. Ritchie, 143 Mo. 612, 45 S. W. 634.

Therefore the court did right in ordering a new trial, which order is affirmed and the cause remanded. All concur.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Robt. M. Foster, Judge.

Action by Daniel P. Byrne against the Hafner Feed Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Jno. O. Marshall and Dalton & Harris, for appellant. Wm. A. Kinnerk, for respondent.

GOODE, J. This cause began before a justice of the peace by the filing of a complaint wherein plaintiff alleged defendant is a corporation; that Joseph Hafner is indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $125, the amount of a judgment for debt, interest, and costs recovered by plaintiff against said Hafner before a justice of the peace; that subsequent to the recovery of said judgment defendant, the Hafner Feed Company, promised to pay said debt of Joseph M. Hafner to this plaintiff, wherefore plaintiff prayed judgment against defendant for the sum of $125. The cause proceeded to the circuit court, where plaintiff obtained judgment, and an appeal was taken to this court.

Several reasons are assigned why the judgment of the circuit court should be reversed; i. e., failure of the complaint to state defendant assumed the debt of Joseph Hafner in writing, want of competent evidence to prove defendant assumed the debt at all, or promised to pay it, and that whatever evidence was received to prove the fact was too vague and uncertain to support a judgment. This plaintiff recovered a judgment, as alleged, against Jos. M. Hafner before a justice of the peace, and thereupon summoned the Oscar W. Blanke Ice & Coal Company as garnishee; we suppose on an execution issued on the judgment. The only evidence introduced in the present action to prove the Hafner Feed Company had promised for a valuable consideration after plaintiff obtained judgment against Hafner to pay the amount of it to plaintiff was the testimony of two witnesses, who said, in substance, that on the trial of the garnishment issue between Blanke Ice & Coal Company as garnishee and plaintiff, Jos. M. Hafner and John O. Marshall testified defendant corporation had assumed the debts of said Hafner, and Hafner had turned over his assets to the corporation in part payment of the capital stock of defendant; that Hafner further testified in the garnishment issue "he was what might be called acting as general manager for defendant—that is, the company kept on just the same—that he was an officer and general manager, the thing running just as it always did." It is obvious that what Marshall swore to in the other case, to which this defendant was not a party, was incompetent to establish liability against defendant, because it was hearsay as to this defendant, who had no opportunity to cross-examine said Marshall. The same is true as regards the testimony of Jos. M. Hafner, unless an exception is to be allowed to the general rule excluding hearsay testimony in favor of what he testified on the garnishment trial, because he was acting as general manager of defendant corporation. The contention is his statement was binding on the corporation because he was the chief officer of it. This view cannot be accepted. His testimony on the trial of the garnishment issue was a self-serving declaration, and defendant company had no opportunity to cross-examine him, since it was not a party to the cause. A corporation acts through its agents and officers, and many admissions and declarations of those persons made in the course of their duties in the transaction of the business of the company are binding on the latter for the same reason that a principal is bound by the declarations of his agent while engaged in the transaction of the principal's business and in reference to said business, provided the transaction falls within the scope of the agent's real or apparent authority. Northrup v. Insurance Co., 47 Mo. 435, 4 Am. Rep. 337; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Baltimore, etc., Tel. Co. (C. C.) 26 Fed. 55; 3 Cook, Corporations (6th Ed.) § 726. And we are aware there are instances in which the admissions and statements of officers of a corporation are held to be binding on the company, even though they relate to past transactions. 4 Thompson, Corporations, § 4915. This case falls within no such exception. Childs v. Ponder, 117 Ga. 553, 43 S. E. 986; Hoag v. Lamont, 60 N. Y. 96. Defendant would be cut off from its right to search the conscience and knowledge of Joseph M. Hafner, and protect itself against his false or loose statements made to serve his own interest, if we were to admit his testimony on another trial, to which defendant was not a party, could establish liability against defendant. In Bangs Mill. Co. v. Burns, 152 Mo. 350, 380, 53 S. W. 923, the suit was to set aside a certain deed of trust in which a bank was beneficially interested as having been made to defraud the grantor's creditors. Different suits by creditors had been instituted assailing the deed of trust, and in one of them Calvin F. Burns, president of the beneficiary bank, had given testimony. It was sought to use that testimony in the case cited, supra, as a detrimental admission against the bank made by its president. On the offer of this testimony the Supreme Court said: "We fail to see from the transcript of the testimony offered how it could have in any wise been beneficial to appellants; but, considering it as containing according to appellants' contention a detrimental admission to the claim of the bank as to one of the notes secured by the deed of trust under which the interpleader claims the property in suit for the use of the bank and the Ayr Lawn Company, the transcript of the testimony was still inadmissible as evidence against the bank in this action. Neither the bank nor Calvin F. Burns was a party to the issues on trial in that case, and the statements then made by him, if any, detrimental to the present contention of the interpleader for the bank, could not be said to have been made by him as agent for the bank, but in answer to the compulsory process of the court that required his presence and commanded his answers. Neither the voluntary statement of an agent or officer of a corporation acting outside of and beyond the duties of his agency or those exacted and not afterwards ratified by the corporation can be held and treated as declarations or admissions binding upon the corporation in a suit afterwards between the corporation and a stranger." That ruling is in point, and it will be observed that, though the Supreme Court remarked neither Calvin F. Burns nor the bank were parties to the case in which said Burns had testified, the principle on which the exclusion of the evidence was sustained shows the fact that the bank was not a party was the only material fact; and the mere circumstance that Hafner was a party to the suit in which the garnishment was issued does not serve to distinguish this case in principle from the one cited. In truth it may be said Hafner was no party to the garnishment proceeding which grew out of the case plaintiff brought against him; and hence the Supreme Court's decision was given on facts identical with those before us. If it was desirable to utilize the knowledge of Marshall and Hafner, they should have been put on the stand in the present case. One of them at least was present at the trial, Mr. Marshall. We have paid no attention to whether or not, even if the statements of Hafner and Marshall were competent, the proper procedure to hold defendant on its assumption of Hafner's debt was adopted.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded. All concur.

BARTLETT v. HELMBACHER FORGE & ROLLING MILLS CO.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 2, 1909.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1015*)—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF COURT—NEW TRIAL ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where there was a conflict in the evidence on material issues, the court's action in granting a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence cannot be set aside on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3871; Dec. Dig. § 1015.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Virgil Rule, Judge.

Action by Charles A. Bartlett, administrator of Guiseppe Pusateri, against the Helmbacher Forge & Rolling Mills Company. A judgment for plaintiff was set aside, and new trial granted. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed and remanded.

Joseph Wheless, for appellant. McKeighan & Watts and Wm. R. Gentry, for respondent.

GOODE, J. Guiseppe Pusateri, a Sicilian, was killed in defendant's iron works on January 11, 1907, by the falling on him of a pile of iron bars. The bars were about 36 inches long, and the averment is they had been piled to an excessive and dangerous height, from 10 to 15 feet, unsupported in any way and insecure and liable from the great height and unsafe structure of the pile to collapse and fall. It was further averred the careless way in which the iron was piled, and the fact that the piles were dangerous and liable to fall, was well known to defendant, or could have been known to it by the exercise of ordinary care for the safety of its employees. Plaintiff was working on a low pile a foot or so from the one which toppled over and killed him. This action was instituted by the administrator of his estate under the provisions of two statutes of the state of Illinois, where deceased resided and the accident happened. The evidence for plaintiff tended to prove the piles were 15 to 18 feet high, and, in truth, one witness for plaintiff swore the one which fell was 30 feet high. The evidence tended also to show the piles were negligently and insecurely stacked and liable to fall in consequence of the vibrations of trains passing near the foundry.

Plaintiff had a verdict, which the court set aside, granting a new trial on the ground the verdict was against the weight of the evidence. This appeal was prosecuted from the order for new trial; the contention being there was no substantial conflict in the evidence on any point affecting the merits of the case. We have read the evidence in regard to plaintiff's contention, and find it untenable. There was a sharp conflict of testimony as to the height of the pile which fell, some saying it was not more than four or five feet high; also, as to whether it had been piled straight, and was perpendicular at the time it fell, or had been piled slantingly and gotten out of plumb. There can be no question that a conflict of evidence occurred on material issues of the case, and therefore the action of the court in granting a new trial because the verdict was against the weight of the evidence cannot be set aside.*

The order for new trial is affirmed and the cause remanded. All concur.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 133*)—REVIVAL OF JUDGMENT—TIME OF PROCEEDING.

Rev. St. 1899, § 4028 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2195), providing that no justice's judgment shall be revived after 10 years from its rendition, fixes the limit of time in which the revival may be ordered, and not in which it may be applied for, so that application thereunder must be made at least 10 days before the limitation period has expired, in view of section 4024, providing that, upon the filing of an affidavit in a proceeding to revive such a judgment, the justice shall cause a citation to be served on defendant to appear at a time not less than 10 days, nor more than 30 days, from the issuing thereof, and show cause why the judgment should not be revived.

ment. From a judgment of revival reversed by the circuit court, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank A. Hobein and Vital W. Garesche, for appellant. Lee Sale, for respondent.

GOODE, J. This is a proceeding by scire facias to revive a judgment of a justice of the peace. According to the stipulated facts, the judgment was rendered by the justice February 25, 1897, and on February 21, 1907, plaintiff filed a petition to revive it before the successor of the justice by whom it had been given. A citation was issued and delivered to the constable on the same day, commanding him to summon defendant to appear before the justice to whom the petition of revivor had been addressed on March 6, 1907, to answer the complaint of plaintiff, and then and there show cause, if any, why the judgment, describing it, should not be revived. This writ was served February 23, 1907. The cause was continued to March 28th, when defendant appeared by his attorney and moved the judgment be not revived because the justice was without jurisdiction, and because no proper citation had been directed or served on defendant according to section 4028 of the statutes (Rev. St. 1899 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2195]), and for other reasons which need not be stated. The justice overruled defendant's motion, and entered judgment reviving the original judgment, whereupon defendant appealed to the circuit court, and there prevailed, causing plaintiff to appeal to this court, where defendant's counsel assigns as reason for upholding the judgment of the court below that the 10-year period in which the right to revive would be lost by statutory limitation had run prior to the date on which the citation served on defendant was returnable or could have been made returnable. Rev. St. 1899, § 4031 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2196); Bick v. Wilkerson, 62 Mo. App. 31. This proposition becomes clearer when we scrutinize the statutory provision that no judgment of a justice of the peace "shall be revived after the lapse of ten years from the rendition thereof," or from the date of a previous revival. Rev. St. 1899, § 4028.

Defendant's counsel contends the language quoted from the statute forbids revival of any judgment unless application to have it revived is made long enough before the 10-year limitation has run to enable the writ of scire facias to be issued and served on the defendant in time to be returnable within the 10-year period; that is to say, the application for revivor must be made at least 10 days before the limitation period has expired, because by virtue of section 4024 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2194), the shortest interval in which the writ can be made returnable is 10 days from the date of service. Support for this view of the law is found in Teff v. Bank, 36 Kan. 457, 13 Pac. 788. The Code of Kansas says an order to revive an action against the representatives or successor of a defendant shall not be made without the consent of such representatives or successor unless in one year from the time it could first have been made. Another section of that Code says, if a judgment becomes dormant, it may be revived in the same manner as is prescribed for reviving actions before judgment. The two provisions construed together prohibit an order to revive a judgment which has become dormant from being made longer than one year after it has become dormant; that is, the Kansas limitation period. In the case, supra, the Supreme Court of Kansas said the filing of the motion to revive and giving notice were not sufficient to bring the case within the limitation, but the point of limitation prescribed by the statute is the making of the order, and not the commencement of the proceeding to obtain the order; that a "party should at least commence proceedings in sufficient time to give the required notice to the adverse party of the hearing within the year, and the time fixed in the notice when the application is to be made should be within that period." The same court reiterated this doctrine in Reaves v. Long, 68 Kan. 700, 66 Pac. 1030, saying revivor is purely of statutory origin, and can only be accomplished in the mode and on the conditions prescribed by the statute; that, as the Kansas statute explicitly says an order of revivor should not be made without consent unless within one year of the time in which it could be made, a court was without power to make it later.

At this point in defendant's argument our attention is called to the Missouri statute concerning the revival of judgments in courts of record, which says: "The plaintiff, or his legal representative may, at any time within ten years, sue out a scire facias to revive a judgment or lien; but after the expiration of ten years from the rendition of the judgment, no scire facias shall issue." Rev. St. 1899, § 3715 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2083). That language is contrasted with the language of the statute for the revival of judgments of justices of the peace, which says they shall not "be revived after the lapse of ten years from the rendition thereof" (Rev. St. 1899, § 4028; Ann. St. 1906, p. 2195), and it is argued the first section was intended to place a limitation on the commencement of proceedings to revive, whereas the latter was intended to put a limitation upon judgments of revivor. No doubt the language of the two sections is consistent with this conclusion, and the question is whether it compels the conclusion. If the section relating to judgments of justices absolutely forbids an order to revive a dormant judgment after 10 years from its rendition, singular consequences may ensue. The judgment creditor could apply long within the limitation period, and, from one cause or another, no hearing be had until after the period had expired, in which case it might be out of the power of the justice to order a revivor; or an appeal might be taken to the circuit court, and the delay occasioned would carry the hearing of the application beyond the limitation period and that court be without power to revive. Those contingencies might or might not suffice to create an exception, or take the cause out of the statute. We decide nothing as to that. Probable mischiefs cannot overcome the effect of any statute if, fairly considered, it will bear but one meaning. Our statute on the subject in hand is less explicit than the Kansas one, for the latter says, in effect, an order to revive cannot be made except by consent of the parties after one year from the time the judgment becomes dormant; whereas, our statute says no judgment shall be revived after the lapse of 10 years from its rendition, but it is hard to discern how the words "no judgment shall be revived" can be held to mean no scire facias to revive a judgment shall be sued out or no application for revival shall be made.

Against our first impression we have come to the conclusion after study of the point that the statute fixes the limit of time in which a revival may be ordered, and not in which it may be applied for, as is the case in proceedings to revive a judgment in a court of record. What has led us to this conclusion, besides the positive terms of the statute, are the circumstances leading to the enactment of the limitation. It was decided in Humphreys v. Lundy, 37 Mo. 320, there was no statutory limitation of proceedings to revive justices' judgments, and they might be revived at any time; that the 10 years then prescribed for suing out writs of scire facias to revive judgments related only to those of courts of record. In fact, the statute regarding the revival of justice's judgments merely said "a judgment once revived may be again revived in the same manner and with like effect as the first revival was had." Gen. St. 1865, c. 182, § 12. In Corby v. Tracy, 62 Mo. 511, this decision of the point was followed, and in the opinion Judge Hough called attention to the anomalous rules of law relating to justices' judgments. He showed it was possible by revival to keep a judgment of a justice of the peace in force for more than 20 years, or the period in which it ought to be presumed to have been satisfied, and that in the particular case the judgment might be regarded as in force after 23 years. This and another incongruity not necessary to be mentioned were noticed. The opinion said: "With the hope that some remedy may be provided by the appropriate department of the government." No doubt in consequence of this opinion the Legislature, in revising the statutes in 1879, amended section 12 of chapter 182 of the General Statutes of 1865 by adding these words: "Provided, that no judgment shall be revived after the lapse of 20 years from the rendition thereof, or from the date such judgment may have been revived as hereinbefore provided." Rev. St. 1879, § 3006. That amendment fixed the limitation period at 20 years from the date of a judgment or any previous revival of it as the time in which it must be revived or become defunct.

It is to be borne in mind the opinion of the Supreme Court in Corby v. Tracy had remarked upon the incongruity of permitting justices' judgments to be kept alive by revival for more than 20 years, or beyond the time when, according to analogy, they would be presumed to have been satisfied. Therefore it is unlikely the Legislature meant in the amendment to leave that incongruity intact. But if the 20-year period prescribed in the statute was meant to limit the time in which a scire facias could be sued out, and not in which a revival could be ordered, it was still possible, by applying for a scire facias a few days before the 20 years expired, and making the writ returnable after the expiration, and perhaps by continuing the proceeding, to keep the judgment alive after it ought to be presumed satisfied. The probable intention was in prescribing 20 years as the limitation to forbid a revival after that period. Thus the statute stood until 1895, when the amendment of the original enactment was itself amended by striking out the word "twenty" and inserting in lieu of it the word "ten," so that the language was: "Provided that no judgment shall be revived after the lapse of ten years from the rendition thereof or from the date such judgment may have been revived as hereinbefore provided." This is the language of the statute now in force, and we cannot escape the opinion that, whatever the Legislature may really have intended, the only intention that can be gleaned from a fair interpretation of the language used and the history of the enactment was to limit the time in which an order to revive could be made.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

REIS v. EPPERSON et al.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 2, 1909.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 525*)—CONCLUSIVENESS—RECITALS.

Where a court, even of limited jurisdiction, is acting within the limit of that jurisdiction; the recitals in its judgments are, at least, prima facie evidence of the facts there set out.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 568, 968, 962; Dec. Dig. § 525.*]

2. COVENANTS (§ 116*)—ACTION FOR BREACH—ISSUES.

In an action for breach of covenant of title, in that there were street assessment liens against the property, the petition alleged that grantee bought the land without any notice of such lien, and the answer, after denying "each and every allegation therein contained unless hereinafter admitted," admitted the execution of a deed, but alleged that it was a part of the real consideration that grantee should pay such assessments. Held that, in view of the pleadings, the grantor could not claim that the judgment confirming the assessment and declaring it a lien on the property in question was improperly introduced in evidence, because there was no proof other than the recitals of the judgment itself that there had been service of notice of the assessment on the grantor, since the pleadings admitted the existence of the lien.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Covenants, Cent. Dig. § 209; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 822*)—JUDGMENT OF OTHER STATE—CONCLUSIVENESS—RECITALS—SERVICE OF NOTICE.

Where, in an action for breach of covenant of title, in that there were outstanding street assessment liens against the property, which property was in another state, it was stipulated that the judgment confirming the assessment and declaring it a lien was to be treated as a judgment of a court of the resident state, and the statute of the foreign state showed that the judgment was entered by a court of record and of original jurisdiction in that class of cases, recitals in the judgment that service was had on the grantor, the defendants in the action, were prima facie true, and the burden was on defendant to overthrow the presumption.

4. COVENANTS (§ 96*)—COVENANT AGAINST INCUMBRANCES—BREACH—ASSESSMENT LIENS.

The existence of a street assessment lien, which is a valid lien against property at the time the owner deeds it by a statutory warranty deed to one having no notice of the lien, is a breach of covenant.

5. COVENANTS (§ 135*)—WARRANTY OF TITLE—BREACH—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for breach of covenant of title, in which plaintiff claims a breach by existence of assessment liens against property at the time of conveyance, and defendant claims that plaintiff had notice of such liens and assumed their payment as part consideration of the deed, an instruction that if the jury believe from the evidence that, at the time of execution and delivery of the statutory warranty deed offered in evidence, plaintiff, in addition to the consideration mentioned in the deed, agreed to assume all taxes for street improvements, then the jury are to find for defendant, properly submitted the issue to the jury.

6. COVENANTS (§ 118*)—WARRANTY OF TITLE—EXISTENCE OF LIENS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action for breach of covenant of title, in that there were outstanding street assessment liens against property, an instruction placing the burden of proof on plaintiff to show that a consideration named in a statutory warranty deed was the true consideration, and that he did not assume the payment of such liens, and that, unless plaintiff show such fact by preponderance of the evidence, the jury should find for defendant, is erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Covenants, Cent. Dig. § 213; Dec. Dig. § 118.*]

7. TRIAL (§ 261*)—REQUEST FOR INSTRUCTIONS—ERRONEOUS REQUESTS.

Where, in an action for breach of covenant of title, requested instructions as to burden of proof being on plaintiff, and that plaintiff must show the facts by a preponderance of the evidence, are erroneous, and are refused, further requested instructions defining the burden of proof and preponderance of evidence are also properly refused.

8. TRIAL (§ 25*)—RIGHT TO OPEN AND CLOSE.

The injection into a case by defendants of an affirmative issue does not change the rule as to the right of plaintiff to open and close; but it is only where plaintiff's whole case is admitted, and the defense, by new matter in avoidance or the like, undertakes to meet the admitted case, that the rule is changed.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 994*)—REVIEW—WEIGHT OF TESTIMONY.

The weight to be given testimony of witnesses is a matter for the exclusive determination of the jury in the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3901-3906; Dec. Dig. § 994.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Wm. M. Kinsey, Judge.

Action by Michael C. Reis against Ernest L. Epperson and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

On the 24th of August, 1901, defendants, who are appellants here, by their deed conveyed to respondent certain lots in Harris Place addition to the city of East St. Louis, St. Clair county, Ill., in consideration of $1,200. The deed was executed in St. Clair county, Ill., and is the statutory form in use in that state of a warranty deed, reciting that the grantors, naming them (defendants here), for and in consideration of $1,200 in hand paid, "convey and warrant" to plaintiff the lots described. The deed is properly acknowledged by all of the parties to it who are defendants here. The Illinois law, properly pleaded and introduced in evidence (section 9, c. 30, Starr & C. Ann. St. Ill. 1896), provides that every deed in substance in the form of the deed in evidence, "when otherwise duly executed, shall be deemed and held a conveyance in fee simple, to the grantee, his heirs or assigns, with covenants on the part of the grantor, (1) that at the time of the making and delivery of such deed he was lawfully seized of an indefeasible estate in fee simple, in and to the premises therein described, and had good right and full power to convey the same; (2) that the same were then free from all incumbrances; and (3) that he warrants to the grantee, his heirs and assigns, the quiet and peaceable possession of such premises, and will defend the title thereto against all persons who may lawfully claim the same. And such covenants shall be obligatory upon any grantor, his heirs and personal representatives, as fully and with like effect as if written at length in such deed."

The petition in the case, after averring the execution and delivery of the above deed, avers: That prior to its execution certain special assessments had been levied against defendants, made pursuant to the laws of the state of Illinois, also pleaded, for the improvement of Baugh avenue, on which street the lots fronted, and that the special assessments, by virtue of these laws, had prior to the execution and delivery of the deed aforesaid become a valid lien upon the property; that plaintiff had no knowledge of the lien or special assessments when he accepted the deed and paid the consideration, and did not learn of the same until after the property had been sold pursuant to the laws of the state of Illinois concerning enforcement of the payment of that assessment; that plaintiff was compelled to, and did, redeem the property; that the total amount of the assessment was $594.60, which amount plaintiff had been compelled to pay, together with penalties, interests and costs and expenses in the sum of $400. Averring that the existence of the lien constituted a breach of the covenant in the deed and that plaintiff's damage thereby was $994.60, judgment is prayed for that amount. The answer, after denying "each and every allegation therein contained, unless hereinafter admitted," admits the execution of the warranty deed, but alleges that the consideration in the deed was not the real and only consideration for the conveyance of the premises by defendants to plaintiff, but that there were other considerations, and that one of them was the payment by the plaintiff "of the very street assessment for the improvement of Baugh avenue set out in his petition." The answer then denies that plaintiff was without any knowledge of the lien or assessment or without any knowledge of the same until after the property was sold, but alleges and charges that the property was sold to plaintiff by defendants at about one-half of its value on the express consideration that plaintiff would pay all assessments for street improvements. "Defendants therefore deny that the existence of the lien of said special assessments constituted a breach of the covenant of defendant's deed aforesaid, and hence deny that they are indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $994.60 or any other sum whatsoever." The reply was a general denial of this new matter.

On trial before a court and jury, the deed being introduced, as also the statutes of Illinois relating to conveyances of real estate and vesting power in the city council of East St. Louis to make the improvements, and conferring jurisdiction on the county court of St. Clair county to adjudge assessments for street improvements, plaintiff offered a transcript of the record of proceedings of the county court of St. Clair county relative to the special assessment for the Baugh avenue improvements. This transcript recites, among other things, and after a recital of the fact of the presentation of the petition for the assessment of the costs of the improvements: That it appears to the court that the commissioners had given notice of the assessment, "and that the final hearing thereof would be had at this term of court as required by law, by sending through the mail to each owner of the premises assessed a notice of such assessment, giving the names of the owners, a description of the property, amount of the assessment, and that said assessment roll would be returned to the August term, A. D. 1900, of this court, which notices were in the form required by law, and signed by said commissioners, and were mailed to said parties more than 10 days prior to the first day of this term of court, and which were sent to each of the persons whose names appear on the said assessment roll filed in this cause. That said commissioners also gave notice of said assessment and its return to this court, by posting notices for 10 days prior to the first day of this said August term of court, in four public places in said city of East St. Louis, two of said places being in the neighborhood of said proposed improvement; and also by publishing said notices five successive days in the East St. Louis Daily Journal, a daily newspaper published in the said city of East St. Louis, said publication being also 10 days prior to the first day of said August term of this court. The court therefore entered a rule on all parties to this proceeding and all persons interested to make answer or file objections herein by the first Thursday of this term, August 9, 1900." It further appears by the recitals in the transcript that at the day named one of the parties, named Weinmann, appeared and filed objections to the confirmation of the assessment. The judgment of the county court then continues: "And as to each of the other parties herein judgment in this cause is hereby rendered against them by default." None of the appellants here, however, appeared. Afterwards, on the 20th of December, Weinmann withdrew her objections, and the city of East St. Louis, through its attorneys, asking for confirmation of the special taxes and the assessment, the court ordered and adjudged that the special taxes to pay the costs of the improvements as assessed in the assessment roll be levied and confirmed against the lots as assessed and entered on the roll. It appears by a subsequent order that this assessment was payable in five annual installments, each installment to bear interest.

When this "judgment roll," as for convenience we will call it, was introduced, counsel for defendants made the general objection that it was incompetent until it was shown, outside of this record, that there had been service on these defendants, expressly waiving, however, all other objections to it, and agreeing that it was to be treated exactly as if it was the record of a court of the state of Missouri. To put it accurately, after the court had sustained the objection to the admission of this record and had ruled the record out, the court asked counsel for de-defendants if his position was that, for the purposes of this trial, the record was to be treated as if it was the record of a domestic, instead of a foreign, court? Counsel answered: That that was his position, and his objection lay to the lack of showing by evidence that necessary steps had been taken to create a valid lien against the property, in that it was not sufficient by its own recitals to prove the fact of service of notice as required by law on the defendants in this case; that it was incumbent on plaintiff to prove the service of notice on these defendants, outside of the recitals in the record; that plaintiff should be required to produce the affidavit of the publisher of the paper, or testimony of the party who had mailed or posted up the notices referred to in the judgment. Thereupon the court overruled the objection to the record and admitted it; defendants duly saving exceptions. There was evidence showing the amount that had been paid on account of this assessment by the plaintiff. Plaintiff positively denied having had knowledge of the assessment when he accepted the deed, and denied in very positive terms ever having agreed to pay the assessment. While plaintiff was under cross-examination, a contract was introduced in evidence which had been executed between the plaintiff and these defendants as to the sale of these lots, a contract executed prior to the delivery of the deed, which, under this contract, had been in escrow for some time after its date. This contract was dated the 12th of June, 1901, while the deed was dated August 24, 1901. It is not necessary to set it out, as, while it provides for assumption of various claims and liens by plaintiff, there is no specific mention of these assessments, and while defendants' witnesses testify that, when this contract was made, these assessments were spoken of as liens to be assumed by plaintiff, the latter denied this. On the part of the defendants, testimony was introduced strongly tending to show that it was distinctly understood between plaintiff and the defendants when this contract was made, and when the deed was made and delivered, that plaintiff had assumed and was to pay these assessments.

The court, at the instance of plaintiff, gave an instruction to the effect that the judgment of the county court of St. Clair county, Ill., introduced in evidence, fixed a valid lien against the property described in the petition in this suit, and that the existence of such lien and its nonpayment by defendants was a breach of the covenant of warranty in the deed of defendants to plaintiff, and it told the jury that, "unless you find from the evidence that plaintiff as a part of the consideration of said deed assumed and agreed to pay said assessments, your verdict must be for the plaintiff." The court further instructed the jury, at the instance of the plaintiff, that, if they found in his favor, their verdict should be in such an amount as they found from the evidence plaintiff had been compelled to pay to protect his title, not exceeding the amount sued for to which sum they could add interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the 24th of May, 1904, to date. Exception was duly saved by defendants to the giving of these instructions. At the instance of the defendants, the court gave an instruction to the effect that if the jury "believe from the evidence that, at the time of the execution and delivery of the warranty deed offered in evidence, the plaintiff, in addition to the consideration of $1,200 mentioned in said deed, agreed with the defendant Harris to assume all taxes for street improvements, then the jury are to find for the defendants." The defendants asked three other instructions, which the court refused. The first instruction asked was that under the law and the evidence the jury would find for the defendants. The second instruction asked was to the effect that the burden of proof was on plaintiff "to show that, when the warranty deed read in evidence was executed and delivered to plaintiff by the defendant, the consideration named therein was the consideration for the purchase of the lot described in the deed, and that the plaintiff did not assume to pay for the street improvement, and that, unless the plaintiff has shown the same by a preponderance of testimony, the jury should find for the defendant." The third instruction asked defined the meaning of the terms "burden of proof" and "preponderance of evidence." According to the abstract of the record, the defendants saved exception to the refusal of the second and third instructions; but they do not appear to have saved exceptions to the refusal of the instruction to the effect that under the law and the evidence the jury should find for the defendants. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff and against defendants for $416.88 for the debt and $18.54 for interest; nine of the jurors concurring in the verdict. Defendants in due time filed a motion for new trial, which was overruled, exception duly saved, and the cause is here on the appeal of the defendants.

Harlan, Reis & Wagner, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). While by the answer in the case the defendants denied each and every allegation contained in the petition, they followed it with the clause, "unless hereinafter admitted." We are of the opinion that the allegations in the answer following this qualified denial, in effect, admitted the levying of the assessment for the improvements, and relied upon the claim that by outside agreements between plaintiff and defendants these assessments were excluded from the warranty and were assumed and were to be paid by the plaintiff; either that, or in one part the answer defendants have denied and the other admitted the assessment and held that they were absolved from each of the warranty of nonpayment because plaintiff had himself assumed their payment. In point of fact that is the issue on which the case was presented to the jury by counsel for each of the parties. The jury instruction asked by defendants and given by the court at their instance carries with it the idea that these taxes and assessments for street improvements had been made and were a burden or lien upon the property. Apart from that, however, it was expressly stipulated that the judgment of the county court of St. Clair county, Ill., was to be treated exactly as if it was the judgment of one of our own courts. The statute of Illinois introduced in evidence showed that not only was the county court a court of record, generally, but, so far as this class of cases is concerned, was a court of original jurisdiction. However inferior a tribunal it may be, according to the well-settled rules of decision in our courts, when a court, even of limited jurisdiction, is acting within the limit of that jurisdiction, its recitals are at least prima facie evidence of the facts there set out. In point of fact many of our decisions go much further than that, and tend to uphold the recitals of jurisdictional matters by courts of inferior jurisdiction in cases within that jurisdiction as conclusive of the truth of those recitals. In either view of the case therefore no error was committed in the reception in evidence of this record of the county court of St. Clair county, Ill., and its recitals of the fact of service comply with the requirements in such cases, as was proven by the statute of Illinois, and are at least prima facie evidence that the defendants here were duly served and their property before that court for adjudication in this matter. If, from the return of process or proof of service by posting or publication, defendants desired to overturn those recitals, assuming for this case that that could be done, it was for them to have introduced evidence to that effect. They failed to do this and are bound by the recitals of the record in evidence.

There was no error in giving the instruction which the court gave at the instance of plaintiff. The instruction given at the instance of the defendants fairly put the contention of defendants to the jury, on the issues that had been tried before it, and defendants have no cause whatever to complain of that instruction as not properly presenting the issues and the evidence from their side of the case. The instruction as to the preponderance of the evidence and as to where the burden lay on the issue of the assumption, outside of the deed, of payment of this special assessment, was properly refused, and, that being properly refused, the instruction defining "burden of proof" and "weight of evidence," of course, should not have been given. The learned counsel for defendants in this case have ignored or lost sight of the fact that this matter of payment or of assumption outside of the warranty of the deed was their affirmative defense—was the affirmative defense of the defendants. Hence the burden of proof of that was with the defendants, and the court very properly refused the instruction. Support is sought to be given to the argument for these instructions as to the burden of proof on the fact that plaintiff had the opening and closing of the case. That is always the rule, so long as any part of plaintiff's case is in issue. The injection into the case by the defendants of an affirmative defense does not change the rule. The rule is changed only when plaintiff's whole case is admitted, and the defense, by new matter in avoidance or the like, undertakes to meet the admitted case. That was not the situation here.

The weight to be given to the testimony of the different witnesses was a matter for the exclusive determination of the jury, and their verdict is conclusive on that matter; there being no error of law in the trial or instructions.

Finding no error, the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed. All concur.

BORCHERS v. BARCKERS.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals, Missouri. Nov. 2, 1909.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 212*)—LIFE INSURANCE—ASSIGNMENT—MENTAL CAPACITY OF ASSIGNEE—UNDUE INFLUENCE.

The assignment by a father of his interest in his life insurance policy to his son only a few days, at most, before his death, is akin to a testamentary act, and the rules regarding mental capacity and undue influence applicable to a testator ought to be applied in such case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 212.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 212*)—LIFE INSURANCE—ASSIGNMENT—MENTAL CAPACITY OF ASSIGNEE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Evidence held to present a question for the jury as to the mental capacity of insured at the time of assigning his interest in a life insurance policy to one of his sons.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 212.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 212*)—LIFE INSURANCE—ASSIGNMENT—"MENTAL CAPACITY" OF ASSIGNEE.

Mental capacity of insured to make an assignment of life insurance means intelligence sufficient to understand the act he is about to perform, the property he possesses, what disposition he is making of it, and the persons and objects of his bounty.

4. INSURANCE (§ 212*)—LIFE INSURANCE—ASSIGNMENT—UNDUE INFLUENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held not to prove undue influence as to an assignment by insured of his interest in a life insurance policy to one of his sons.

5. GIFTS (§ 36*)—PARENT'S RIGHT TO GIVE TO WAYWARD CHILD.

A parent has a right to give property to a wayward child; and neither his other heirs nor a jury are entitled to select the object of his bounty, and set aside a gift because they think it undeserved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

6. CONTRACTS (§ 96*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE.

Influence to be exerted must not only exist, but there must be proof that it was effectually exerted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Dec. Dig. § 96.*]

7. CONTRACTS (§ 99*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE.

The exertion of influence and its effect in inducing a will or contract may be shown by circumstances, and need not be directly proved, but there must be some evidence, circumstantial or direct, tending to prove the facts, and not merely raising a suspicion of their existence, or showing opportunity for exercise of improper influence without showing that it actually was exercised.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1199; Dec. Dig. § 99.*]

8. CONTRACTS (§ 99*)—"UNDUE INFLUENCE"—EVIDENCE.

Weakness of a person's mind does not, ipso facto, prove he was unduly influenced, but circumstances must be proved pointing to the successful employment of undue influence or positive testimony to that effect.

9. INSURANCE (§ 212*)—LIFE INSURANCE—ASSIGNMENT—UNDUE INFLUENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In a suit by the administrator of insured to determine the right to proceeds of a life insurance policy, the burden is on plaintiff to establish that an assignment by insured of his interest in the policy to one of his sons was procured by undue influence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 212.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Jas. H. Withrow, Judge.

Action by John Borchers, Jr., administrator of John Borchers, deceased, against Henry N. Barckers, to determine the right to the proceeds of a policy of insurance on the life of plaintiff's intestate. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

John Borchers died January 11, 1905, leaving as his children and heirs John Borchers, Jr., Ernest Borchers, Henry N. or "Nick" Barckers, defendant, and his two married daughters, Sivia Strotjost and Katherine Hombusch. Defendant has changed the spelling of his name to "Barckers." He is commonly called "Nick" by his relatives and acquaintances. A policy of insurance in the Mutual Reserve Association was issued to John Borchers, Sr., on his life July 10, 1900. After he fell sick, to wit, January 4, 1905, he assigned his interest in the policy to his son Nick Barckers, dying, as said, a week later and intestate. His son John was appointed administrator of the estate, and both he and Nick claimed the proceeds of the policy—John as administrator and Nick as assignee. By agreement of the rival claimants, the liability of the company was settled for $600. This sum was paid to a trust company to be held until the disposition of it was determined by suit, and John Borchers, administrator, filed the petition in the present suit, setting out the issuance of the policy, the death of his father intestate, his appointment as administrator, the settlement of the liability of the company for $600, that defendant claimed to be assignee of the policy by an assignment and transfer made on January 4, 1905, while plaintiff claimed it as administrator of the estate, denied the right of Nick Barckers under the assignment, and prayed that the trust company be ordered to pay the fund to plaintiff. Henry Barckers answered, admitting the formal averments of the petition regarding the issuance of the policy, etc., and then alleged the deceased had on January 4, 1905, executed and delivered to defendant the following documents:

"Application for Change of Beneficiary.

"Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company.

"I herewith return to you my policy No. 387,500, issued July 10, 1900, for $2000, and direct that the beneficiary as therein stated be changed, and the policy now be made payable to Henry N. Barckers, 42, Son, St. Louis. State cause why change of beneficiary is desired: Love and affection for the proposed beneficiary.

The answer further averred that, by virtue of said assignment or change of beneficiary, he was entitled to the proceeds of the policy, and plaintiff had no right or title of any kind or nature. The trust company, which was made a party to the suit, filed an answer, admitting it held the fund to be paid to the party found to be entitled by the decree. In reply plaintiff denied John Borchers, deceased, on January 4, 1905, made, executed, or delivered to defendant the assignment or change of beneficiary set out in the answer, and denied, further, that by virtue of said assignment or change of beneficiary, or in any other manner, defendant was entitled to the proceeds of the policy; further averred that, by the terms of the policy, no valid assignment could be made unless the association consented to it, and the association had not consented to the one in question; further averred that at the time deceased signed his name to the assignment or change of beneficiary, if, in fact, he ever did, he was "not of legal capacity to sign such document, and therefore the said pretended assignment or change of beneficiary is not the act or deed of the said John Borchers, deceased"; further averred that, if the deceased signed said pretended assignment or change of beneficiary, he did so through the undue and improper influence of said Henry N. Barckers and without consideration; wherefore the pretended assignment or change of beneficiary, if signed by said deceased, was not his act or deed. After the evidence had been heard and instructions passed upon, the cause was submitted to a jury, which returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff, and, judgment having been entered accordingly, this appeal was prosecuted. The court left the case to the jury on the ground plaintiff was entitled to recover if the execution of the assignment was induced by undue influence exercised over the mind of the deceased, John Borchers, by his son Nick, or any other person for him. The instructions for plaintiff, in substance, told the jury as follows: Though they might believe from the evidence at the time of the execution of the so-called assignment of the policy deceased was of sound mind and memory and of sufficient mental capacity to execute said assignment, yet if they further found and believed from the evidence that at the time of the execution of said writing the mind of deceased was, from disease, age, decrepitude, bodily or mental attack, or other cause or causes, subject to the dominion and control of defendant, and that defendant or any person for him unduly exercised such dominion, power, or influence over the mind and will of deceased when he executed said assignment, so as to destroy his free will and knowledge in the disposition of his property, so that such disposition was not his free will and desire, then the verdict should be for plaintiff. A second instruction for plaintiff defined the words "undue influence" as used in the instructions to mean any influence which restrained, controlled, directed, diverted, or coerced the will or overcame the mind and judgment, and directed the jury to give a verdict for plaintiff if they believed from the evidence Henry N. Barckers, or any other person or persons in his behalf, by persuasion or other device or machination, controlled, directed, restrained, or coerced the will, or confused the mind of John Borchers, deceased, or confused or overcame his power of judgment of the true relation between himself and those who were the natural objects of his bounty, in the execution of the paper or writing read in evidence as and for his assignment of said policy, so that said instrument does not express the will and desire of said assignor in the disposition of his property. The jury were further told to take into consideration the mental and physical condition of deceased at the time of executing the instrument, all the circumstances attending the execution, the instrument itself and its provisions in determining whether undue influence was used to procure its execution. The court held consent of the company was not material to the controversy between the parties to this suit, refused to declare the signature to an instrument made by the mark of a person, instead of writing his full name, was as valid in law as if the person had written his name, and refused, further, to instruct there was no evidence to prove deceased was not of legal capacity to sign the assignment at the time he signed, or that he did so through the undue or improper influence of defendant.

It is necessary to state the substance of the testimony. It will be observed the assignment or direction for change of beneficiary purports to have been acknowledged before H. A. Loevy, notary public, on January 4, 1905. Mr. Loevy testified that the morning of said day defendant had called at his office and asked him to come out during the day to take the acknowledgment. He went, taking his notarial seal, met defendant at a transfer point on the street railway, accompanied him to the place where deceased was, found the latter sick in bed, and his physician, Dr. Martin, there. He (Loevy) took the policy, and wrote out the assignment or application to change the beneficiary. The deceased got out of bed, walked to a table in the room, and made his mark in two places. The table was not very far from the bed. After doing this, deceased handed the policy to his son Nick. The deceased seemed to be ill with a cold and was coughing; said his son Nick had been kind to him, and he wanted to leave the policy to said son. It should be stated deceased and defendant at that time were living in a two-story barn a short distance from where John Borchers lived. They had been living in the barn for about a year, and two other sons, or at least one other, had lived there also. Deceased took his meals at his son John's, and defendant prepared his own meals at the barn. Deceased was a dairyman, and until about two weeks before he died, had attended to his dairy business, caring for milk, delivering it, and the like. Mrs. Strotjost gave a great deal of testimony, most of which was immaterial, relating to the character of defendant, and tending to prove, as plaintiff's counsel said, he was a "black sheep," of idle habits, had gotten into trouble with his wife, or wives, and had called on his father to pay money for him. She said another son of deceased had died a month or so before, and her father was deeply affected by this loss and never was the same afterwards; that after he took to his bed, he was a very sick man, had a swollen neck, expectorated a great deal, and was weak, was back and forth in bed for two weeks, was only "right down in bed" about a week; that there was no trouble between the father and any of the other children except Nick. Her father while sick had very little to say; would talk about his own affairs; sometimes would come over to her house with his horse and buggy, and spend hours talking with her husband for advice, and also with her brother John, the plaintiff. We suppose these conversations were prior to his last illness. She said deceased was in the habit of telling about his business, but did not tell about having made the assignment. She was asked whether he was in such condition as to know what he was doing—whether he was of sufficient mental capacity to understand the paper or assignment, and answered: "No; Father would know nothing about such a thing as that in the condition he was in." Mrs. Hobusch gave similar testimony regarding the illness of her father; said he was weak mentally and physically; at times could comprehend his acts and at other times not; he could write his name, and she had repeatedly seen him sign it; said her father had lived in the house of his son John a while, but wanted to go back to the barn to be with Nick. John Borchers also gave much testimony tending to disparage defendant's character. He testified that in his opinion deceased was not fit to do any business, "sign things over one to another." As to the time in which he was in this condition, the witness limited it to "a short time before he died." Dr. Martin, who waited on deceased, gave testimony that the latter was pretty sick for four or five days before he died. A week before he was in a fair condition mentally, and only got in such shape he could not do anything on the last day of his life; became unconscious on that day, and was unconscious until he died. The testimony of this witness had a slight tendency to prove the assignment was taken on the day deceased died, though the witness declined to fix the day positively, but said he never saw Mr. Loevy there but once. He was with the deceased every day during the last 10 days of his life. The week before he died he was in a fair condition, and able to transact business; had asthma and this developed into pneumonia. Isaiah Mandlestam testified that about a week before deceased died witness had seen him milking cows and delivering milk, working in the stable. Deceased had talked to witness about trouble with his children; said two boys, Herman and Ernest, were nearly always drunk. Deceased talked to him about insurance; said the two boys could run the dairy if they behaved themselves; that, if they did not, he would give the cows away; said he would give the oldest one a couple of thousand dollars. This was four or five weeks before he died. O. E. La Roage testified, among other things, Nick, defendant, attended to the dairy, worked around there and handled the milk. In October or November, 1904, the old gentleman was talking about his insurance and said he intended to give the insurance up. None of the family seemed to interest themselves in it. Nick, who was present, said he would keep it up; whereupon the old gentleman said he (deceased) would have nothing more to do with it. Joseph Wellmeyer stated that in April, 1903, deceased had applied to him for some money to pay the premium on the insurance policy, and had then said as long as he (deceased) had no wife he would leave the insurance to his son Nick. Deceased owned $4\frac{1}{2}$ acres of land near or in St. Louis on the Natural Bridge Road and other property that descended to his children equally.

H. A. Loevy, for appellant. Collins & Chapelle, for respondent.

GOODE, J. (after stating the facts as above). The assignment of the insurance policy to defendant is attacked in plaintiff's petition on three grounds: Lack of consent of the insurance company; want of mental capacity in the deceased to execute any document at the time this one was executed; and procurement of the assignment through undue influence exercised over the mind of the deceased by defendant. Only the last of the three grounds was submitted to the jury in the instructions, as one on which, if the evidence supported it, they might return a verdict in favor of plaintiff. It will be perceived the main instruction for plaintiff did not leave it to the jury to say whether deceased was of sufficient mental capacity to execute the assignment, but, taking for granted he was, directed the jury to find whether defendant, or any one for him, possessed and wielded an undue influence over deceased, and thereby brought about the assignment without its being the individual act of deceased. There is some evidence in this record, though slight, from which an inference of want of mental capacity in the deceased to execute the assignment might be deduced. The act was akin to a testamentary one; and the rules regarding mental capacity and undue influence applicable to the case of a testator ought to be applied here. The two daughters and the son gave testimony tending to prove their father's lack of mental capacity during his illness to know what he was doing, though when scrutinized this testimony is not cogent. Then there is the fact of the mark instead of the signature of deceased being affixed to the policy, and Dr. Martin's testimony which tended to prove the assignment was on the day deceased died and when he had lapsed into a semiconscious condition. The doctor's statement was so uncertain on this point as to be of little weight; but is perhaps a circumstance on the issue of mental capacity. All the evidence on this issue sufficed to send the case to the jury, as it was tried by a jury, though it appears to be in the nature of a suit in equity. What would constitute capacity to make the assignment will be understood from declarations of the Supreme Court that legal competency to transact business, or rather to make a will, means intelligence sufficient to understand the act the testator is about to perform, the property he possesses, what disposition he is making of it, and the persons and objects of his bounty. Sehr v. Lindemann, 153 Mo. 286, 288, 54 S. W. 537; Riley v. Sherwood, 144 Mo. 354, 363, 45 S. W. 1077.

We find no proof of the exercise of undue influence over the mind of deceased by defendant or some person for him in order to induce the assignment of the policy to defendant. The members of the court have perused the evidence several times, and consider it a blank as regards proof of this charge. The only other person than defendant who could have been meant as the one who might have influenced deceased unduly is Mr. Loevy, an attorney, but who acted in this matter as notary public, and simply took the acknowledgment of deceased. For aught shown, he did literally nothing else. The only circumstance to prove any conversation had passed at any time between defendant Nick Barckers and his father during the latter's last illness about a transfer of the policy to defendant is that the latter requested Mr. Loevy to go where deceased lay sick, and take an acknowledgment of the assignment. If credible witnesses are to be believed, deceased had expressed an intention before he fell ill to transfer this policy to defendant. A great deal is said about defendant's being a "black sheep"; and we think this charge was dwelt on at the trial more than it deserved. As said, there was some proof defendant of late years had been idle and maybe troublesome to his father; but there is other evidence to prove he helped carry on the dairy business, and that the father was attached to him. A parent has the right to give property to a wayward child; and neither his other heirs nor a jury are entitled to select the object of his bounty and set aside a gift merely because they think it was not deserved. The questions for the triers of the fact were the mental competency or incompetency of the deceased, and whether the act was his own or he was overcome, coerced, or overpersuaded so as to make it the result of the influence of another over him, exercised to a degree that dominated his will. A reading of the cases wherein transactions were assailed as having been induced by undue influence will show the Supreme Court of Missouri has taken strong ground regarding the right of a person to dispose of his property by contract or will, and against the policy of setting transfers and wills aside on slight proof that they were brought about by such an influence. The weight of authority supports said court in its positions, which we venture to remark are wisely taken; for it is common for persons who are disappointed in their expectations of patrimony to attempt to cast suspicion on bona fide transactions. For one thing, there is a dearth of evidence in the present record to show defendant had any special influence, due or undue, over the mind of deceased. The tendency of the evidence for plaintiff was to prove deceased was out of patience with defendant and unlikely to listen to him. For influence to be exerted it must, of course, exist. But it must not only exist, but there must be proof that it was exerted, and effectively. Brinkman v. Rueggessick, 71 Mo. 553; Riley v. Sherwood, 144 Mo. 354, 366, 45 S. W. 1077; Crowson v. Crowson, 172 Mo. 691, 703, 72 S. W. 1065. The exertion of it and its effect in inducing a will or contract may be shown by circumstances, and need not be directly proved. But there must be some kind of evidence, either circumstantial or direct, tending to prove those facts, and not merely to engender a suspicion of their existence, or show opportunity for the exercise of improper influence without showing it actually was exercised. Teckenbrock v. McLaughlin, 209 Mo. 533, 551, 108 S. W. 46; Doherty v. Gilmore, 136 Mo. 414, 419, 37 S. W. 1127. We are not unmindful of the fact in this connection of there being evidence which would tend to show a weakened mental condition in deceased, which, though not amounting to legal incapacity to transact business, would render him the more susceptible to improper influences. But his weakness of mind, if such there was, does not ipso facto prove he was unduly influenced. If it did, many wills which are perfectly valid would be set aside for having been executed when the testators were languishing in their last illnesses. What we hold is there must be circumstances proved which point to the successful employment of undue influence or positive testimony to that effect, and there was neither in the present case. Riley v. Sherwood, 144 Mo. 364, 366, 45 S. W. 1077; Sehr v. Lindemann, 153 Mo. 286, 289, 54 S. W. 537. We hold, too, the burden was on plaintiff to establish the assignment was thus procured, as it is in most cases where undue influence in bringing about a transaction is alleged. Tibbe v. Kamp, 154 Mo. 545, 580, 54 S. W. 879, 55 S. W. 440. If deceased was of sufficient mental capacity to participate in a transaction, then tested by the principles declared in the foregoing decisions of the Supreme Court and other decisions of the same court referred to in the cases cited the present record is barren of evidence to prove the assignment of the policy of insurance to defendant was other than the voluntary, spontaneous, and unsolicited act of the deceased, prompted by paternal affection for defendant, and a desire to make some provision for him. Similar doctrines to those set forth have been declared by the Supreme Court in cases involving dispositions of property by transfers inter vivos. McKissock v. Groom, 148 Mo. 459, 50 S. W. 115; Chadwell v. Reed, 198 Mo. 359, 95 S. W. 227.

A. C. L. HAASE & SONS FISH CO. v. MERCHANTS' DESPATCH TRANSP. CO.
(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 2, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 171*)—ADHERENCE TO ISSUES BELOW.

Where an action against a carrier was tried on the theory of liability for negligent delay in transporting freight, the common-law liability of the carrier for delivery in damaged condition will not be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1053-1069, 1161-1165; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 177*)—LIABILITY OF INITIAL CARRIER.

A carrier issuing a through bill of lading, by which it agrees to transport freight from the initial point to destination part of the distance by a ship and the balance by rail, becomes thereby a carrier for the entire route, and is liable for the negligence of any carrier transporting the property under an arrangement with it.

3. CARRIERS (§ 99*)—DELAY OF SHIPMENT—LIABILITY.

A statute providing that, when a carrier summoned as garnishee in an action has goods in its possession shipped by or consigned to defendant in the action, it shall not be liable for its failure to transport the goods until it is discharged, exonerates the carrier garnished in an action against the shipper or consignee from liability for delay caused by the garnishment, but a carrier merely alleging that a third person was in possession of the goods at the time he was garnished and omitting to allege any fact showing that the possession of the third person was the possession of the carrier is not within the protection of the statute.

4. PLEADING (§ 311*)—EXHIBITS.

An exhibit attached to a pleading is not a part thereof, and an answer which merely alleges that a matter was attached to the petition as an exhibit does not make the same a part of the answer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 945; Dec. Dig. § 311.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 156*)—CARRIAGE OF FREIGHT—BILL OF LADING—LIABILITY.

Proof that brine had run off fish shipped in barrels, and that the barrels during transportation had been punctured, and that the fish were injured thereby, did not prove a leakage within the bill of lading, relieving the carrier from liability for damages caused by leakage.

6. CARRIERS (§ 104*)—DELAY IN TRANSPORTATION—NEGLIGENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

One suing a carrier for negligent delay in transporting freight must prove negligence and the consequent damage, and the mere fact that the freight was shipped in apparently good order and properly packed, and was in a deteriorated condition when delivered after a delay, is not sufficient to require the carrier to show that it was not negligent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 439; Dec. Dig. § 104.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Daniel C. Taylor, Judge.

Action by the A. C. L. Haase & Sons Fish Company against the Merchants' Despatch Transportation Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Plaintiff recovered judgment for damage to a cargo of pickled mackerel, shipped from Liverpool, England, and consigned to defendant in East St. Louis, Ill. The mackerel were purchased in the north of Ireland by John Murray, an agent of defendant, were shipped in barrels by the steamship Sagamore from Liverpool to Boston, and thence transported by rail to East St. Louis. There were 303 barrels of mackerel, and the petition avers defendant, a transportation company, undertook, for a consideration paid by plaintiff, to carry them from Liverpool to Boston, and therefrom by rail to East St. Louis, within a reasonable time after December 21, 1905, the date defendant received the fish in Liverpool for transportation; that defendant carried the cargo to Boston, where it arrived January 3, 1906, and it then became defendant's business to transport it to East St. Louis, which would require four to six days, but, in disregard of its duty, defendant failed to deliver the fish until late in January or early in February, or four weeks later than a reasonable time. It is further averred that, in consequence of the long delay in transporting and delivering the fish at East St.

Louis, part of them became spoiled and deteriorated, some of the barrels in which they were packed were broken in transit, and the brine escaped from them in consequence of the length of time consumed in transportation; that the market value of mackerel depreciated between the early part of January, when the fish in question should have arrived in St. Louis, and the latter part of January or early in February, when they did arrive; that, by reason of those matters, plaintiff had sustained damage in the sum of $909.75, for which judgment was asked. The answer originally filed, besides a general denial, contains a special defense of the following tenor: Whatever delay occurred in the transportation of the fish to destination was caused by their being attached under process of law issued out of the municipal court of the city of Boston, Mass., in a suit brought by trustee process (i. e., garnishment) by Thomas Woodward, plaintiff, against John Murray, defendant, Geo. H. Warren and the American Express Company, trustees, the said writ of attachment having been issued January 3, 1906, and duly served on said Warren and the express company, returnable on January 13, 1906, to said municipal court, which is one of record and had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action and of the parties; that under said writ so issued the fish were seized by an officer having authority to do so, as the property of John Murray, of county Clare, Ireland, who was the shipper of the goods. The seizure occurred while the property was in possession of Geo. H. Warren, doing business as Warren & Co., and the owner of the steamship Sagamore, in which the fish had been carried across the Atlantic; that plaintiff was notified of the institution of the said suit in the municipal court of Boston, of the seizure of the property, and plaintiff declined to appear in the cause or defend it; that the fish at the time of the commencement of said suit and attachment were in the possession of Warren and mostly in the hold of the steamship Sagamore, but partly on the dock in the city of Boston, and the attachment was levied on said goods before they were taken from said hold and dock, and before they could be delivered by Warren to defendant, as required by the bill of lading. None of the fish were turned over to defendant by Warren & Co. until January 24, 1906, and, as soon as they were, defendant transported them without delay to East St. Louis, and delivered them to plaintiff; that defendant was not made a party to the suit above described in the Boston municipal court; that there was in force in Massachusetts at the time the suit was instituted a statute of said state, as follows: "That all personal actions except actions for tort, for malicious prosecution or for libel or for assault and battery or actions of replevin, may be commenced by a trustee process, and any person or corporation may be summoned as trustee of defendant therein, but a person who is not an inhabitant of the commonwealth or a corporation which is not established under the laws shall not be summoned, unless he or it has an established place of business in the commonwealth." Rev. Laws, c. 189, § 1. There was also in force in Massachusetts an act (Acts 1906, p. 241, c. 324) which is as follows: "Provided, when a common carrier summoned as trustee in an action at law, has in his possession or its possession, goods shipped by or consigned to the defendant in such an action, such carrier, in the absence of collusion on his or its part, shall not be liable to the owner or consignee by reason of his or its failure to transport and deliver the said goods until the attachment is dissolved or the carrier is discharged as trustee." It was further averred Geo. H. Warren and the American Express Company were common carriers in the commonwealth of Massachusetts, had established places of business there, and were summoned in said suit by virtue of its laws. The foregoing special defense was struck out on motion of plaintiff, and an exception was saved to the ruling. Another special defense was based on the provisions in the bill of lading, purporting to exempt defendant or any carrier handling the goods from liability for loss or damage to them before arrival at the port of Boston, due to causes beyond the control of the carrier, or unless claim was made for the damage or loss while the goods were in the actual custody of the carrier; further providing no common carrier should be liable for loss or damage caused by shrinkage, leakage, or breakage, or packing the goods in packages of insufficient size or strength; also claiming the benefit of other exemptions in the bill of lading relating to losses subsequent to the arrival of the merchandise at the port of Boston, which said no carrier or company in possession of the property should be liable for loss or damage to the goods due to causes beyond its control by breakage, leakage, or chafing; or for loss or damage not occurring on its own line or its portion of the through route; or unless claim should be made in writing in 30 days after the delivery of the property to the consignee. The answer alleged that, if damage occurred to plaintiff's property, it was due to the causes mentioned for which defendant was not liable under the terms of the bill of lading, and that no claim was made within 30 days for any damage, alleged, further, that under the laws of England, where the bill of lading was issued, the consignor and consignee were allowed to enter into valid contracts, stipulating for exemptions such as we have stated, that any loss or damage which happened to plaintiff's property as alleged in its petition was due to the negligence of the consignor in failing to pack the property properly for its journey. Evidence was introduced tending to sustain the averments of the petition regarding the prolonged delay in transporting the fish to East St. Louis, and the damaged condition in which they arrived. It was proved brine had leaked from a great many of the barrels and in consequence the fish had become what is called "rusty," and were worth not more than half they would have been worth if in good condition. It was also proved some of the barrels had burst about their heads, and the staves were pierced with holes.

The instructions for plaintiff required the jury to find as grounds of a verdict against defendant that it had delayed the transportation of the fish longer than was necessary to carry them from Liverpool to East St. Louis by the exercise of reasonable care, and that, when they reached destination, they were not in good condition in consequence of the delay. In other words, it was necessary to find the delay was negligent and caused damage to the fish in order to return a verdict against defendant. Several instructions were given at the request of plaintiff predicated liability on negligence, and several at defendant's request, the purport of which was, if the jury found the fish had been damaged by storms, heavy seas, or perils incident to navigation, and not by any negligence of defendant, plaintiff could not recover. Further, if the jury believed they were damaged partly in consequence of the kind of cask in which they were packed for shipment, or because of the way in which they were packed in the casks, and partly by reason of the delay in transportation, and the jury were unable to separate the damage due to the two causes, then plaintiff could not recover; and, if the jury were able to separate the damage due to the two causes, plaintiff could recover only for damage due to the negligence of defendant. Further, if the jury found the damage or loss to the fish was due to the nature of the goods or the insufficient packing, the verdict should be for defendant. The defendant requested and the court refused to instruct plaintiff could not recover for damage to the fish due to leakage, and refused several instructions to the effect that delay caused by the proceedings in the court at Boston constituted a defense to any claim for damage suffered by plaintiff on account of such delay.

Defendant appealed from the judgment for plaintiff given on a verdict in its favor.

Geo. F. McNulty and Jas. R. Van Slyke, for appellant. Rassieur, Schnurmacher & Rassieur, for respondent.

GOODE, J. (after stating the facts as above). The instructions requested show both parties tried the case on the theory that plaintiff was counting on the negligent delay of defendant in carrying the fish, whereby they were damaged, and not on any common-law liability for delivering the fish in a damaged condition. Hurst v. Railroad, 117 Mo. App. 25, 37, 94 S. W. 794. The cause was submitted on the theory that there must have been careless and unreasonable delay in the transportation of the goods from Liverpool to East St. Louis to lay defendant liable, and damages could not be recovered for losses due to delay or other injurious incidents of the voyage across the Atlantic, caused by contrary winds, heavy seas, or the perils of navigation generally, for which defendant was not to blame. Hence we shall not consider the appeal with reference to a possible common-law liability of defendant. It had issued in Liverpool a through bill of lading by which it agreed to transport the fish from that port to East St. Louis, agreeing to carry first to Boston by the ship Sagamore and from there to East St. Louis by rail. Defendant therefore became a common carrier for the entire route, and was liable for the negligence of any carrier which transported the property under an arrangement with it. McCann v. Eddy, 133 Mo. 59, 33 S. W. 71, 85 L. R. A. 110.

One point of controversy is over the court's action in striking out the special defense based on the trustee process or garnishment issued by the Boston municipal court, wherein Warren, owner of the steamship, and at the time actually the custodian of the fish, and the American Express Company, the agent of defendant in issuing the bill of lading, were garnished. The court not only struck out this defense and excluded evidence to support it, but refused instructions to the jury on the issue, thus carrying out consistently the theory that the garnishment of Warren and the American Express Company was no excuse for the detention of the fish three weeks or more in Boston. It is to be remembered the gravamen of this action is the negligent delay in transit and damage caused thereby, and not conversion of the property by defendant; and the question urged is whether the garnishment of the owner of the steamship who had the fish in custody and his refusal to relinquish the property to defendant 'until the garnishment suit was dismissed, thereby preventing defendant from forwarding the goods promptly to destination, in law excuses defendant's delay. There is some conflict between the courts regarding whether a common carrier which has goods in its hands and actually in transit, as these were, can be garnished in an action against the owner of the goods, and perhaps the weight of authority is against the right to levy such a garnishment. 2 Hutchinson, Carriers (M. & D. Ed.) § 746, orig. § 402; 4 Elliott, Railroads (2d Ed.) § 1538, and cases cited; Stevenot v. Koch, 61 Minn. 104, 63 N. W. 256, 28 L. R. A. 600, and note; Baldwin v. Railroad, 81 Minn. 247, 83 N. W. 986, 51 L. R. A. 640, 83 Am. St. Rep. 370. The point has not been passed on in this state, though in Landa v. Holck & Co., 129 Mo. 663, 31 S. W. 900, 50 Am. St. Rep. 459, it was held a railroad company which had received goods for shipment, but had not yet started them in transit, might be garnished in respect of such goods, and this is the general doctrine. The law in Massachusetts is contrary to the weight of authority, and there are peculiar statutes on the subject in that state, as will be seen supra. In Adams v. Scott, 104 Mass. 164, it was held a common carrier may be summoned in garnishment in an action against the owner of the goods actually in transit. That decision was given on a construction of the Massachusetts statute first quoted above. A fact much relied on by this plaintiff is that trustee process in the Boston municipal court was sued out, not against plaintiff, but against Murray. The second Massachusetts statute quoted, supra, says a common carrier summoned as trustee and having in its possession goods shipped by or consigned to the defendant in such an action, in the absence of collusion on its part, will not be liable to the owner or consignor by reason of its failure to transport or deliver the goods until the attachment is dismissed or the carrier discharged as trustee. That statute exonerates a carrier garnished in an action brought against either the shipper of the goods or the consignee from liability to the owner or the consignee for delay occasioned by the garnishment. The shipper in the present case was John Murray, and under the statute it looks like garnishment of the carrier of the fish in an action against Murray would, in Massachusetts, be a good excuse for delay in transportation due to the garnishment in favor of the party summoned as garnishee. The act was passed according to the answer in 1895, and perhaps in consequence of the decision given in 1870, in Edwards v. White Line Transit Co., 104 Mass. 159, 6 Am. Rep. 213, that garnishment was no defense to the carrier if it was in an action against any person other than the owner of the goods. In said case the garnishment was in an action against the shipper, just as here; and, the carrier having been sued by the owner for delay thus caused, it was held the garnishment was no defense. Plaintiff says the defendant was not in possession of the goods at the time of the garnishment, and so alleges in the portion of the answer which was struck out. The answer does not say in so many words defendant was not in possession at the time of the service of garnishment, but says Warren & Co. were, and the goods were not delivered to defendant until the latter part of January. Nothing is alleged either in the answer or the petition about Warren & Co. being the agent of defendant, or any other fact which would make the custody of Warren & Co. the possession of defendant. Landa v. Holck & Co., 129 Mo. 663, 671, 31 S. W. 900, 50 Am. St. Rep. 459. The only reference in the answer which shows the facts about this matter says it was attached to the petition as an exhibit. This fact did not make it a part of the petition, much less of the answer. Bowling v. McFarland, 38 Mo. 465; Pomeroy v. Fullerton, 113 Mo. 440, 21 S. W. 19. It follows we are compelled to dispose of an interesting question on a point of pleading. The part of the answer struck out avers possession of the property in another than defendant when trustee process was served; also, avers defendant was not a party to the proceeding, and hence states defendant outside the scope of the Massachusetts statute, which purports to protect only carriers who are in possession of the property and those summoned as trustees. We will not determine whether summoning an agent of defendant, if Warren & Co. was such, would have given defendant the benefit of the statute. What we hold is that having alleged Warren & Co. was in possession of the property at the time trustee process was served, and having omitted to allege any fact to show custody or possession of that garnishee was the possession of defendant, no defense was stated under the Massachusetts statute.

Complaint is made because the court refused to charge that, before plaintiff could recover, it must prove by a preponderance or greater weight of the evidence any damage done to the goods by leakage was directly caused by some act of negligence on the part of defendant, its agents, or servants. But the requested instruction said plaintiff admitted the damage to the mackerel was caused by leakage, and there was no such admission either in the pleadings or proof. It is true plaintiff's secretary testified the brine had run off the mackerel in some of the barrels, but he said the barrels were stove in at the head, and in some places holes had been run through the staves. The escape of brine through openings knocked in the casks was not leakage within the meaning of the bill of lading, nor was testimony of its escape in that manner equivalent to admitting the damage was due to leakage.

For plaintiff the court instructed the jury that if the mackerel were shipped in apparently good order and condition and properly packed, and when delivered to plaintiff by defendant some of the casks were broken open and the brine had escaped, and the mackerel become deteriorated, then the law presumed the negligence of defendant caused said condition, and this presumption would obtain until defendant showed by the greater weight of evidence that its negligence did not bring about the condition, and, unless defendant had proved to the satisfaction of the jury by the greater weight of evidence the condition of the mackerel was not produced by defendant's negligence, and the jury should find the mackerel were not transported and delivered in the usual time, the verdict must be for plaintiff. Plaintiff counted in its petition on negligent delay of defendant in transporting the fish, and it will be perceived the instruction just epitomized told the jury the law presumed negligence if the mackerel were delivered to defendant in good condition and delivered by defendant to plaintiff in a deteriorated condition. This is not the law. It was incumbent on plaintiff to establish its charges of negligence and consequent damage to the mackerel. In support of the instruction, we are cited by plaintiff's counsel to Kirby v. Express Co., 2 Mo. App. 369. That decision does support it, but it was rendered on the authority of Levering v. Union, etc., Co., 42 Mo. 88, 97 Am. Dec. 320, and Ketchum v. Express Co., 52 Mo. 391, and those decisions were expressly overruled in Witting v. Railroad, 101 Mo. 631, 14 S. W. 743, 10 L. R. A. 602, 20 Am. St. Rep. 636, wherein the court said it must be taken as the established law of this state that, when the cause of action stands on the ground of negligence on the part of the carrier, the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff, that the party who founds his cause of action on negligence must be prepared to establish the assertion by proof, and the burden of proof is on him from the beginning to the end of the case. This decision was reaffirmed in Stanard Mill. Co. v. Transit Co., 122 Mo. 258, 276, 26 S. W. 704.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded. All concur.

EPSTEIN v. PENNSYLVANIA R. CO.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 2, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 16, 1909.)

1. DAMAGES (§ 185*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—IMPOTENCY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for personal injuries, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding by the jury that plaintiff was rendered impotent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Dec. Dig. § 185.*]

2. NEGLIGENCE (§ 121*)—PROXIMATE CAUSE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action for personal injuries, it is incumbent upon plaintiff to show that the accident directly caused the injury complained of.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 228; Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

3. NEGLIGENCE (§ 134*)—PROXIMATE CAUSE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for personal injuries, evidence held to sustain a finding that plaintiff's impotency directly resulted from the accident.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

4. WITNESSES (§ 188*)—COMPETENCY—HUSBAND AND WIFE—NONACCESS—PROOF OF IMPOTENCY.

In an action for personal injuries, it was competent for plaintiff to prove impotency as a result of the accident by testimony that since it occurred he had not been able to have intercourse with his wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Dec. Dig. § 188.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1056*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

In an action for personal injuries, the exclusion of the depositions of two physicians who assisted the principal physician in the examination and treatment of plaintiff while in a hospital, containing evidence bearing directly on the condition, symptoms, and acts of plaintiff and observations made and conclusions arrived at on an inspection and conversation with him, could not be sustained on the ground that the evidence was immaterial and its exclusion was harmless error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1056.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 56*)—CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE—RIGHT TO EXCLUDE.

Neither were the depositions objectionable as being merely cumulative of other testimony received; it being proper and right to have all witnesses heard who had knowledge of facts and circumstances bearing on the case.

7. WITNESSES (§ 219*)—COMPETENCY—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS—WAIVER—PHYSICIAN AND PATIENT.

Where three physicians were in attendance on plaintiff at a hospital, one as principal physician and the others as assistants, the failure of plaintiff in an action to recover for his injuries, to invoke his privilege as to the principal physician when called by the defense under Rev. St. 1899, § 4659 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2539), providing that a physician or surgeon is disqualified from testifying concerning information acquired from a patient while attending him in his professional character, was not a waiver of his right to invoke his privilege as to the assistants.

8. DEPOSITIONS (§ 107*)—OBJECTIONS TO AT TRIAL.

Under the express provisions of Rev. St. 1899, § 2906 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1671), the admissibility of evidence in a deposition may be objected to upon the trial, though such objection was not made at the time of taking the deposition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Depositions, Cent. Dig. §§ 309-319; Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Jesse A. McDonald, Judge.

Action by Samuel Epstein against the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to recover for personal injuries. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed. Certified to Supreme Court on conflict with Kansas City Court of Appeals.

This is an action for personal injuries alleged to have been incurred by plaintiff, respondent here, in a wreck on defendant's railroad on the night of January 6, 1906. Adopting the statement of counsel for appellant, "the only question raised at the trial was as to the extent of the injuries resulting to plaintiff." Without stating them with very great particularity, it is sufficient to say that it is charged in the petition that plaintiff was caught and pinioned in the wreckage of the train upon which he was a passenger, his ankle sprained, his leg, knee, and person, stomach, and liver wounded, crushed, bruised, cut, contused, externally and internally, and he was greatly and permanently injured, and has been confined to his bed and house by reason thereof for a long time, has been prevented from attending to his business as a wholesale dry goods, merchandise, and notions dealer, to his great loss and damage; that he was and has been and will be unable to give his ordinary and usual time, care, and diligence to his business, prevented from work, labor, and services, thereby greatly impairing his earning capacity; that he has been and will be compelled to procure medical attention, medicines, nursing, nurse hire, and expenses for them and for physicians, which expense he sets out in detail, averring that these services were, now are, and will continue to be necessary for an indefinite period; "that, by reason of such great injuries and the horror of said wreck, his nervous system was caused to collapse, and his sexual powers to become impotent, and he has been, and will in the future be, by reason of said injuries and nervous shock, permanently injured, has suffered, and will in the future suffer, great mental pain and bodily anguish." Judgment is demanded in the sum of $30,000. The answer was a general denial, contributory negligence, want of due care, inattention to his injuries after they had been received, want of knowledge or information sufficient to enable defendant to form a belief as to whether or not plaintiff was permanently injured, but that, if he did receive permanent injuries at that time and place, they were due to his own negligence and carelessness.

A great amount of testimony was introduced at the trial by the respective parties. Plaintiff testified to the accident and nature and extent of his injuries; his testimony tending to prove them as set out in his petition. In the course of his direct examination this appears: "Q. Before you were injured, were you able to have intercourse with your wife? Mr. Pattison: I object to going into that question for two reasons: In the first place, it either requires expert testimony to support that charge of the petition, or else there must be testimony of non-access. I say, under the uniform, unbroken current of decisions, this witness cannot testify as to non-access, and this witness has not qualified as an expert. I object to the question as incompetent. (The objection was overruled, to which ruling of the court defendant, by counsel, then and there duly excepted.) A. Yes, sir. Mr. Bond: Since your injury have you been able at any time to have intercourse with your wife? Mr. Pattison: I object to the question on the same grounds. (The objection was overruled, to which ruling of the court defendant, by counsel, then and there duly excepted.) A. No, sir." Plaintiff further testified that before his injury his physical condition was "all good," had never been sick in his life. There was no other testimony in the case on this particular point of impotency, either by plaintiff or any other witness, nor did any of the physicians who were examined in the case testify in reference to it, except that one physician called as a witness by defendant testified that he had made an examination of the plaintiff's person, and found no indication of any disease or injury to his private parts, and no abnormality. Asked, on cross-examination, whether or not a man who had been in a railroad wreck and suffered shock under the circumstances attending the wreck which were detailed to him, and who had been injured and laid up for a long time, would be apt to be affected in his sexual organs, he answered that he did not think so, did not think that that would necessarily follow, and did not think that such result would come from these injuries or from this shock; that he might be more or less shocked from fright. On redirect examination, this witness testified that he was not a neurologist. Counsel for plaintiff, then calling his attention to the fact that he had been asked some questions about the possibility of the fright such as plaintiff had spoken of, affecting the size, etc., of the genital organs, asked him what he would say about it as to whether he (the physician) knew anything about that, and whether that came in the line of his practice, to which he answered: "No; I think I would not have anything to say about that. I do not know." All he does know, he testified, is that he found the organs in a normal condition.

It also appeared in evidence that, when plaintiff was first injured, he was taken to a hospital, and there attended by a Dr. Elston. Dr. Elston was called as a witness by the defendant, and he testified as to the condition in which he found plaintiff at the hospital, and to what had taken place there during his examination of the plaintiff, and also testified that he had with him at the time two assistants, Dr. Phelps and Dr. Christie. Plaintiff himself had testified to his treatment in the hospital, and that, when he was treated by Dr. Elston, the other two doctors were also there. At the trial, counsel for defendant stated that he desired to ask the court to pass upon the question whether or not the two physicians who assisted Dr. Elston in the hospital, and whose depositions had been taken and were on file, are competent witnesses to testify as to what they saw, and he offered their depositions, which are in the record and are statements of the observations of these two physicians and surgeons as to the nature of the injuries and their extent and probable duration. Counsel for plaintiff objected to their depositions being read on the ground that these two surgeons were assistants of Dr. Elston, and that they and Dr. Elston were plaintiff's physicians, and that whatever took place between him and them was a privileged communication. The court sustained the objection and excluded the depositions, defendant duly excepting.

The deposition of a witness named Andrews, taken on behalf of defendant, was read in evidence. In that deposition Andrews was asked by counsel for defendant this question: "You didn't observe the injuries he complained of, did you?" To this he answered: "The physicians were there. They examined him, and said there were no bones broken." This answer was objected to at the trial by counsel for plaintiff, objection sustained, and the answer excluded, defendant duly excepting. On this witness being re-examined, as appears by the deposition, he said, in answer to a question, that his impression was that the physician told Epstein, the plaintiff, that there were no bones broken. This was objected to, the objection sustained, and the answer excluded.

At the instance of plaintiff, the court gave several instructions; and, while defendant excepted to the giving of all of the instructions, the particular instruction now objected to in the brief and argument submitted to us, and the only one now objected to, is that part of the instruction covering the measure of damages, and occurring in the fourth instruction given at the instance of plaintiff. After instructing that the jury was entitled to assess his damages in such sum as will reasonably compensate him for whatever injuries complained of by plaintiff in his petition the jury believed from the evidence he has sustained, if any, the court, after defining what reasonable expenses could be included and that pain of body and mind, peril, and fright, if any, could be taken into consideration and that nervous shock, if any, directly caused by the injury could be taken into consideration, instructed that the jury might also consider, in estimating damages, "the impotency to his sexual organs, if any, which he has suffered from such injuries and directly caused thereby." On the part of the defendant, the court instructed the jury that it was for plaintiff to prove the injuries which he claimed he had suffered from the accident, and that he is entitled to recover for only such injuries as set forth in the instructions herein as it appears from the preponderance of the evidence that he has suffered. The jury were further instructed at the instance of defendant that the evidence admitted in the trial as to plaintiff's inability to attend to business is to be considered only so far as it tends to prove that plaintiff was suffering physically and mentally as the result of the accident; that the jury are not to take into consideration, as tending to prove damages, any loss arising from plaintiff's past or present inability to attend to business, and the jury in assessing damages were not to take into consideration any loss of time since the accident and up to the time of the trial during said period to attend to business, "since these do not under the pleadings and evidence in this case constitute any element of damage for which plaintiff is entitled to recover." The third instruction, given at the instance of the defendant, was to the effect that the opinions of the physicians who have testified in the case are merely advisory, and not binding on the jury, and that the jury would give them such weight as they believed from all the facts and circumstances in evidence they are entitled to receive, and are at liberty to disregard all or any part of their opinions which appear to the jury to be unreasonable. The fourth instruction told the jury that they would not be warranted in giving plaintiff any damages for future or permanent injuries, unless there is such a degree of probability that the injuries would be permanent or at least continue in the future as amounts to a reasonable certainty that the result will follow from plaintiff's original injury. By the fifth instruction the jury were told that plaintiff was not entitled to recover for any trouble with his stomach which he did not have before the accident, unless they believed from the evidence that that trouble is the result of the wounding, etc., of his stomach, "and from that cause alone he is entitled to recover for stomach trouble, if any, caused by nervous affection, whether or not you believe such nervous affection to be the result of the accident."

The defendant also asked three instructions, marked "A," "B," and "C," which the court refused. Instruction A was to the effect that, if the jury believed from the evidence that plaintiff's injuries were not properly treated at the hospital and that the result of his injuries was on that account aggravated, the jury were not to take into consideration the circumstances of the improper treatment, if it was found to be improper, and that plaintiff was not entitled to recover any damages whatever for or on account of such improper treatment or aggravation. Instructions B and C, which were asked by defendant and refused, are as follows:

"(B) Plaintiff alleges in his petition that one result of his injuries is that he has become sexually impotent. You are instructed that there is no evidence in support of this allegation, and in making up your verdict you will not take it into consideration.

"(C) Plaintiff alleges in his petition that one result of his injuries is that he has become sexually impotent. You are instructed that there is no evidence that his impotence, even if you find it to exist, was caused by the injuries received in his accident, and in making up your verdict you will not take into consideration this alleged impotency."

Exception was duly saved to the refusal of these instructions. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $4,000, nine of the members of the jury concurring. A motion for new trial was duly filed and overruled, exception saved, and an appeal duly taken to this court by the defendant.

Everett W. Pattison, for appellant. Jesse A. Wolfert and Sterling P. Bond, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). In the presentation of this case to this court the learned counsel for the appellant, in a very exhaustive brief and argument, makes seven points against the action of the trial court. The first, second, and third points relate to the refusal of the court to give the instructions marked, "Defendant's instructions B and C," and in giving the fourth paragraph of the instruction covering the measure of damage; that is to say, the paragraph based on the impotency of plaintiff. The fourth point of error assigned is to the admission of the testimony of plaintiff as to his nonintercourse with his wife. The fifth point alleges error to allow two of the physicians to give their opinions as to the nervous condition of plaintiff; it being claimed that it was in evidence that these physicians could not give such an opinion without relying more or less upon the statements plaintiff made to them. The sixth error assigned is to the action of the court in excluding the testimony of the two physicians whose depositions were offered, and the seventh error assigned is to the action of the court in excluding the testimony of the witness which we have quoted, as to statements made by a physician to the plaintiff, in the presence and hearing of the witness, as to the extent of the plaintiff's injuries.

Taking up these propositions in the order made, we dispose of the first one by saying that we do not consider it well taken. We have set out the testimony of the plaintiff himself bearing on the fact of impotency. On that testimony the conclusion of alleged impotency must rest. It is true there was testimony of a physician called as a witness by the defendant, and which we have set out in the statement, to the effect that in his opinion impotency was not a necessary result of the accident to plaintiff. But that physician on redirect examination by counsel for defendant testified that he did not consider himself competent to answer or to pass upon that fact. Even if this witness had not almost entirely destroyed the probative force of his testimony by this very frank admission, the fact of whether impotency had been proven was one for the determination of the jury, who were the judges of the weight to be given to the testimony concerning it. The jury had before it the declaration of this plaintiff as to nonintercourse, and counsel for appellant argue and present this case on the theory that testimony of nonintercourse is evidence of impotency. His argument is that impotency is sought to be proven by the fact of nonintercourse, and that plaintiff, as husband, is disqualified from testifying as to the fact of nonintercourse, and, as he is not shown to be an expert, he cannot testify as an expert. These are substantially his objections made to the question as to nonintercourse when that question was asked plaintiff at the trial, and it is on these objections that his brief and argument before us rests. There was no contradiction of this bald and plain statement of a fact by plaintiff. The jury saw and heard the plaintiff, and it was within their province to determine, on his testimony, whether the fact existed. The learned counsel for the appellant, however, very strenuously argues that the court in inserting in the instruction which it did give on this subject the words "and directly caused thereby" was instructing without evidence on which to base this clause, contending that there was no evidence whatever in the case to show that the impotency complained of or injury to the organs was directly caused by the accident. Counsel presents a vast array of authorities in support of his position that it must appear that the accident directly caused the injury complained of. There is no doubt whatever that this is as thoroughly settled as any legal proposition can be said to be settled. The assumption, however, upon which the argument rests, is erroneous. The testimony of plaintiff himself was that before this wreck he was a perfect man in all respects. His testimony tended to prove that after that he had become impotent. The fact of the accident was beyond question. He was injured in the wreck. There is no pretense of any intervening or intermediate fact to which the change in his condition can be attributed. On these facts the jury had a right, as sensible men, as men of even ordinary intelligence, to form their own conclusions as to whether or not the alleged result was directly caused by the accident. Even assuming that the testimony of the physician in the face of his own declaration of nonexpertness on such matters is to be taken as the testimony of an expert that impotency does not follow such injuries as were testified to as having been received by plaintiff, and assuming, which was not true in this case, that witnesses of established reputation as experts on this branch of pathology had testified that impotency could not arise from or be directly caused by such injuries or from such an accident, we have in this case the express declaration of the court, given at the instance of defendant's counsel himself in his third instruction: "You are instructed that the opinions of the physicians who have testified in this case are merely advisory, and not binding on you. You should accord to them such weight as you believe from all the facts and circumstances in evidence they are entitled to receive, and you are at liberty to disregard all or any part of their opinions which appear to you to be unreasonable." So that, under this, the jury has the undoubted right to determine as between the testimony of plaintiff and the theoretical, somewhat mythical, testimony of experts. Our conclusion is that there was no error in giving this part of the instruction and in including impotency as an element of damage, and it follows that there was no error in refusing instructions B and

C asked by defendant, unless it is true that the fact of nonintercourse, on which the presumption of impotency rests, cannot be proven by the testimony of the husband, he not being an expert, nor qualified as such, and being incompetent, as husband, from testifying to the fact of nonintercourse.

Counsel for appellant has cited in support of his contention that error was committed in allowing plaintiff to testify as to nonintercourse, 3 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 878, as also Dennison v. Page, 29 Pa. 420, 72 Am. Dec. 644; Tloga County v. South Creek Township, 75 Pa. 433; Shuman v. Shuman, 83 Wis. 250, 53 N. W. 455; Mink v. State, 60 Wis. 583, 19 N. W. 445, 50 Am. Rep. 386; Bell v. Oklahoma, 8 Okl. 75, 56 Pac. 853; Chamberlain v. People, 23 N. Y. 85, 80 Am. Dec. 255; Egbert v. Greenwalt, 44 Mich. 245, 6 N. W. 654, 38 Am. Rep. 260; Boykin v. Boykin, 70 N. C. 262, 16 Am. Rep. 776; Scanlon v. Walshe et al., 81 Md. 118, 31 Atl. 498, 48 Am. St. Rep. 488; Bowles v. Bingham, 2 Munf. (Va.) 442, 5 Am. Dec. 497; Corson v. Corson, 44 N. H. 587; Legge v. Edmonds, 25 L. J. Ch. (N. S.) 125. Referring to the encyclopedia on the page given by counsel, it will be found that the text relied upon is under the title, "Bastardy." Most, if not all, of the cases which he cites are cases of bastardy or cases between the husband and wife, in which it was held, as it undoubtedly has been held in like cases in our state, not only by decision, but by statute, in all cases where the question of competency of the witness is concerned, that the husband in such cases is not a competent witness as to transactions between himself and his wife. It is the shield thrown by the law around the relation of husband and wife, and in the cases referred to by counsel it was invoked either where the husband was suing the wife or vice versa, or in cases of bastardy, or where the question of the legitimacy of the children was in issue. On a careful examination of every one of these cases, we have come to the conclusion that they do not meet the issue, and do not sustain the proposition made in this case by counsel.

In Corson v. Corson, supra, cited by appellant, the ruling of the court that the husband is not a competent witness to prove want of access is distinctly limited to proof of want of access in a proceeding in a libel for divorce, although it is true that in that case authority is cited for the position that nonaccess cannot be proved by either husband or wife in any cause. This is followed, however, by the limitation, "whether to recover property as heir at law or in a bastardy or settlement case." It would seem, therefore, that in all the cases in which this matter of testimony as to nonaccess has been passed upon the legitimacy of children was involved, or they were cases between husband and wife for alleged unfaithfulness or inattention to marital obligations, or the like. This is no proceeding affecting the wife or in which she is involved with respect to the relations between her and her husband, no property rights of the husband and wife inter sese or as to their children are involved, no question of legitimacy or of inheritance of the children is involved, and no disclosure of the relationship of husband and wife of such a character as renders it against public policy for either to testify, is presented by this case. We have been referred to no case in which the rule has been extended to cover cases such as the one at bar, where the husband, suing for damages, one of the elements of which was alleged impotency, has been excluded from testifying as to a fact which is a very strong element in the establishment of impotency. It seems to us that the plaintiff was competent to testify as to the fact, "because of the necessity of the case." Cramer v. Hurt, 154 Mo. 112, loc. cit. 117-120, 55 S. W. 258, 77 Am. St. Rep. 752. 1 Greenleaf Ev. (14th Ed.) § 348, is cited and quoted by Judge Burgess in support of the rule that the necessity of the case makes an exception to the rule itself. No human being but himself or his wife could in modesty or morals or in law possibly know of the existence of the fact. The testimony of any other witness would be theoretical merely. Our conclusion is that there was no error in the admission of this testimony of the husband, and that there was, therefore, no error in the refusal of defendant's instructions B and C, or of the embodying of the fourth clause of the instruction concerning the elements of damage which the court gave at the instance of plaintiff.

The fifth point or proposition made by counsel is not tenable. The two physicians referred to show by the examination to which they were subjected that they were fairly competent to testify as experts on the line upon which their evidence was sought.

The sixth point made as to the error of the court in excluding the depositions of Dr. Phelps and Dr. Christie, who were present assisting Dr. Elston in the examination and treatment of plaintiff while in the hospital, in our opinion, is not tenable. It appears that plaintiff objected to these parties as witnesses on the ground that they were his physicians, and therefore, without his consent, not competent witnesses as to what had taken place. Our statute (section 4659, Rev. St. 1899 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2539]) holds a physician or surgeon disqualified and incompetent to testify "concerning any information which he may have acquired from any patient while attending him in a professional character and which information was necessary to enable him to prescribe for such patient as a physician, or do any act for him as a surgeon." Counsel for plaintiff argue that the evidence which it was proposed to elicit from these two witnesses is not set out, and that it cannot be determined whether it was relevant or not. But it appears from the abstract of the record furnished by appellant that the depositions of each of these witnesses was offered to be read, but excluded, save a sentence or two from that of Dr. Phelps, which was read in evidence. The substance of the depositions was very properly inserted in the record, and they are before us. It is argued that the testimony in them is merely cumulative of the testimony already in, and that no reversible error was made in excluding them. We cannot agree to this. The depositions disclose that the testimony offered bore directly on the condition and symptoms and acts of the plaintiff at the hospital as the witnesses saw them, and the testimony of these surgeons bore directly on what they had observed and the conclusions they had arrived at from inspection of and conversation with the plaintiff. It cannot be said that this testimony was immaterial. Nor can we assent to the proposition that it was merely cumulative, or that it was proper to exclude it because merely cumulative. It was more than that. It was independent testimony in corroboration of defendant's theory that the injuries to plaintiff were not of the serious nature claimed. A party has a right to have all the witnesses heard who have knowledge of facts and circumstances bearing on the case. Limitation of the number of what are called "character witnesses" is an exception to this rule. Possibly there are other exceptions. But this is within the rule. Therefore the exclusion of these depositions must rest solely on the question of whether the witnesses come within the statute quoted as excluding physicians and surgeons from testifying, and whether the privilege of exclusion, vested in plaintiff, has been waived.

Cramer v. Hurt, supra, is one among the many cases in which our Supreme Court has held that waiver of the privilege of exclusion rests in the patient alone. It seems to be conceded in this case that Dr. Elston was plaintiff's attending surgeon, and that Drs. Phelps and Christie assisted him; that they were in attendance on plaintiff in that capacity. There is nothing in the records to show that the relation of surgeon and patient did not exist between them and plaintiff as fully as between him and Dr. Elston. Weitz v. Mound City Ry. Co., 53 Mo. App. 39, loc. cit. 44. So that unless it be that, by testifying as to the injuries and treatment himself and waiving the privilege as to Dr. Elston, plaintiff must be held to have waived it as to these two surgeons, there is no force in the point made by defendant. We are referred to Webb v. Met. Street Ry. Co., 89 Mo. App. 604, a decision by the Kansas City Court of Appeals, and to Highfill v. Mo. Pac. Ry. Co., 93 Mo. App. 219, a decision by the same court following it, as holding that by going into detail showing that he had been treated by certain doctors at certain times for certain disorders plaintiff had thrown down the bars and forfeited his right of exclusion of the testimony of the physicians who attended him. We cannot, after careful consideration of that case and opinion and of the cases referred to therein, agree to this. If by testifying to his injuries and what was done and said by his attendant physicians the patient has thrown down the bars, then our statute is abrogated. Nor do we interpret the decision of Mellor v. Railway, 105 Mo. 455, 461, 16 S. W. 849, 850, 10 L. R. A. 36, as sanctioning any such rule. In this latter case Judge Thomas for the court in banc, adopting the opinion of Judge Barclay given in Division No. 1, distinctly held that by calling one physician to testify the plaintiff had not waived his right to claim privilege as to others. The case at bar is much stronger than that, for Dr. Elston was not called by plaintiff. He, plaintiff, merely failed to invoke his privilege against Dr. Elston testifying. Furthermore, as we understand the decision of our Supreme Court in Holloway v. Kansas City, 184 Mo. 19, 82 S. W. 89, plaintiff by testifying to his injuries and treatment and by failing to assert his privilege as against the testimony of Dr. Elston, a witness called by the defendant, did not waive his privilege to object to the testimony of Drs. Phelps and Christie.

The final point made by counsel for appellant is on the exclusion of evidence of certain statements made by a physician to the plaintiff as to the extent of his injuries. The point of this objection seems to be that when the deposition was taken no such objection was made. This assignment is not tenable. Rev. St. 1899, § 2006 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1671).

Finding no reversible error, we think the judgment should be affirmed, but, as our decision on the point indicated is in conflict with that of the honorable the Kansas City Court of Appeals in the two cases cited, we certify the case to the Supreme Court.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Daniel G. Taylor, Judge.

Action by Joseph E. Batsch against the United Railways Company of St. Louis. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

This is an action to recover for personal injuries to plaintiff, and also damage to his horse, wagon, and merchandise in the wagon. His head was bruised and his right arm fractured both above and below the elbow, leaving the arm stiff, he testified. His horse was alleged to have been damaged to the amount of $50, the wagon to the amount of $100, and the merchandise in it to the amount of $25. These injuries were caused by a collision with one of defendant's street cars on Lee avenue, an east and west thoroughfare in the city of St. Louis, on June 22, 1907. Mr. Glendy Arnold's brief for defendant states the facts thus: "Plaintiff was a man 47 years of age, an old resident of St. Louis, and for many years prior to his injury on June 22, 1907, had been engaged in the nomadic and mellifluous pursuit of peddling candy to whomsoever would buy his wares. He was a denizen of the streets, knew its juggernauts, and was proud of his skill in handling the reins, although it appears his experience as a whip had been limited to old plugs and candy wagons—plugs, and particularly the poor old victim of his skill at the time and place in question, so gentle that children could be intrusted to their fostering care. In fact, nothing short of an explosion of dynamite under his tail, or a steam roller belching smoke and steam like a volcano, could arouse this old nag out of a jog faster than the second coming of the Messiah. But, when he did get woke up with fright, he just 'pranced and danced,' so that any durned fool motorman a mile off could tell he was just waiting to plunge head first into the front end of his car. It was on a bright sunny day and a dry level track that plaintiff was ushered into his forty-sixth year and this little mix-up with a west-bound car. He said he never would forget it, as it was on his birthday. Lee avenue is a public highway, and runs east and west. Pansy and Fair avenues intersect Lee avenue a block apart, running north and south; Pansy avenue lying to the west of Fair avenue. Lee avenue between the above-named streets was in the course of reconstruction, excepting the sidewalks and the space occupied by defendant's tracks. The car tracks afforded the only place for wagon traffic between Pansy and Fair avenues. Plaintiff entered the aforesaid block at Pansy avenue trailing the east-bound track. He had not gone more than 125 feet east of Pansy before his progress was suddenly halted by his gentle steed taking fright at a steam roller within 5 feet of said east-bound track and about 30 feet away, which was, to the great dismay of this erstwhile specimen of gentleness and amiability, emitting steam and black smoke, whereupon Old Remus woke up, and before the skill of Joe Batsch, for henceforth he must be known to fame as a great candy whip, could prevent, he had planted his forefeet between the two tracks, and pulling and tugging at the lines, but not moving an inch, he disjoined every vertebra from hames to crupper, trying to get his head right square in the middle of the west-bound track; and there he stuck until the stuffing was rammed out of him by the car. And, when Old Remus got his forefeet between the two car tracks and his head out in the middle of the west-bound track, how he did 'prance.' (Batsch lisps his c's.) He did every acrobatic feat that a man or horse can do, except skin the cat. A blind motorman a block away could have seen the anxiety of this fool horse to enjoy the delightful sensation of a head-on collision. We are advised by Mr. Batsch, under the sanction of his oath, that, when Old Remus established his headquarters on the west-bound track, leaving his hindquarters and Batsch to fight it out on the east-bound track, the oncoming car was then at Fair avenue, which by a most favorable computation was a distance of 300 feet."

Instead of the car stopping as it had time to do, before hitting the horse, according to plaintiff's witnesses, it came along at a rapid rate and collided with the horse and wagon, inflicting the injuries mentioned. The testimony for defendant tended to prove the horse did not swerve into the north car track until the car was within 30 feet of it, and so near it could not be stopped quickly enough to prevent a collision. The negligence pleaded was disregard by the motorman of what is called the "Vigilant Watch Ordinance" of the city of St. Louis, a municipal regulation which requires motormen of street cars to keep a vigilant watch for persons and vehicles on the car track or approaching it and in danger of being injured, and, on the first appearance of such danger, to stop the car in the shortest time and space possible with the means and appliances at hand. The gravamen of the petition is the motorman failed to do as the ordinance required, both as regards a vigilant outlook and stopping the car as soon as possible on the first appearance of danger to plaintiff, thereby "directly contributing" to cause the injuries to plaintiff and his property. The answer was simply a general denial; no plea of contributory negligence having been put forward.

Two witnesses, Carter and Hurley, testified as experts as to the distance in which the car, which had an air brake, could have been stopped. Carter testified he had had 10 years' experience as a motorman, but never on a car having air brakes; knew the cars that ran on the particular track where the accident happened; had seen them passing up and down there; they were equipped with air brakes when he was running; and he presumed they had hand brakes at the time of the accident. He testified the track was dry at that time and the grade very slightly upward; that with a good track and a hand brake an ordinarily prudent motorman could stop a car going at the speed of the one in question in 2 car lengths, or 40 to 45 feet. His testimony was excepted to on the ground he had not qualified as an expert. So was Hurley's. This witness said he had operated street cars as a motorman for about 11 years in St. Louis, and for about 8 months had run cars equipped with air brakes at the World's Fair Grounds; knew the cars operated on the Lee avenue line at the date of the accident, or knew similar cars; that such a car equipped with a hand brake, running 8 or 10 miles an hour, with a load of 4 or 5 passengers, would be stopped by an ordinarily prudent motorman in 10 feet. A witness by the name of Maud Knickmeyer had testified for plaintiff. At the time of the accident her name was Maud Fleshman, but she had married subsequently. On September 25th she gave a statement regarding the accident which tended to contradict her testimony given on the stand in respect of the distance the car was from the horse when the latter first swerved on the north track. This statement was offered in evidence, but excluded by the court, and an exception was saved to its exclusion.

The main instruction given for plaintiff authorized a verdict in his favor, provided the jury found the facts of negligence predicated in it had occurred, and that they had directly contributed to cause plaintiff's injuries. The instruction on the measure of damages was also excepted to because it allowed damages to be awarded for such pain of body and mind as plaintiff might suffer from his injuries in the future, when, as defendant contends, there was nothing to prove he would have such sufferings in the future. Complaint is made of the refusal of the court to grant an instruction requested by defendant which said plaintiff could not recover unless the jury believed the car was at Fair avenue at the time plaintiff got on the track and in a situation of danger from the car; also, because the court refused to instruct plaintiff was not entitled to recover on the charge that defendant's motorman was negligent and failed to use ordinary care to watch for and discover plaintiff's horse in a situation of danger on the track. The ground of the refusal of this instruction is the supposed lack of evidence tending to prove defendant's motorman failed to keep a vigilant watch.

Plaintiff had a verdict, and, judgment having been rendered on it, defendant appealed.

Boyle & Priest and Glendy Arnold, for appellant. A. R. & Howard Taylor, for respondent.

GOODE, J. (after stating the facts as above). We overrule the assignment of error relating to the supposed incompetency of the two witnesses, Carter and Hurley, to testify as experts regarding the distance in which the car could have been stopped. These men had had many years' experience as motormen in operating electric cars, though it is true Carter never had operated one which was equipped with an air brake. Hurley had had eight months' experience with that kind of a car. The testimony shows without dispute a car with an air brake could be stopped in a shorter time and space than one equipped with a hand brake. Both men testified as to the distance in which the car could have been stopped if equipped with a hand brake, and also as to the time in which it could have been stopped with an air brake. Though Carter had not operated cars of the latter kind, his long experience with hand brake cars and his subsequent observation of those equipped with air brakes we think qualified him to testify as an expert. Hurley's qualifications were beyond question.

We overrule, too, the exception to the hypothetical question propounded to these experts, or at least to one of them. This question is said not to have included all the essential facts, but we think it did. The car in question was thoroughly described, and the testimony shows it did not materially differ from other cars which had been in general use in the city and operated and observed by the witnesses. The essential facts were covered by the question, and that was enough. Gourley v. Railroad, 35 Mo. App., loc. cit. 92.

It is contended the court should have instructed against a recovery for lack of vigilant watch by the motorman because there was no evidence to show he was not keeping vigilant watch. This position is untenable. There was much evidence that the perilous position of plaintiff and his property was visible to the motorman from 300 to 600 feet away if he was watching. If witnesses for plaintiff are to be believed, the motorman made no effort to check the speed of the car, and the jury might infer this was due to negligence in failing to look ahead as he should have done, and hence failing to see plaintiff's danger, or else to take proper precautions to stop the car after he saw the danger. The latter would be the less charitable view, and the other was warranted by the evidence. The court did right to submit both grounds of recovery; for there was evidence to prove both.

We do not perceive the force of the assignment of error because of the refusal to instruct against a recovery unless the jury believed the car was at Fair avenue when the horse got on the track and in a situation of danger. The essential point was not whether the car was as far east as Fair avenue when plaintiff's peril became visible, but whether it was far enough away for the motorman to stop by the use of ordinary care in time to avoid a collision.

As the judgment in the case must be reversed for another error, we will not take up the question of whether the main instruction for plaintiff was erroneous in directing a verdict in his favor if the jury found defendant's negligence directly contributed to cause the accident, instead of requiring them to find said negligence caused the accident. No doubt, the charge would be erroneous if the defense of contributory negligence had been set up and supported by testimony. Hof v. Transit Co., 213 Mo. 445, 111 S. W. 1166. But, as no such defense was in the case, we are not sure that decision of the Supreme Court is in point.

Mrs. Knickmeyer had given a statement regarding the accident to a man named Kavanaugh September 25, 1907, some three months after it occurred. We suppose Kavanaugh was an employé of defendant. In this statement she said that on June 22, 1907, at about 11 o'clock in the forenoon, she was cleaning windows at her home on Lee avenue, standing on the ground in the front of her house; that she saw plaintiff's candy wagon passing along on the track to the east, watched his horse to see how he would act, as she had seen other horses "cut up" as they passed the steam roller; that, when plaintiff's horse came to the roller, it was puffing and making a noise, and, "when the horse came up to it, he became frightened and suddenly swung over onto the west-bound track directly in front of a car which was coming west, and which was not over 15 feet east of where the horse swung over. The car struck the horse, knocked it over to the east-bound track, and the horse was lying about the rear end of it when it stopped." She said, further, she heard no gong rung, and the car was running at a pretty good rate of speed. This statement was signed by her under the name of Maud Fleshman, her maiden name. On the witness stand at the trial this witness testified, among other things, about the roller in the street, and that, when she first noticed plaintiff and his wagon, she was in the front yard cleaning windows; that she yelled to a friend there was going to be an accident, she was sure; that the next thing she saw Mr. Batsch fall into the street, and strike his head on a manhole. She then testified as follows: "Q. When the horse began to prance, how far away was the car? A. It was near Fair avenue." Now Fair avenue, according to the witnesses, was 300 feet or more away, and this testimony of the witness on the stand was in conflict with her written statement that, when the horse turned on the north track, the car was only 15 feet away; at least, it appears to have been, and the jury might find it was. On cross-examination she was asked if Kavanaugh interviewed her about the accident on September 27, 1907, and said he did; that she told him all about it in the presence of her mother and thought he wrote down what she said; that at least he wrote down on a paper things she said about the accident. Thereupon her written statement was handed to her, and she was asked to examine it, and see if it was the paper she had signed. She read the paper, and answered that it was her statement with her signature at the bottom in her own handwriting, and her mother was present when she made the statement. The document was afterwards offered in evidence by defendant's counsel as an impeaching one, and plaintiff's counsel objected to its reception on the ground that no proper foundation for its introduction had been laid. The court sustained this objection, and defendant excepted. This ruling was clear error. We have been cited by plaintiff's counsel to no authority which would support it; all that is said being that the written statement was not part of the res gestæ, and hence inadmissible on said score, and no foundation was laid for its reception to impeach the witness. It was not offered as part of the res gestæ, but as a statement made by the witness out of court which contradicted what she testified on the stand; and that, too, on the most material issue of the case. It is insisted she should have been interrogated by defendant's counsel as to whether she made certain of the statements contained in the document, particularly whether she said the horse swung over on the track directly in front of the car when it was not more than 15 feet away. If the attempt to impeach her had been by contradictory oral statements out of court, this position would be well taken; but it is untenable as the attempt was to impeach her by a writing she unqualifiedly admitted having signed as her narrative of the facts of the occurrence. Mr. Greenleaf says a sufficient foundation is laid for the admission of an impeaching writing signed by a witness by the acknowledgment of the witness that it is his writing. 1 Greenleaf, Evidence (Lewis' Ed.) § 463. In State v. Stein, 79 Mo. 330, it was sought to impeach a witness by a letter. During cross-examination of the witness the letter was handed to him, and he was asked if he wrote it, to which he gave an affirmative reply. After the witness left the stand, counsel offered to read the letter, it was objected to, and the court excluded it on the ground the witness ought first to have been examined as to its contents. The Supreme Court held this ruling was erroneous, and proceeded on the theory only applicable to verbal statements offered to impeach a witness; that, when the impeaching evidence is a writing made by the witness, the writing must first be shown to him as the foundation for its introduction, and, if he admits he wrote it, the writing must then speak for itself—citing Greenleaf, supra. In State v. Gonce, 87 Mo. 629, testimony given by the defendant was impeached by an affidavit for continuance he had made. He was not interrogated regarding the contents of the affidavit, but it was shown to him, and he admitted the signature was his. This was held to be a sufficient foundation for the reception of the writing.

There was evidence to prove plaintiff would suffer in the future from his hurts, and so the court rightly instructed regarding future suffering.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded. All concur.

HEDRICK v. CITY OF ST. JOSEPH et al. (Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 1, 1909.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 171*)—OBSTRUCTION—"NUISANCE."

An obstruction in a stream caused by filling it, and resulting in damages to property through water being set back, is a "nuisance."

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4855-4864; vol. 8, p. 7734.]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 171*)—OBSTRUCTION—LIABILITY.

Where an embankment maintained by defendant street railway company over a stream, on which it had laid its tracks, caused an overflow and damage to plaintiff's property, it was immaterial whether defendant's acts in raising the height of and repairing the embankment had any effect in causing or contributing to the backing up of the water.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 171*)—OBSTRUCTION—LIABILITY.

Where defendant maintained a nuisance consisting of an embankment in a stream which caused the water to overflow onto plaintiff's land, it was not necessary in an action for damages therefrom to show that defendant had anything to do with the erection of the embankment; proof of knowledge of its existence and that it obstructed the flow of water sufficing.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 834*) — OBSTRUCTION OF STREAM—NUISANCE.

Where a fill in a stream formed part of a street, and constituted a nuisance by obstructing the flow of water, that some city employees had removed debris from the mouth of the culvert under the fill, and that the city by its non-action permitted the obstruction to remain after the territory had been brought within the city limits by being platted and laid off into blocks with streets by the owners, did not show that the city had assumed jurisdiction and supervision of the street, so as to render it liable for damages to plaintiff's property resulting from the overflow of the water.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County; C. A. Mosman, Judge.

Action by Robert H. Hedrick against the City of St. Joseph and the St. Joseph Railway, Light, Heat & Power Company. Judgment for defendants, and, from an order granting a new trial, they appeal. Affirmed as to defendant company, and reversed as to defendant city, and judgment ordered entered in its favor for costs.

W. B. Norris and O. E. Shultz, for appellant City of St. Joseph. R. A. Brown, for appellant St. Joseph Ry., Light, Heat & Power Co. Kendall B. Randolph, for respondent.

BROADBUDS, P. J. This is an action to recover damages against defendants for the maintenance of a nuisance. The facts are as follows: There is running into and through the city of St. Joseph a natural water course, which crosses Jule street between Twenty-Eighth and Twenty-Ninth streets. In the year 1889, before the territory in the locality mentioned was within the city limits, a fair association in constructing its race track made a fill in the stream, in which was placed a culvert about five feet in diameter, which was sufficient to carry off the water under ordinary conditions. Afterwards the race track was abandoned by the association, and later on the property was platted into blocks and lots, and the city extended its limits beyond the locality of the stream and embankment. There was evidence to the effect that the entrance and outlet of the culvert were both on private property. A portion of the old race track that crosses the stream forms a part of Jule street. Jule street at this point has never been improved by the city. The defendant street railway company built its tracks over this embankment in 1889, but had abandoned them for a time until about 1902 or 1903, when it resumed possession, at which time the embankment had been partially washed away. The railway company at the latter date repaired the damages before relaying its tracks, and also raised the height of the embankment. The city was shown to have had knowledge that Jule street was an obstruction to the flow of water in the stream, and at different times through its employes removed the debris that had accumulated at the culvert. The plaintiff's house is located south of Jule street and a short distance east of the stream. In July, 1907, there was an unusual precipitation of rain, and, the culvert not being sufficient to discharge the water that flowed through the stream, it was retained by the embankment and caused to flow back and into plaintiff's house, whereby it was greatly damaged. The verdict of the jury was in favor of the defendants. The plaintiff asked for a new trial, which the court sustained on the ground that the verdict was not supported by the evidence. From the action of the court granting a new trial the defendants appealed. The case of Martin v. City of St. Joseph (Mo. App.), wherein the plaintiff therein claimed damages caused by the same conditions, was before the court, and is reported in 117 S. W. 94. The cause was reversed for the reason that the court failed to instruct the jury that, in order to hold the city liable, they must find it had knowledge of the nuisance and a request to abate it. The defendant Railway, Heat & Power Company was not a party to the case in this court. That the obstruction of the stream in question causing damage to the property of owners in the vicinity is a nuisance we take for granted is conceded.

It being conceded that the embankment is a nuisance, we have no hesitation in saying that the defense relied on by the company should have been disregarded by the court. This defense is fully explained in instruction No. 8 given by the court. It is as follows: "Even if you (the jury) should believe from the evidence that the defendant St. Joseph Railway, Heat & Power Company did at some time or times prior to the overflow described in evidence level up the surface of Jule street, and thereby fill certain holes and gullies in said street, or that it raised the grade of said Jule street, yet, if you further believe that the filling up of such holes or gullies and the raising of said grade of Jule street did not in any way cause or contribute to the damages sustained by the plaintiff, then he cannot recover against said St. Joseph Railway, Heat & Power Company, and your verdict will be in its favor." It was altogether immaterial whether the acts of the company in raising and repairing the embankment had any effect in causing the backing up the water, as the embankment admittedly did cause the overflow and damage to plaintiff's property. The defendant had been and was maintaining the embankment at the time, and it was in so doing maintaining a nuisance. It was not necessary to show that it had anything to do with the erection of the embankment. All that was necessary was to show that the company had knowledge of its existence, and that it obstructed the flow of water in the stream. Pinney v. Berry, 61 Mo. 359; Dickson v. Railroad Co., 71 Mo. 575; Wood on Law Nuisance, § 838, p. 968. We are of the opinion that the action of the court in setting aside the finding of the jury as to the defendant company was justified, as the plaintiff had made out his case against it.

But a more serious question arises as to the action of the court in reference to the finding for the defendant city. It is true there was evidence tending to show that the city had been notified of the obstruction of the stream by the embankment and a request to enlarge the outlet for the passage of the water. But it was necessary for the plaintiff to also show that the city had assumed control and supervision of Jule street at that particular point. The facts that some city employe may have removed debris from the mouth of the culvert at some time or another, and that the city by its nonaction permitted the obstruction to remain after the territory had been brought within the city limits by being platted and laid off into blocks with streets by the owners, in our opinion did not show that the city had assumed jurisdiction and supervision of the street. In Downend v. Kansas City, 156 Mo. 60, 56 S. W. 902, 51 L. R. A. 170, it is held that the approval by a city council of a plat of a proposed addition to a city "is in no sense an acceptance of a street thereon as a public highway, nor does it cast upon the city the duty of keeping such street in repair. Not until the properly authorized city officers do some act evidencing an intention to assume jurisdiction over the street does the obligation of the city to keep it in repair begin, and not till then is the city liable for a failure to do so." And: "Mere user by the public will not establish a street nor impose on the city a duty to keep it in repair." And so it is held in Carle v. City of Desoto, 156 Mo. 443, 57 S. W. 113; Moore v. City of Cape Girardeau, 103 Mo. 470, 15 S. W. 755. The plaintiff has called our attention to the case of Johnson v. City of St. Joseph, 96 Mo. App. 663, 71 S. W. 106, in order to support his theory of the liability of the city under the evidence. But it will be seen that that case is entirely different as to facts. There the city had by its acts assumed supervision and control of the street in question. Other cases cited by plaintiff are not in point.

In our opinion there was a failure of proof going to show that the defendant city was liable for the nuisance, as it had nothing to do with it. There is nothing to show that it ever assumed jurisdiction or control officially in any manner whatever.

It is therefore ordered that the cause be affirmed as to the defendant company, and reversed as to the city, and that judgment be entered in its favor for its costs. All concur.

MORRIS v. BUTLER.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 1, 1909.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 63*)—EXECUTION—DELIVERY—"CONTRACT FOR PAYMENT OF MONEY."

Where the president of a bank authorized to lend plaintiff's money on real estate security only loaned it to a partnership consisting of himself and his cashier, for which he took notes, two of which were signed by himself and one by himself and the cashier, which he kept with his private papers in the bank, plaintiff having no knowledge that the money had been so loaned until after the failure of the bank, the notes did not constitute contracts for the payment of money for want of delivery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 95; Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, p. 1530.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 154*)—RIGHT TO APPEAL—JUDGMENT—ACQUIESCENCE.

The president of a bank, having money to loan for plaintiff on real estate security only, loaned it without authority to a partnership consisting of himself and his cashier, and held the notes executed therefor without delivery. A receiver in bankruptcy having been appointed for the bank and for the president individually, plaintiff sued to recover the notes from the receiver, and obtained a judgment that she was entitled to the possession, and, having elected to take the value of the property, judgment was rendered in her favor against the receiver for the amount due thereof, whereupon the receiver, after appeal, filed a claim in the bankruptcy proceedings that the president was indebted to him as receiver of the bank in a specified amount, including one of the notes, "liability for which had been adjudicated" against the bank. Held, that plaintiff's judgment did not determine that the notes were a part of the estate of the bank, and hence the receiver's claim did not constitute a recognition of the conclusiveness of the judgment on him such as would effect an abandonment of the appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 957; Dec. Dig. § 154.*]

3. WORDS AND PHRASES—"EXECUTE."

While, in strict legal understanding, the verb "to execute" as applied to notes, deeds, or written contracts, includes both signing and delivery, in popular speech it is often limited to the mere act of signing the instrument, and it was in this sense that it was used in an admission by defendant that the notes in question had been executed by the parties they purported to be executed by, both parties having subsequently treated the question of delivery as a controverted issue—[citing 3 Words and Phrases Judicially Defined, 2568].

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 166*) — UNAUTHORIZED ACTS—RATIFICATION.

Where an agent had no authority to loan plaintiff's money except on real estate security, and she did not know at the time she demanded possession of notes evidencing loans made by the agent to others without authority that they were not notes of third persons secured by real estate, her demand for delivery did not constitute a ratification of the agent's act in making such loans and accepting the notes.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Bates County; Argus Cox, Special Judge.

Action by Celina Morris against W. J. Butler, as receiver of the Bates National Bank. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal denied. Judgment reversed.

John A. Eaton, E. H. McVey, and W. O. Jackson, for appellant. Thos. J. Smith, for respondent.

JOHNSON, J. At the March term this court, speaking through Broadbuss, P. J., announced the following opinion, reversing the judgment pronounced by the trial court in the case under consideration:

"The plaintiff sues the defendant as receiver in bankruptcy of the Bates County National Bank in replevin for the possession of two promissory notes made payable to her and purporting to have been executed by F. J. Tygard, and one note payable to her and purporting to have been executed by the said Tygard and J. C. Clark.

"The facts are that Tygard was the president, and Clark was the cashier, of said bank at and prior to the dates of said notes. The plaintiff placed in the hands of Tygard a certain sum of money with the understanding that he was to lend it for her on real estate security. Tygard, instead of lending the money, made some other disposition of it and wrote the notes, two of which were signed by himself and one by himself and Clark, but kept by himself with his private papers in the bank. Tygard was also declared a bankrupt, and said notes were taken possession of by the receiver in these proceedings. Plaintiff testified that she had no knowledge of the existence of the notes until after the bank and Tygard ceased to do business. A jury was waived, and the cause tried before the court. The finding was that the plaintiff was entitled to the possession of the so-called notes, and, as she elected to take the value of the property, judgment was rendered for her for the face value of the notes, less credits indorsed thereon. The defendant appealed. The plaintiff moves to dismiss the appeal on two grounds, only one of which we deem of sufficient importance to discuss.

"One of the grounds in respondent's motion to dismiss appeal is based upon the fact that since the appeal in this case he has appeared before the Honorable T. T. Crittenden, referee in bankruptcy, and made the following claim, to wit: 'That F. J. Tygard, against whom a petition for bankruptcy has been filed, is indebted to him as receiver of said bank in the sum of $34,204.25, the consideration for which is as follows: Then follows a long statement of items, in which are included the three notes mentioned, viz.: 'One certain promissory note dated August 11, 1903, for $35,000, payable to Mrs. J. W. Morris, with interest, * * * liability for which has been adjudicated against the Bates National Bank, and on which there is a balance due in the sum of $1,155.98.' A similar statement is made of the other two notes. The defendant in response to said motion says: 'Appellant further states that the filing of the claim in bankruptcy was for the purpose of preserving the estate of the receiver-ship in the event of the happening of a contingency—I. e., liability under the controversy herein; that, if said claim is for no other or further purpose, then it is for the benefit of respondent, Celina Morris, as well as for the benefit of the appellant, in that each have a contingent interest. Appellant further states that the issue raised by the filing of the claim in bankruptcy is an issue of fact which this court will not pass upon. Appellant for further resistance states that no benefits have been received; that said claim has merely been filed, and action thereon awaits the result of this appeal, and that the said claim will remain in statu quo until the final determination of the appeal; that there has been no settlement of the controversy, or of the merits of the case, or no satisfaction of the judgment and no acquiescence therein.'

"Under the facts as a matter of law plaintiff was not entitled to recover as against the receiver. We will not attempt to review the authorities of the defendant to sustain his position that the plaintiff failed to make out a case. It is sufficient to say that the so-called notes were not contracts for the payment of money as they had never been delivered. There was no agreement that Tygard and Clark would execute the papers, or that plaintiff had accepted them after they were made. And the claim of ownership of the papers made by the defendant as receiver of the bank ought not to preclude him from a hearing on this appeal. The judgment in this case does not determine that the notes in question are a part of the estate of the bank. It determines, on the contrary, that they are the property of this plaintiff which defendant wrongfully detains as such receiver. If the claim of defendant is to be construed according to the language used, his claim cannot have any reference to the adjudication in this case, as there was no such adjudication. And an exhibit of the judgment and proceedings in this case would not support his claim before the referee. And no proof that he could make allude of the record would support any such claim. Therefore we hold there is no such claim in fact before the referee that would amount to an abandonment of this appeal or a recognition of its conclusiveness upon the defendant. The judgment herein has no basis whatever for its support, and it would be a great injustice to let it stand against defendant and the creditors of the bank, whom he represents."

A motion for rehearing filed by plaintiff was sustained, and the cause was resubmitted at the present term. A thorough reconsideration of the briefs and arguments of counsel has resulted in the conviction that we properly dealt with the case in our former opinion, and we readopt that opinion as a correct expression of our views of the questions discussed. The learned counsel of plaintiff press on our attention other questions, not referred to in the opinion, with so much earnestness and evident sincerity that we deem it but due counsel to specially determine these questions in a supplemental opinion.

First, it is contended that the fact on which our decision turned, that there had been no delivery of the notes to plaintiff by Tygard, was withdrawn from the issues in the case by the following admission of counsel for defendant, made of record at the beginning of the trial: "Counsel for Plaintiff: You admit these notes to have been executed by the parties they purport to be executed by? Counsel for Defendant: Yes, sir; these are the notes described in the petition. Counsel for Plaintiff: These are the genuine notes? Counsel for Defendant: In our opinion." It is argued the admission that the notes were executed necessarily implied that they were delivered to plaintiff the payee as well as assigned by the makers. In strict legal understanding the verb "to execute," as applied to deeds, notes, or written contracts, includes signing and delivering, but in popular speech it is often used to express merely the act of signing the instrument. Rapalje & Lawrence's Law Dictionary; Anderson's Dictionary of Law; Webster's International Dictionary; 3 Words & Phrases Judicially Defined, 2558. The admission that the notes offered were those executed by the parties was contractual in its nature, and became binding on the parties. Hannah v. Baylor, 27 Mo. App. 312. It belonged to the class of admissions which fall under the head of conclusive presumptions of law, and its recitals to the extent of their legitimate scope must be presumed to be true. Moling v. Barnard, 65 Mo. App. 603. "There is never need to prove that which your adversary concedes." Bank v. Bank, 90 Mo. App. 399. But the interpretation of such admissions should be controlled by the dominant rule employed in the construction of other contracts. The mutual intention and understanding of the parties to be collected from what was said and done at the trial where the admission was made and acted on is the true touchstone. We therefore turn to the record to ascertain whether the parties and the trial court understood defendant's counsel to use the word in its strict technical sense or in the popular sense. If he intended to admit that the notes had been delivered to plaintiff before the failure of the bank, he admitted away the only fact on which he could predicate a defense to the merits of plaintiff's demand. His conduct throughout the trial demonstrates that he was alive to the importance of the fact, and did not intend to abandon it, but did intend to use it as his chief defense. In his cross-examination of plaintiff and in the direct examination of Tygard, he carefully elicited the fact, without objection by plaintiff, that there had been no delivery of the notes. The issue of delivery or no delivery was contested, preserved, and relied on by defendant; and that plaintiff recognized it as a live issue appears not only in the proceedings at the trial, but in her first brief filed in this court. We quote from the brief as follows: "Although the notes in question were not, in fact, manually delivered to the plaintiff in this case prior to the time of the institution of the suit, the record shows that they were executed for actual money received, and demand made of the maker (Tygard) for the possession of the notes, which facts constitute a ratification by the plaintiff of the fact of the taking of the notes and of a constructive delivery of the same to her. It is well settled that a subsequent ratification is equivalent to a prior authorization in matters of this character." Since it is apparent that the parties and the court used the word in its popular sense, we will give it that definition, and accordingly hold that the admission included only the fact of the signing of the notes.

The next point made by plaintiff is that there was a constructive delivery of the Tygard and Clark note to plaintiff. It is argued that, when Clark signed that note and handed it to Tygard, he thereby delivered it to the agent of plaintiff authorized to receive a delivery. The scope of the agency of Tygard was to lend plaintiff's money on real estate security. Instead of doing this, he lent the amount of the note in question to a partnership composed of himself and Clark, which was the same thing as lending it to himself. The transaction was beyond the apparent as well as the actual scope of his employment, and the supposititious delivery by Clark was no delivery to plaintiff for the simple reason that Tygard had no authority to accept a note of that character.

Further, it is argued that there was a constructive delivery of all the notes because shortly after the bank failed plaintiff ratified the acts of Tygard in lending her money to himself, and asked him to give her the notes. We quote the testimony of plaintiff on which this proposition is founded: "Q. I believe you said you never had had the notes in your possession at all? A. I never did.

Q. You never authorized the taking of them? A. What? Q. You never authorized Capt. Tygard to give these notes of his in his name? No. I didn't know he had any. I didn't know he had the money even. I supposed it was out in real estate, and they were other people's notes. By the Court: Q. Well, how did Capt. Tygard come to take these notes? Did he have the money for the purpose of loaning it? A. When I came in possession of this money, I turned it over to Capt. Tygard to loan for me on some real estate security, and I didn't know where the notes were, nor who held the notes. I was away in Chicago most of the time until I returned, and, when the bank closed, I spoke to Captain about the notes, and he said they were among his private papers in the bank, and I said, 'Well, I want possession of the notes,' and would go to the receiver and just get them, and Captain informed me I could not get possession of them because the receiver was in possession, and he couldn't get his private papers, and consequently I couldn't get mine, and then, when the overdraft came, of course, I was wonderfully surprised, because I knew I had no account in the bank— By Mr. Smith: You needn't state about that because the court held that was immaterial. By the Court: Well, your understanding of the way these notes came to be given was from the fact that Capt. Tygard had your money for the purposes of loaning it? A. Yes, sir; to be loaned on real estate." This testimony does not bear out the contention of plaintiff's counsel that there was a ratification. It is evident plaintiff still thought at the time of her interview with Tygard that he had lent her money to other parties on real estate security, and she asked him to turn over to her such notes—not notes that he had executed himself for the money he had appropriated to his own use.

We have considered the point that the record made by defendant in the trial court is not sufficient to preserve the issues we have determined, and find it to be without merit. The judgment embraces findings of fact, and we think the motions for a new trial and in arrest bring the case before us for review.

The judgment is reversed. All concur.

1. COVENANTS (§ 73*)—BUILDING RESTRICTIONS—ENFORCEMENT—ABANDONMENT OF RESTRICTIONS.

That the platters of an addition, after plaintiffs had bought lots therein subject to a covenant against erecting thereon any building to be used for any purpose other than a private residence, and defendants had bought lots therein subject to like restriction, abandoned such scheme of restriction, did not affect plaintiffs' right to enforce the restriction against defendants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Covenants, Cent. Dig. § 77; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

2. COVENANTS (§ 51*)—BUILDING RESTRICTIONS—ENFORCEMENT—CHANGE IN SUB-BOUNDINGS.

The right to enforce the covenant, subject to which lots in an addition were sold, against erecting thereon any building to be used for any purpose other than a private residence, is not affected by a street railway, with a loop and station therefor, being built in front of certain of the lots, and they becoming more valuable for business than residence purposes; the mere presence of the railway not turning the street from a residence into a business thoroughfare.

Appeal from Circuit Court, St. Louis County; John W. McElhinney, Judge.

Action by Walter H. Spahr and others against Leander W. Cape and others. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Adopting, in substance, the statement of counsel for appellants in their principal brief, this is an action to restrain appellants, defendants below, from erecting a store or business house on certain lots in Maplewood subdivision, on Sutton avenue, in St. Louis county. Maplewood subdivision was laid out in the county, and the lots of the subdivision, except those fronting on Manchester avenue, were conveyed to different parties, subject to certain conditions and restrictions, including the following:

"First. When a building is erected on said lot the front of said building shall not be less than twenty feet distant from the line of the street on which it fronts; but this provision shall not apply to the foundations of pillars, or open porches or verandas which may be built on the front of said residence.

"Second. Not to erect or permit to be erected, occupied or used on said property any dramshop, or saloon, or livery stable, tannery, slaughterhouse, dairy, boneyard, public cattle shed, glue factory, nor any building designed or intended to be used for such purpose or purposes; also not to establish, maintain, or permit any nuisance of any character on or adjacent to said property, and not to erect any building on said property to cost less than $1,800 when completed.

"Third. Not to erect or cause to be erected on said premises any building designed or intended to be used for any purpose except as a private residence.

"Fourth. It shall be lawful for any other person or persons owning any lots or parts of lots in said Maplewood subdivision, in behalf of and for the benefit of either themselves or the said owner or owners, or for any or either of them, to prosecute any proceeding at law or in equity against a person or persons infringing or attempting to infringe, or omitting to perform or to keep, observe or abide by said provision or provisions, for the purpose of preventing them from so doing, or collecting damage for such infringement or omission, or both."

It is further alleged in the petition that plaintiffs are owners of certain lots in the subdivision, and that the defendant Cape is the owner of the west 50 feet of lots 1, 2, and 3, of block 4, having a front of 150 feet on Sutton avenue, by a depth of about 50 feet on Maple avenue; "that Cape received property subject to said restrictions, but nevertheless is proceeding to erect thereon a building designed to be used as a store or business house and flats; that the front of said building as now planned will not be 20 feet distant from the line of the street on which it fronts; and that defendants Granon and Koester are the contractors erecting the same. The plaintiff thereupon prayed for an order restraining the erection of said building, and for a further order restraining defendants from erecting at any time a store or business house or flats or any other building on said lots except a private residence to cost not less than $1,800, the front of which to be not less than 20 feet distant from the line of the street on which it fronts."

The answer of defendants admits the facts set out in the petition as to the subdivision of Maplewood, the conveyance of the lots subject to said restrictions, and admits that the restrictions are truly set forth in the petition, and that defendant Cape is the owner of the west part of lots 1, 2, and 3, in block 4, of said subdivision, and that the same is subject to the conditions, restrictions, and terms hereinbefore admitted to exist except so far as they may have been determined, abrogated, changed, or annulled by the acquiescence and consent of the owners and grantors of said subdivision. Defendant Cape also admits that he is proceeding to erect a building on the west part of lots 1 and 2, of block 4, being a brick store and for office purposes, and that the same will not be within 20 feet of Sutton avenue, and is designated to be constructed of brick, two-stories high, at a cost of about $5,000. The answer further alleges: That the subdivision referred to in the petition was surveyed and laid off in lots before the conditions were made and imposed thereon, and that lots 1, 2, and 3, of block 4, and all other lots of said subdivision adjoining Sutton avenue, in blocks 4 and 6, fronted on Sutton avenue, and not on the streets intersecting Sutton avenue, but that, before defendant Cape acquired title to said parts of said lots, the-

Maplewood Realty Company had abandoned the plan and design of said survey and divided and sold a large number of lots on Sutton avenue, among others the said parts of said lots in question, by dividing and selling said lots along Sutton avenue at right angles to the plan of the original survey. That at the time the subdivision was laid out there were no street railroad tracks along Sutton avenue, and that since said time a double-track railway has been laid along said avenue, and are in frequent daily and nightly use. That immediately opposite the lots in question there has been constructed a loop and depot building for the use of the said railway, and a depot building in constant use for railway purposes. That on a number of the lots of said subdivision fronting on said Sutton avenue parties have without any objection made by any of the property holders in said subdivision or by these plaintiffs erected and now maintain buildings which are not used for residence purposes, but are maintained and used for business purposes, that cost less than $1,000, and are built within less than 20 feet of the front of the lots on said avenue. That on the opposite side of said avenue numerous other kinds of business are now and for a long time have been carried on. That by reason of the premises said Sutton avenue and the lots fronting thereon in said subdivision have ceased to be desirable for purely residence purposes, and are only desirable or valuable for business purposes.

In reply to this answer, the plaintiffs admit that there is a street railway in operation along Sutton avenue, and the loop has been erected opposite the lots in question, and they also admit that there have been business houses erected on Sutton avenue north and west of Maplewood subdivision, and that there are two small temporary buildings on said Sutton avenue, in said subdivision, one of which is owned by defendant Koester, and used by him as an office, and the other one is owned by Dr. Townsend, but that the buildings are small, temporary structures, set upon small posts, and costing only a nominal sum, and they deny that they ever consented to the erection of said small buildings and their present use.

Still following the statement of appellants' counsel, the facts in evidence are that the subdivision called "Maplewood" was platted in 1891. The property lies immediately west of the city limits on the Manchester road. At the time the subdivision was made it was a raw piece of land, and Sutton avenue was simply an unimproved country road. Maplewood subdivision proper is set out on a plat attached to plaintiffs' abstract of the record, and is bounded by Marshall avenue, Manchester road, Elm avenue, and Sutton avenue. All the lots in the subdivision were disposed of by the company, and, with the exception of the lots fronting on the Manchester road, the deeds conveying the same contain the restrictions set out in the petition. As an inducement for the street railway company to build to their subdivision, the realty company built the station opposite the property in question, and induced the railroad company to make a five-cent fare to the station. The street railroad was built about 12 years ago, coming out the Manchester road and turning south on Sutton avenue to the station, where the cars turn, and other cars carry passengers farther west to Kirkwood and Webster and Meramec Highlands from this point. The station consists of a waiting room, confectionery store, and place for sale of soft drinks, and is used up to 2 o'clock in the morning for passengers who are transferred from western to eastern cars, and vice versa. Large crowds often congregate in front of this station, and there is much noise and confusion by these people at all hours up to 2 o'clock. Sutton avenue is also used as a traffic way and thoroughfare for hauling freight from the Missouri Pacific Railroad on the south to the business establishments located in Maplewood on Manchester road and elsewhere. "According to the testimony of Mr. Koester, there are 31 business establishments on Sutton avenue between Manchester road and the Missouri Pacific Railroad. They include a grocery store, tombstone shop, two paint shops, tin shop, a gas-fitting shop, real estate office, lumber yard and office, two doctors' offices, and contractor's office on the east side of the street, and a concrete and coalyard, a real estate office, the loop, and station heretofore mentioned, a drug store, butcher shop and grocery, tin shop, two-story steam power planing mill, real estate and paint shop, undertaking establishment and livery stable, storage room, machine shop, and hardware store, all on the west side of Sutton avenue. It further appears from the testimony of Mr. Koester that the lots of Maplewood subdivision fronting on Sutton avenue are occupied by two doctors' offices, and two double store buildings occupied by contractors, painters, real estate agents, architects, and stenographers, a photograph of which is shown on plate, Exhibit 1. These business establishments have been erected and carried on in this restricted property for some four or five years without objection by any one. It also developed from the testimony that there is not a single residence fronting on Sutton avenue from Manchester avenue south to Elm avenue, and that said Sutton avenue is wholly devoted to business purposes in the vicinity of the lots in controversy. Testimony of real estate agents of the neighborhood and others who had knowledge of the surrounding property in Maplewood was to the effect that the lots fronting on Sutton avenue had a very small or no value for residence purposes, but were only valuable for business."

There was no claim or pretense of lack of notice to defendants of the restrictions on the subdivision and on these lots. There was testimony tending to prove that no injury to the property of plaintiffs or of any lot owner in Maplewood subdivision had been sustained by reason of business being carried on on Sutton avenue, either by depreciation in values or by way of noise or other causes, nor was there any testimony tending to show that the building contemplated to be erected by defendants would cause any actual damage to plaintiffs or other property owners in the subdivision. The court rendered a decree finding the issues for plaintiffs, and making the temporary injunction which had been issued permanent. Plaintiffs in due time filed their motion for new trial which was overruled, exceptions saved, and the case brought to this court on appeal.

G. A. Wurdeman and J. C. Kiskaddon, for appellants. C. J. Harrison, J. O. Marshall, and W. F. Smith, for respondents.

REYNOLDS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). Cases involving the question of infringement and enforcement of restrictions on the use and occupation of lots and tracts of land, particularly in and adjoining the city of St. Louis, have been before this court, and have been so carefully considered and the law relating thereto so clearly stated and settled that it is not necessary to undertake any extensive discussion of the principles underlying this class of cases. In Hall v. Wesster, 7 Mo. App. 56, decided in 1879, in a carefully considered opinion, delivered by Judge Bakewell, this court announced the rule to be (loc. cit. 60) "that a party will not be permitted to use land in a manner inconsistent with the contract entered into with his vendor, and with notice of which he purchased. And if the right at law under the covenant is clearly established, and the breach is clear, and the covenant one that can be specifically enforced, the courts will not, unless under exceptional circumstances, take into consideration the comparative injury to the parties from granting or withholding the injunction." The court further said (loc. cit. 61) that the action in such case "is based upon the mere fact that there has been a breach of covenant; that the plaintiff had a right to enjoy his property in the manner and form provided by the stipulation in his deed and in that of the defendant; and that he has a right to judge whether the agreement shall be preserved or whether he will permit it to be violated." Calling attention to the fact that there are cases in which there has been no appreciable or substantial damage, in which an injunction will be refused, the court holds (loc. cit. 62): "Where all the purchasers of an estate are bound by restrictive covenants not to use their houses for certain purposes, an injunction will be granted to restrain a breach of the covenant, without any regard to the question of the character or degree of annoyance. The objection may be founded on the merest whim."

In Coughlin et al. v. Barker, 46 Mo. App. 54, a decision rendered in 1891; and in which full consideration to questions involved in cases of this character was given by Judge Seymour D. Thompson, the distinction between covenants running with the land, and those personal to the parties, is gone into, and the conclusion of the court is that, if the owner of several adjoining lots conveys one of them with a restriction as to the manner of building thereon and subsequently conveys another, if said restriction was intended for the benefit of the last-mentioned lot, and not merely as a covenant for the benefit of such owner personally, the grantee of such last-mentioned lots and his assigns can enforce such restriction against every one of the grantees of the first-mentioned lot, acquiring title under or through such conveyance, and taking with notice, actual or constructive, of the restriction, and that the absence of a specific restriction in the deeds or of an express intention that they are made for the benefit of the adjoining land is an evidentiary circumstance tending to show that the restriction was intended by the grantor of the lot for his own benefit personally, and not for the benefit of the adjoining land; that whether the easement is a personal right, or one pertinent to the land, is generally to be determined by a fair interpretation of the grant or reservation creating it, aided, if necessary, by reference to the situation of the property and the surrounding circumstances. It was further held in that case that the terms of the conveyance, when construed with reference to extrinsic circumstances, did not establish the necessary intention, but only established such intention conditionally. In St. Louis Safe Deposit Bank v. Kennett's Est., etc., 101 Mo. App. 370, 74 S. W. 474, Judge Goode, in a thoroughly considered opinion, held, all the members of the court concurring, that a party may restrain a continuous breach which is beneficial to him and stand on the very letter of his obligation, for a party cannot make a solemn obligation and then disregard it on the plea that no harm will result to the other party, the court further holding in that case that the mere failure to object at the time to a violation of the covenants and restrictions as to building contained in the deeds of the parties was not such acquiescence as estopped the plaintiff from subsequently suing to enjoin the continuance of the violation of the restriction. In that case this court, following Hall v. Wesster, supra, in our state, and many cases from other jurisdictions, further held that, while the extent of the injury is vital, when a nuisance, unrelated to contractual rights, is the gravamen of the action, if parties settle their rights in regard to a parcel of land by covenants, these must be observed, whether their nonobservance will inflict injury or not, the plaintiff having the right to restrain even a continuous breach which is beneficial to him, and to stand on the very letter of his obligation, "for a party may not make a solemn engagement, and then disregard it on the plea that no harm will result to the other party." In Sanders v. Dixon, 114 Mo. App. 220, 89 S. W. 577, the same question of building restrictions came before this court, and Judge Goode, again speaking for the court, repeated that where covenants containing the restrictions inured to the benefit of the complainant, and were broken in a substantial way by the defendant, it was unnecessary to show that damage resulted from the breach. That was a case in which the covenant was against the erection of more than one dwelling house on the same lot. Referring to St. Louis Safe Deposit Bank v. Kennett's Est., supra, Judge Goode said that, while the courts have some discretion in granting an injunction respecting restrictive covenants affecting the use of lands, "they are disposed to uphold such restrictions according to their true meaning and this court is strongly of that disposition." In Semple v. Schwarz, 130 Mo. App. 65, 109 S. W. 633, Judge Bland, delivering the opinion for the court, and with the concurrence of all the court, held that the fact that the evidence showing that different restrictions were imposed in the conveyances of lots in another addition adjoining, laid off and conveyed by the same grantor, were inadmissible. In that case it was also held that the fact that the defendants had set apart a room in their residence for the express purpose of receiving patients, and that the defendant physician had let his patients know that they might call upon him there professionally between certain hours, and that he had advertised this particular room as his office by tacking his professional card on the door, constituted the "doing of business," in violation of the covenant against doing business or carrying on business in a house erected on the lot, and the court enjoined the continuance of that use of any part of the premises.

Applying the principles in these cases to the facts in evidence in the case at bar, it appears in the first place that the defendant Cape had notice and knowledge of the restrictions; that he bought subject to them; that the proposed construction of a building in which a professional office or drug store could be conducted was in the mind of the defendant in the erection of the proposed building; and that the covenants covered all of the property and were common in the deeds of all the grantees is very clear, and that these covenants inured to the benefit of all purchasers in the addition is also evident. The argument that the parties laying off the Maplewood addition or the originator of the scheme for the Maplewood addition had abandoned or modified the original scheme, and that that scheme had been "determined, abrogated, changed or annulled by the acquiescence and conduct of the owners and grantors of said subdivision," does not bring this case within the Coughlin Case. In the case at bar the original covenants as to improvements affected all the lots covered by them. It was beyond the power of the originators of the scheme or owners of other lots to change them without the consent of all who had purchased under those covenants; those covenants, at the time of the purchase by plaintiffs of these lots, covering and being in force upon the lots purchased, and plaintiffs not being of those who had assented to any change or release of the covenants.

Our attention is specifically called by one of the learned counsel for the appellants to the cases of Trustees of Columbia College v. Thacher, 87 N. Y. 311, 41 Am. Rep. 365; Jackson v. Stevenson, 156 Mass. 496, 31 N. E. 691, 32 Am. St. Rep. 476, and Parker v. Nightingale, 6 Allen (Mass.) 341, 83 Am. Dec. 632, as controlling under the facts in this case. In the Columbia College Case it was held that the new conditions had so entirely and completely changed the situation, these conditions being the erection of the structure for and operation of an elevated railway in front of the premises, as to render the restrictions no longer servicable. In the Jackson Case, at the time of the establishment of the restrictions, the neighborhood was intended to be and was used as a residence district; and in the Parker Case it is held that circumstances may exist which would warrant a refusal to grant equitable relief, even when it was made to appear that there had been a failure to use and occupy the premises in accordance with the terms of the deed by which they were conveyed. These cases have all been before our court in one or more of the cases before referred to, on different branches of them to be sure, but they are not cases with which this court is unfamiliar. An examination of them shows that they are not applicable to the case at bar. It appears that, when Maplewood subdivision was laid out, the railroad did not extend to or through it, although the plat in evidence shows the road, a surface road, operated by electricity, as running through it and forming a loop through the block immediately west of the block in which these lots are situated. The cars run around this loop. All that the evidence tends to show is that the property adjoining this loop, as do the lots here involved, is more valuable for business than for residence purposes. It does not convince us that it has become unsuitable for residence purposes, and so does not come within the three cases cited. The mere fact that it is more valuable or suitable for the one purpose than the other is not enough to justify a court in overturning and nullifying the solemn covenants in the deeds. Nor is it true that the mere presence of a street railway along a street turns that street from a residence into a business thoroughfare. In brief, it does not strike us that the conditions developed by the testimony bring this case within the exceptions noted in the three cases relied upon by counsel. Neither do we think there is any violation of any principle of equity, on the facts in this case, in holding the parties to their own deliberately made and accepted covenants. Nor is there such a state of facts in this case as raise an estoppel against plaintiffs. Citing and quoting Bales v. Perry, 51 Mo. 449, our Supreme Court, in Harrison v. McReynolds, 183 Mo. 533, loc. cit. 550, 82 S. W. 120, 126, said: "Though silence in some cases will estop a party from speaking afterwards, yet 'it is only when it becomes a fraud that it postpones.' If, therefore, the truth be known to both parties, or if they have equal means of knowledge, there can be no estoppel." In the case at bar the acts relied on as estoppels did not go even far enough to make a resort to this rule necessary. There were no acts proven that by any application of the rule of estoppel can be said to have constituted an estoppel. On consideration of the evidence in the case and of the law as laid down by this court and enforced in the cases referred to, our conclusion is that the case was rightly determined. In entering up the decree, however, the injunction is made to cover all of lots 1, 2, and 3, whereas the evidence shows, and the trial court found, that appellant is owner, not of all of these lots, but of the western 50 feet thereof. Evidently that is a mere inadvertence in entering up the decree, possibly a clerical error, as the court distinctly found as a fact that appellant Cape was owner of only the western 50 feet of the lots.

Accordingly, the decree is modified so as to extend the injunction over the western 50 feet of lots 1, 2, and 3, of block 4, and, as so modified, it is affirmed. All concur.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County; C. A. Mosman, Judge.

Action by the American Copying Company against Felix Muleski. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Mytton & Parkinson, for appellant. J. B. Shackelford and John A. Connett, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. Plaintiff's action is for damages for breach of a written contract. The case was referred to a referee, whose findings for plaintiff were approved by the trial court, and judgment accordingly entered.

It appears that defendant, who is a retail butcher in St. Joseph, signed a written instrument whereby he agreed to purchase of plaintiff certain advertising stamps advertising defendant's business, which were to be given out by defendant to his customers, one for each 10 cents' worth purchased, for which defendant was to pay plaintiff 30 cents per hundred stamps so obtained of plaintiff and given out by defendant. It was further agreed that plaintiff would consign to some merchant in St. Joseph "one Cleveland special automobile." The writing then proceeded as follows: "For the compensation received by you from us for said stamps you are to print our name and business on your Automobile Stamp Directory for this town and appoint some person or firm in this town to give to each of our customers for each filled Automobile Stamp Directory containing one hundred of such purchase stamps a ticket, giving to the holder an undivided interest in said automobile upon the termination of this proposition, and the faithful compliance upon our part of its conditions. It is understood that you have the right to accept propositions from other merchants of this town, and that customers holding tickets from all such merchants who have complied with the terms of their agreements with you shall have equal interest with ours. That is, the automobile, upon the termination of this agreement and other similar agreements you may have with other merchants of this place, shall become the sole property of the holders of tickets obtained in the above-described manner. It is further understood that upon each ticket will be printed a certain date, said date to be within one month of the termination of this agreement, upon which a meeting of the holders of all tickets issued shall be held, to agree upon what disposition shall be made of said automobile. At that meeting each ticket holder shall be entitled to one vote for each ticket held that was secured in the above-described manner, the majority of such votes at such meeting to determine the disposition to be made of said automobile."

The petition charges a failure on defendant's part to carry out his contract in purchasing the stamps, or to carry out other parts of the contract. The referee found that defendant paid $15 for 5,000 stamps, but after such payment refused to comply further with the contract, and found plaintiff's damages to be $493.36. Defendant's answer was a general denial, though we gather from the record, brief, and argument in this court that his defense was that at the time he signed the written contract it was understood, and verbally agreed by him and plaintiff's agent, that that portion of the contract requiring defendant to purchase the stamps of plaintiff and give them to customers was to be erased, and was not to be a part of the proposition to be sent to plaintiff at the home office. The further defense was that the contract was a mere gambling or lottery scheme concocted by plaintiff to sell the automobile. After the trial had opened and partly progressed with the hearing of evidence, defendant asked leave orally, and formally by written request to the court, to be allowed to proceed with his defense in the examination of witnesses, on the basis of an amended answer which he filed setting up the defenses just noted and verified by his affidavit. He was refused, and his amended answer was stricken out.

Defendant felt that, on account of the verbal agreement, the writing did not represent the real contract, and that therefore he should deny it under oath. The claim is made that on account of confusion arising over a former decision of the Supreme Court Commission (Hammerslough v. Cheatham, 84 Mo. 13) it was thought that, as defendant did actually put his signature to the paper, he could not deny the execution of the contract, thus actually signed. But, however, defendant may have been misled, the fact remains that the defense thus attempted is not allowed by the law. A contemporaneous agreement cannot be allowed to affect the writing. No fraud is charged and no reason suggested why the writing did not represent the agreement. It was defendant's duty to see that it did. Johnston v. Ins. Co., 93 Mo. App. 588. Besides, even though a contract be signed by a party, until delivered it is not executed, and when not delivered there should be a denial of execution under oath. Hart v. Harrison Wire Co., 91 Mo. 414, 422, 4 S. W. 123; B. & L. Ass'n v. Obert, 169 Mo. 507, 517, 69 S. W. 1044.

As to the defense of plaintiff's project being a lottery scheme, that was a matter that should have been specially set up in defense. McDermott v. Sedgwick, 140 Mo. 181, 39 S. W. 776; St. Louis Ass'n v. Delano, 108 Mo. 217, 18 S. W. 1101.

But, aside from the foregoing, we would not feel at liberty to interfere with the judgment for the reason that the matter of leave to amend pleadings in the course of a trial is largely in the trial court's discretion, and the court's ruling should not be disturbed, unless it should be apparent that the discretion has been abused. Weed Sewing Machine Co. v. Philbrick, 70 Mo. 646.

There are other suggestions of errors, but we do not think either of them affected the result, and we affirm the judgment. All concur.

BROOKS v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 10, 1909.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 494*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—EVIDENCE OF HANDWRITING BY COMPARISON—SUFFICIENCY.

In a prosecution for forging a check, evidence alone of the cashier of the bank upon which the check purported to be drawn that the signature was not that of either of two persons by that name who had accounts in his bank is insufficient to support a conviction under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 794, providing that evidence of handwriting by comparison made by experts or by the jury is competent, but that proof by comparison only shall not be sufficient to establish the handwriting of the witness who denies his signature under oath.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1081; Dec. Dig. § 494.*]

Appeal from District Court, El Paso County; James R. Harper, Judge.

George Brooks, alias George Schofield, was convicted of forgery, and appeals. Reversed and remanded.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of forgery, and his punishment assessed at two years' confinement in the penitentiary.

The facts show that appellant passed as true to Mrs. J. F. Primm a check for the sum of $71.10, signed "J. A. Campbell." The check was drawn on the American National Bank of El Paso. The cashier of the bank testified that there were two men by the name of J. A. Campbell that had money deposited in his bank. After the check was delivered by appellant to the prosecuting witness, Primm, to pay for room rent in her boarding house, Mrs. Primm gave appellant a check on her account at the above-named bank for the difference between $71.10 and the amount appellant owed her, which was about $18. This check, however, she subsequently had the bank refuse to pay. Appellant presented the check for $50 given by said Primm to the bank, and there was informed that the check had been ordered not to be paid by Mrs. Primm. He left the bank without saying anything, except expressing regret that they would not pay it. Neither of the men by the name of J. A. Campbell, who had deposits in the above-named bank, testified in this case; but the cashier alone of the bank testified that the signature on the check for $71.10, which was delivered, as stated above, by appellant, was not the signature of either of the J. A. Campbells who had money in his bank.

So we have a case that turns upon the question as to whether or not a comparison of handwriting alone will justify a conviction for forgery. Article 794 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1895 reads as follows: "It is competent in every case to give evidence of handwriting by comparison made by experts or by the jury, but proof by comparison only shall not be sufficient to establish the handwriting of the witness who denies his signature under oath." See, also, Batte v. State (decided at the present term) 122 S. W. 561. It follows, therefore, that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict.

This being true, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

O'NEAL v. STATE.

WITNESSES (§ 372*) — IMPEACHMENT — ILL FEELING.

Accused could show, on cross-examination, that the state's witness had requested accused to furnish money to pay witness' fines when he was a convict, and became angered on accused's refusal to do so, to show bias.

Appeal from Grayson County Court; J. W. Hassell, Judge.

Horace O'Neal was convicted of violating the local option law, and appeals. Reversed and remanded.

E. J. Smith and J. Q. Adamson, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., and J. P. Haven, Asst. Co. Atty., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted for violating the local option law; his punishment being assessed at $75 fine and 40 days in jail.

The action of the court in having talesmen summoned is not discussed, as it may not occur upon another trial.

Whitehead was used as a witness by the state, and on his testimony the conviction was obtained. He was very closely cross-examined; the testimony showing that he had been convicted in several local option cases, and had several still pending against him. Appellant, among other things, desired to elicit from the witness on cross-examination the fact that he had approached appellant, while he (the witness) was a county convict, with the request that appellant furnish the money to pay his (witness') fines, and became angered with appellant because he refused. In other words, the cross-examination in regard to this matter was urged in order to elicit from the witness his adverse personal feelings toward appellant. The court refused to permit this testimony to go before the jury.

In this there was error. Animus, motive, or ill will of a prosecuting witness is never a collateral or irrelevant question in a criminal case. The bias or prejudice can thus be shown, and is in most cases of great importance, and is always material, in order to enable the jury to form a correct judgment as to the credit to which the testimony of the witness is entitled. Rosborough v. State, 21 Tex. App. 672, 1 S. W. 459; Hart v. State, 15 Tex. App. 202, 49 Am. Rep. 188; Gregory v. State (Cr. The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

ALEXANDER v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 10, 1909.)

1. WEAPONS (§ 11*)—CARRYING WEAPONS—PERSONS PRIVILEGED—TRAVELERS.

One who was a traveler, within the statute, could not carry concealed weapons around a town in his pocket while he was making purchases, but could leave them in his wagon on going out in town, and place them in his pocket again on returning to the wagon, without violating the law.

2. WEAPONS (§ 17*)—CARRYING CONCEALED WEAPONS—PROSECUTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for carrying brass knucks about accused's person, conflicting evidence held to sustain a conviction on the theory that accused, who was a traveler, had the weapon on his person when he left his wagon and went into town.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Weapons, Cent. Dig. § 29; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

Appeal from Wood County Court; R. M. Smith, Judge.

Columbus Alexander was convicted of carrying brass knucks concealed about his person, and he appealed. Affirmed.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of carrying about his person brass knucks. The evidence in substance shows that appellant had gone from one county to another on a hauling expedition. When he reached the town of Winsboro, he left his wagon, and went about the streets, and made some purchases. The officer who arrested him testifies that he saw defendant in the town of Winsboro, going towards his wagon, and followed him; that he was about 15 or 20 steps behind him, and reached him just as the appellant got in his wagon, and arrested him. Upon searching him, he found the knucks in his hip pocket under a bottle of whisky or alcohol. This witness says the defendant did not get the knucks out of the wagon; that he had not had time to do so; that he had just reached the wagon and picked up the lines, when he (the officer) arrested him. Under his (the officer's) testimony appellant would not have had time to have got the knucks from any part of the wagon and placed them in his hip pocket where the officers found them. He denies seeing a sack of flour in the wagon. The deputy city marshal also testifies that he was present when defendant was arrested; that, when he first saw him, he was going from Thomas' store to his wagon; that appellant then went to Harris' saloon, where he bought a bottle of whisky or alcohol. The defendant's evidence goes to show two facts: First, that he was a traveler, within the purview of the statute. This is not denied, nor in any way controverted. The second is that he found the knucks on the side of the road, and placed them in his wagon, and did not carry them about the town with him, but placed them in his pocket after returning to the wagon.

This is the case in a nutshell. If the testimony of the officers is correct, then appellant was guilty of violating the law. If a traveler, he had no right to carry the brass knucks around the town, where he was making purchases. Stilly v. State, 27 Tex. App. 445, 11 S. W. 458, 11 Am. St. Rep. 201. Under the officers' testimony, appellant left his wagon while in the town of Winsboro, went about the town to different houses, and the testimony also shows he purchased a bottle of whisky at a saloon and a sack of flour at a grocery store. This, under the case of Stilly v. State, supra, and the line of cases in harmony with that case, would support the conviction. Under his testimony there was no violation of the law. He was not guilty of violating the law in carrying the knucks in his wagon, and if, on returning to the wagon, he took them out of his wagon and placed them in his pocket, he would not be guilty of violating the law. The case was tried before the court, and, he having found the facts against appellant, we do not feel justified in setting aside the conviction.

We are therefore of opinion there is evidence sufficient to support the conviction, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

LUCAS v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 8, 1909.)

GAMING (§ 98*)—PROSECUTIONS—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for gaming, evidence held not to sustain a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gaming, Dec. Dig. § 98.*]

Appeal from Johnson County Court; J. B. Haynes, Judge.

Sam Lucas was convicted of playing and betting at a crap game, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Phillips & Bledsoe, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant in this case was convicted in the county court of Johnson county of the offense of unlawfully playing and betting at a game played with dice, called "craps," and his punishment assessed at a fine of $50.

Many questions are raised on the appeal, which we deem unnecessary to notice. Under our view of the case, the evidence is so manifestly insufficient to sustain a conviction that the same must be reversed on that account. This is a case almost identical with, and is a companion case of, Looper v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 120 S. W. 880, where we held the facts insufficient. It may suffice to say that the main witness relied upon by the state, John Steakley, constable of precinct No. 1, on cross-examination, among other things, testified as follows: "I did not see any dice there. I did not see the defendant with any dice that night. When I was testifying about dice being shot in there, I was just testifying from the noise I heard. I did not see any dice. I did not see anybody shoot any dice. It is what I thought they were doing. That is what I thought from what I heard. I did not see the defendant with any money that night. I do not know whether the defendant had any money that night, or not. I did not see the defendant make a bet or wager of any kind that night."

The disposition to be made of the case renders it unnecessary to notice the many other assignments of error relied on by appellant.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

Where, in a homicide case, there was considerable evidence introduced, pro and con, as to whether there was sufficient timber, weeds, and brush to obscure the presence of decedent when he was shot, so that accused could not see him, as accused claimed, alleged newly discovered testimony, relating to the physical condition of the ground and surroundings of the scene of the tragedy, embracing photographic views taken of the place from different angles of view, was merely cumulative, and not ground for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2329; Dec. Dig. § 941.*]

Appeal from District Court, Houston County; B. H. Gardner, Judge.

Henry Roberts was convicted of manslaughter, and appeals. Affirmed.

Moore & Sallas, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. This conviction was for manslaughter; the punishment being assessed at four years in the penitentiary.

It would be difficult to read a record where the contradictions are more numerous or more critical than is evidenced by the facts found in this record. The appellant is a stepson of the deceased, and was at his home when the deceased came by and was shot. The son of deceased, stepbrother of appellant, testified, as did another witness, that appellant shot the deceased because he was whipping his half-sister, the daughter of deceased. This daughter, who is said to have been chastised by her father, testified that she was not there and her father had not whipped her; that she was at home, her father's residence, at the time of the homicide, doing a day's washing, and knew nothing of the transaction until some hours after the shooting occurred, and after her father was brought home shot. The deceased lived some time, and made statements in regard to how the shooting occurred, and he stated each time that the shooting was accidental. The theory of the defendant was that the deceased was passing his house bee-hunting, and introduced evidence to that effect, and that he and his stepbrother, Marshall, son of deceased, had been shooting at a target, and that he (appellant) fired the pistol, not knowing that his stepfather was passing; that deceased could not be seen by him, on account of weeds, timber, and brush, and the shooting was purely accidental and unintentional. One of the state's witnesses, who testifies to the shooting as being criminal, was shown not to have been present at the time of the shooting. The whole record is full of direct contradictions as to the witnesses and their presence or nonpresence at the time of the difficulty.

In this view of the record we are asked to reverse the case on account of want of sufficient evidence to justify a verdict. We are of opinion that this contention ought not to be sustained. The jury are the exclusive judges of the facts proved and the credibility of the witnesses. Whether the state's witnesses swore falsehoods or not we cannot say, and the jury saw proper to believe their version of the matter, and convicted. It was their province to reconcile these contradictory statements, if they could, or to believe such testimony as occurred to them to be proper to be credited. There was a good deal of testimony, also, in the record with reference to the condition of the place, as to whether the deceased could not have been seen, as contended by appellant. The issue on this phase of the testimony was decidedly sharp, as it was in regard to the other issue in the case, that appellant shot his stepfather on account of the chastisement of his sister, and whether he shot him accidentally and unintentionally. These matters were fairly submitted to the jury in the charge of the court, and, in fact, there is no complaint in regard to the court's charge in relation to these issues.

The motion for new trial is mainly based upon alleged newly discovered testimony. We are of opinion this evidence is not newly discovered, within the contemplation of the law; but, put in its strongest light for appellant, it is purely cumulative, and related only to the physical condition of the ground and surroundings of the scene of the tragedy. It is contended that it could be proved by these witnesses that the state's testimony was not correct in regard to the timber, brush, and weeds about the place. To support this, after the trial, photographic views were taken of the place from different angles of view, and these are appended to the motion for new trial and sent up in the record. As before stated, as to whether or not there was sufficient timber, weeds, and brush to obscure the presence of deceased at the time of the shot, so that appellant could not see him, there was considerable evidence introduced, pro and con, during the trial. It is therefore evident that the testimony upon which appellant sought his new trial, in regard to this phase of the case, is purely cumulative. Under an unbroken line of decisions in Texas, a motion for new trial is not authorized under such circumstances.

This disposes of the questions suggested for revision, and we are of opinion that, as presented, we are not authorized to reverse the judgment.

Therefore it is affirmed.

LEE v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909.)

1. LARCENY (§ 12*)—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—EVIDENCE.

Accused drove a herd of cattle to town for shipment to market. A third person drove another's cattle into the herd, and requested accused to take them to market and remit to him the money after a sale of the cattle. The third person was seen in conjunction with accused in driving the cattle. Held, that accused, if not engaged in the original taking, could at most be convicted of receiving stolen property, knowing it to be stolen.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 763, 764*)—INSTRUCTIONS—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

An instruction, on a trial for theft, that possession of recently stolen property, without an opportunity to explain possession, does not justify a conviction, but should be considered as a circumstance, and that, if accused failed to explain his possession, which was of a character demanding an explanation, the jury must be satisfied, to warrant a conviction, that his possession was personal, recent, and exclusive, was erroneous, as on the weight of evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731-1748, 1752, 1768, 1770; Dec. Dig. §§ 763, 764.*]

Appeal from District Court, Young County; E. W. Nicholson, Special Judge.

H. L. Lee was convicted of cattle theft, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

John C. Kay, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of theft of cattle, and his punishment assessed at two years' confinement in the penitentiary.

The evidence in this case shows that appellant, while driving some cattle to Graham for shipment to Ft. Worth, passed through the prosecuting witness' pasture. Appellant swears one Ed Poe drove a bunch of cattle into the herd that was being driven by him (appellant). Appellant further states that Poe subsequently requested him to take the cattle that he had placed in appellant's bunch to Ft. Worth, and remit the money to Poe after selling the cattle at Ft. Worth. The evidence shows, from other witnesses, that Ed Poe was seen, in conjunction with appellant, driving a bunch of cattle at the time in question.

1. Under this state of facts the court charged the jury as follows: "The defendant sets up as a defense in this case that the head of cattle mentioned in the indictment, together with 15 others, were by one Ed Poe turned into a bunch of about 40 head of cattle which defendant owned and was then driving to Graham, Tex., for shipment to and sale at Ft. Worth, and that the said Poe directed defendant to ship said cattle to Ft. Worth and sell same with his (defendant's) cattle, and to send him (Poe) at Ardington, Ind. T., a check for the proceeds of same. Now, if you find and believe, from the evidence in this case, that the said Ed Poe did turn into defendant's bunch of cattle, the head of cattle mentioned in the indictment, with others, and that the said Poe did instruct the defendant to ship the same to Ft. Worth and sell the same with his (defendant's) cattle, and to send to him (said Poe) at Ardington, Ind. T., a check for the proceeds of same, and if you further believe that the defendant accepted said cattle for shipment and sale as aforesaid, and that he did ship the said cattle to Ft. Worth, and there did sell the same and remit the proceeds by check to the said Ed Poe at Ardington, Ind. T., and if you further believe that the defendant took no part and had nothing to do with the original stealing or taking of the cattle (that is, if they were stolen, or taken) then you will acquit the defendant and say by your verdict not guilty."

This charge is erroneous. Appellant would not be guilty of the theft of the cattle, if Poe, without appellant consenting, drove the cattle into appellant's bunch. He might, under a proper state of facts, be convicted of receiving stolen property; but if appellant had nothing to do with the original taking of the cattle, but subsequently received same from Poe, and carried them to Ft. Worth, and sold them, the utmost that he should be convicted for would be for receiving stolen property, knowing it to be stolen. It follows, therefore, the charge of the court is erroneous. Tucker v. State, 21 Tex. App. 699, 2 S. W. 893; Boyd v. State, 24 Tex. App. 570, 6 S. W. 853, 5 Am. St. Rep. 908. It follows that the court should have instructed the jury, as above suggested, that, if appellant was not engaged in the original taking of the cattle in question, they should find him not guilty, regardless of whether he sold the cattle subsequently or not.

2. The sixth paragraph of the court's charge is as follows: "You are further instructed that if you believe, from the evidence, that the property alleged to have been stolen (if stolen) was recently thereafter found in the possession of the defendant, and that the circumstances connected with his possession were of such a character as to demand of him an explanation of his possession, and he failed or refused to make such explanation, then you are instructed that, before you would be warranted in finding him guilty from such circumstances of possession alone, you must be satisfied that his possession was personal, was recent, was exclusive, was unexplained, and that it involved a distinct and conscious assertion of property by the defendant, and if any of these constituents are wanting, the defendant is entitled to be acquitted." The seventh paragraph of the court's charge is as follows: "You are further instructed that possession of recently stolen property, without an opportunity of explaining his possession, is not sufficient, of itself, to warrant a conviction for theft, but should be considered by you as a circumstance in the case, in connection with the other evidence in the case." These charges are not correct. See Wheeler v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 350, 30 S. W. 913; Berry v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 44, 38 S. W. 812; Webb v. State, 8 Tex. App. 118; Mask v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 136, 31 S. W. 408. These charges are upon the weight of evidence.

For the errors pointed out, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

WHITE v. STATE.

1. WITNESSES (§ 361*)—IMPEACHMENT—CORROBORATION.

In a prosecution for theft of a lawn mower, testimony of an officer, who recovered the mower at accused's house, offered after the owner had testified to going with the officer there and identifying it, and after evidence had been introduced impeaching the owner's general reputation for truth, as to statements by the owner as to how he identified the mower, was not admissible to show that the owner made the same statements out of court as to its identification as at trial; accused not being present when such statements were made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1167; Dec. Dig. § 361.*]

2. LARCENY (§ 52*)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for theft of a mower, accused, claiming that he bought it from others, and paid part down, and subsequently paid the remaining 25 cents, could show that he paid the money for the mower, and evidence that he stated at the time what he paid the 25 cents for, was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. § 147; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

3. WITNESSES (§ 337*)—IMPEACHMENT—CONVICTION OF CRIME—REMOVEDNESS.

In a prosecution for theft, evidence that accused had been sent to the penitentiary 24 or 25 years before for robbery was not admissible, being too remote; but evidence that he had pleaded guilty to the crime of theft 4 or 5 years before was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1132; Dec. Dig. § 337.*]

Appeal from Ellis County Court; J. T. Spencer, Judge.

Ed White was convicted of theft, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of theft, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $25.

1. Appellant was charged with stealing a mower. Bill of exceptions No. 1 shows the state introduced Sim Allen, prosecuting witness, who testified that, a short while prior to August 1, 1908, his lawn mower was stolen from where he kept it under the floor of his house; that he notified the officers, and about August 10, 1908, the deputy sheriff came to him and had him go to defendant's house, to see if he could identify a mower there, which he did, and which was exhibited to the court; and said witness said he could identify the mower by the manufacturer's brand upon it, the number, the fact that it had been filed on the wrong side of the blade, and by a little cord, which had caught in the axle, and worked down into an opening, and twisted around the axle. Thereafter the state introduced the deputy sheriff, who testified to the fact of Sim Allen reporting the theft of his lawn mower, and, further, that he found the lawn mower exhibited in court at appellant's house, and went to Sim Allen's house to get him to see if he could identify it, and took him to where the mower was. The state asked him what Sim Allen said he could identify it by. The witness was asked if defendant was present when Sim Allen told him how he identified the mower, and he said, "No." Appellant objected to him detailing the statements so made; the defendant not being present, same being hearsay and immaterial. "Be it further remembered that appellant had theretofore introduced witnesses who testified that Sim Allen's general reputation for truth and veracity in the neighborhood where he lived was bad, but no evidence was or had been offered to impeach him, in that he had made contradictory statements. The state insisted that, inasmuch as the defendant had introduced evidence impeaching Sim Allen's general reputation for truth and veracity, they had the right to strengthen and corroborate his testimony by showing that he had made the same statements out of court that he did in court. The objection being overruled, the witness testified as follows: 'When Sim and I got to the mower, Sim looked at it and said he thought it was his. He then got down over it and positively identified it as his, and said he knew it by the brand, and by the fact that there were some scratches where his boy had filed the blades on the wrong side, and by the fact that a little string had become wrapped somewhere on the mower, I cannot say exactly where he said the string was. I did not examine, nor see the string. Defendant was not present when these statements were made.'" This testimony was not admissible. The evidence for the defense shows that appellant agreed to pay $2.50 for the mower, but at the time he bought same from two strange white men he only had $2.25; that subsequently he paid them the 25 cents.

The defense, as shown by bill of exceptions No. 2, placed a witness on the stand, and asked the witness the following question: "Did defendant then and there state what he paid the men the 25 cents for?" This testimony was admissible. It was proper to prove that he paid the money.

2. Bill of exceptions No. 3 shows that, while appellant was on the stand in his own behalf, on cross-examination, the state's counsel asked him the following question: "Have you ever been in the penitentiary?" Appellant objected, on the ground that the question was too general, and did not limit the time to a time sufficiently recent to make proof of a felony charge for impeachment purposes, and that the answer would be irrelevant, immaterial, and prejudicial. The court overruled appellant's objection, and compelled appellant to answer that he had once been in the penitentiary. When witness was tendered back to appellant's counsel for further examination, appellant said it was 24 or 25 years ago that he was sent to the penitentiary for robbery. Appellant then asked that the jury be instructed to disregard the testimony that appellant had been to the penitentiary for any purpose, which request was overruled. The court approves the bill, with the explanation that "defendant admitted, in addition to the matters alleged in the foregoing bill, he had 4 or 5 years ago pleaded guilty to the crime of theft in the county court of Ellis county." The latter statement is not remote, and therefore admissible; but the former statement was clearly inadmissible, on the ground that same was too remote.

For the errors suggested, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

EVANS v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 686*)—EVIDENCE—WITNESSES.

The county attorney may put any witness on the stand he sees fit, and he need not call the prosecutor as a witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1567-1575; Dec. Dig. § 686.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 392*)—EVIDENCE—WITNESSES.

The county attorney may, to explain why the prosecutor is not called as a witness, prove by a qualified witness that prosecutor is insane.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 852; Dec. Dig. § 392.*]

3. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 67*)—SELF-DEFENSE.

Where it reasonably appeared to one, judging from the circumstances surrounding him at the time when an assault was made on him, that he was in danger of death or serious bodily injury, he could act on the appearances, whether subsequent events showed that the appearances were real or not.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. § 96; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

4. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 97*)—VERDICT—SUFFICIENCY.

The jury, on a prosecution for assault, must find the grade of the offense, whether aggravated or simple assault; and a verdict merely finding accused guilty, and assessing his punishment at a fine, is insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. § 151; Dec. Dig. § 97.*]

Appeal from Delta County Court; C. C. Dunagan, Judge.

Tab Evans was convicted of an assault, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Lane & Ratliff, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of an assault, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $5.

1. Bill of exceptions No. 1 complains that the court refused to require the county attorney to place upon the witness stand the alleged injured party, Andrew Winfrey, in order to test his mental qualifications as a witness; the said Andrew Winfrey being present in court, and the county attorney having placed Andrew Winfrey's father, I. N. Winfrey, upon the witness stand for the purpose of proving said Andrew Winfrey's mental incapacity, because under the direction of the court the mental qualifications of the alleged injured party should have been tested, before offering proof by some other person that he was mentally unable to testify, and because the best evidence of which the case was susceptible should have been introduced, if possible. In the first place, the county attorney could put any witness on the stand he saw fit. There is no law that requires him to put the prosecuting witness on the stand, whether he is crazy or not; and if the father of the prosecuting witness was placed upon the stand, and properly qualified to testify about his insanity, there could be no error in this action, in order to explain why the main witness and party aggrieved was not placed upon the stand. The insanity of the prosecuting witness might also be quite germane, to indicate whether or not appellant had any reason for making an assault upon him. This matter, however, is not presented in such way that we can tell for what purpose this testimony was introduced.

2. Appellant excepted to the ninth paragraph of the court's charge, because the court instructed the jury that a person has a right to defend himself against any assault or threatened assault upon his person calculated to inflict serious bodily injury, and to a violent attack, because this instruction limited defendant's defense to serious bodily injury, and to a violent attack. The charge of the court is as follows: "You are instructed that self-defense is a defensive, not an offensive, act, and must not exceed the bounds of mere defense and prevention. There must be an apparent necessity to ward off by force some unlawful and violent attack; and a person attacked must decide for himself, at his peril, as to whether the circumstances in which he is placed, and upon which he acts, are such as to furnish a reasonable apprehension of danger. A person has a right to defend himself against any assault or threatened assault upon his person calculated to inflict serious bodily injury, and it is not essential to his perfect right of self-defense that the danger be real or actually exist, if it is apparent." This charge is erroneous, in that it limits appellant's right of self-defense, by stating that he must decide whether the assault is violent at his peril. It is true, in a subsequent portion of the charge, this is somewhat changed or qualified; but still appellant does not have to decide at his peril that the assault is being made or about to be made. If it reasonably appeared to him, judging from all the circumstances surrounding him at the time the assault is made, that his life or person was in danger of death or serious bodily injury, he has a right to act on said appearances, regardless of whether subsequent events show said appearances are real or not. So there is nothing that a defendant, acting upon the perfect right of self-defense, has to do at his peril. The charge is incorrect.

3. The fourteenth paragraph of the court's charge is as follows: "If you should find the defendant not guilty of an aggravated assault and battery, but believe that the defendant is guilty of a simple assault and battery, the form of your verdict will be: 'We, the jury, find the defendant guilty, and assess his fine at $—, filling in the — the amount agreed upon by you, to be not less than $5 nor more than $25.'" The objection to said instruction is that it does not tell the jury to find the grade of the offense, and, if they found him guilty of simple assault, to so state in their verdict. This question has been repeatedly before this court, and with unbroken uniformity we have held that a jury must find the grade of the offense. In this case the jury merely found appellant guilty, and assessed his punishment at a fine of $5, without stating the grade of the offense. Hays v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 546, 28 S. W. 203; Bowen v. State, 28 Tex. App. 498, 18 S. W. 787; Aycock v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 115 S. W. 590; Moody v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 105 S. W. 1127.

For the error suggested, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

BOYD v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 10, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 364*)—EVIDENCE—RES GESTÆ.

A statement by accused, just prior to his entering a schoolhouse and disturbing religious worship, in answer to a warning by witness that, if the meeting was disturbed, somebody would report accused and his companions, "By God, you would not do it," was admissible as res gestæ.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—PREJUDICE.

Where accused was subjected to the minimum punishment for disturbing a religious assembly, he was not prejudiced by the erroneous admission of evidence of a state's witness that, after warning defendant and his companions not to disturb the meeting, witness left the services because he thought there was going to be a disturbance.

Carl Boyd was convicted of disturbing religious worship, and he appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of disturbing religious worship, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $25.

The bill of exceptions in the record discloses the following facts: M. A. Thomas, state witness, in his examination in chief by the county attorney, after he had already testified that he went out of the schoolhouse and met Henry Pritchett, Lacy Jones, and defendant, Carl Boyd, near the door thereof, and warned them not to go in the house, and not to disturb the people, as, if they did, somebody would report them, and defendant then and there said, "By God, you would not do it," etc., and that when he went out of the house he went out to the arbor and sat down, and never went back any more, then the county attorney propounded to him the further question, to wit: "Why did you leave the house, and go to the arbor, and sit there until the services ended in the schoolhouse?" to which question the witness answered that he left the house, and went out to the arbor, and stayed there until the services were over, because he thought there was going to be disturbance. Appellant objected to the answer of the witness, because it was the expression of witness' opinion, because it was irrelevant evidence, and incompetent, and was calculated to unjustly influence the minds of the jury against defendant. Part of this testimony was admissible, because same was part of the res gestæ of the act of disturbing the congregation, since appellant immediately entered the house where religious worship was in progress, and there the disturbance took place. This declaration of appellant to the witness was part and parcel of one continuous transaction. We do not believe that the reason why witness did not also enter the house was admissible; but, in view of the fact that the jury gave appellant the minimum punishment, it could not operate a reversal of the case.

There are various exceptions urged to the charge of the court; but the same is in the usual stereotyped form, and properly presented every phase of the evidence to the jury.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

ELKINS v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 10, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 614*)—CONTINUANCE—ABSENT WITNESS.

In a burglary case, where an application for second continuance showed that a nonresident witness, who was sick, would testify that the goods that accused was found in possession of, and that were claimed by prosecuting witness as having been stolen from his store, were the property of such absent witness, she having had a store in the village where the burglary was alleged to have occurred, and that none of the property relied upon by the state to convict accused by possession alone was taken from prosecuting witness' house, except a pair of shoes, about which accused's testimony showed the absent witness knew nothing, the witness' testimony was material, and it was error to refuse the continuance.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 369*)—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE—IDENTIFICATION OF GOODS IN ACCUSED'S POSSESSION AS BELONGING TO THIRD PERSONS.

In a burglary case, evidence of the identification of goods in accused's possession by third persons as belonging to them was inadmissible.

Appeal from District Court, Wilson County; E. A. Stevens, Judge.

George Elkins was convicted of burglary, and appeals. Reversed and remanded.

F. H. Burmeister, C. F. Elkins, and J. E. Canfield, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of burglary, and his punishment assessed at two years' confinement in the penitentiary.

Appellant filed a second application for continuance for the want of the testimony of Ola Elkins, his daughter, which witness resides in the city of San Antonio, Bexar county. The application discloses that on April 19, 1909, appellant applied to the clerk of the court for a nonresident subpoena for the witness, which was duly issued and sent to the sheriff of Bexar county by due course of mail, which subpoena was returned May 10, 1909, indorsed and duly executed as to the witness Ola Elkins; that on the call of the docket May 10, 1909, the appellant caused an attachment to issue by order of the court for the said witness Ola Elkins, and on May 14, 1909, the appellant again caused an attachment to issue for the absent witness, directed to the sheriff of Bexar county; that none of the attachments have been returned to the court, showing how same have been executed, but on the 17th day of May, 1909, J. E. Wiseman, the district clerk of the court, received the following letter: "Dear Sir: Witness Miss Ola Elkins is sick and unable to attend court. The doctor's certificate and return will follow to-morrow. Respectfully, B. L. Lindsey, Sheriff." Subsequently the attachments were returned, together with the doctor's certificate. Appellant further showed to the court that said witness Ola Elkins is now sick in bed, and under process, and unable to attend the present term of court. The application, in substance, shows that appellant would have proved by said witness, if present, that the goods appellant was found in possession of, that were claimed by prosecuting witness as having been secured by burglarizing his store, were the property of said Ola Elkins, she having had a store in the village where the burglary is alleged to have occurred and accumulated the property in question from divers and sundry parties; that the witness would have sworn that none of said property relied upon by the state to convict appellant by possession alone was taken from the prosecuting witness' house, save and except a pair of red shoes, that seemed to have been missed, according to the testimony, from prosecuting witness' house some two or three weeks before appellant was arrested. But, notwithstanding that, appellant swears that this particular pair of shoes was taken from prosecuting witness' house by a Mexican, and put under the side of the house of prosecuting witness, and that he subsequently went and took same to his home, thereby excluding the idea that his daughter knew anything about this particular pair of shoes. Yet the record is replete with the fact that divers and sundry other goods were claimed by prosecuting witness as his property that were found in possession of the appellant, in addition to the pair of shoes. So we cannot say to what extent the jury convicted appellant of burglary on the theory of his possession of the other goods other than the pair of shoes. This, then, makes the testimony of the absent witness quite material. Appellant swears, however, that the witness knew the goods in question were her goods, and the diligence, while controverted, is not sufficiently combated to have authorized the court to refuse the second application for continuance. It follows, therefore, that the court erred in refusing same, for which the judgment must be reversed.

In view of another trial, we would suggest that no evidence of the fact of other parties identifying goods in possession of appellant as belonging to them be admitted. Nor does the fact that a search warrant was sued out by another and different party than the prosecuting witness, or that the prosecuting witness sued out a search warrant, if he did sue out one, constitute legitimate evidence to be introduced against appellant. For a discussion of this matter, see Denton v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. R. 427, 60 S. W. 670. The learned trial court, it might be added, explains the bills of exception complaining of the introduction of the matters suggested by stating no exception was taken to same. We therefore suggest upon another trial that this testimony should not be introduced. We might further add that the extraneous acts of third parties as to carrying property from the house and secreting same in a water-closet, or in the weeds, which acts were not brought home to appellant, should also not be admitted.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

For the error pointed out, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

WALKER v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 239*)—GIVING LIQUORS TO MINOR—PROSECUTION—INSTRUCTIONS.

Acts 30th Leg. 1907, p. 216, c. 116, providing for the punishment of one who shall sell, give, or cause to be sold or given, or "be in any way interested in the sale, gift, or delivery" of liquors to a minor, enlarges the scope of Pen. Code 1895, art. 400, providing for the punishment of any person who shall knowingly sell, give, or cause to be sold or given any liquor to a minor. Held that, where an information was based on Pen. Code 1895, art. 400, an instruction authorizing a conviction if defendant "was instrumental or in any way concerned" in giving liquor to a minor was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 343, 345; Dec. Dig. § 239.*]

Appeal from Delta County Court; C. C. Dunagan, Judge.

Tullie Walker was convicted of unlawfully giving intoxicating liquor to a minor, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Lane & Rathliff, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant was charged, by information filed in the county court of Delta county, with unlawfully giving intoxicating liquor to a minor, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $25.

The charge is made substantially in this language: " * * * Did then and there unlawfully and knowingly give and cause to be given spirituous, vinous, and intoxicating liquor to Wm. Gillespie, the said Wm. Gillespie then and there being a person under the age of 21 years, without the written consent of the parent or guardian, or of some one standing in the place and stead of the parent and guardian, of him, the said Wm. Gillespie." The evidence showed, in substance, that Wm. Gillespie was a minor, and at some time in December, 1908, appellant, Gillespie, Emmet Taylor, and Roland Walker went to what they called a box supper at Jackson's Chapel, in Delta county; that at the time appellant had a bottle of whisky; and that during the journey to their destination Gillespie took several drinks of this liquor. Gillespie does not make it quite certain in his testimony who it was that gave him the whisky, though he does say that appellant was present at the time when he drank. Testimony was offered by appellant to the effect, in substance, that Gillespie had stated to some of the witnesses that appellant did not give him any whisky. To others he made the statement that some one in the crowd gave it to him, but he did not know who it was.

1. In this condition of the record the court charged the jury, in substance, as follows: "If you believe, from the evidence in this case, that the defendant, Tullie Walker, in Delta county, Tex., on or about the 19th day of December, 1908, did unlawfully and knowingly give and caused to be given, and was instrumental or in any way concerned in giving, whisky to one William Gillespie," etc., they would find him guilty. This charge was excepted to at the time, and the claim is made that the addition of the words "was instrumental or in any way concerned in giving" was a submission of an issue not charged in the complaint and information, and authorized a conviction on a basis and charge not laid in the complaint. There would seem to be at this time two definitions of this offense, or, rather, two statutes covering the same general subject. Article 400 of our Penal Code of 1895 is as follows: "Any person who shall knowingly sell, give or cause to be sold or given any spirituous, vinous or intoxicating liquor to any person under the age of twenty-one years without the written consent of the parent or guardian of such minor or some one standing in their place or stead shall be fined not less than twenty nor more than one hundred dollars." The Thirtieth Legislature (Laws 1907, p. 216, c. 116) enacted a statute, in part, to this effect: "That any person who shall knowingly sell or give or deliver or caused to be sold, given or delivered or be in any way interested in the sale, gift or delivery of any spirituous, vinous or intoxicating liquors to any person under the age of twenty-one without the written consent of the parent or guardian of such person who is under the age of twenty-one years or some one standing in their place or stead, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined therefor not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred dollars." It will thus be noted that this last act goes in its language somewhat beyond the scope of article 400 of the Penal Code above quoted, in the addition of the words "or be in any way interested in the sale, gift or delivery of any spirituous, vinous or intoxicating liquors."

It is urged by the state here that the use of the language in the charge "interested or concerned in such sale or gift" does not enlarge the scope of the charge, but it has, in substance, the same meaning as the terms "caused to be sold, given or delivered." We are scarcely prepared to agree to this contention, but must believe that the Legislature had in mind to enlarge the scope of the statute; otherwise the addition of the words "be in any way instrumental in such gift," etc., would have been both unnecessary and meaningless. Nor can it be said, we think, where the charge was excepted to at the time, that this addition incorporated in the court's charge was, under the facts of this case, harmless. It was conceded here that these boys had some whisky. Most of the evidence tended to show that the whisky belonged to appellant. Some of the testimony indicated that, if he did not give the whisky to Gillespie, at least it was given in his presence. However, there is testimony in the record that Gillespie did not know who gave him the whisky, and a condition of the facts shown from which the jury might, under a proper charge, have found that, whether the whisky belonged to appellant or not, he was absolutely blameless in the matter of giving the whisky to Gillespie, unless blame might be attached to him in the single and sole fact of his having possession of the whisky under the circumstances here shown. It is barely possible the jury might have believed, under the language of the charge "or was in any way instrumental or concerned in the giving," that the mere fact of possession of the whisky, under the circumstances, notwithstanding he neither knew nor consented to the gift to Gillespie, would be sufficient to sustain a verdict. The objection here considered was made at the time, saved by proper exception, and it is undeniable that the language of the court's charge did go beyond the terms of the information and complaint, which seemed to have been founded on article 400 of the Penal Code above quoted. As presented, in view of the evidence, we think we must hold this charge erroneous.

2. There are a number of other questions raised on the appeal; but they are not likely to arise on another trial, and do not now demand attention.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

GLOVER v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1906.)

1. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 26*)—SWINDLING—INVALID CHECK—FALSE REPRESENTATIONS—INDICTMENT.

An indictment for swindling, charging that defendant procured certain clothing from prosecutor's clerk in exchange for a check on a bank, which defendant represented would be paid on presentation from funds which defendant falsely claimed to have on deposit therein, that the check was not good, that defendant had no right to draw it, etc., and that payment was refused, stated an offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 814*)—INSTRUCTIONS—NONDISPUTED FACT.

Where, in a prosecution for swindling by obtaining clothing in exchange for a worthless check, there was no dispute that the check was delivered to prosecutor's clerk, the court did not err in refusing to charge that the state was bound to prove that the check was delivered by defendant to the person alleged in the indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 814.*]

3. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 38*)—INDICTMENT—ISSUES AND PROOF.

Where, in a prosecution for swindling by giving prosecutor's clerk a worthless check in payment of goods, the clerk had testified that the check in question, which was on a specified bank, was the check defendant gave witness for the goods, evidence that after witness had sold the goods to defendant, and after defendant stated he wanted to pay for them with a check, witness asked defendant if he had money in the bank, and defendant answered that the check would be honored and that he had money, was not objectionable because the indictment did not charge that defendant had represented to witness that he had on deposit money in the bank on which the check was given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

4. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 38*)—SWINDLING—CHECKS—EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for swindling by obtaining goods with a worthless check, the check was admissible, though it did not show whether the bank on which it was drawn was a corporation or a joint-stock company, or where it was situated, and though the indictment did not allege that the bank was engaged in the banking business in the city and county of its location.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

5. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 41*)—SWINDLING—EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for swindling by means of a worthless check, evidence of the bookkeeper of the bank on which the check was drawn that the check was presented to the bank for payment, and payment refused, was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 413*)—EVIDENCE—SELF-SERVING DECLARATION.

In a prosecution for swindling by obtaining goods by means of a worthless check, evidence of defendant's mother that after his arrest she saw him in jail, and he then stated to her that it was his intention and belief, at the time he signed the check, that it was drawn on a different bank, and that he had money therein to pay the check, was inadmissible, as self-serving.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 928-935; Dec. Dig. § 413.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 418*)—EVIDENCE—DECLARATIONS OF THIRD PERSON.

In a prosecution for swindling by means of a worthless check, evidence that, after defendant's arrest, his mother told him that she had neglected to put his money in a different bank from that on which the check was drawn, and that defendant thereupon cried, was inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 418.*]

Appeal from District Court, Johnson County; O. L. Lockett, Judge.

G. C. Glover was convicted of swindling, and he appeals. Affirmed.

O. T. Plummer, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of swindling, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $100 and 60 days' imprisonment in county jail.

The charging part of the indictment is as follows: "One G. C. Glover, in the county of Johnson and State of Texas, did then and there, unlawfully devising and intending to secure the unlawful acquisition of certain property, one suit of clothes, of the value of twenty-five dollars ($25.00), one overcoat, of the value of twenty-two dollars and fifty cents ($22.50), one pair of shoes, of the value of six dollars ($6.00), one suit case, of the value of six dollars ($6.00), one hat, of the value of four dollars ($4.00), two shirts, of the value of two dollars and fifty cents ($2.50), one stick pin, of the value of one dollar ($1.00), one pair of cuff buttons, of the value of two dollars and twenty-five cents ($2.25), four collars, of the value of fifty cents (50 cents), and the whole of the above-described bill of goods amounting to sixty-nine dollars and seventy-five cents ($69.75), then and there the corporeal personal property of and belonging to J. H. Douglass, and with the further intent on the part of him, the said G. C. Glover, to appropriate said property when so acquired to his own use, did then and there unlawfully and fraudulently acquire possession of said property from Ed Gregory, who was then and there the agent of the said J. H. Douglass, by means of false and deceitful pretenses, devices, and fraudulent representations, then and there unlawfully, knowingly, and fraudulently made by him to the said Ed Gregory, then and there the agent of the said J. H. Douglass as aforesaid, in this, to wit: The said G. C. Glover did then and there falsely pretend and fraudulently represent to the said Ed Gregory, then and there the agent of the said J. H. Douglass, that he, the said G. C. Glover, had the authority and the right to dispose of a certain check of tenor the following, to wit: 'Cleburne, Texas, 12/26, 1908. No. ———. Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank: Pay to J. H. Douglass or bearer $69.75, sixty-nine and ⁷⁵/₁₀₀ dollars. G. C. Glover.' And did falsely pretend and fraudulently represent to the said Ed Gregory, then and there the agent of the said J. H. Douglass, that the said writing obligatory (check), on the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank of Cleburne, Texas, was a valid, legal, and valuable obligation, and did then and thereby, by means of said false pretense and fraudulent representation, fraudulently induce the said Ed Gregory, then and there the agent of J. H. Douglass as aforesaid, then and there to sell and exchange his said property for the said pretended writing obligatory (check) as above described, the said check then and there being the corporeal personal property of and belonging to the said G. C. Glover, and by reason of said false pretenses, devices, and fraudulent representations so made by the said G. C. Glover to the said Ed Gregory, then and there the agent of J. H. Douglass, he, the said Ed Gregory, then and there the agent of J. H. Douglass, was then and there induced to part with, sell, and exchange, and did part with, sell, and exchange, the said property, and deliver the title and possession of the same, to the said G. C. Glover for, and did receive therefor from the said G. C. Glover, the said writing obligatory (check) as above described, falsely and fraudulently presented as aforesaid by the said G. C. Glover as a valid, legal, and valuable obligation; whereas, in truth and in fact, the said pretended writing obligatory was not a valid, legal, and valuable obligation, for the reason following, to wit: Because the said G. C. Glover fraudulently and falsely represented to the said Ed Gregory, then and there the agent of the said J. H. Douglass, that he, the said G. C. Glover, owned six hundred and forty acres of land at Bono, Johnson county, Texas, and that he, the said G. C. Glover, had raised, picked, and marketed thirty-five bales of cotton this year, A. D. 1908, and the proceeds realized from the said thirty-five bales of cotton was and is deposited in the aforesaid bank, and that the above set out check was a good, legal, and valuable check, and would be paid when presented to the aforesaid bank for payment; whereas, in truth and in fact, the said G. C. Glover did not own any land, and did not raise any cotton, and did not have credit at the aforesaid bank, and did not then and there have a right to draw a check for sixty-nine dollars and seventy-five cents against said bank and dispose of the same, and the said check so drawn as aforesaid by G. C. Glover was not paid by said bank when presented for payment. And the said pretenses and representations so made and devices as used by the said G. C. Glover to the said Ed Gregory, then and there the agent of the said J. H. Douglass, in order to acquire the title and possession of the said property from the said Ed Gregory, then and there the agent of the said J. H. Douglass as aforesaid, were false and fraudulent when so made, and he, the said G. C. Glover, then and there well knew the said pretenses, devices, and representations to be false and fraudulent when he made and used them as aforesaid, against the peace and dignity of the state." See Moore v. State, 20 Tex. App. 233.

1. Appellant's first special charge is as follows: "You are instructed that the indictment in this case does not charge the defendant with any offense, and that the evidence does not show or establish any offense against defendant for swindling as mentioned in the indictment, and you are instructed to return a verdict for defendant, and this should be the form of your verdict: 'We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.' There was no error in refusing this charge. The evidence supports the allegations in the indictment.

2. Appellant's second special charge is as follows: "The indictment in this case charges defendant by selling and exchanging and delivering a certain check on the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank, payable to J. H. Douglass, to one Ed Gregory. Now it devolves upon the state to show by the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that said check was delivered by defendant to Ed Gregory, and to no other person; and if you should have a reasonable doubt on this question you will acquit the defendant, and so say by your verdict." There is no cavil over the question that the check was delivered to Ed Gregory, clerk of the prosecuting witness, Douglass, and therefore there was no error in refusing this charge.

3. Bill of exceptions No. 1 complains that on the trial of this case the state was permitted to prove by Ed Gregory that after he had sold the defendant the clothing mentioned in the indictment, as he and defendant were going towards the office, he asked defendant, after defendant said he wanted to pay for the clothing with a check, if he, the defendant, had money in the bank, and that defendant said, "Yes," and that "the check will be honored," and that "I have got the money." Appellant objected to this, on the ground that it was not alleged in the indictment that defendant had represented to Ed Gregory that he had on deposit any money in the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank of Cleburne, Tex. The bill is allowed, with the explanation that the witness had already testified that the check mentioned above was the check defendant gave witness for the clothing sold him. We see no error in the ruling of the court.

4. Bill of exceptions No. 2 objects to the check offered in evidence, because said check does not show that the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank is a corporation, or a joint-stock company, or show where it is situated, and that said indictment does not allege that the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank is engaged in the banking business in the city of Cleburne, Johnson county, Tex. This was not necessary.

5. Bill of exceptions No. 4 objects to the state proving by Price Allard that he was bookkeeper of the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank of Cleburne, and that the original check mentioned and described in the indictment was presented to said bank for payment, and that payment was refused by said bank. This testimony was highly germane and proper.

6. Bill of exceptions No. 5 shows that appellant offered to prove by Mrs. E. M. Stewart, appellant's mother, that when she came to Cleburne, the first time she saw him after he was arrested and found him in jail, he stated to her that it was his intention and belief, at the time he signed the check described in the indictment, said check was drawn upon the First National Bank at Rogers, Tex.; that at the time he purchased the goods from Mr. Ed Gregory he informed him that he had money deposited in said bank, and wished to use it in payment of the goods which he purchased from Mr. Douglass. This testimony was not admissible; same being self-serving. Nor would the fact that the mother told defendant that she had neglected to put his money in the bank at Rogers, and defendant cried, be admissible.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

HARRYMAN et al. v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909.)

BAIL (§ 93*)—SCIRE FACIAS—SUFFICIENCY OF RETURN.

To support a judgment by default, making final a judgment nisi forfeiting a recognizance bond, the officer's return must show that each of the defendants was served in person with a copy of the writ, giving the date and place of such service, under Code Cr. Appeal from Brown County Court; A. M. Brumfield, Judge.

Action by the State against R. W. Harryman and others to forfeit a recognizance bond. There was a default judgment of forfeiture, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Scott & Foster, for appellants. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. This is a suit by the state of Texas, forfeiting a recognizance bond entered into by Roy Harryman, principal, and J. C. Couch, R. W. Harryman, and Lee Son, sureties, in a case appealed from the county court of Brown county, Tex., and in the course of which forfeiture judgment nisi was taken at the July term, 1908, of the county court of Brown county, upon which judgment nisi a scire facias was issued to said parties, commanding them to show cause at the October term, 1908, of said court, why such judgment nisi should not be made final, and, they failing to answer, the judgment was made final by default at the said October term, 1908, of said court.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The first error assigned is that the court erred in rendering judgment by default against defendants J. C. Couch, Lee Son, and R. W. Harryman, because the officer's return is insufficient to support the judgment by default, being as follows, to wit: "Came to hand 22d day of August, 1903, and executed on J. C. Couch 22d day of August, 1908, in Brownwood, Texas. Served on R. W. Harryman September 2, 1908, in Brownwood, Texas; Lee Son 4th day of November, 1908, at 2:30 p. m., in Brownwood, Texas. [Signed] Frank Emison, Sheriff, by O. E. Kitchen, Deputy." Appellants contend that, to support the judgment by default, the officer's return on the scire facias must show that each of the defendants were served in person with a true copy of the writ, giving the date and place of such service. This contention is correct. Article 480, White's Code Cr. Proc. 1895; Batt's Ann. Civ. St. art. 1225; Fulton v. State, 14 Tex. App. 32; Rutherford et al. v. Davenport et al. (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 110; Russell et al. v. Butler et al. (Tex. Civ. App.) 71 S. W. 395.

The judgment is accordingly reversed, and the cause remanded.

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 223*) — DEATH OF PARTY—CONTINUANCE OF ACTION.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1246, providing that, when a plaintiff dies before verdict, the action shall not abate, but the heirs of the deceased plaintiff may appear, and, on suggestion of the death, may be made plaintiffs, the husband, in an action by husband and wife, having filed suggestion of her death, intestate, stating that she left her minor children as her heirs, and that they inherited the cause of action, and prayed to be allowed to prosecute the action for and on their behalf, and he having in open court disclaimed and released any interest, the case, on the court granting the prayer of the suggestion, properly proceeded in the name of the original parties for the benefit of the minors, without necessity for another petition, as the suggestion is to be regarded as part of the pleadings to the extent of substituting them for their mother.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 759, 765, 773, 783; Dec. Dig. § 223.*]

3. HOMESTEAD (§ 95*)—PRIORITY OF RIGHTS.

Any homestead right of defendant's wife in land, having been acquired after defendant contracted to deliver to plaintiff a certain part of the proceeds of his contemplated sale of it, was subordinate to plaintiff's right under the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 141-146; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

4. INJUNCTION (§ 208*)—PERMANENT INJUNCTION.

The judgment for plaintiff in an action to recover part of a certain fund claimed by a defendant, and in the possession of another defendant, was erroneous, in so far as it perpetuated the injunction against disposal of the fund, without any provision for its dissolution on payment of the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Dec. Dig. § 208.*]

5. INFANTS (§ 105*) — ACTION — JUDGMENT — BOND BY NEXT FRIEND.

A judgment for minors should not authorize the money to be paid their next friend without requiring him to give bond, as provided by Rev. St. 1895, art. 3498w.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Infants, Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

6. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 73*) — SALE OF LAND.

A contract to deliver to one a certain amount of the proceeds of the sale of land is not one for sale of land within the statute of frauds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 119; Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

Appeal from District Court, Travis County; Geo. Calhoun, Judge.

Action by H. A. Jewell and wife against A. Parriss and others. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendants appeal. Reformed and affirmed.

Dowell & Dowell, for appellants. Allen & Hart, for appellees.

KEY, J. H. A. Jewell and his wife brought this suit against A. Parriss and his wife, Emily Parriss, and the Austin National Bank, seeking to recover $1,500, part of a designated fund alleged to be in possession of the bank and claimed by Parriss and his wife.

Among other things, the plaintiffs alleged in their petition that the plaintiff Mrs. Grace Jewell was the daughter of A. Parriss and his former wife, Caroline Parriss; that Caroline Parriss was dead; that she left property, consisting mainly of 100 acres of land, which was community estate between herself and A. Parriss; that prior to her death A. Parriss, by the exercise of undue influence, amounting to duress, induced Caroline Parriss to make a will, by the terms of which the property referred to was devised to A. Parriss; that, when the will was tendered for probate, H. A. Jewell and his wife filed a protest, contesting the validity of the will on the grounds above stated; that thereafter a contract was entered into between the plaintiffs and the defendant A. Parriss to the effect that they, for a consideration of $1,500, would withdraw or abandon their contest and permit the will to be probated, thereby enabling A. Parriss to consummate a sale of the land which he had then negotiated; that the $1,500 was to be paid out of the proceeds of the contemplated sale of the land. The plaintiffs alleged performance of the contract on their part, sale of the land by A. Parriss, and refusal on his part to pay to the plaintiffs the $1,500 agreed upon. The plaintiffs obtained a preliminary writ of injunction restraining the defendants from disposing of $2,438.03, the cash proceeds of the sale of the land deposited in the Austin National Bank, and also restraining them from collecting or disposing of certain notes given for the remainder of the purchase money of the land. The record contains no answer for the bank. Parriss and his wife, the other two defendants, filed answers containing a general and numerous special exceptions, a general denial, and a special answer, alleging that since the death of Caroline Parriss A. Parriss and his codefendant, Emily Parriss, were legally married, and that the land, the proceeds of the sale of which are here involved, was their homestead, and for that reason the plaintiffs ought not to recover. Before the case was tried, the plaintiff Mrs. Grace Jewell died, and her husband and coplaintiff filed and presented to the court a written suggestion of her death, in which it was stated that she died intestate, leaving as her heirs Pet Jewell, Annie Jewell, Noble Jewell, Willie Jewell, Rosa Jewell, Ida Jewell, and Robert Jewell, all being her minor children, and inherited the cause of action set up in plaintiff's petition. The document referred to alleged that H. A. Jewell was the father and next of kin of said minors, and prayed the court to allow him to prosecute the suit for and on their behalf. The court granted the prayer referred to, and the case proceeded to trial without any other pleading being filed on behalf of said heirs. The trial court submitted the case to the jury upon special issues, the answers to which were in favor of the plaintiffs and upon which answers the court rendered judgment for H. A. Jewell as next friend of the minors referred to for $1,500, to constitute the joint property of said minors. The decree also perpetuated the injunction which had been previously granted, and made no provision for its dissolution upon a satisfaction of the plaintiffs' judgment. The defendants A. Parriss and Emily Parriss have appealed, but the bank has not.

The case is submitted in this court on an elaborate brief and numerous assignments of error in behalf of appellants. It would extend this opinion beyond proper limits, and is not necessary, to discuss all the assignments of error. We hold that the petition stated a cause of action, founded upon a breach of the contract between Mrs. Jewell and defendant A. Parriss, by which contract she was entitled to $1,500 of the proceeds of the sale of the land. The abandonment of her contest of the proceeding to probate her mother's will, as she agreed to do, was a sufficient consideration for the contract by which A. Parriss bound himself to deliver to her $1,500 of the proceeds of the sale.

We overrule the contention that Mrs. Jewell's children, or their father acting as next friend for them, should have been required to file another petition, and set up their rights as if they were original plaintiffs. It is provided by article 1246 of the Revised Statutes of 1895, that, when a plaintiff shall die before verdict, if the cause of action be one which survives, the suit shall not abate by reason of such death, but the executor or administrator or the heirs of such deceased plaintiff may appear, and, upon suggestion of such death being entered of record, may be made plaintiffs in such suit. That course was pursued in this case, and we are of the opinion that, by force of the statute and the order of the court allowing the suit to be prosecuted by H. A. Jewell as next friend for the minor children, the latter, in legal effect, became the plaintiffs in the petition which had been filed, and upon which the case was tried. We are also of the opinion that the written suggestion of death should be regarded as part of the pleadings to the extent of substituting the heirs for their deceased mother. Furthermore, as the minor plaintiffs derived all their rights from the original plaintiffs, acquiring all the interest of their mother by inheritance and all the interest of their father by his disclaimer and release made in open court and carried forward into the decree, it would seem that the minor plaintiffs had the right to prosecute the suit in the names of the original plaintiffs.

The contract by which Mrs. Jewell was to have part of the proceeds of the sale of the land was made before Mrs. Emily Parriss acquired any homestead right, and therefore the latter right was subordinate to the former and the plea of homestead was unavailing; and the assignments presenting that question are overruled.

We also overrule the assignments relating to the admission of testimony, and those which complain of the giving and refusal of instructions. We also find that the verdict is supported by sufficient testimony, and overrule the assignments which charge otherwise.

We agree with counsel for appellants that Mrs. Parriss was not a party to the contract, and was not personally liable to the plaintiffs.

We also sustain the contention that error was committed in rendering judgment perpetuating the injunction. It tied up and prevented the use of money and notes far in excess of $1,500, the sum awarded to the plaintiffs; and therefore the decree should have stipulated that when that sum, with interest thereon, and costs of the suit, were paid, the injunction should stand dissolved, and for that error the judgment must be reformed.

We note that the judgment does not properly protect the interest of the minors, in that it authorizes the money to be paid to H. A. Jewell, their next friend, without requiring him to give bond, as required by article 3498w of the Revised Statutes of 1895, and it will be corrected in that respect. L. & G. N.

It is ordered that the judgment be so reformed as to allow no personal judgment against Mrs. Parriss, and dissolving the injunction when the $1,500 and interest and costs of the court below adjudged to the plaintiffs have been paid. It is further ordered that the $1,500 and interest awarded to the plaintiffs shall be paid to the sheriff of Travis county, and shall be held by him until the district court of Travis county, in which this case was tried, makes an order directing him to whom to pay the same, as required by the article of the statute last referred to. It is ordered that the costs of this appeal be taxed against appellees, the minor plaintiffs represented herein by their next friend, and that such costs constitute a charge prior to all other claims against the $1,500 awarded to said minors, and that the sheriff, when he collects said $1,500, pay the costs so charged against said minors without any further order from this or any other court.

Reformed and affirmed.

On Motions.

Appellants' motion for rehearing has received due consideration, but we find no reason for changing the judgment heretofore rendered by this court. It is true that in our former opinion we omitted to state that appellants alleged that the contract sued on was one for the sale of land, and, not being in writing, was within the statute of frauds; but, as the contract was for the payment of money, and not for the sale of land, we did not deem it necessary to discuss that feature of the case.

There were some other immaterial matters omitted in the former opinion; and it is also true, as contended by appellants, that the answers of the jury to some of the questions were in favor of appellants' contention, but upon the material issues—those upon which the rights of the parties were to be determined—the answers given by the jury were in favor of the appellees.

Appellants have also submitted a motion to correct the former judgment of this court by eliminating therefrom any reference to interest. That motion is founded upon the contention that the plaintiffs were not entitled to interest, and that the judgment of the trial court is silent upon that subject, and interest is not collectible thereon. It was not our intention to, and the judgment of this court does not, award interest. Unless interest was collectible upon the judgment rendered by the trial court, appellees are not entitled to interest by reason of anything stated in the opinion of this court or incorporated in its judgment.

Both motions are overruled.

Appeal from Liberty County Court; I. B. Simmons, Judge.

Action by M. B. Carson and others against the Suderman-Dolson Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant the Suderman-Dolson Company appeals. Dismissed.

NEILL, J. The judgment in this case was recovered on April 10, 1908. It is in favor of the plaintiffs, M. B. Carson, J. H. Carson, Kathleen O'Connor, and F. M. Blair, against the defendants, Suderman-Dolson Company and Kenefick-Hammond-Quigley Construction Company, for $125. It also adjudged that neither of defendants take anything on its cross-action against the other. From the judgment the Suderman-Dolson Company perfected this appeal as against all the other parties on August 5, 1909.

The appellant has filed no brief in this court, nor has any of the appellees. The appellees plaintiffs ask for an affirmance. To entitle them to an affirmance of the judgment, they should have prepared the case for submission in accordance with rule 42 of this court (67 S. W. xvii), which they have failed to do. Therefore the proper disposition of the appeal is to dismiss it (Hunt v. Glasscock, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 322, 65 S. W. 209; Harris v. Bryson, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 514, 73 S. W. 548; S. A. & A. P. Ry. Co. v. Brock, 77 S. W. 953; Nigro v. Hodges, 85 S. W. 1169; Bowden v. Patterson, 108 S. W. 177), which is accordingly done.

Dismissed.

2. HOMESTEAD (§ 153*)—INSOLVENCY OF ESTATE—RIGHTS OF SURVIVING WIFE—EFFECT OF HER DEATH.

A contention that, inasmuch as the collateral heirs of the husband were claiming the property on the death of the wife, it would be inequitable to allow them to defeat creditors of the estate, was of no avail, since if the property would be exempt in the hands of lineal descendants of the husband, collateral heirs would also be protected.

Appeal from District Court, Fannin County; Ben H. Denton, Judge.

Action by E. B. Grace and others against G. I. Dorman, administrator, to recover possession of land. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

M. L. Morris and McGrady & McMahon, for appellant. Richard B. Semple, for appellees.

HODGES, J. Charles D. Grace during his lifetime was a resident of Fannin county. On the ——— day of February, 1906, he died intestate, leaving surviving him a wife, but no children. At the time of his death he and his wife resided upon the land involved in this suit, as a part of his homestead, and which his wife continued to occupy as her homestead until her death, which occurred on the ——— day of February, 1908. The homestead consisted partly of community property of Charles D. Grace and his wife and partly of his separate property, aggregating about 30 acres of land. Grace left neither father nor mother, and his only heirs were his wife and the appellees herein, E. B. Grace, a brother, Virginia Freeman, a sister, and E. H. Grace, a nephew. At the time of his death the estate of Charles D. Grace was insolvent, and there are now over $1,000 in valid claims against his estate which have been duly probated and remain unpaid. On the ——— day of April, 1908, the appellant, Dorman, was appointed administrator of the estate of Charles D. Grace by the county court of Fannin county, and thereafter qualified as such by making the bond and taking the oath required by law, and was and is now the duly qualified and acting administrator. No letters of administration had previously been taken out on the estate of Grace. In September, 1908, a suit was instituted in the district court of Fannin county by the administrator of L. M. Grace, the deceased wife of Charles D. Grace, against the appellant and the appellees in this suit, seeking a partition of the estate. A judgment was accordingly rendered dividing the land, decreeing six acres in controversy to the defendants in that suit, who are the plaintiffs and defendant in the present suit. In that suit no issue was made or adjudicated as to the respective rights of Dorman, the administrator, and the appellees; the only issue being as to the right of the administrator of the estate of L. M. Grace as against the other parties to a portion of the estate left by Grace and wife. This suit was instituted by the appellees, the brother, sister, and nephew of Charles D. Grace, against Dorman, as the administrator, to recover the six acres apportioned to them in the partition suit mentioned above. Dorman in his answer pleaded a general demurrer, general denial, and not guilty. A judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs in the court below, from which the administrator prosecutes this appeal.

The only issue presented is whether the homestead, after the death of Mrs. Grace, became subject to the payment of the debts of Charles D. Grace. If it did, then the appellant, as the duly appointed administrator, was entitled to the possession of the property for the purposes of administration. If it did not so become liable, then he had no such right, and the judgment of the court below should be affirmed. It will be observed that the question is not whether the homestead remains exempt upon the death of the head of the family leaving no constituents of the family authorized under the law to have it set apart to them, but whether, after the death of the only remaining constituent to whom it had been set apart, or might have been set apart, it becomes assets in the hands of the administrator and subject to the debts of the deceased husband. Article 2046 of Sayles' Annotated Civil Statutes of 1897, provides that at the first term of the court, after an inventory, appraisement, and list of claims have been returned, it shall be the duty of the court to set apart to the use and benefit of the widow and minor children and unmarried daughters remaining with the family of the deceased, all such property of the estate as may be exempt from execution or forced sale by the Constitution and laws of the state. Article 2055 provides that, should the estate upon final settlement prove to be insolvent, the title to the widow and children to all the property and allowances set apart or paid to them under the provisions of this and the preceding chapter shall be absolute and shall not be taken for any of the debts of the estate except as thereafter provided. The last provisions referred to make the exempt property, other than the homestead, subject to the payment of funeral expenses and expenses of last sickness, when presented within the time prescribed by law. Article 2060 provides that the homestead shall not be liable for the payment of any of the debts of the estate except for the purchase money, taxes, or for work and material used in constructing improvements thereon, etc. From the foregoing provisions, it is made clear, we think, that, upon the death of the husband leaving a wife or any constituents of the family mentioned in the statute who are authorized to claim the homestead exemption, the latter is not subject to the payment of the deceased husband's debts, and is therefore no part of the assets to be administered. This view is supported by the following authorities: Zwernemann v. Von Rosenberg, 76 Tex. 522, 13 S. W. 485; Childers v. Henderson, 76 Tex. 664, 13 S. W. 481; Cameron v. Morris, 83 Tex. 14, 18 S. W. 422; Roots v. Robertson, 93 Tex. 365, 55 S. W. 308; Ford v. Sims, 93 Tex. 586, 57 S. W. 20; McAllister v. Godbold (Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 417. The effect of the statute is to completely withdraw the homestead under the condition described from administration, and to exclude it from the assets of the estate available for the payment of the debts of the deceased. This being done, there is no other provision of the statute that attempts to restore it at any future time or upon the happening of any future contingency. If the exemption was intended to last only so long as the statutory constituents of the family lived or used it in the manner required by law, there could be no good reason why it should not be applied during that time to the debts of the husband, subject to the possessory and other rights of those surviving constituents. Counsel for appellant suggest that it is inequitable to permit collateral heirs in cases like the present to defeat the claim of creditors holding valid claims of indebtedness against the estate of the deceased. If the property would be exempt in the hands of the lineal descendants of Grace, we know of no rule that would prevent collateral heirs from invoking the same protection. It seems that the property derives its exempt character from the fact that upon the death of the husband it passes to certain designated constituents of the family, and in conferring those statutory rights the homestead is absolutely exempted. Article 2055 attempted, in case where the estate proves insolvent, to make the title of the surviving wife and other constituents of the family to whom a homestead had been set apart absolute; but our Supreme Court has held in several cases that so much of that article as interfered with the rights of other heirs, who would take according to the laws of descent and distribution, was unconstitutional and void (see Roots v. Robertson, supra); but the remainder is valid.

The principle involved is so fully discussed in the cases we have cited that we deem it unnecessary to say more.

The judgment of the court is affirmed.

MERRIMAN et al. v. BLALACK et al.†

Rehearing Denied Nov. 18, 1909.)

1. TRIAL (§ 394*)—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIONS OF FACT AND LAW—SEPARATION.

A finding that a deed conveyed to the grantee all the grantor's right, title, and interest in a league of land, including the land in controversy, did not offend against the statute requiring conclusions of fact and of law to be separate.

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 71*)—COLOR OF TITLE—SUFFICIENCY OF DEEDS.

A deed executed in March, 1878, conveyed to T. one-fourth of a certain league of land, and provided that if the tract therein conveyed should be discovered to constitute one-fourth of an entire league owned by the grantor, T. should have preference as purchaser of it for a certain sum for the whole league. Thereafter such grantor's interest in the whole league was sold for taxes, and the purchaser quitclaimed his interest under the tax deed to T. thereafter conveyed all his right, title, and interest in the whole league, describing it by metes and bounds. The deed further conveyed all of T.'s interest acquired by the deed from the tax sale purchaser, and provided that, in the event that the grantor in the deed of March, 1878, "should own the remaining three-fourths of the league of land herein conveyed according to the stipulation and agreement set forth" in the deed of 1878, T.'s grantee should have preference as purchaser of the same for a certain sum; such grantee "to have and to hold the above-described premises" forever, and T. bound himself, his heirs, etc., to warrant "all and singularly the said premises" to the grantee, his heirs, etc. Held, that T.'s deed was not a mere quitclaim or option to purchase as to the three-fourths of the league referred to in the deed of 1878, but was a deed to the whole league, sufficient to support a claim under the 5-year statute of limitations, or sufficient, as a memorandum of title, to support a claim under the 10-year limitations; the reference to the agreement in the deed of 1878 being merely to give the grantee the benefit of that agreement in the event of T.'s title through the tax deed failing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 916-919; Dec. Dig. § 392.*]

4. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 20*)—HOSTILE ACTS—IMPROVEMENTS.

If improvements, such as building houses, opening fields, etc., made by defendant's grantor on land claimed by defendant by the adverse possession of such grantor, were located on the land claimed, it was immaterial upon what particular part of the land they were located.

5. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 82*)—COLOR OF TITLE—DEEDS—RECORDING—"DULY RECORDED."

Where the record of a married woman's deed conveying her separate property showed that an essential part of the certificate of acknowledgment was omitted, the deed was not "duly recorded" so as to support a plea of title by limitations.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1071*)—HARMLESS ERROR—FINDINGS.

Where title by limitations was complete in defendant's remote grantor, at the latter's death, it was immaterial, upon defendant's title by limitations, that a deed by a subsequent grantor was so defectively acknowledged on its face that it would not support title by limitations, and hence a finding that it was properly acknowledged was harmless.

7. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 100*)—EXTENT OF POSSESSION—COLOR OF TITLE—IMPROVEMENTS.

Where defendant's grantor entered upon a tract under a deed thereto, and erected a number of houses, built corrals, opened up fields and grazed cattle thereon, claiming the whole tract as his own under the deed, such acts were sufficient to support a claim of title by limitations to the entire tract, whether the deed is considered as a duly registered deed under the 5-year limitations, or as a written memorandum of title under the 10-year limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. § 547; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

8. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 81*)—NOTORIOUS POSSESSION—NOTICE TO FORMER OWNER—NECESSITY.

One who entered upon land under a duly recorded deed thereto, and held it adversely to the world, need not otherwise repudiate the title of others claiming the land, or notify them of his claim of title, in order to set limitations running.

9. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 82*)—COLOR OF TITLE.

Where title was complete in defendant's remote grantor at the latter's death, it was immaterial to defendant's right to claim title by adverse possession that deeds of subsequent grantors were not recorded a sufficient length of time before the commencement of the action to base a claim by limitations thereon.

10. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—OPINIONS—CONCLUSIONS.

In trespass to try title, wherein defendants claimed by adverse possession, answers to a question whether defendant's grantor paid taxes for certain people that he paid them for the land, and to a question whether he paid them for himself or another that he paid them for himself, were not objectionable as witness' conclusions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2157; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

11. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 95*)—PRESUMPTION—PAYMENT OF TAXES.

It is presumed, in trespass to try title to land claimed by adverse possession, that one residing on land under a deed thereto, and who is admitted to have paid the taxes, paid them for himself and not for another.

12. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—OPINIONS—CONCLUSIONS.

In trespass to try title, in which defendant claimed by adverse possession, testimony by defendant's co-occupant that he or his brothers did not recognize any other than defendant as having any rights in the land was not objectionable as the conclusion of the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2150, 2151; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

13. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1054*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—TRIAL BY COURT.

In trespass to try title, wherein defendant claimed by the adverse possession of his grantor, whose exclusive possession was established by evidence not objected to, any error in admitting evidence upon the character of defendant's adverse claim and possession would not justify a reversal of a judgment for defendant, especially where the trial was by the court.

14. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 85*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In trespass to try title, wherein defendant claimed by the adverse possession of his grantor under a duly recorded deed, that the latter took possession upon the execution of the deed, built houses and corrals, fenced a large tract and used it for pasture, and paid taxes on the whole tract each year showed prima facie that such possession and use were based upon the deed and a claim of title to the entire tract thereunder.

15. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—OPINION AS TO TITLE.

In trespass to try title, testimony by an attorney that he investigated plaintiff's title, and declined to institute suit for recovery of the land, was immaterial and irrelevant, being a mere expression of opinion as to the validity of plaintiff's claim.

19. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 30*)—NOTORIOUS POSSESSION—KNOWLEDGE BY OTHERS.

If one entered upon land under a duly recorded deed, and held open and notorious possession thereof, it was immaterial to his right to claim by adverse possession whether any one actually knew of his claim and possession.

20. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1052*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—JUDGMENT CORRECT ON MERITS.

Where facts sufficient to support a judgment for defendant were conclusively shown in a trial by the court by proper evidence, so that no other judgment could have been rendered, any error in the admission of evidence was not reversible.

Appeal from District Court, Hidalgo County; W. B. Hopkins, Judge.

Action by Titus E. Merriman and others against P. E. Blalack and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

D. B. Chapin, R. J. Swearingen, and Don A. Bliss, for appellants. Beasley & Beasley and Dougherty & Dougherty, for appellees.

REESE, J. This is a suit in trespass to try title by Titus E. Merriman and others against R. E. Blalack and G. L. Hawkins, to recover an undivided eight-ninths interest in a tract of land described as the eastern or lower three-fourths of the eastern or lower league of a certain two-league grant to Benigno Leal, known as the "Santa Ana" on the Rio Grande river in Hidalgo county. Defendants pleaded general demurrer, general denial, and "not guilty," and, under appropriate allegations, the statutes of limitation of 5 and 10 years as to the whole tract, and also the statute of limitation of 2 years as to a portion of the land by them under actual inclosure. They deny specially the title of plaintiffs, assert title in themselves, and pray for removal of cloud, and that they be quieted in their title. To this answer plaintiffs filed a supplemental petition by way of reply, denying defendants' title and denying the defendants' possession was adverse, or that they had any notice thereof. The various deeds under which defendants are alleged to claim title are set out, and it is alleged that they do not afford a basis for their claim of title by limitation of 5 or 10 years, but that defendants' possession, in so far as it extended to the interest claimed by plaintiffs, was in subordination to, and not adverse to, their title. A trial by the court, without a jury, resulted in a judgment for defendants, from which plaintiffs prosecute this appeal.

The following are the material facts, as gathered from the court's conclusion of fact and from the evidence:

(1) The land in controversy is the lower three-fourths of the lower or easternmost of the two leagues granted by the Mexican government to Benigno Leal in 1834, known as Santa Ana. The grant was confirmed and patent issued to said Leal.

(2) The easternmost or lower league was conveyed by Leal and wife to Eli T. Merriman in 1852, and that portion of the league herein involved conveyed by Eli T. Merriman to Henry E. Merriman October 12, 1860. Deeds duly recorded.

(3) Henry E. Merriman died intestate in 1861, leaving surviving as his sole heirs his sister, Caroline, and two brothers, the said Eli T. and Titus E., and the plaintiffs are the descendants and sole heirs of said sister and brothers.

(4) By deed dated October 15, 1860, Eli T. Merriman conveyed by metes and bounds the upper or western one-fourth of the easternmost of lower league of Santa Ana, to John Fusselman, and by deed dated May 3, 1861, Fusselman conveyed the same land to Elizabeth Merriman, both deeds duly acknowledged and recorded.

(5) Said Elizabeth Merriman by deed dated March 29, 1878, duly acknowledged and recorded, conveyed said one-fourth league by metes and bounds to Josiah W. Turner. This deed contained this further contract or agreement: "And for a good and valid consideration from the said Turner received, I hereby agree that in the event the tract now herein conveyed shall be discovered to constitute $\frac{1}{4}$ of an entire league owned by me, then the said Josiah W. Turner shall have the preference as purchaser of same at the rate of six hundred dollars for the whole league, or a balance of \$350.00 to be paid to me, or my heirs or assigns."

(6) On May 7, 1878, the tax collector of Hidalgo county executed to W. T. J. G. Brewster a deed duly recorded on the same day, which said deed conveys to Brewster, purchaser at tax sale for taxes due by Elizabeth Merriman for the year 1877, "all the right, title, interest and estate which the said Elizabeth Merriman had at the time when the assessment before mentioned was made" to the league of land described in tax deed as follows: "4,428 acres of land lying in the county of Hidalgo and being one of two leagues originally granted to Benigno Leal by the King of Spain and confirmed by the Legislature of the state of Texas and known as 'Santa Ana.' Bounded as follows: On the east by a tract of land owned by Christobal Leal, on the west by land owned by C. B. Combe, on the north by land to me unknown, on the south by the Rio Grande river, having a front of 900 varas and a depth from north to south of five Spanish leagues, being about thirteen miles below the town of Hidalgo."

(7) By quitclaim deed dated July 21, 1879, said Brewster conveyed to said Josiah W. Turner the land conveyed to him. This deed was duly recorded July 1, 1879.

(8) Said Josiah W. Turner, by deed dated April 24, 1882, conveyed to Julio Guzman "his right, title and interest in the easternmost league of the Santa Ana grant," describing the same by metes and bounds, embracing the whole league and including the land in controversy. The deed was duly acknowledged and recorded in deed records of Hidalgo county on the day of its date.

As the decision of the questions raised on this appeal turns largely upon the terms of this deed, so much of it as is material to an understanding of those questions is here given in full:

"Know all men by these presents that I, Josiah W. Turner, a resident of the county of Cameron in said state of Texas, for and in consideration of the sum of six hundred dollars ($600.00) in lawful money of the United States of America, to me actually in hand paid by Julio Guzman, a resident of said county of Hidalgo, in said state of Texas, the receipt of which sum I hereby acknowledge, and confess, have granted, sold and conveyed and by these presents do grant, sell and convey unto the said Julio Guzman, his heirs and assigns, all my right, title and interest in and to a certain piece or parcel of land situated in said county of Hidalgo, in a certain tract of land called and known as 'Santa Ana,' originally granted to Benigno Leal by the Mexican government, which said piece or parcel of land being one league of land out of the two leagues composing said tract of land aforesaid, being described and bounded as follows."

Then follows a full and correct description of the lower or easternmost league of the Santa Ana grant, after which is the following:

"I also herein convey all of my rights and interest acquired in a certain deed bearing date July 1, A. D. 1879, from W. J. T. G. Brewster to me, the said Josiah W. Turner, which said deed is duly recorded in Book 'C' of Real Estate of said county of Hidalgo on pages 186 and 187, and which is duly made part hereof. And also for a good and valuable consideration received from the said

Julio Guzman, I hereby agree, that in the event that Mrs. Elizabeth Merriman should own the remaining three-fourths of said league of land herein conveyed according to the stipulation and agreement set forth in a certain deed bearing date March 29, 1878, from the said Elizabeth Merriman to the said Josiah W. Turner and being duly recorded in Book 'C' of Real Estate of said county of Hidalgo on pages 184, 185, as by reference thereto will more fully appear, and which is made part hereof for greater certainty, then the said Julio Guzman shall have the preference as purchaser of the same at the rate of three hundred and fifty dollars to be paid either to me, the grantor herein, or to the said Elizabeth Merriman according to the tenor of said agreement aforesaid.

"To have and to hold the above described premises together with all and singular the rights and appurtenances thereto in any wise belonging unto the said Julio Guzman, his heirs and assigns forever. And I do hereby bind myself, my heirs, executors and administrators to warrant and forever defend all and singular the said premises unto the said Julio Guzman, his heirs and assigns, against every person whomsoever, lawfully claiming or to claim the same or any part thereof."

(9) Julio Guzman was married long prior to 1882, his wife being Estefana. They had eight children. Immediately after said purchase from Josiah Turner, in the spring of 1882, said Guzman had the western line of the one-fourth league of land described in said deed from said Turner to him, which is also the western line of the lower league, surveyed by the county surveyor of Hidalgo county. Said Guzman accompanied the surveyor and knew where the line was. Immediately after having had the land surveyed, said Guzman moved on the land with his said wife and children. They located on the eastern three-fourths of the eastern one-half of the Santa Ana grant, being the land in controversy. Guzman erected some six or eight houses on the land in suit, some six miles from the river, near a lake of water called Perchuga. He also built corrals, and opened up fields on the land. Within a year or so after he went on the land he inclosed that portion thereof fronting on the river in a pasture. The western line of this inclosure extended from the river northward along the western boundary line of the eastern league of the Santa Ana; thence eastward to a point 466 varas east of the western boundary line of the one-half league of the Gato grant which said Guzman claimed; thence to the river. The inclosure embraced some 500 acres of the land in suit. Guzman and his family lived continuously on the land in suit from the spring of 1882 until his death in December, 1901. Guzman moved on the land claiming same as his own under the deed made to him by Turner. He claimed all of the eastern league of the grant as his own, and continuously, from the time he moved on the land up to the time of his death, asserted and exercised ownership of the land, and paid all taxes thereon, and used and enjoyed same by cultivating fields each year and grazing horses, sheep and cattle thereon, and having exclusive use and enjoyment of the land inclosed in the pasture. Julio Guzman had actual, peaceable, adverse, exclusive, and continuous possession of the land in suit, and claiming same under a duly registered deed from the spring of 1882 until his death in December, 1901. Guzman's possession and claim of ownership was open, visible, notorious, and hostile to plaintiffs and to the world.

(10) Julio Guzman died intestate in December, 1901; his wife having previously died. They had eight children, and these children and their descendants were their sole heirs, and inherited the land in suit.

(11) P. E. Blalack, by deeds duly executed by said heirs and the legal guardians of such of them as were minors, succeeded to the title of all of said heirs. These deeds were executed and recorded at various times from February to August, 1902. By each deed the grantor therein conveyed to Blalack the undivided interest owned by him or her, in the land in controversy, as one of the heirs of Julio Guzman, specifying the amount of such interest; the several deeds taken together conveying the entire league. The deeds for about one-half of the entire league were recorded more than 5 years before this suit was filed.

(12) After the death of Julio Guzman his children and grandchildren remained in possession of the land, claiming the whole of it as their own, and cultivated, used, and enjoyed the same, and had exclusive and adverse possession thereof, until they conveyed the same to the defendant, P. E. Blalack. When Blalack purchased the land from the Guzman heirs, he went into the actual possession of the land so purchased, and the heirs who had not conveyed to him admitted him into possession with them, and recognized his right to the extent of the interests conveyed to him, and said Blalack recognized the rights of the heirs who had not conveyed to him to the extent of the interests owned by them, and Blalack and the heirs who had not conveyed to him so recognized each other's rights and interest in the land and remained in the actual possession thereof, using, cultivating, and enjoying the same, and claiming the same as their own adverse to the world, and continuously up to the filing of this suit.

(13) All taxes on the land in suit from 1882 have been paid for each year as they accrued in full, first Julio Guzman during his life, then by his children and grandchildren, until they sold to Blalack, and then by Blalack until he sold to Hawkins, and then by Hawkins and Blalack up to this time. The suit was instituted May 1, 1907.

By the first assignment of error, and the several propositions thereunder appellants assail the ninth conclusion of fact of the trial court, wherein the court finds that by deed dated April 24, 1882, Josiah W. Turner conveyed to Julio Guzman all his right, title, and interest in the easternmost league of the Santa Ana grant including the land in suit. One objection to this finding is that it offends against that provision of the statute which requires conclusions of fact and law to be separate. There is no merit in the objection.

Another objection is that the deed referred to in the findings does not purport to convey anything to the said Guzman except one-fourth of a league that Turner had acquired from Elizabeth Merriman, together with whatever right might have been given by Mrs. Merriman to Turner, by way of option, to purchase the other three-fourths, which is the land in controversy. The merits of appellants' case rest very largely upon the construction of this deed from Turner to Guzman as a basis for the claim of title by limitation of 5 and 10 years by appellees, without which appellants are entitled to recover. This deed has been fully set out in our eighth finding of fact, which differs from the ninth conclusion of fact of the trial court here objected to only in having a fuller statement of the contents of the deed. If this instrument is, properly construed, a deed to the land in controversy, as found by the trial court, within the meaning of the 5-year statute of limitation, or a memorandum of title thereto within the meaning of the 10-year statute, it must be held that Guzman's title was complete under both recorded at the time of his death, as there is no dispute that it was recorded on the day of its date, and the evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding of the trial court, which we have adopted in our findings of fact, as to payment of taxes, which was in fact admitted by appellants, and peaceable, adverse possession by Guzman from 1882 to 1901, and those holding his title since his death.

But appellants contend that it is neither such a deed to the land as would support the 5-year statute, nor such a memorandum of title as would support the 10-year statute, but that it merely conveys to Guzman the option to purchase the three-fourths league, given to Turner by the deed to him by Mrs. Merriman as a part of her deed for the upper one-fourth of the league. Appellants arrive at this conclusion by disregarding that part of the deed in terms conveying the land to Guzman, or absolutely subordinating the same to the additional stipulation in the deed with regard to the agreement of Mrs. Merriman in her deed to Turner of the one-fourth league, referring to the option to purchase the other three-fourths in case it be discovered that she owns it. Turner had a deed to the league from Brewster, who in turn had the deed from the tax collector. Turner then had this title to the lower league, and in addition had the deed from Elizabeth Merriman for the upper one-fourth of the league, containing the option to purchase the other three-fourths, if it should be discovered that it belonged to her. It seems to us that, in these circumstances, there is no sound basis for appellants' contention that the intention, as shown by Turner's deed to Guzman, so far as the land in suit is concerned, was to pass only the option to purchase the three-fourths of the league. Certainly no such construction can be given the terms of the deed. The deed first, in express and appropriate terms, conveys by metes and bounds the grantor's right, title, and interest in the entire league, and then proceeds: "I also convey all of my right, title and interest" in the land conveyed by the Brewster deed. "And also for a good and valuable consideration" makes the agreement shown with regard to the option contained in the Merriman deed to Turner, referring to the three-fourths as three-fourths of "said league of land herein conveyed." The use of the language "in the event Mrs. Merriman should own the remaining three-fourths of said league herein conveyed" must be taken to refer only to the terms of the option agreement which embraced only the lower three-fourths of the league, and cannot, in the face of the positive terms of the conveyance of the entire league preceding, be taken as limiting such conveyance to the one-fourth of the league conveyed by Mrs. Merriman to Turner. The deed also concludes with a general warranty of title of the "said premises." No reference is made to the one-fourth of the league, and the warranty clearly refers to the title to the entire league embraced in the conveyance. It seems clear to us that the primary purpose of the deed was to convey the entire league, but to provide against the contingency of the title under the tax deed proving invalid, by giving Guzman the benefit, for whatever it was worth, of the conditional option of purchase from Mrs. Merriman of the lower three-fourths of the league. Guzman so understood it, for he paid taxes on the entire league, and settled and placed his improvements on the lower three-fourths, which is the land in suit. We have discussed thus fully the terms of this deed for the reason that the appellants' whole case seems to rest upon the construction thereof claimed by them. The first assignment of error must be overruled.

By the second assignment of error appellants complain of the tenth conclusion of fact of the trial court, wherein it is found that Julio Guzman built corrals and opened up fields, without stating where said corrals were, or where said fields were on the land, or identifying in any manner the portion of the land inclosed, or the quantity thereof. It is a sufficient answer to this assignment to say that if the findings in question were not full or definite enough, appellant should have requested fuller or more definite findings. The findings in question, however, which are copied in full as the findings of this court as paragraph 9 thereof, are not subject to the objection made. They are in fact based upon an agreement as to these facts on the part of appellants. It is not material on what particular portion of the land in suit the fields, corrals, and house were located. The court clearly finds the extent and character of the improvements, and that they were located on the land in dispute, which was admitted. There is no merit in the assignment.

The third assignment of error cannot be sustained. The deed from Amado Guzman to Blalack describes the land conveyed as an undivided 780½ acres out of a part of the Gato grant, describing it and the lower or easternmost league of the Santa Ana grant, which is clearly identified, and also described the interest conveyed as his one-eighth interest as one of the eight children of Julio Guzman and wife.

The finding of the court, referred to in the fourth assignment of error, that the deed from Mrs. Longoria and husband to Blalack was duly recorded was error. The deed showed on its face that the property conveyed was the separate property of Mrs. Longoria, and the record of the deed exhibited showed that in recording an essential part of the certificate of her acknowledgment was omitted. Under these facts it could not be said that the deed was duly recorded. Taylor v. Harrison, 47 Tex. 454, 26 Am. Rep. 304. The original deed was introduced in evidence, showing the execution of the conveyance, and it was not material to appellees' rights, as we view the case upon the limitation title, that this deed should have been recorded. The limitation title was complete in Julio Guzman at his death. The error is entirely immaterial.

There is no error in the fifth assignment of error, which complains of the twentieth and twenty-first conclusions of fact of the trial court. The facts as found with regard to the extent and character of the improvements on the land, and the acts of cultivation, use, and enjoyment, evidencing the actual possession, are entirely sufficient to support the limitation title to the entire tract held under the deed to Guzman, whether it be held as a duly registered deed under the 5-year statute, or a written memorandum of title under the 10-year statute. We have held that the instrument was, in fact, a deed, conveying the entire league.

What has been said with regard to the effect of the deed from Turner to Guzman sufficiently answers the first and second propositions under the sixth assignment of error. With regard to the second proposition, the several deeds from the heirs of Julio Guzman to Blalack clearly show that the undivided interest owned by each grantor as one of the heirs of Julio Guzman and wife was intended to be, and was, conveyed. It clearly appears that separate interests were conveyed by each deed, the sum of the deeds embracing the whole. The case of Noble v. Hill, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 171, 27 S. W. 756, and other cases to the same effect cited by appellants, are not in point.

We overrule the seventh assignment of error. There is no merit in either of the three propositions advanced by appellants thereunder. The deed of Josiah Turner was a duly registered deed to the land in dispute, and the actual possession thereunder was shown to be adverse to all the world. It was not necessary, under the facts established, that Guzman should have ever otherwise repudiated the title of appellants, or otherwise notified appellants of his claim of title, to set the statute of limitation in motion. It is not necessary to repeat here what we have said elsewhere as to the effect of the deed to Guzman by Turner. It was not a quitclaim deed, although it contained the terms "all my right, title and interest." The habendum clause is "to have and to hold the above described premises," etc., and there is a general warranty of "all and singular the said premises." In that portion of the deed containing the transfer to Guzman of Turner's rights under the option agreement with Elizabeth Merriman the reference is to the three-fourths "of the said league herein conveyed," evidently referring to the former portion of the instrument as a conveyance of the entire league, and showing that the grantor so understood it. It seems to be settled by the authorities in this state that such a deed is not a mere quitclaim, but conveys the land, and not a mere chance of title. Garrett v. Christopher, 74 Tex. 453, 12 S. W. 67, 15 Am. St. Rep. 850; Abanathy v. Stone, 81 Tex. 433, 16 S. W. 1102; Evans v. Ashe (Tex. Civ. App.) 108 S. W. 408; Wynne v. Ward, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 235, 91 S. W. 237; Laughlin v. Tips, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 649, 28 S. W. 551; Bedford v. Rayner Cattle Co., 13 Tex. Civ. App. 623, 35 S. W. 931; Moore v. Swift, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 53, 67 S. W. 1065; Pool v. Foster (Tex. Civ. App.) 49 S. W. 924. It would seem that if the deed were a mere quitclaim deed, it would support the plea of limitation of both 5 and 10 years. McDonough v. Jefferson Co., 79 Tex. 535, 15 S. W. 490; Parker v. Newberry, 83 Tex. 430, 18 S. W. 815; Harris v. Bryson, 84 Tex. Civ. App. 532, 80 S. W. 106. The court found that appellants showed title, and were entitled to recover, unless appellees were entitled to the land under their claim of title by limitation. Appellees had no other title, and if the deed to Guzman was sufficient to support such claim, it was all appellees needed. But we entertain no doubt that the deed in fact conveyed the entire league. What we have said disposes of the eighth, ninth, tenth, and eleventh assignments of error, and the propositions thereunder, which are overruled.

By their twelfth assignment of error appellants assail the conclusion of the trial court that appellees were entitled to recover the land under their plea of 5-year limitation. We have held that the deed to Guzman was sufficient as a registered deed to the land to support this defense. As we have found in our conclusions of fact, the evidence was amply sufficient to establish, on the part of Guzman, actual, peaceable, and adverse possession, together with cultivation, use, and enjoyment thereof, from the date of his deed in 1882 up to the date of his death in 1901, a period of 19 years, with payment of taxes for each year of such possession. The evidence leaves no doubt of such possession, and as little doubt that it was adverse to appellants and everybody else, and exclusive as to them, and that it was held under a claim of title to the land in controversy, and not any less interest. Not only is the evidence sufficient to sustain the trial court's findings on this point, but it really excludes any other conclusion, based as it is upon admissions of appellants by agreement shown in the record. The title by limitation, being complete in Julio Guzman at his death, descended to his heirs, and passed by their deeds to appellees. But the evidence further fully supports the conclusion of the trial court that this adverse possession, with all the elements necessary to support a limitation title, was continued by the heirs up to the date of their respective deeds to Blalack, and by him at least as to half of the land under the 5-year statute, and the whole under the statute of 10 years, up to the filing of this suit in 1907. It is true that not all of these deeds were recorded 5 years prior to the filing of the suit, and one of them, that of Mrs. Longoria, was not duly recorded at all, but this did not affect the limitation title complete at date of Guzman's death, nor the 10-year limitation title at all. The twelfth assignment of error raises the question here discussed, and is overruled.

No objection was made to the admission of the Longoria deed, except as a recorded deed to support the statute of limitation of 5 years. We have seen that the error of the court in holding that the deed was duly recorded was immaterial and harmless. The thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth assignments of error cannot be sustained.

Appellees were permitted, over the objections of appellants that the questions called for the conclusions of the witness, to ask a witness whether Julio Guzman paid taxes for the Merriman people or any one else, to which the witness answered, "For the land," and to a further question whom he paid taxes for, whether for himself or for any other person, the witness answered, "For himself." We think there is no merit in the objection, and it was properly overruled. By written agreement filed in the suit it was admitted that Julio Guzman paid all taxes on the land in suit as they accrued for each year, up to the time of his death, and after his death, all taxes were paid by his children until they conveyed to Blalack, and that Blalack and Hawkins had paid all taxes since their respective purchases. The presumption would be that the taxes were paid by Guzman himself. The objection that the answers aforesaid were the conclusion of the witness is not sound.

The same may be said with regard to the testimony referred to in the seventeenth assignment of error, as to whether or not Blalack took possession of the land after he bought. This fact was also proven by Blalack and was practically undisputed.

Objection was also made to the testimony of the witness Julio Guzman, Jr., that neither he nor any of his brothers and sisters recognized any other as having any rights in the land. The objection was that such testimony was the conclusion of the witness, and was properly overruled.

The evidence of Julio Guzman, referred to in the nineteenth assignment, and objected thereto, was of the same general character. The assignment presents no ground for reversal.

All of this testimony referred to above was addressed to the character of Guzman's possession and claim. It may be said that the fact of this possession, and that it was exclusive as to the entire tract in controversy, was practically undisputed, and established beyond question by evidence not objected to. If we are correct in the construction we have given the deed from Turner to Guzman, his entry into possession immediately upon the execution of the deed, establishing his residence, and building houses and corrals, and fencing an extensive tract and using the same for a pasture, and the payment of taxes on the entire tract every year, all of which is established by undisputed evidence, would of itself establish prima facie that such entry and possession, use and enjoyment, were based upon the deed, and a claim of title thereunder to the entire tract conveyed by the deed. During all of the time since such entry in 1882 no evidence which we have been able to find in the record, or which has been referred to in the brief, except the evidently unintentional statement of Julio Guzman, afterwards corrected by him, that his father only claimed the land fenced, has the slightest tendency to show that Guzman recognized any other title or claim of title, or claimed less than the deed conveyed to him. Appellees seem to have undertaken affirmatively to show that Guzman, and those claiming under him after his death, asserted exclusive ownership and recognized no other title, and much of the testimony objected to was to this general effect. If the rules of evidence were violated in the admission of any of it, such error would not require or authorize a reversal of the judgment, particularly in a trial by the court without a jury. With this statement, and without further discussion, the twentieth, twenty-third, twenty-fourth, twenty-fifth, and twenty-seventh assignments of error, none of which present any grounds for reversal of the judgment, are overruled.

The testimony of the witness James B. Wells, referred to in the twenty-sixth assignment, that when approached by a man by the name of Merriman to institute suit for recovery, he made investigation of the title, and declined the employment, was in substance and effect nothing more than the opinion of the witness that he did not think said Merriman's claim valid. It was error to admit the testimony, whether it be as to the contents of a letter not produced, on which ground it was also objected to, or that generally it was immaterial and irrelevant. Notwithstanding, however, appellants' statement in the brief that this witness was the most effective witness against them, and that he is a lawyer of great reputation and standing in that section, we cannot bring ourselves to think that this evidence influenced the court in its judgment, especially when the practically undisputed and unobjectionable evidence in the record fully supports the judgment. The testimony of the witness that he knew it was Guzman's land, and that he lived on it, could not amount to more, or be understood to mean more, than that witness knew that Guzman had a deed to the land and was claiming it, which was undisputed, except by appellants' contention that the deed to him did not convey the land in dispute.

The testimony referred to in the twenty-first, twenty-second, twenty-ninth, and thirtieth assignments of error is of such a character that, if objectionable at all, its admission does not require or authorize a reversal of the judgment. The testimony was of the most trivial character, and could not reasonably be supposed to have influenced the court, in view of the sufficiency of the other evidence generally to establish the facts upon which the judgment is based.

The witness L. C. Hill, being asked whether Julio Guzman claimed ownership and possession of this land at that time (1900), answered: "Yes, sir; everybody in this country knew that Julio Guzman owned it; that it was his ranch and land there." The latter part of the answer was objectionable as not being responsive to the question, and for that reason should have been stricken out, but it was utterly immaterial. It did not at all matter whether any one actually knew of Guzman's claim and possession. The recorded deed furnished evidence of the claim, and his possession was open and notorious. Such error as there was in admitting the testimony and refusing to strike it out was harmless in view of the whole testimony.

The thirty-second, thirty-third, and thirty-fourth assignments of error are addressed to the error of the court in refusing to render judgment for appellants, and in rendering judgment for appellees. In view of our findings of fact, and what we have said of the evidence, further extension of this opinion in a discussion of these assignments seems to us unnecessary. The trial court found that appellants had title, and were entitled to recover the land, unless their claim was defeated by the claim of title in appellees under the statute of limitation, but further found in favor of appellees the claim under 5-year limitation. The court may as well have sustained also that title under 10-year statute. If we are correct in our interpretation of the deed from Turner to Guzman, the practically undisputed evidence establishes, in our mind, beyond question, appellees' claim, under both the 5 and 10 years statute, with such conclusiveness as to render such errors as may have been committed in the admission of testimony harmless, even if the trial had been with a jury. It may be said that, if appellees had no other claim of title except that under the statute of limitation of five years, resting upon their duly recorded deeds from the heirs of Julio Guzman and wife, such title was established only to about one-half of the land, but the actual, peaceable, and adverse possession of Julio Guzman from 1882 to his death in 1901, and of his heirs from that date up to their conveyances to Blalack in 1902 under duly recorded deed, with payment of taxes, was so conclusively established that no other judgment than one for appellees could have properly been rendered. In such case the judgment should not be reversed on account of immaterial errors which may have been committed in a trial by the court, in the admission of evidence.

We have carefully examined all of the assignments of error and the several propositions advanced under each, which are severally overruled, and we have concluded that none of them present any ground for reversal, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

Affirmed.

CITY OF PARIS v. JENKINS.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 4, 1900.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 736*)—TORTS—NUISANCE—LIABILITY.

A city acts in its individual, and not in its governmental, capacity in disposing of garbage, and is liable as an individual for creating and maintaining a nuisance in doing so, so that it would be liable to an adjoining owner, irrespective of negligence, where it established a garbage dump on its own land, the noxious odors from which made it uncomfortable and dangerous to reside on adjacent land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1552; Dec. Dig. § 736.*]

2. NUISANCE (§ 3*)—PRIVATE NUISANCE—GARBAGE DUMP.

One dumping garbage on his land, the noxious odors from which make it uncomfortable and dangerous to reside on adjacent land, would be liable to the adjoining owner for creating and maintaining a nuisance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Nuisance, Cent. Dig. §§ 24, 25; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. NUISANCE (§ 50*) — PRIVATE NUISANCE — DAMAGES — SHARE — TEMPORARY INJURY — DEPRECIATION IN RENTAL VALUE.

In an action against a city for damages for creating a nuisance by dumping garbage on a lot adjoining plaintiff's property, the damage alleged and proved was that resulting from the noxious odors, and not to plaintiff's land, and the evidence showed that the garbage could be removed from the city's lot, and that the amount of garbage dumped was decreasing, and the city was preparing to construct an abattoir, when it would quit dumping garbage. Held, that the injury resulting from the nuisance was only temporary, and hence plaintiff's measure of damages was the depreciation in rental value of his property because of the nuisance, and not its depreciation in market value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Nuisance, Cent. Dig. §§ 118-127; Dec. Dig. § 50;* Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 198, 397.]

Appeal from District Court, Lamar County; T. D. Montrose, Judge.

Action by T. W. Jenkins against the City of Paris. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Appellee owned a tract of about 31 acres of land, situated about two miles north of the city of Paris. The city owned a tract of about 10 acres of land adjacent to appellee's tract, and used same as a dumping ground for dead animals, garbage, and refuse of all kinds. The suit was by appellee against appellant. In his petition appellee alleged as follows: "That since the 1st day of January, 1902, and up to and including the present time, the defendant, the city of Paris, dumped and caused to be dumped, and is dumping and causing to be dumped, all manner of offensive garbage, dead animals, waste matter, and refuse of all kinds from the streets and residences of said city of Paris, on and near to plaintiff's said land and near his place of residence thereon, by reason of which dumping a very offensive, unhealthy scent was cast onto and over plaintiff's land, into and around his residence, and that noxious vapors and smell therefrom constantly invaded his premises and were wafted over his land, and are still being carried over, onto, around, and into his said house, and that same is so noxious and the effluvia so strong and poisonous that it is unsafe, uncomfortable, and dangerous to reside on said land, or to use and cultivate it, and renders it unfit for any purpose and almost entirely worthless. Plaintiff further states that his said residence is situated about 150 yards in a southwesterly direction from where said dumpage, garbage, and filth is dumped, and he says that the air is constantly filled with said vapors arising from said dumpage as above described, and said vapors are wafted into his house to such an extent and so strong and disagreeable as to render his house on said land and his land uninhabitable, and his said land almost valueless and permanently injured, thereby destroying said land and depriving plaintiff of its value. That defendant has permanently established it as it now is for its dumping ground for the purpose of dumping all manner of filth, garbage, and dead animals, etc., from the streets and residences of said city of Paris, to remain there forever. Plaintiff's said land is situated and described as follows: (Then follows description of land.) That said land is worth $4,000 without the nuisance above complained of, but is not worth over $500 now by reason of said nuisance as it now is, if that much, and that by reason of said nuisance plaintiff's land has been damaged permanently in the sum of $3,500." The appeal is from a judgment for the sum of $175, interest, and costs, in favor of appellee.

Edgar Wright, for appellant. D. K. Fooshe, for appellee.

WILLSON, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). Appellant contends that it was not liable to appellee for damages suffered by him in consequence of the use it made of its land, unless in making such use of same it was guilty of negligence, and insists that the charge of the court was erroneous, in that it authorized the jury to find for appellee in the absence of proof of negligence on its part. That, in disposing of its garbage and refuse, a city acts in its corporate, and not in its governmental, capacity, and is liable as an individual would be for its act in thereby creating and maintaining a nuisance, seems to be well settled in this state. City of Coleman v. Price (Civ. App.) 117 S. W. 905; Ostrom v. City of San Antonio, 94 Tex. 523, 62 S. W. 909; City of Galveston v. Posnalsky, 62 Tex. 127, 50 Am. Rep. 517; City of Ft. Worth v. Crawford, 74 Tex. 404, 12 S. W. 52, 15 Am. St. Rep. 840; City of Sherman v. Langham (Sup.) 13 S. W. 1042. That an individual, creating and maintaining on his own land such a nuisance as the one complained of, without respect to whether in so doing he had been negligent or not, would be liable to an adjacent owner thereby injured, is clear. Joyce on Nuisances, § 167; Frost v. Phosphate Co., 42 S. C. 402, 20 S. E. 280, 26 L. R. A. 693, 40 Am. St. Rep. 736. Therefore we are of the opinion that the court did not err in the portion of his charge referred to.

The court instructed the jury, in the event they found in appellee's favor, that the measure of his damages would be "the difference in the market value of his premises without the dumping ground and the market value of the premises with the dumping ground established where it is." Appellant insists that the instruction was erroneous, because "the undisputed evidence showed that, if there was any injury to appellee's premises, same was not a permanent injury, but was a temporary injury, which in its very nature would and could be abated at any time." In his pleading the appellee did not charge, and the testimony did not show, injury to the land as such. The injury alleged, and the injury which the evidence tended to establish, was such alone as was caused by noisome smells and poisonous gases emanating from the refuse on the dumping ground, and corrupting the air on appellee's premises. The evidence was that the refuse was dumped on the surface of the ground. That it could be removed, and the nuisance thereby be abated, was established by uncontradicted testimony. There was evidence tending to show that the use made of appellant's land as a place to dump its refuse had decreased as it had extended its sewer system, and would continue to decrease as said system was further extended; and there was also evidence tending to show preparation by appellant to construct an abattoir which would enable it to altogether dispense with the use of the land as a place on which to dump dead animals. From the testimony referred to, which is undisputed by anything in the record, it is clear, we think, that the nuisance and the injury occasioned by it to appellee's property must be regarded as a temporary, and not as a permanent, nuisance or injury. In such a case, it seems to be well settled that the depreciation in rental value, and not a depreciation in the market value, of property injured, must be looked to as the measure of its owner's damages. City of San Antonio v. Mackey, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 145, 54 S. W. 34; Baugh v. Railway Co., 80 Tex. 59, 15 S. W. 587; Railway Co. v. Ridgeway, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 108, 85 S. W. 497; McGill v. Pintsch Compressing Co. (Iowa) 118 N. W. 789, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 466; Joyce on Nuisances, § 170. In City of San Antonio v. Mackey, cited above, a case in many respects similar to this one, the court said: "The recovery of damages is sought in this case on the ground that the stenches and odors arising from the deposits of garbage and filth made by the city had rendered the dwelling of the plaintiff untenable, thereby destroying its rental value, and causing permanent depreciation in the value of the property by reason of the odors and that reputation as to unhealthfulness acquired therefrom. It is not alleged that there was any permanent injury to the soil by reason of the deposits; but the claim for damages is made to rest upon the existence of the stench arising from the garbage. It follows that, unless the cause of the odors is of such a nature that it cannot be removed, there could be no permanent damage. There is no evidence that tends to prove that the odors are permanent in their injury. * * * There was no testimony to the effect that the nuisance could not be abated. * * * The testimony clearly established the temporary character of the nuisance, and, independent of the testimony, experience and reason would seem to teach that, in the very nature of things, deposits made on or near the surface can be removed. * * * Such being the case presented by the evidence, the depreciation in the market value of the land was not the measure of damages, and the charge presenting that issue to the jury can have no other tendency than that of misleading them. As to a nuisance capable of abatement, the depreciation in the value of the property can have no applicability. The settled rule of damages in such cases is the difference in the rental value with and without the nuisance." And see City of San Antonio v. Mackey, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 210, 86 S. W. 760.

For the error in the trial court's instructions to the jury as to the measure of appellee's damages, the judgment will be reversed. As the cause will be remanded for a new trial, the assignment questioning the sufficiency of the evidence will not be noticed further than to say that if, on another trial, the pleadings on the part of appellee remain as they are, and there is again an absence of evidence tending to show a permanent injury to his land, the jury should be instructed to return a verdict in favor of appellant.

Reversed and remanded.

HOBART NAT. BANK v. FORDTRAN.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 24, 1909.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 594*)—WEIGHT—UNCONTRADICTED TESTIMONY.

The jury need not believe the evidence of a party, though it is not directly contradicted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2431; Dec. Dig. § 594.*]

2. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 165*)—COLLECTIONS—TITLE TO PROCEEDS OF DRAFT.

A bank receiving from the drawer a draft for collection is not the owner of the proceeds of its collection, but the proceeds belong to the drawer, and they are subject to garnishment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 547, 571; Dec. Dig. § 165.*]

Appeal from Galveston County Court;
George E. Mann, Judge.

Action by J. S. Fordtran against E. H. Linzee, defendant, and the Texas Bank & Trust Company, as garnishee, in which the Hobart National Bank of Hobart, Okl., intervenes. From a judgment for plaintiff against the garnishee, the intervener appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. T. Burgess, for appellant. Wm. B. Lockhart, for appellee.

NEILL, J. Fordtran sued E. H. Linzee, doing business under the name of E. H. Linzee Grain Company, for $100.20, and caused a writ of garnishment to be issued and served upon the Texas Bank & Trust Company. The company answered that it held $540, the proceeds of a draft drawn by E. H. Linzee Grain Company, on Texas Star Flour Mills, at Galveston, which it had collected. Appellant, the Hobart National Bank of Hobart, Okl., then intervened in the garnishment suit, averring the ownership of the draft, and, when it was collected, of the proceeds of the collection. The trial in the justice court, as well as in the county court on appeal, resulted in a judgment against the garnishee for $112.15. This appeal is by the intervener from the judgment of the county court.

If the evidence of the intervener as to the ownership of the draft were true, then it owned the proceeds of the collection; and the verdict and judgment should have been in its favor. Though such evidence was not directly contradicted, the jury were not bound to believe it (Cheatham v. Riddle, 12 Tex. 112; McCormick v. Kampmann, 109 S. W. 492); and it is evident from the verdict that they did not. The facts and circumstances were such as tended to show that the intervener never purchased or held the draft as its own property, but that it was simply placed in its hands by the drawer for collection. In this view of the matter the proceeds of its collection held by the garnishee were the property of the defendant, E. H. Linzee, and subject to his debt. Therefore the judgment is affirmed.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 10, 1909.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 605*)—ABATEMENT OF NUISANCES—POWERS.

Rev. St. 1893, arts. 419, 453, 460, giving to the council of cities the exclusive power over its streets, authorizing the abatement of nuisances and to define what shall be nuisances, and to control the construction of railroad crossings, authorize a city council to abate a nuisance at common law or under the statute, irrespective of any ordinance on the subject, but, where the thing complained of is not a nuisance per se, the question whether it is a nuisance is one for judicial determination.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1338; Dec. Dig. § 605.*]

2. NUISANCE (§ 84*)—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether a bridge maintained by a railroad over its tracks for a public road is a nuisance is a question for the jury under proper instructions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Nuisance, Dec. Dig. § 84.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 513*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—SUBJECTS FOR EXPERT TESTIMONY.

Whether it is feasible for a railroad to establish a grade crossing over its tracks at a particular place is a subject for expert testimony.

4. EVIDENCE (§ 539½*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY OF EXPERT.

A civil engineer of 18 years' experience in the construction of railroads, including the grading of tracks at crossings, who is familiar with a particular crossing and who testifies to the physical conditions surrounding it, is competent to give his opinion as to whether it is feasible to establish a grade crossing.

Appeal from District Court, Bell County; John D. Robinson, Judge.

Action by the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe Railway Company against the City of Belton and others, in which defendants by cross-action sought by mandamus to compel plaintiff to establish a grade crossing. From a judgment awarding the writ of mandamus as prayed for by defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Terry, Cavin & Mills and A. H. Culwell, for appellant. John B. Durrett, A. L. Curtis, and James F. Hair, for appellees.

RICE, J. It was shown that in 1877 the county commissioners' court of Bell county laid out and established a third-class public road, known as the "Belton and Tennessee Valley public road," leading from the end of Main street on the north line of the corporation of Belton, as it then existed, in a northerly direction to the Leon river, and in 1882 the appellant constructed its roadbed across said public road a short distance north of the end of Main street in said city. In 1885 said road was changed by the commissioners' court to a second-class road, and made 60 feet wide, the same width as Main street in said city, making the same an extension of said street north across the roadbed of appellant. In 1888 appellant built an overhead crossing over its track and over said public road. In 1894 the corporate limits of the city of Belton were extended some half mile to the north. Said strip of new territory included the Belton and Tennessee Valley public road for a half mile from the north line of the original city limits, embracing said public road where the same was crossed by appellant's track. It appeared that the appellant's line of railroad had been constructed and in operation for more than 25 years over said public road, and that this bridge was constructed before that part of the territory was annexed to the city of Belton, and that the same had been maintained during said time by appellant, and had been continuously in use by the public since its construction as a crossing. On the 3d of February, 1909, the city of Belton, acting through its officers and agents, removed the bridge, and were in the act of removing the earthen approaches thereto, when the temporary writ of injunction applied for was issued, restraining said city from further interfering therewith. Said city of Belton is a municipal corporation, incorporated under the general laws of the state of Texas, and at the time of the removal of said bridge D. E. Patterson was its acting mayor, W. T. Hale was its acting marshal, and E. W. Ferguson was its acting secretary. It further appeared that the acts of Patterson and Hale in the removal of the bridge and the attempted removal of the approaches to it had been done in their official capacity, and that the same were ordered, directed, and ratified by the city of Belton. On the 10th day of February, 1909, appellant brought this suit against said city and its officers above named for the recovery of actual and exemplary damages occasioned by the removal of said bridge, and for an injunction restraining the city of Belton and its officials from further destroying the approaches thereto, as well as any attempt on their part to construct a grade crossing at said point, alleging the facts hereinbefore stated, and, further, that its tracks on either side of Main street ran through a deep cut, and the view of one approaching its tracks from either direction along said street was obstructed to such an extent that it would be extremely dangerous to have or maintain a grade crossing over its tracks at said place. A temporary writ of Injunction was issued. Appellees answered by general and special exceptions and by special answer, to the effect that the bridge in question was within the city limits of the city of Belton and across one of its public streets, and that the city had power and control over its streets, and that the same was an obstruction thereto, and that the wooden portion of said bridge had been removed by the city after the same had been declared a nuisance by the city council, and after the city marshal had been directed by the city council to remove the same. Appellees by cross-action sought by mandamus to compel the railway company to put in a grade crossing at the place in question. Appellant specially excepted to this answer, pleading the invalidity of the act of the city council declaring the bridge in question a nuisance, and denying the right of said city to summarily remove the same. There was a jury trial, upon the conclusion of which the court directed a verdict in favor of the defendants upon all the issues raised by the pleadings, and judgment was rendered in accordance therewith, that appellant take nothing by its action for damages, and that the temporary injunction formerly issued should be dissolved, and that the writ of mandamus as prayed for by the city be awarded. A new trial having been refused, appellant prosecutes this appeal.

The chief questions for our consideration, as raised by the several assignments of error, are, first, whether the bridge in question within itself was such a nuisance, either at common law or by statute, as would authorize said city to summarily abate it, or whether the question of nuisance vel non was one of fact, to be determined by the jury under proper instructions from the court. Appellees justify their action on the ground that the bridge was an obstruction to the street, and therefore a nuisance per se, and that, by virtue of the resolutions or ordinances passed by its city council, it was authorized to summarily abate the same by a removal thereof. Appellant, on the contrary, contends that whether such structure constituted a nuisance was a question of fact, to be determined by the jury, and that the ordinances or resolutions passed by the city council authorizing its destruction were absolute nullities, and could not be pleaded in justification of this action. The resolutions or ordinances under which the city undertook to justify its acts in the removal of said bridge and the attempted removal of the approaches thereto, and which were offered in evidence on the trial over appellant's objection, are as follows:

"Extract from minutes of city council, under date of September 11, 1907:

"(1) Resolved that the street committee be instructed to co-operate with the Santa Fé agent in regard to establishing a proper crossing across Main street. Motion carried.

"(2) November 13, 1907. Moved and seconded that the Main street bridge over the Santa Fé railway be declared a public nuisance. Motion carried.

"(3) August 18, 1908. Moved and seconded that the marshal be instructed to remove the bridge over the Santa Fé track on Main street that has been declared a public nuisance at a previous meeting of the council. Motion carried."

The evidence discloses that this bridge had been constructed and maintained by the appellant at its own expense and had been in continuous use by the public in traveling said public road for a period of over 25 years, during which time no complaint previous to the present one appears to have been made. It is true that it is shown that some time in 1907 there had been a conference between the representatives of the city and of the railroad company relative to this structure in pursuance of the resolutions passed by the city council, but no demands to remove the same appear to have been then or thereafter made, and no definite action was taken by the city in reference thereto at said time. It appears that at times travel over said bridge was inconvenienced by reason of the narrow passageway across the same (the bridge being only about 18 feet wide and not covering the entire space of the street), and the steep ascent thereto, which rendered it difficult in a wet time to haul heavy loads thereover.

It was shown on the part of appellant that its tracks for some distance on either side of said street approached the same through a deep cut, and that it was impossible for persons traveling said highway or for persons operating its trains in approaching the same to see each other for a distance of something like 200 feet from said crossing, and that there was great danger and would necessarily continue to be great danger in operating its road over said street with safety to the public unless said overhead bridge was maintained; and appellant offered to show that it would be impracticable to construct and maintain a grade crossing at said point, but such evidence was excluded upon appellees' objection, which is also assigned as error, and will be hereafter discussed. While it is true, as contended by the city, that under our law it is provided that the city council shall have exclusive control and power over its streets, alleys, public grounds, and highways, and to abate or remove encroachments or obstructions thereon, to open, alter, widen, extend, establish, regulate, grade, and otherwise improve its streets (Rev. St. 1895, art. 419), and that the city council shall have the power to abate and remove nuisances and to punish the author thereof by penalties, fines, and imprisonment, and to define and declare what shall be nuisances, and authorize and direct summary abatement thereof (Rev. St. 1895, art. 453), and that the city council shall likewise have the power to direct and control the laying and construction of railroad tracks, etc., to require railroad corporations to construct and keep in repair suitable crossings at the intersection of streets, etc., when the city council shall deem it necessary (Rev. St. 1895, art. 460), still we are not inclined to believe that, by reason of these provisions of our statute, a city council is authorized to declare that to be a nuisance which is in fact not such, and by reason of its mere declaration so denominating it a nuisance to summarily destroy or abate the same; but that in all such cases whether the particular thing complained of is a nuisance is a question of fact. And this, as we understand it, is appellant's contention.

In the case of Yates v. Milwaukee, 77 U. S. 497, 19 L. Ed. 984, where the Legislature of Wisconsin authorized the city of Milwaukee by ordinance to establish dock and wharf lines and prevent encroachments upon the rivers, the city passed an ordinance declaring a wharf erected in the river by Yates to be an obstruction to navigation, and a nuisance, and ordered its abatement, and upon said city attempting to do so Yates sought to restrain it by injunction. Justice Miller, in delivering the opinion of the court, among other things, said: "The act of the Wisconsin Legislature approved March 21, 1854, confers upon the city of Milwaukee the authority to establish dock and wharf lines on the banks of the Milwaukee and Memomee rivers, and to restrain and prevent encroachments upon said rivers and obstructions thereto, and it is by this statute that the summary proceedings for the removal of appellant's wharf are supposed to be authorized. But the mere declaration by the city council of Milwaukee that a certain structure was an encroachment or obstruction did not make it so, nor could such declaration make it a nuisance, unless it in fact had that character. It is a doctrine not to be tolerated in this country that a municipal corporation, without any general laws, either of the city or of the state within which a given structure can be shown to be a nuisance, can be, by its mere declaration that it is one, subject to removal by any person supposed to be aggrieved, or even by the city itself. This would place every house, every business, and all the property of the city at the uncontrolled will of the temporary local authorities." In the case of Teass v. the City of St. Albans, 38 W. Va. 1, 17 S. E. 400, 19 L. R. A. 802, a similar question came before the Supreme Court of West Virginia, in which, quoting from the syllabus, it is said: "A municipal corporation cannot by its mere declaration that a dwelling house is a nuisance subject it to removal. It must first resort to some proper judicial proceeding, giving the owner or occupant an opportunity to be heard before his house is condemned and removed as a nuisance." In that case the house projected into one of the public streets of the town. The city council was empowered to declare what a nuisance is and to remove the same, a similar authority as granted by our statute.

In the case of Western & Atlantic Ry. Co. v. City of Atlanta, 113 Ga. 537, 38 S. E. 996, 54 L. R. A. 294, where the right of the city by summary proceeding to declare a depot and the floor thereof to be a public nuisance and remove the same was up for consideration, the court in discussing a similar question says: "No detailed statement of the evidence contained in the record is deemed to be necessary, but reference to such parts of it as becomes material will be considered in the discussion of the legal propositions by which the case is controlled. We shall undertake to establish two propositions as being sound in law and controlling in this case. The first is that neither the municipal authorities of any city in this state nor any department of a city government has the legal right summarily to abate a nuisance without first having given reasonable notice to the person maintaining the thing or doing the acts alleged to be a nuisance of the time and place of hearing the question whether such thing or the doing of such acts constitute a nuisance, and the determination by such body that the thing so maintained or the acts done in law constitute a nuisance, and this rule of law applies to all acts and things alleged to be nuisances except those which are by the law expressly declared to be nuisances, or which are indisputably so per se, and that this is true, notwithstanding the municipal authorities, or any department thereof, have, by the charter of the town or city, been given the power to abate nuisances in such city." A similar doctrine seems to have been maintained in Furniture Company v. Batesville, 139 Ind. 77, 38 N. E. 408. In the case of Town of Lakeview v. Letz, 44 Ill. 81, it is said: "There are some things which in their nature are nuisances, and which the law recognizes as such. There are others which may or not be so, their character in this respect depending upon circumstances; and in the latter instance it is manifestly beyond the power of the village to declare in advance that those things are nuisances, and so it was held in that case. The question when the thing may or may not be a nuisance must be settled as one of fact, and not of law."

It is said in 2 Wood on Nuisances (3d Ed.) § 744, that "where the Legislature confers upon a city or village the power to regulate and remove nuisances and to provide penalties therefor, or to remove such as are detrimental to the health of the inhabitants, this power confers authority upon the city government to impose penalties upon persons maintaining nuisances within its jurisdiction, and to remove the same, provided the thing be a nuisance at common law or by statute, and produces such an injury that an individual injured thereby might remove it, but not otherwise, and, if the authorities abate a nuisance under authority of an ordinance of the city, they are subject to the same perils and liabilities as an individual if the thing abated is not in fact a nuisance. But where the corporation is clothed with power by its charter, or special or general law, to abate or remove nuisances, that does not confer authority to prevent them, nor to impose penalties for their erection. Neither does authority to prevent nuisances confer authority to abate them. Neither does the power to abate nuisances warrant the destruction of valuable property which was lawfully erected, or anything which was erected by lawful authority. It would, indeed, be a dangerous power to repose in municipal corporations to permit them to declare by ordinance or otherwise anything a nuisance which the caprice or interests of those having control of its government might see fit to outlaw without being responsible for all the consequences, and even, if such power is expressly given by the Legislature, it is utterly inoperative and void, unless the thing is in fact a nuisance, or was created or erected after the passage of the ordinance, and in defiance of it. The fact that a particular use of property is declared a nuisance by an ordinance of the city does not make that use of property a nuisance, unless it is in fact so, and comes within the common-law or statutory idea of a nuisance. Hence authority conferred by an ordinance of the city is no protection against liability for damages resulting from the destruction of property upon the ground that it is a nuisance, unless its lawful character is clearly established. Therefore, except in cases of great public emergency, when the emergency may safely be regarded as so strong as to justify extraordinary measures upon the ground of paramount necessity, or when the use of property complained of is so clearly a nuisance as to leave no room for doubt upon the subject, it is the better course to secure an adjudication from the courts before proceeding to abate it. A municipal corporation which is empowered to declare what shall be nuisances is not thereby authorized to declare that to be a nuisance which is not so in fact. Things which may or may not be nuisances where their character in this respect depends upon circumstances cannot be so declared in advance. The question when the thing may or may not be a nuisance must be settled as one of fact, and not of law."

Judge Dillon, in his work on Municipal Corporations (volume 1, § 374 [4th Ed]), on this subject says: "It is to secure and promote the public health, safety, and convenience that municipal corporations are so generally and so liberally endowed with power to prevent and abate nuisances. This authority and its summary exercise may be constitutionally conferred on the incorporated place, and it authorizes its council to act against that which comes within the legal notion of a nuisance, but such power conferred in general terms cannot be taken to authorize the extrajudicial condemnation and destruction of that as a nuisance which, in its nature, situation or use, is not such"—quoting with approval the doctrine announced in Yates v. Milwaukee, supra. In Joyce on the Law of Nuisances, § 332, treating of the power of municipalities to declare things nuisances, it is said: "In the absence of power conferred by the Legislature upon a municipality to define or declare what is a nuisance, no power is held to be vested in it to declare a certain act or omission a public nuisance; and, though the power may be conferred upon a municipal corporation to declare, prevent, and abate nuisances, yet this will not justify a wanton declaration that a particular act, thing, or avocation is a nuisance which unquestionably is not one. The power must be exercised in a reasonable manner, having in view the personal and property rights of the individual, and the mere fact that a certain thing has been declared by the municipal authorities to be a nuisance does not render it one where it is not in its nature within the common law or statutory idea of a nuisance." See, also, Des Plaines v. Poyer, 123 Ill. 348, 14 N. E. 677, 5 Am. St. Rep. 524; City of Denver v. Mullen, 7 Colo. 345, 8 Pac. 693. The same doctrine is also approved in Pye et al. v. Peterson, 45 Tex. 812, 23 Am. Rep. 608. In the case of the City of Dallas v. Allen, 40 S. W. 324, where the city was sued for the value of certain wearing apparel destroyed under the authority of an ordinance authorizing the city to do all acts and make all regulations proper for the promotion of health or the suppression of disease, and where there was evidence that the articles could have been safely disinfected, it was held that whether it was necessary to burn the same was a question of fact for the jury, and that it was error to direct a verdict against the city.

Counsel for appellant likewise insists and cites authority in support of the doctrine that in no case can a city summarily abate a nuisance, and that to do so would be, if allowed, the taking of property without due process of law, and a violation of the constitutional provisions upon this subject. We are not inclined to adopt this view under the provisions and regulations of our statutes upon the subject hereinbefore quoted. The contrary of the doctrine so asserted by appellant has been announced by Justice Williams in the case of H. & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Dallas, 98 Tex. 396, 84 S. W. 648, 70 L. R. A. 850.

Counsel for appellant likewise objected to the introduction of the resolutions holding that the same were void because not shown to be in writing nor published in the official paper of the city and deposited with the secretary; and, further, because they were not styled, "Be it ordained by the city council of the city of Belton," as required by law, and because they authorized and provided for the condemnation and taking of property, imposed a penalty and forfeiture, and that under our statutes this could only be done by a general ordinance, and that the same must be published, etc., 10 days before becoming effective as provided in article 557. See articles 404, 464, 557, 559, Rev. St. 1895.

From a review of the foregoing authorities, we are inclined to believe that where the thing complained of is clearly a nuisance per se, coming within the definition of a nuisance either under our statute or by the common law, then the authority for its abatement clearly exists in the city, and that a city could so abate it irrespective of whether there was any ordinance upon the subject or not, and might possibly proceed to do it under an order of its city council.

But we hold that in all cases where the thing complained of is not a nuisance per se that no such authority exists. So in the present case, without intending to intimate or hold that the structure complained of is or is not a nuisance under the facts, we sustain the assignment complaining of the action of the court in peremptorily instructing the jury to find on this issue in behalf of appellees, because the questions raised by the pleadings and by the evidence were questions of fact for the consideration of the jury under proper instructions from the court.

During the progress of the trial, appellant offered to show by its engineer Rutledge that in his opinion it was not feasible to put in a grade crossing over plaintiff's tracks at the place in question, but upon objection of appellees he was not permitted to give his opinion upon this subject. It was shown from the bill of exceptions taken to this ruling that the witness was a civil engineer, had had some eighteen years' experience in the construction of railroads, including the grading of tracks at crossings, the building of bridges, viaducts, etc.; and, as a further predicate for the introduction of such evidence, he testified that he was familiar with the crossing in question, had taken measurements concerning the same, and had testified to the physical conditions surrounding the crossing, including the depth, length, and breadth of the cut through which the railroad tracks ran at the point, and gave various elevations and other data pertaining to the crossing. We think this evidence was competent. It came clearly within the rule of law permitting expert testimony. See Lawson on Expert & Opinion Evid. pp. 5-7; 2 Elliott on Evid. § 1059; 1 Wigmore on Evid. § 555 et seq. This evidence was offered for the purpose of showing the impracticability of constructing a grade crossing at the place in question. The pleadings raised the issue as to whether it was practicable to construct a grade crossing over the tracks of appellant at the point in question on account of the danger to the public in operating its trains. In this character of suit, where the city is seeking by mandamus to compel appellant to put in a grade crossing, it is competent for the company to show that it is impracticable or impossible to maintain a grade crossing under the circumstances, or that it is unreasonable to so require it on account of the existence of danger to the public at said crossing. Hence the evidence showing that it was not feasible or tending to meet the issue was relevant, and therefore admissible. See H. & T. C. Ry. Co. v. City of Dallas, supra. In the view we have taken of this case, we regard it unnecessary to consider the remaining assignments of error.

For the reasons indicated, we think the judgment of the court below should be reversed and the cause remanded; and it is so ordered.

Reversed and remanded.

1. CONTRACTS (§ 164*)—CONSTRUCTION—SEPARATE INSTRUMENTS.

A note and an instrument creating a lien to secure payment constitute one contract, and must be construed together.

2. SALES (§ 82*)—RECOVERY OF PRICE—EARNINGS.

Where notes were given for the price of articles, and the seller retained a lien until payment of notes, "the same to be paid as the net earnings of the gin may be able to pay them as per face of the note," such notes became a demand at maturity, and liability thereon did not depend on the earnings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 229; Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

Appeal from Collin County Court; John Church, Judge.

Action by W. W. Fuller against J. A. Pryor and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

R. C. Merritt and L. J. Truett, for appellant. Abernathy, Abernathy & Abernathy, for appellees.

RAINEY, C. J. Appellant brought suit against appellees to recover on certain obligations, and to foreclose a lien on certain platform scales.

The obligations sued on are made exhibits, and are as follows:

Exhibit A: "$248.00. Aug. 15, 1906. On or before Dec. 1st, 1907, after date for value received we promise to pay to W. W. Fuller or order two hundred & forty-eight dollars at Callis, Texas, without interest. This note is to remain in full force until paid according to the contract under which it was given. J. A. Pryor, J. W. Brock, C. J. Frazier."

Exhibit B: "To Whom It May Concern. This is to certify that we, the undersigned party of the first part, for and in consideration of certain promissory notes of even date herewith have this day bargained, sold and turned over all our rights, interests and claims in the Union Mill and Gin Co. to John Pryor, Jet Frazier, and J. W. Brock, parties of the second part, on the following terms, to wit: The party of the second part shall be allowed to put in the following improvements, to wit: one 20 horse power gasoline engine, one 80 saw ginstand, two 80 saw condensers, friction tramper double box revolving press, corn mill for grinding meal and all belts, pulleys, shafting and all necessary fixtures to successfully operate a two 80 saw gin and mill and it is further agreed and understood by the parties of the first part that after the above, together with the operating expenses, have been paid and not until then, shall they have any claim on the net earnings of the plant. It is understood and a lien is hereby given by the party of the second part in favor of the party of the first part on all the entire gin and mill plant until all the promissory notes above referred to have been fully paid. The same to be paid as the net earnings of the gin may be able to pay them as per face of the note, said instrument signed by the same parties as the note."

The petition also alleged the burning of the property, except the platform scales; that the obligation was due, demand, nonpayment, etc. The defendants filed a general demurrer to said amended petition, and also special demurrers as follows: (a) Because plaintiff declares upon a note of $248 based upon a contract, and alleged that the same was to be paid out of the net earnings of the gin for which said note was given, and plaintiff nowhere alleged or claimed that there were any net earnings of said gin. (b) Because plaintiff has not set out the terms of said contract, and nowhere alleges that the condition on which said note is based has been performed by him, or that such condition or contingencies have arisen which make said note due and payable. (c) Defendants further except to said amended petition because plaintiff does not set up any right to the money derived from the insurance, and does not set up that there were any funds or assets in these defendants' hands after payment of the costs of such new improvements and operating expenses. (d) Because the petition on its face shows that the proper parties are not before the court. The general demurrer and all of said special demurrers were sustained by the court, and plaintiff excepted, and the court dismissed said cause and plaintiff excepted, and brings the cause here for review.

The contention of appellees, and the one upon which the court acted, is, in effect, that the provision relating to the payment of the obligation out of the net earnings of the gin is a contract to pay only out of said earnings, and, said petition showing no such earnings, it is subject to demurrer. We cannot agree to this contention. It is true said instruments constitute one contract and must be construed together, but, so construing them, we are of the opinion that the right to pay out of the net earnings was a privilege granted to the defendants to pay such earnings on the contract at any time before the date said amount was to become due and payable specified in the contract, to wit, December 1, 1907. Said amount not having been paid on or before said date, it became a certain demand for money, and the parties are liable therefor. Bummel v. City of Houston, 68 Tex. 10-12, 2 S. W. 740; Atterbury v. Biggerstaff, 36 Tex. 177.

The petition stated a good cause of action, and the court erred in sustaining the demurrer.

The judgment is reversed, and cause remanded.

Appeal from District Court, Red River County; Ben H. Denton, Judge.

Suit by J. R. Cook and wife against James A. Parker to enjoin an execution sale. From a decree for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed, and judgment rendered dissolving injunction.

George Morrison and Chambers & Black, for appellant. Kennedy & Robbins, for appellees.

HODGES, J. The appellant was the owner of two judgments against the appellee J. R. Cook, upon which executions were issued in April, 1908, and levied upon 61 acres of land situated in Red River county, Tex., as the property of the appellee Cook. After the levy the officer making it advertised the property for sale, according to law. Before the sale day arrived, this suit was instituted by J. R. Cook and his wife for the purpose of having the sale enjoined, alleging that the land was their homestead, and not subject to the executions. The petition was presented to the district judge, and a temporary order granted restraining the officer from proceeding with the sale, which order was, upon final hearing before the court in term time, made perpetual. The case was tried before the court without a jury, and the findings of fact made and filed are, substantially, as follows: (1) That the appellant was the owner of the judgments mentioned, and executions were issued and levied upon the property in controversy. (2) That the appellee J. R. Cook was the head of a family, and had been since 1892. (3) That since the marriage of Cook and his present wife they had lived upon and occupied as their home a house and lots in the city of Clarksville till November, 1907. That this property so used as their home was the community property of Cook and a former wife; the present wife having no interest in it beyond homestead claim. (4) That after their marriage Cook and his present wife purchased and improved the land in controversy, placing thereon a house, and putting some of the land in cultivation; but that they had never lived on it or occupied it as a home. (5) That three or four years prior to the time of the trial the appellee J. R. Cook procured a loan of $500, to secure which he executed a deed of trust upon the 61 acres involved in this suit. That this loan was still unpaid. That at the time the loan was procured Cook and wife designated the house and lots in Clarksville upon which they lived as their homestead. (6) That the appellee was a carpenter, following his trade when he could find employment. That some time in November, 1907, on account of dull business in his line, and for the purpose of obtaining money to meet his obligations and to support his family, Cook placed the 61 acres of land on the market, but that before the levy of the writs issued as hereinbefore stated he succeeded in selling his home in Clarksville. (7) That Mrs. Cook was induced to sign the deed to the Clarksville property by the promise of Cook that they would move onto and occupy the 61 acres as a home, and that she could have that as a home for herself and her children. That Cook immediately thereafter took the 61 acres off the market and had openly claimed it as his homestead. (8) That at the time it was so designated by Cook as his home the land was occupied by tenants and possession could not be obtained till January 1, 1908. (9) That Cook, failing to get employment at home, first decided to leave his family at their home, having for that reason refused to rent the place until after January 1, 1908, but subsequently concluded to move with his family to Arlington to reside temporarily while engaged in his employment. He thereupon rented the place for the year 1908, but no longer. (10) That Cook sought employment at Ft. Worth for the purpose of supporting his family and obtaining means wherewith to pay off the mortgage debt on his place. That the 61 acres were ready for occupancy, needing no improvements for that purpose, but that the debt was still unsatisfied. (11) That after the sale of their home in the city of Clarksville appellees openly and notoriously claimed the premises in controversy as their home, no other having been acquired, and openly expressed their intention to occupy it as soon as the indebtedness against it could be paid off. That the evidence failed to show that the appellant did not have full knowledge of these facts at the time his judgments were rendered and executions issued. The twelfth finding is substantially a repetition of what is embodied in one or more of the preceding. From the foregoing the court concluded as a matter of law that the homestead character was impressed upon the premises at the time the writs were levied, and for that reason the land was not subject to execution.

The court having found as a fact that the homestead right existed at the time the writs were levied upon the property, and that the appellant, Parker, had failed to show that he had no notice of the intention of Cook and wife to use and occupy the premises as a homestead, it becomes our duty to examine the evidence and ascertain whether or not it is sufficient to justify the findings made and the conclusion of law based thereon. West End Town Co. v. Grigg et al., 98 Tex. 451, 56 S. W. 49. An examination of the testimony embodied in the statement of facts shows that the court in making his findings placed upon the testimony of the appellees, Cook and wife, the most favorable construction that was possible, and indulged every inference from the language used that was capable of supporting the conclusion reached. There are other facts, however, not included in the court's findings, which we think should be considered in disposing of the case. The petition alleges, and there seems to be no controversy upon that issue, that the tract of land in question was a farm situated two miles south of the city of Clarksville in Red River county. It is shown by the evidence that it was sufficiently improved to permit the use and occupancy by the family, without anything else being added. There was a dwelling upon it, and some of the land was fitted for cultivation. About November 1, 1907, according to Cook's testimony, he sold his homestead in the city of Clarksville, and then for the first time conceived the intention of making this farm his homestead in the future. Up to that date it had by an express designation been excluded from the premises composing the homestead proper. He did not move upon the premises at that time because they were rented for the year 1907, and he could not get possession. About the first of the following year he decided to go to Arlington, in Tarrant county, in search of employment, and to leave his family in Red River county; but subsequently he decided to take his family with him to Tarrant county. He says: "I never did anything towards moving out to that place in the country, except to intend to move out there. I did no overt act; only decided to move out there; and then I moved out to Tarrant county, where I now live, and went to work at the carpenter's trade in Ft. Worth. I am still engaged in this business. I intend to move out to this farm some time. I have had chances to rent it out this fall several times, and I would not do it. At the time I moved to Tarrant county, I did not know when I was going back, further than when I got my job done. When I went out there I had no fixed intention in my mind as to the time I would come back and occupy this land, for I had rented it. When I moved out to Arlington, I said I was going out there to get work, that I could not get work here, that my business was a carpenter's, and not that of a farmer, and that I was going out there not only to get money to pay debts, but to make a living for my family, and that I could not make a living for my family here. * * * I told everybody I was going out there to live until I could get work here, to make a living at my trade. I was in debt here and could not get out. I knew that I could not make a living out there at that little place, and that is the reason I left here. If I had known I could make a living out there, I would have went right to the farm. I did not know that I could make it, and therefore went to Ft. Worth."

The foregoing testimony of Cook presents this situation: A carpenter, who disclaims being a farmer, and who avows his intention of continuing to work at his trade as a means of providing a living for his family, refusing to reside upon a farm because of the fact that he cannot make a living upon it, and in effect saying that he does not intend to occupy it as a home until such time as he can pursue his calling in that vicinity under conditions sufficiently remunerative to enable him to make money enough to support his family and pay his debts. The excuse which he gives for not occupying the premises is the absence of one of the very conditions which makes the acquisition of the homestead and its use and occupancy desirable—its fitness as a place to live upon and support his family. The only evidence with which we are furnished of any bona fide intent upon the part of Cook to use and occupy the premises as a homestead consists of the statements made by himself and wife of what they intended to do at some indefinite time. The question then is: Are these sufficient to support a finding that the property was in fact a homestead at the time the writs were levied?

After stating that the homestead not in a town or city shall consist of not more than 200 acres, and in a town or city of lot or lots not exceeding in value $5,000 exclusive of improvements, the Constitution contains this provision: "Provided that the same shall be used for the purpose of a home or place to exercise the calling or business of the head of the family; provided also that any temporary renting of the homestead shall not change the character of the same when no other homestead has been acquired."¹ A literal application of the language here used would restrict the homestead right to premises actually used for some of the purposes of a home, except in cases of temporary renting after the right has once been acquired, and when no other homestead has been provided. It frequently happens that, in the acquisition of property intended for use as a homestead, an unavoidable interval occurs between the acquisition and the actual use or occupancy for those purposes. In order to give full effect to this beneficent provision of the Constitution and prevent the defeat of bona fide efforts to acquire a home, our courts have adopted the policy of treating this interval, under certain conditions, as a kind of constructive occupancy, and in this way have extended the homestead exemption to times anterior to the period of actual use and occupancy. In doing so, however, they have undertaken to safeguard this right against being used as a means of perpetrating a fraud upon creditors, and have exacted that in each particular case, where it is sought to impress the homestead character upon property in the advance of occupancy and use, there be satisfactory evidence of the utmost good faith in the homestead intention, accompanied by some efforts to carry such intention into execution. In the case now under consideration the evidence is undisputed that the claimant of the homestead did nothing toward perfecting his homestead right, further than to conceive and entertain the intention to, at some time in the future, not definitely fixed, occupy the premises as a home for his family.

It has been repeatedly held by the courts of this state that intention alone is not sufficient to impress upon unoccupied premises the homestead character. Franklin v. Coffee, 18 Tex. 416, 70 Am. Dec. 292; Wolf v. Butler, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 468, 28 S. W. 51; Barnes v. White, 53 Tex. 629; Autry v. Reesor (Tex.) 113 S. W. 748; Dinwiddie v. Tims (Tex. Civ. App.) 114 S. W. 400; Johnson v. Burton, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 249, 87 S. W. 181; Blum v. Rogers, 78 Tex. 530, 15 S. W. 115; Cameron v. Gebhard, 85 Tex. 616, 22 S. W. 1033, 34 Am. St. Rep. 832; Fort v. Powell, 59 Tex. 322; Anderson v. McKay, 30 Tex. 188; Gardner v. Douglass, 64 Tex. 78; Bente v. Lange, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 328, 29 S. W. 813; Collier v. Betterton, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 479, 29 S. W. 490; Batts v. Scott, 37 Tex. 65. We think the true rule deducible from the adjudicated cases is not that intention alone, under all circumstances, is insufficient to constitute a homestead dedication, but that in each instance the intention must not only be bona fide, but must be accompanied by some conduct or some overt act on the part of the claimant that may justly be considered reasonable diligence in carrying into execution the intention to actually use and occupy the premises for some of the purposes of a home. The legal functions of the overt act, or conduct, which it is said should accompany the intention in order to impress the homestead character upon unoccupied premises, are not solely to show the bona fides of the intention, but to manifest the exercise of reasonable diligence to put that intention into effect by actually using the premises as a home in the manner contemplated by the Constitution. It must be borne in mind that the real object of this provision is to extend the exemption only to premises used for some of the purposes of a home, and not to exempt a designated amount of realty. Autry v. Reesor (Tex.) 113 S. W. 748; Blum v. Rogers, 78 Tex. 530, 15 S. W. 115; Franklin v. Coffee, 18 Tex. 417, 70 Am. Dec. 292. Viewed in that light, all of the seeming inconsistencies appearing in the different cases where these questions have been passed upon disappear. We can also appreciate the full force of the language of the court in Cameron v. Gebhard, supra, wherein it is said: "Cases arising under the homestead law differ so widely in their facts that it is impossible to lay down any definite rules to govern in all cases that may arise. Each case must be determined upon its own peculiar state of facts."

In Gardner v. Douglass, above referred to, Gardner purchased an improved place, intending it for a home; a part of the purchase price being derived from the sale of a former homestead. The premises were under a lease at the time, and he could not get possession till the lease expired. Before that time an execution was levied upon the premises, at the instance of a creditor, to satisfy a pre-existing debt. As soon as the lease terminated, Gardner manifested his good faith and diligence by moving onto the place and beginning to use it as a home. The court held that his homestead right dated from the time of the purchase, by virtue of the intent then existing to so use the property. It uses, in that connection, this significant language: "As the appellants acted in the best of good faith in purchasing this improved property for a homestead, and upon the expiration of the lease took prompt possession, and have ever since occupied it as such, under the facts and circumstances it must be considered that the occupancy followed the purchase in such reasonable time as would vest the property with the homestead quality from the time of its purchase," etc. Here the only element required to constitute the homestead character which existed anterior to the levy of the writ was the bona fide intention of the plaintiffs in the suit; but particular stress seems to be placed upon the fact that actual occupancy followed as soon as practicable.

In the Cameron-Gebhard Case, which seems to be relied upon by the appellees as being decisive of the question here involved, Gebhard purchased an unimproved lot for the express purpose of erecting thereon a home for himself and family. He made a contract with Turntine to furnish the material and build the house at an agreed price. Subsequently Turntine, being unable to supply the material, agreed to another contract by which Cameron was to supply the material for a stipulated price, and that sum to be deducted from what Turntine was originally to get for constructing the building. The suit was by Cameron after the completion of the house to subject it to a lien for the material so furnished. The evidence showed that there was no written contract executed by Gebhard and wife in the manner required to operate as a lien upon the homestead. The court held that the homestead rights of Gebhard arose and dated from the time he made the contract with Turntine to build the house and that the subsequent agreement with Cameron to furnish the material, not being in conformity with the requirements prescribed for binding the homestead, did not create a lien such as could be enforced against the homestead. Here we have not only an intention to use and occupy the premises claimed as the homestead, but a contract with a builder for the erection of a house thereon, followed by actual occupancy.

The case of Scott v. Dyer, 60 Tex. 185, cited by appellees, is, we think, clearly distinguishable from the case at bar. There the effort of the creditor was to subject to the payment of his debt a lot which had once formed a part of a plat of land which had been used and occupied as a homestead, and the issue was as to whether the homestead right had been abandoned by selling that portion upon which the residence was situated. The claimants testified that they still intended to resume occupancy, and there was no evidence to overcome their testimony. There is a distinction between the abandonment of a homestead once dedicated by actual occupancy, and the cessation of the inchoate homestead right resting only upon intention. Kempner v. Comer, 73 Tex. 202, 11 S. W. 194. The perpetuation of the homestead right against the charge of abandonment on account of temporary absence, after having been once perfected by actual use and occupancy of the premises, is protected by another clause of the Constitution, which provides that any temporary renting of the homestead shall not change the character of the same when no other homestead has been acquired.

Where the homestead right is made to rest upon intention, as distinguished from actual use and occupancy, there is strong reason for requiring the accompaniment of some overt acts on the part of the claimant, evidencing a purpose or effort to carry his intentions into effect. Use and occupancy are open to observation, and consist of facts which are easily proved or combatted; but, where the homestead right is made to rest on mere intention, the situation is otherwise. No one would be willing to swear that another did not in fact have a certain intention regarding the occupancy of premises, and in the majority of instances the difficulty of disproving intention by circumstances is so great as to render the undertaking practically fruitless. Hence, unless some rule should be adopted by the courts requiring a secret intention to be accompanied by some physical conduct open to observation, the liberality of the construction placed by them upon this section of the Constitution would furnish a cloak easily available for concealing fraudulent transactions.

In the case before us, whatever may be said of the intentions of Cook as to occupying the premises in question as his homestead, it cannot be claimed that he did anything or made any effort toward carrying those intentions into effect. Certainly it cannot be said that he had to "race with the sheriff for possession." Applying to the facts of this case the rule which seems to have been adopted in this state regarding the homestead rights in premises in advance of occupancy, and considering the rationale upon which it is predicated, we do not think the evidence was sufficient to support the judgment of the court. It is admitted that the place was improved and ready for occupancy. The lease upon it, which at one time operated as a barrier to possession, had expired, and there was nothing which hindered the actual occupation of the land had the appellees desired to do so. This condition existed from the 1st day of January, 1907, till the day of the trial, about December following. The excuse given is that it was too small, and that the owner could not make a living upon it for his family. Is it reasonable to permit the claimant of an improved rural homestead to excuse his failure to occupy the premises in the first instance, and thereby complete the inchoate homestead right originating with the intention, by saying that the premises were insufficient to supply the essential elements of a home in the country? Such an excuse would not only justify temporary absence, but the permanent abandonment of the intention, if any ever existed. There is, we think, a radical difference between the reasons for a failure to take actual possession of premises and use them as a home, based upon their unimproved condition, or inability at the time to get possession, or the existence of some fact or condition intervening consistent only with temporary absence, and that given in this case, founded upon the unfitness of the premises, after being improved, to meet the requirements of a home. The tract of land was a farm; but Cook was a carpenter, not a farmer. He intended to occupy the farm whenever conditions changed so that he could go there and make a living for his family and money to pay his debts. Such a time might never come. There was no evidence to show that there was any good reason for expecting it in the near future. To sustain the homestead claim in this case would be carrying the effect of intention alone beyond the limits fixed by any adjudicated case we have examined. Even in those decisions rendered in the early history of the state, when the commercial value of the homestead was comparatively small, and when the sparsely inhabited country furnished the best reasons for encouraging the acquisition of homes by the adoption of a liberal policy in protecting homestead rights, the courts have not gone so far as to furnish a precedent for sustaining the judgment in this case. We do not feel that under the conditions existing at the present time, when the commercial value of the usual homestead allowance has been vastly enhanced by the growth of population and industrial development, and the temptation to use it as a cloak for fraud has been increased in the same ratio, we should go beyond the bounds already established by precedents.

Inasmuch as the case seems to have been well developed, and no good purpose could be subversed by remanding, the judgment of the district court will be reversed, and judgment here rendered dissolving the writ of injunction granted by the court below; and all costs, both of this court and of the court below, will be adjudged against the appellees, Cook and wife.

TEXAS CO. v. LACOUR.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 12, 1909.)

1. DAMAGES (§ 112*)—INJURY TO CROPS—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries to a crop, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of what the crop would have been, and the value of what was produced after deducting the expense of cultivating, harvesting, and marketing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 281-283; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

2. DAMAGES (§ 188*)—INJURY TO CROPS—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries to a crop, evidence showing what the crop would have afterwards brought in the market was insufficient to enable the jury to ascertain the loss sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 511; Dec. Dig. § 188.*]

3. DAMAGES (§ 163*)—INJURY TO CROPS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action for injuries to a crop, the burden of proof of loss did not shift, after plaintiff had shown what the crop would have afterward brought in the market, and what the crop he succeeded in getting sold for, to defendant, to show what the expense of making and marketing the crop would amount to.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 454; Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

Appeal from Liberty County Court; L. B. Simmons, Judge.

Action by J. G. Lacour against the Texas Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Robertson & Whitaker, for appellant. Marshall & Marshall, for appellee.

JAMES, C. J. This appeal is from a judgment against appellant for damages for injury done to a growing rice crop, alleged to have been caused by the appellant laying its pipe over the land occupied by appellee's crop.

The jury were instructed on the measure of damages that it was the value of the damaged rice immediately before and after the injury. Plaintiff, Lacour, testified: "I cannot say what the value of the rice was at the time it was damaged; could only figure what it would have made." It is evident from this testimony that a jury would be as unable to determine the value of the injured crop at the time of the injury as plaintiff was, and that the only way to arrive at plaintiff's loss was, as plaintiff himself says, on the basis of what the crop would have made. This is the approved standard of damages in this character of case. Stated in a general way, it is the difference between the value of what it would have produced, and the value of what was produced, after deducting the expense of cultivating, harvesting, and marketing. I. & G. N. R. R. Co. v. Pape, 73 Tex. 503, 11 S. W. 526; Railway v. McGowan, 73 Tex. 362, 11 S. W. 336; Railway Co. v. Borsky, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 545, 21 S. W. 1012; City of Paris v. Tucker (Civ. App.) 93 S. W. 233.

Appellee contends that, because he showed what the crop would have afterwards brought in the market, this was enough to enable the jury to ascertain his loss. Clearly not. He also contends that when he showed this, and what the few sacks which he succeeded in getting off this particular land sold for, the burden of proof shifted, and, this being a tort case, as distinguished from contract, it devolved on defendant to show, if he desired, what the expense of making and marketing the crop would amount to. The burden of proof did not shift. It rested upon plaintiff to make out a case, and to adduce what was proof of his loss; and proof of what the yield would have been, and what it would have sold for in gross, and what the yield actually was, and what it sold for in gross, was not proof of what represented his loss. He failed to furnish the jury with sufficient evidence to determine what would legally compensate him.

For this reason, and for the reason that we are unable to say that the verdict would not have been less than it is, the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded.

MISSOURI, K. & T. RY. CO. OF TEXAS v. KONE, County Judge, et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 10, 1909.)

1. TAXATION (§ 45*)—EQUALITY—UNIFORMITY.

Where the property of the individuals in a county was assessed at 50 per cent. of its real value in accordance with a deliberately adopted plan, an assessment of intangible property of a railroad situated in the county at full value violated Const. art. 8, § 1, requiring equality and uniformity of taxation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 100-103; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 229*)—EQUAL PROTECTION.

Such assessment was violative of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, guaranteeing equal protection of the laws.

Coke, Miller & Coke, A. H. McKnight, and Fiset & McClendon, for appellant. L. H. Brown, R. V. Davidson, Atty. Gen., and Claude Pollard, Asst. Atty. Gen., for appellees.

KEY, J. Appellant brought this suit for the purpose of preventing the county officers of Hays county from collecting from appellant taxes for the year 1907 upon its intangible property situated in Hays county, in excess of 50 per cent. of the valuation placed upon it by the tax assessor and board of equalization of the county. The plaintiff alleged and proved that the property of taxpayers generally throughout the county for the year 1907, and for several years prior thereto, had been assessed, equalized, and placed on the tax rolls for taxing purposes at not exceeding 50 per cent. of its value, and that for the year 1907 the plaintiff's intangible property had for like purposes been assessed and placed on the tax rolls by the defendants at its full value, which was 50 per cent. in excess of the valuations placed on the property of other taxpayers. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of the defendants and refused to grant the plaintiff any relief.

In all material respects the case is similar to Lively v. Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas, 120 S. W. 852, in which it was held by the Supreme Court that, where the property of individuals in a county was assessed at 66% per cent. of its real value, in accordance with a deliberately adopted policy, an assessment of the intangible assets of a railroad company apportioned to that county at full value constituted a violation of article 8, § 1, of the Constitution of the state, which requires equality and uniformity of taxation; and was also a violation of the fourteenth amendment of the federal Constitution, which guarantees equal protection, etc.

In view of that decision the judgment in this case will be reversed, and judgment here rendered for appellant.

Reversed and rendered.

NEWMAN v. TAYLOR.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 11, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 23, 1909.)

The contract of an insane person is voidable only, and he may, on recovering his reason, ratify the contract.

2. INSANE PERSONS (§ 79*)—CONTRACTS—VALIDITY.

3. INSANE PERSONS (§ 79*)—CONTRACTS—VALIDITY.

One while insane bought machinery. After regaining his reason, he inspected it with the aid of an expert and an attorney. He subsequently called on the seller to set up the machinery, and neglected, for at least 12 months, while retaining control of it, to say anything indicating to the seller an election to disaffirm. Held, as a matter of law, that he elected to affirm the contract, and his remedy for any wrong suffered in the transaction was by action for damages.

Appeal from District Court, Harrison County; W. C. Buford, Judge.

Action by J. P. Taylor against Joseph Newman. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

P. M. Young, for appellant. Y. D. Harrison, for appellee.

WILLSON, C. J. April 28, 1906, in consideration of $650 paid to him by appellee, appellant sold to appellee a machine for bottling soda water, and certain other property, together constituting an outfit intended for use in manufacturing soda pop. June 23, 1908, appellee commenced the suit resulting in the judgment, from which this appeal is prosecuted. The suit was for a rescission of the contract of sale, on the ground (1) that at the time he made the contract he was insane; and (2) that he was induced to make it by false and fraudulent representations as to the condition and value of the property at the time he purchased it, made to him by appellant. The appeal is from a judgment in accordance with the verdict of a jury in favor of appellee for the sum of $400, interest, and costs, and directing the return of the property to appellant.

It was shown on the trial that within a few days after he purchased the bottling outfit appellee was adjudged to be insane, and, as a lunatic, was confined in jail until about July 7th, following, when, the authorities believing he had sufficiently recovered his reasoning powers to justify it, he was discharged "on probation," as witnesses termed it. Thirty or 60 days thereafter, it seems, he was formally discharged as sane by orders made by the court. From appellee's testimony it appears that in August, after he was released from jail, he consulted an attorney in regard to the purchase he had made of appellant, and, at the suggestion of the attorney, secured an expert to inspect the bottling outfit, presumably to advise him as to its condition, value, etc. The inspection was accordingly made by the expert; appellee and his attorney being present when it was made. Appellee testified he was then "at himself," and there is nothing in the record contradicting his statement. By the terms of the contract of sale appellant had bound himself to set up and put in good running order the machinery forming the plant he had sold to appellee. Appellee testified that, after the inspection referred to above had been made, appellant, with his assistance and at his request, set up the machinery in a house to which he had removed it a few days after he purchased it. Afterwards appellee endeavored to procure from appellant and from other sources bottles to be used in operating the bottling outfit, and retained possession and control of the property until 12 or 14 months later, when it was levied upon as his property by virtue of process issued in a suit against him by a bank on a note made by him to procure money with which to pay for it at the time he purchased it from appellant. Notwithstanding the fact, as seems to have been the case, that during all the time thereafter intervening appellant resided in the city of Marshall, where or near where appellee resided, so that he must have had ample opportunity to do so, appellee never said anything to appellant about being dissatisfied with his purchase until some time in October of the following year, or some 12 or 14 months after he had recovered his reason and after he had inspected the property. Such being the state of the case as shown by appellee's own testimony and other testimony, uncontradicted, appellant asked the court to instruct the jury if they believed appellee was insane at the time he purchased the bottling outfit nevertheless to find for him (appellant) if they believed he did not practice actual fraud in misrepresenting the condition, etc., of the machinery, "because," the charge requested recited, "it was the duty of plaintiff to promptly disaffirm the contract and tender back the machinery upon recovering his reason, which the evidence conclusively shows he failed to do." The refusal of the court to so instruct the jury is complained of in appellant's seventh assignment of error. While not in terms so, we think the instruction refused should be treated as a request to peremptorily instruct the jury to find for appellant, because it conclusively appeared from the evidence that appellee, after he had regained his reason, with a full knowledge of the condition, etc., of the property he had purchased, had elected to and had ratified and affirmed the contract of sale. So construing the effect of the instruction, we think the court erred in refusing to give it as requested.

The contract of an insane person is not void, but, like the contract of an infant, is merely voidable. 2 Page on Contracts, § 900; Williams v. Sapleha, 94 Tex. 430, 61 S. W. 115; Elston v. Jasper, 45 Tex. 409. If the insane person recovers his reason, he may ratify the contract and so make it valid. Railway Co. v. Brazzil, 72 Tex. 233, 10 S. W. 407. And it is his duty, after recovering his reason, promptly—that is, within a reasonable time, the circumstances of his case being considered—to elect whether he will affirm or disaffirm the contract. Morris v. Railway Co., 67 Minn. 74, 69 N. W. 628. With reference to the rules stated, the question is: Did the evidence so conclusively show an affirmation by appellee of the contract as to render unreasonable a contrary conclusion? Having an opportunity after he regained his reason to inspect the machinery, and, with the assistance of his attorney and an expert in knowledge of such machinery, having inspected same, in the absence, as appears from the record to be true, of evidence to the contrary, we think it should be assumed as conclusively established that appellee acquired the full information necessary to enable him to determine whether he wished to disaffirm the contract, or, instead, to affirm it. Having such information, calling upon appellant to set up the machinery in compliance with his undertaking under the contract to do so, endeavoring to procure bottles to be used in operating it as his own property, and neglecting during 12 or 14 months thereafter, while retaining the possession and control of the property, to do or say anything indicating to appellant that he had elected to disaffirm the contract, we think should be treated as conclusively showing that he had elected to affirm and had affirmed the contract. His conduct reasonably can be accounted for only upon the hypothesis that, whether satisfied or not with his purchase, he had chosen to recognize the contract as binding upon him and to retain as his own the property he had acquired under it. Bingham v. Barley, 55 Tex. 288, 40 Am. Rep. 801; Barry v. St. Joseph's Hospital (Cal.) 48 Pac. 68; Hastings v. Dollarhide, 24 Cal. 216; 2 Page on Contracts, § 900. Having elected to affirm the contract, it became valid, and he could not thereafter maintain a suit to rescind it. His remedy then for the wrong, if one was suffered by him in the transaction, was not a rescission of the contract, but a recovery of damages.

The judgment will be reversed, and a judgment in appellant's favor will be here rendered, but without prejudice to appellee's right, if he sees proper to do so, to prosecute a suit for damages for the deceit alleged to have been practiced upon him by appellant.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 23, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 742*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—STATEMENT FROM RECORD.

Assignments of error copied in the brief, but not followed by either a proposition or a statement from the record, as required by Rules 29-36 for Courts of Civil Appeals (67 S. W. xv, xvi), will not be considered.

Appeal from District Court, Gregg County; W. C. Buford, Judge.

Action by Margie F. Capps and another against the city of Longview. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. N. Campbell and F. B. Martin, for appellants. W. L. Cunningham and E. M. Bramlette, for appellee.

WILLSON, C. J. Claiming that a public road forming the north boundary line of a tract of land owned by Mrs. Capps and situated in the city of Longview had been so abandoned as to relieve it of the servitude which had existed in favor of the public, appellants (said Mrs. Capps and her husband) by a fence inclosed a part of the road. On the ground that the servitude still existed, and that the fence was an obstruction of a public road which had become one of its streets, appellee by its proper officers removed the fence from the road to the south boundary line thereof, and in repairing and improving the road diverted, appellants alleged, surface water from same onto their land, thereby injuring it. The suit was by appellants to recover the value of the land alleged to have been unlawfully reappropriated to public use, and to recover damages alleged to have been inflicted upon other land in the tract by reason of the diversion of surface water as alleged. The appeal is from a judgment in favor of the city.

The assignments of error on the trial in the court below relied upon as reasons for a reversal of the judgment are copied in the brief, but, as pointed out by appellee, no one of the assignments (thirteen in number) is followed by either a proposition or a statement from the record as required by the rules prescribed for briefing causes on appeal to this court. Rules 29 to 36 for Courts of Civil Appeals (67 S. W. xv, xvi). Such an utter disregard of the rules referred to should not be ignored. Therefore we have not considered, and will not consider, any of the assignments. We have, however, inspected the record far enough to satisfy us that the judgment should be affirmed. The trial was before the court without a jury. The judge's findings of fact, made a part of the record, in every particular are amply supported by the evidence. His conclusion as to the law applicable to those facts is correct. If the findings do not cover all the issues of fact made by the pleadings, appellants are not in a position to complain of the omission, as it is not made to appear that other findings were requested. Caplen v. Cox, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 297, 92 S. W. 1052; Veatch v. Gray, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 145, 91 S. W. 324; Reed v. Brewer, 90 Tex. 144, 37 S. W. 418.

The judgment is affirmed.

ers. Plaintiffs had judgment, and defendants bring error. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

J. W. Terry, W. D. Williams, H. M. Garwood, and M. M. Crane, for plaintiffs in error. R. L. Penn and Warren W. Moore, for defendants in error.

KEY, J. The state brought this suit against a large number of defendants for alleged violations of the anti-trust statute of the state. At the trial judgment was rendered in favor of the state for $35,000, and the defendants have brought the case to this court by writ of error.

The only question presented for decision relates to the action of the district court in overruling a motion to retax the bill of costs made out and claimed by D. J. Pickle, the clerk of that court. His bill of costs includes an item of $3,000 for issuing and certifying to 103 copies of the plaintiffs' petition. The motion to retax challenged the correctness of that item and asserted that he was only entitled to $566.50 for the services referred to. The trial court overruled the motion to retax, and that ruling is assigned as error.

Fees which district clerks are allowed to charge are fixed by the act of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature, approved March 12, 1901 (Laws 1901, p. 24, c. 21), and so much of it as has application to this case reads as follows:

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the Legislature of the state of Texas: That the clerks of the district courts shall receive for the following services in civil cases the following fees, to wit: For copy of petition, including certificate and seal, each one hundred words, $.20.

"Sec. 2. Whenever in any suit a certified copy of any petition or any other instrument is necessary in the district court, it shall be lawful for the plaintiff or defendant to prepare such true and correct copy thereof, and submit the same to the clerk of the district court, whose duty it shall be to compare the same with the original instrument, and if found to be correct he shall attach his certificate of true copy. For such services he shall receive 50 cents for each certificate and seal, and in addition thereto the sum of 10 cents per page, three hundred words to the page, for each page of each copy."

It is conceded by counsel that if the clerk was entitled to charge under the first section his bill is correct, and the motion was properly overruled; but if he was not entitled to charge under that section, and should have made his charge under the second section, the motion should have been granted and the item of costs referred to reduced to $566.50. The undisputed testimony shows that the Attorney General's department originally decided to sue each defendant separately, and, in view of that fact, decided to prepare a form of petition and have it printed. It was also shown that an agreement was entered into between the Attorney General's department and Mr. J. P. Hart, then the clerk of the district court of Travis county, with a view to having enough copies printed for Mr. Hart's use in sending out copies of the petition with the citations, to be served on the several defendants residing out of the county; Mr. Hart agreeing to pay his proportion of the expense of printing the petitions. The Attorney General's department had 800 copies of the petition printed and delivered to that department. Mr. Hart testified that he offered to pay that department his portion of the printing expense, which the representative of the department to whom the offer was made declined to accept, and Mr. Hart paid nothing under the agreement referred to, and went out of office before the suit was filed. Mr. Hart was succeeded by Mr. Pickle, the present clerk, who advised the Attorney General's department that he was willing to carry out the agreement made with Mr. Hart, and was told by the department that that was all right, but that they were not then ready to bring the suit. Finally the Attorney General's department decided to bring only one action against all of the defendants, and, in view of that decision, it became necessary to make some changes in the petition which had been prepared and printed but not filed. The petition as originally prepared consisted of 30 pages of printed matter, blank lines being left on the first and second pages for the insertion of the names and residences of the defendants, and on the last page blanks were left for the signature of the Attorney General and the other attorneys associated with him in the case. Having reached the conclusion to file but one suit, the Attorney General's department had a leaflet prepared and printed, changing the first three pages of the petition so as to show the names and residences of the several defendants, which three pages were pasted in the front of one copy of the original petition, and had another leaflet printed and pasted in so as to constitute the last page of the petition, which leaflet made a change in the prayer. On November 9, 1907, the suit was instituted, and the copy of the petition referred to, with the leaflets pasted in, the attorneys' names signed, and a few other formal blanks filled in writing, was used for that purpose.

Before the suit was brought, there was an understanding between Mr. Lightfoot, an Assistant Attorney General, acting for the state, and Mr. Pickle, in person, to the effect that if the state was cast in the suit, and the costs taxed against it, Mr. Pickle was not to claim or receive any more than the costs allowed under the second section of the statute above quoted, and at the same time Mr. Lightfoot informed Mr. Pickle that he had the printed copies of the petition which he desired to furnish him to be used in serving the parties outside of the county, and Mr. Pickle sent to the Attorney General's office and obtained the necessary copies, including the leaflets necessary to correct the petition as originally printed. The leaflets had not been pasted in, but Mr. Pickle and his deputies pasted them in, and, with typewriter, pen, and ink, filled in the blanks, so as to make correct copies of the petition as filed, and these copies were used by Mr. Pickle in making the 103 certified copies referred to in the item of costs under consideration. Mr. Pickle stated in his testimony that at the time the suit was filed he had a conversation with Mr. Lightfoot in regard to what the state was to pay in the event it was defeated in the suit and cast in the costs. He states that he said he was going to charge "right straight through for the petitions, but that if the state lost its case, on account of the large amount of costs in it, he was willing to charge under the statute for comparing and certifying." He also testified that at the time the service was rendered he entered the charges in his fee book under the first section of the statute and for the amount now claimed. It was also shown that the company that did the printing had attempted to collect $23 as part payment therefor from both Mr. Hart and Travis county, and that three days after this motion was filed Mr. Pickle paid that bill. It was not shown that Mr. Pickle had ever acquired Mr. Hart's interest or been subrogated to his rights under the agreement between him and the Attorney General's department.

We have reached the conclusion that the motion to retax was well taken, and that the trial court erred in overruling it. It is not deemed necessary to determine whether or not section 2 of the statute should be liberally construed in favor of the litigant or strictly construed in favor of the officer, because we are of opinion that upon the undisputed testimony Mr. Pickle, the clerk, is estopped from claiming costs in the particulars under consideration otherwise than as provided by that section of the statute. Even if his predecessor, Mr. Hart, was part owner of the 800 copies of the petition which were delivered to the Attorney General's department, which point we do not decide, such ownership resulted from a private and unofficial contract on Mr. Hart's part, and Mr. Pickle was not subrogated thereto by reason of the fact that he succeeded Mr. Hart as district clerk. This being the case, it must be held that the printed copies of the petition, together with the printed leaflets intended to be pasted in and used as part of the same, were furnished by the plaintiff, and they were furnished for the purpose of obtaining for the plaintiff the benefit of section 2 of the statute under consideration. Such being the case, and the clerk having used them knowing that they were furnished for that purpose, he must be held to have waived any objection which he might otherwise have made. If he had declined to use them and had notified the plaintiff's counsel of that fact, then it would be necessary to decide whether or not what was furnished constituted a true and correct copy of the plaintiff's petition; but, not having pursued that course, and having accepted and used what was furnished to him upon the theory that it was meeting the requirements of section 2 of the statute, it would be unjust and inequitable to permit him to deny the correctness of the copies furnished. He was furnished with printed matter which, when placed together, constituted correct copies of the petition, with a few exceptions consisting of blanks in which to insert names, dates, and a few other formal matters. The indorsements on the back of the petition did not constitute part of the petition, and it was not necessary that they should be included in the copies served on the defendants. Pruitt v. State, 92 Tex. 434, 49 S. W. 366. At any rate, the actual services rendered by the clerk, using the material furnished by the plaintiff, was so small in comparison to what would have been required to make copies of the petition, as required by the first section of the statute, as to demonstrate that it would be inequitable to allow the clerk to accept and use that material upon the understanding that, as between him and the plaintiff, he was to look to section 2 of the statute for his compensation, and thereafter assert his right to claim more, as prescribed by the first section.

But it is contended and urged on behalf of the clerk that, as the costs were adjudged against the defendants, it is immaterial what amount of costs he would have been entitled to claim if they had been adjudged against the plaintiff. In other words, the argument is that there is no privity between the plaintiff and defendants, and that the latter are not subrogated to the rights of the former. It is prescribed by statute that "each party to any suit shall be responsible to the officers of the court for the costs incurred by himself." Rev. St. 1895, art. 1421. And it is also declared that "each party to a suit shall be liable for all costs incurred by him, and in case the costs cannot be collected of the party against whom the same have been adjudged, execution may issue against any party in such suit for the amount of costs incurred by such party, but no more." Rev. St. 1895, art. 2491. From these provisions of the statute we conclude that, when the costs are incurred, the party at whose instance and on whose behalf they are incurred becomes primarily liable therefor, and, while such primary liability may be changed by the judgment to secondary liability, the liability itself never ceases until the costs are paid. So, in this case, the item of costs under consideration having been incurred by and on behalf of the state, who was the plaintiff, that liability did not cease when the costs were adjudged against the defendants. In other words, when a party is cast in a suit, unless it is otherwise ordered by the court, he becomes liable, not only for the costs incurred on his behalf, but for those incurred on behalf of his adversary; but as to the latter costs they are such, and such only, as were incurred by and properly chargeable to the adverse party. Hence we conclude that a proper construction of the statute, as well as sound public policy, requires a holding that an officer of the court should not be permitted to discriminate between litigants and charge fees against one at a higher rate than he could have charged against the other, if the latter had been cast in the suit.

We do not concur in the contention that, in determining the liability of the defendants, it is immaterial what may have been the liability of the plaintiff. On the contrary, and by force of article 2491 of the statute, on the item of costs here involved, and all others incurred by the plaintiff, the defendants' liability is measured by and limited to the liability of the plaintiff. As to such costs the clerk has no right to claim any more from the defendants than he could have claimed from the plaintiff.

The judgment of the district court on the motion will be reversed, and judgment here rendered sustaining the motion to retax the costs, and reducing the item referred to from $3,090 to $566.50. The main judgment will be affirmed. Costs of this court taxed against defendant in error Pickle.

Reversed and rendered in part, and in part affirmed.

JOHN M. BONNER MEMORIAL HOME v. COLLIN COUNTY NAT. BANK et al.
(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 30, 1909.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 20, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 719*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—NECESSITY.

The overruling of demurrers will not be considered on appeal in absence of assignments of error predicated thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2973; Dec. Dig. § 719.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 267*)—LIEN—RECONVEYANCE—RIGHT AS AGAINST THIRD PERSONS ACQUIRING EQUITABLE INTEREST.

A vendor retaining a lien for the purchase money cannot take a reconveyance of a part of the land from the purchaser in part payment, and subsequently convey it to a third person, to the prejudice of one who has acquired an equitable interest in the land at the time of such reconveyance, known to the parties at the time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 756; Dec. Dig. § 267.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 103*)—PARTIAL RESCISSION BY VENDOR—EFFECT OF ACQUISITION OF RIGHTS BY THIRD PERSON.

A vendor having permitted a part of the land to be sold without attempting to enforce her lien, neither she nor a purchaser from her administrator could elect to rescind the contract as to a part of the land remaining by accepting a reconveyance thereof after the rights of a third person were fixed by the recording of a trust deed thereof, of which rights vendor had both actual and constructive notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 157; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

4. SUBROGATION (§ 23*)—RIGHTS OF BANK LOANING MONEY TO PAY VENDOR'S LIEN NOTES.

A bank loaned money to a purchaser of land on notes secured by a trust deed thereof, with the understanding that the money was to be applied in part payment of vendor's lien notes, and vendor and her agent were so instructed to apply the money which was paid her agent, but which he applied on an unsecured debt. Held, that the bank became subrogated pro tanto to the rights of vendor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Subrogation, Cent. Dig. §§ 62, 64; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

5. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 105*)—AUTHORITY TO RECEIVE AND APPLY PAYMENT ON NOTES IN AGENT'S POSSESSION.

An agent and attorney in fact of a vendor of land is authorized to receive and apply as a credit on purchase-money notes in the agent's possession money borrowed by the purchaser, and sent to the agent for that purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 299, 307; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

6. PAYMENT (§ 38*)—APPLICATION TO SECURED DEBT.

A debtor is entitled to have a payment applied to a secured debt.

Appeal from District Court, Collin County; B. L. Jones, Judge.

Suit by the Collin County National Bank against John R. Smith and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, the John M. Bonner Memorial Home, one of the defendants, appeals. Affirmed.

Doggett & Clifton and N. A. Rector, for appellant. J. R. Gough and Abernathy & Abernathy, for appellee.

BOOKHOUT, J. This suit was instituted in the district court of Collin county by appellee, the Collin County National Bank of McKinney, against Jno. R. Smith and E. L. Gladney, administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Lelia B. Dwyer, deceased, and later by an amended petition filed August 19, 1907, the John M. Bonner Memorial Home was made defendant. The amended petition alleged that John R. Smith on December 31, 1901, executed to the plaintiff's bank his promissory note for the sum of $2,382.41, payable to defendant's order 60 days after date, with 10 per cent. interest per annum from maturity, and providing for the usual 10 per cent. attorney's fees. It was also alleged that on December 26, 1901, the said Smith, for the purpose of securing the payment of said note, executed in favor of said bank a deed of trust, creating a lien upon a certain described portion of the Abner Lee survey, situated in Collin county, Tex. The petition further alleged that on or about December 23, 1886, said John R. Smith purchased from Lella E. Bonner and William B. Bonner 200 acres of land in the Abner Lee survey, in Collin county, Tex., and for the purchase money thereof executed his four notes each for $625, due on the 1st day of January, 1888, 1889, 1890, and 1891, respectively, and that the land described in the deed of trust was a portion of said 200-acre tract; that at the date of the execution of said deed of trust a portion of said original purchase-money notes had been paid, the amount so paid, and the amount remaining due thereon at the time, plaintiff was unable to state. Said petition further alleged that said note sued on and said deed of trust mentioned were executed for the purpose of raising money to pay upon said original indebtedness, and with the understanding that the same should be so paid, and that said money was paid upon said indebtedness; that, the money received from the bank having been used to pay on said indebtedness, the plaintiff's bank thereby became subrogated to all of the rights, privileges, and benefits of the vendors in said deed, and the holders of said notes. Plaintiff further pleaded that, by virtue of the facts stated, it had a vendor's lien upon the land mentioned in the deed of trust, which it prayed might be established against the land mentioned and for order of sale, etc. The marriage of Lella E. Bonner, one of the grantors in the deed to one Dwyer was alleged, and it was further stated that on June 22, 1905, she departed this life testate, and that defendant E. L. Gladney had qualified as her administrator with the will annexed, and that as such administrator he has sold the land described in plaintiff's petition to the defendant, the John M. Bonner Memorial Home.

The petition further sued for rents in the sum of $1,600, and prayed that this amount be offset against any amount defendants might recover on the purchase-money notes. The John M. Bonner Memorial Home answered by general demurrer and special exceptions, and general denial and special answers. The demurrers were overruled, and, as no assignments of error are predicated on the court's action in this respect, they need not be further mentioned. The special answers alleged the sale of 200 acres of land by Lella E. Bonner and William B. Bonner by their said attorney, John M. Bonner, on the 23d day of December, 1886, to John R. Smith, and the execution of the four purchase-money notes, each for the sum of $625, of said date, and each payable to Lella E. Bonner or order with 12 per cent. interest per annum, due on the dates mentioned in plaintiff's petition, and each providing for 10 per cent. attorney's fees, and further alleged that the vendor's lien was specially retained in said deed on the land therein conveyed until said notes were fully paid off and discharged, according to tenor and effect; that first note, due January 1, 1888, was paid off by said Smith, and that on or about the 26th day of October, 1901, said Smith had, by indorsement on the back of the remaining notes, acknowledged his indebtedness and liability thereon, and promised to pay the same on or about January 1, 1902, each note being indorsed interest paid to January 1, 1902; that there was on the back of each of said notes a further indorsement, as follows: "Farmersville, Texas, August 30th.—This note is canceled by reconveyance of 94.85 acres out of the 200 acres of land in the Abner Lee survey in Collin county, Texas, on which this note is a lien for the original purchase money. Lella Bonner Dwyer." The answer further alleged that on August 20, 1904, said John R. Smith, being unable to pay the above described three notes, on that date amounting to the sum of $5,691.50, executed and delivered to Mrs. Lella Dwyer, the owner and holder of said three notes, a deed, conveying to her 94.85 acres of land, a part of the 200 acres originally conveyed by her and another to said Smith, which reconveyance was made in full satisfaction of the said sum of $5,691.50, then due upon the three remaining purchase-money notes given for said original tract of 200 acres of land, the field notes of which 94.85-acre tract are set out in said answer. Said answer further alleged that at the date of the reconveyance from said Smith to said Dwyer of 94.85 acres of land that said tract of land so conveyed was of no greater value than the sum of $5,691.50, the amount due on said note, and was, in fact, of less value, and that the said Mrs. Dwyer received from said Smith said reconveyance in good faith, without actual knowledge of any claim or lien claimed by plaintiff upon said land, and that said conveyance was received by her solely in satisfaction of her purchase-money notes. There were other pleadings by both parties; but it is unnecessary to set them out at this time. The defendant John R. Smith failed to answer, and a default judgment was rendered against him. The cause was submitted to the court without a jury, and a judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff against John R. Smith for $3,413.80, and foreclosure of its lien was decreed on the land mentioned in plaintiff's petition as against both defendants, John R. Smith and the John M. Bonner Memorial Home. Judgment was also entered in favor of the John M. Bonner Memorial Home against said Smith for $5,489.25. The court adjudged a prior lien in favor of the John M. Bonner Memorial Home against said premises for only $1,875.45, and gave the plaintiff bank a second lien for the full amount of its entire debt, and gave the Bonner Memorial Home a second lien for the balance of its debt. E. L. Gladney, administrator, having filed a disclaimer, was dismissed from the suit. The John M. Bonner Memorial Home filed a motion for new trial, in which all of the errors assigned in this record were presented to the court, and which motion was overruled, and defendant excepted and gave notice of appeal to this court, and, having perfected its appeal, has assigned error.

The first assignment of error reads as follows: "Mrs. Dwyer, the original vendor, to whom the purchase-money notes were executed by Smith, and in which deed and notes the vendor's lien was retained, had the right to rescind in whole or in part, and to accept in payment of the remaining purchase money due, a reconveyance by Smith of all or any part of the land originally conveyed, and the court erred in not so holding." Under this assignment, the proposition is urged that Mrs. Dwyer, the original vendor, owner, and holder of all the vendor's lien notes executed by John R. Smith for the purchase money for the said 200 acres of land, had a legal right to accept in payment of said notes a reconveyance by said Smith to her of the 94.85 acres of land a part of the original 200-acre tract, said notes being secured by the vendor's lien on all of said land, and which were at the date of said reconveyance canceled and delivered to him. On December 23, 1886, Lelia Bonner and William B. Bonner, by their agent and attorney in fact, John M. Bonner, conveyed by their deed of that date to John R. Smith 200 acres of land in the Abner Lee survey in Collin county, Tex. The consideration for said conveyance was $2,500, for which the said John R. Smith executed his four certain promissory notes of even date with said conveyance for $625.00 each, due, respectively, January 1, 1888, January 1, 1889, January 1, 1890, and January 1, 1891. To secure the payment of said notes, a vendor's lien was retained in the deed of conveyance and acknowledged in each of said notes. On or about the 26th day of October, 1901, the defendant John R. Smith and Lelia B. Dwyer (née Bonner), who was the holder of said three unpaid purchase-money notes, had a settlement. By the terms of said settlement John R. Smith acknowledged that he was due upon each of said notes the sum of $1,500, aggregating the sum of $4,500. At the time of settlement John R. Smith renewed each of said notes by an indorsement on the back thereof, and it was also stipulated that from said date the notes were to draw interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. The renewal of the said notes was not recorded, and plaintiff had no notice thereof, either actual or constructive. On December 26, 1901, defendant John R. Smith executed to plaintiff the note and deed of trust declared upon herein. Said deed of trust, though calling for 100 acres of land, actually included in the description therein about 106 acres taken off of the south side of the 200 acres conveyed to John R. Smith by Lelia B. and William B. Bonner. It included about 84.25 acres of the land in controversy herein. This deed of trust was duly filed for record on the 7th day of January, 1902, and recorded on the 28th day of January, 1902.

After the execution of the deed of trust to plaintiff the said John R. Smith sold out of said 200-acre tract land as follows: To W. G. Lee, January 15, 1902, 84.35 acres for $1,500; to J. H. Hutchins on December 19, 1902, 21.95 acres for $768.25; to W. R. Hamilton on September 9, 1902, 3 acres for $180; to W. R. Hamilton on April 29, 1904, about 1½ acres for $90; to C. C. Tatum on December 22, 1904, about 14.48 acres, which was included in the field notes of a much larger tract of land, and the consideration cannot be determined. At the time of the execution of the deed of trust to plaintiff, defendant John R. Smith owned of the 200-acre tract and on which was a vendor's lien to secure the payment of the three purchase-money notes, exclusive of the land contained in said deed of trust and conveyed by it to plaintiff, land which on the 20th day of October, 1904, was of the value of $3,831.80, and also a tract of 10.60 acres of the said 200-acre tract which the said Smith had on hand, and on said date reconveyed to the said Mrs. L. B. Dwyer in cancellation of the purchase-money notes, but not included in plaintiff's deed of trust. On October 26, 1901, John R. Smith conveyed to Mrs. L. B. Dwyer 94.85 acres of land out of the said 200-acre tract in cancellation and settlement of the three original purchase-money notes. This conveyance included 84.25 acres of the land covered by plaintiff's said deed of trust and the 10.60-acre tract of land mentioned above. Prior to this conveyance the said Mrs. Dwyer had both actual and constructive notice of plaintiff's rights under its said deed of trust. The money borrowed from the bank was borrowed to pay on the purchase-money notes given by Smith in payment of the 200 acres of land and on which they were a lien. The said Smith at the time he borrowed the money declared such to be his purpose to those from whom he obtained the loan, and to whom he gave the deed of trust. The said Smith sent the money thus obtained to the authorized agent of Mrs. Lelia B. Dwyer at New Orleans, with instructions to said agent for the money to be so applied, but, contrary to said instructions, the said agent applied the money to an unsecured debt due by him to the Bonners and Mrs. Dwyer. The land in controversy was at the time of the execution of plaintiff's deed of trust the homestead of the said John R. Smith.

The particular question raised by the first assignment and the proposition presented thereunder is: Can a vendor who has conveyed land by a deed, retaining a lien to secure the purchase money, take a reconveyance of a part of the land from the vendee in part payment of the purchase money, and subsequently convey the part reconveyed to him to a third person, to the prejudice of one who had acquired an equitable interest in the land at the time of such reconveyance, which was known to the parties at the time? This question is answered in the negative in the opinion of Burson v. Blackley, 67 Tex. 5, 2 S. W. 688, where it is held that there can be no partial rescission of an entire contract to the prejudice of innocent third parties. There must be a total rescission or none at all. The reconveyance of the 94.85 acres to Mrs. Dwyer by John R. Smith and wife was an attempt at a partial rescission of an entire contract after plaintiff's right had intervened. Mrs. Dwyer, having permitted 90.23 acres of the 200 acres to be sold off without attempting to enforce her lien against the same, cannot now elect to rescind the contract as to the 94.85 acres after plaintiff's rights had been fixed by the recording of its deed of trust, nor can the John M. Bonner Memorial Home so elect to rescind a part only of the entire contract. Under the facts of this case, the result would be the same had there been an entire rescission of the contract by Mrs. Dwyer and Smith. The testimony showed that the plaintiff bank lent the defendant Smith the money mentioned in the notes sued on with the agreement and understanding between them that it should be applied on the vendor's lien notes held by Mrs. Dwyer; she and her agent having been instructed by John R. Smith to so apply the money borrowed from the plaintiff bank. Under these facts, the bank became subrogated pro tanto to the rights of Mrs. Dwyer, the owner of the prior vendor's lien for which the money loaned by the bank was to go in part payment. Smith testified that: "I borrowed this money from the bank, and so stated at the time that it was for the purpose of paying on these debts to Mrs. Dwyer, and I sent it to Judge Bonner to be applied on the purchase-money notes for this 200 acres of land, but he applied it to another purpose." Again, he says: "The money that I borrowed from the Collin County National Bank for which I executed this deed of trust I paid to John M. Bonner, agent and attorney in fact for Lelia E. and W. B. Bonner, and instructed him to credit same on the four $625 purchase-money notes, but, contrary to said instructions, he placed it as a credit on some rent notes he had." Bank v. Ackerman, 70 Tex. 315, 8 S. W. 45; Warhund et al. v. Merritt & Metcalf, 60 Tex. 24; Dillon v. Kauffman & Runge, 58 Tex. 705; Hicks v. Morris, 57 Tex. 660. But it is contended that it is not shown that John M. Bonner, to whom John R. Smith sent the money borrowed from the bank, was authorized to receive the same and apply it as a credit on the purchase-money notes held by Mrs. Dwyer. He was at the time the agent and attorney in fact of Mrs. Dwyer, and it seems had these notes in his possession. He was at the time of payment instructed by Smith to apply the money on these notes, but, instead of doing so, he applied it to other indebtedness which he held against Smith, for which it is not shown he had security. It is clear that the payor, Smith, had the right to have the payment applied to the original vendor's lien notes.

The court found that the land that should have been first subjected by Mrs. Dwyer to the payment of the said three purchase-money notes at the time she took a reconveyance from the said John R. Smith in payment of said notes was of the value of $3,631.80. The debt of Mrs. Dwyer, in so far as the bank is concerned, amounted to $5,489.25, which was a lien on 190.23 acres of the land. The difference between these amounts, being $1,857.45, represents the amount that the said Mrs. Dwyer had the right to enforce as a first lien against the land in controversy. The plaintiff bank was given judgment against defendant John R. Smith for $3,413.80, with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, together with a foreclosure of the lien given by its deed of trust on the land described in its petition, but said foreclosure is given on that portion of the land described in its deed of trust represented by the 84.23 acres of land mentioned in the pleadings, subject to a prior lien in favor of defendant, the John M. Bonner Memorial Home, for $1,857.45. This was correct.

The court properly rendered judgment that the land conveyed by John R. Smith after the execution of the deed of trust and prior to the attempted rescission should be subjected to the payment of said purchase-money notes in the reverse order of its alienation. Miller v. Rogers, 49 Tex. 398.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

SMITH v. FEARS.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 21, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 25, 1909.)

1. BROKERS (§ 14*) — COMMISSIONS — CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION—"AMOUNT."

Plaintiff, a broker, wrote defendant, asking what he would take for his land, including the stock and a 5 per cent. commission, and defendant replied that: "$22,250 your commission $1,112.50 this amount will buy the place." Held, that the word "amount" referred to the total of the two sums mentioned by defendant; the word being defined by Webster as "the sum total of two or more particular sums or quantities, as the amount of 7 and 9 is 16."

The credibility of witnesses and the weight to be given testimony are for the jury.

Appeal from District Court, Dallam County; J. N. Browning, Judge.

Action by W. W. Smith against J. W. Fears. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Fears owned six sections of land in Dallam county, and certain cattle, horses, and farming implements. In 1906, through appellant, Smith, then a partner with Stalcup and Hyde under the firm name of the Panhandle Land & Investment Company, Fears "listed" the land and other property mentioned with said company to be sold by it on his account for $20,000. Said company did not effect a sale of the property, and the authority given to it to sell same seems to have been revoked. Afterwards, in December, 1906, Fears authorized appellant Smith, who in the meantime, had withdrawn from said firm and was doing business as a real estate agent on his own account, to sell the land alone for $19,000, agreeing to allow Smith to retain as compensation for his services in effecting a sale any sum he might obtain in excess of said sum of $19,000. An exclusive right to sell the land was not conferred upon Smith. On the contrary, authority was conferred by Fears on other agents to effect a sale thereof, and he reserved as against such other agents and as against Smith a right to sell same himself. By virtue of the authority so conferred upon him, Smith did not make a sale of the land. For the purpose, he testified, of ascertaining from Fears the price at which he would sell the land, including the stock, etc., and a commission of 5 per cent. to himself, on January 19, 1907, Smith wrote a letter, shown by the record to have been lost at the time of the trial, to Fears, who on the day following replied as follows: "Wilkins, Okla., Jan. 20, 1907. Mr. W. W. Smith, Dalhart, Texas—Dear Sir: Yours of 19th to hand, contents noted, will say nearly all of land stiff land, a small amount sandy, rather dark, tight land dark nearly all short grass about 165 head of cattle, twenty horses and mules, mules young 3 head. I spent $150 since I saw you on the place, counting all $22,250.00 your commission $1112.50 this amount will buy the place; this is net the state $1.00 on school land $6.00 on patented land yet behind, horses, cattle and implements all go in the trade. R. R. 30 miles, post office and store 2 miles, no shop near. will give time so as to make the trade. There is another party on trade for one section; do not bar this party, first come first served. Resp. J. W. Fears." A few days after the letter copied above was written by Fears and received by Smith, Hyde called upon Fears for the purpose of buying the property, and (Hyde testified) was informed by Fears that, if he (Hyde) bought it, it would have to be through Smith. On the next day Hyde again called upon Fears, presenting to him the following letter from Smith: "W. W. Smith, Manager. Hyde & Stalcup, Attorneys. Panhandle Land & Investment Co. Large and Small Tracts, Farms and Ranches in the Panhandle of Texas. Dalhart, Texas, 1/26/07. J. W. Fears, Presented by Ed. C. Hyde—Dear Sir: Mr. Hyde has been connected with me on deal for your place. Go ahead and close up deal with Mr. Hyde, and I will approve deal. W. W. Smith." Negotiations following between Fears and Hyde resulted in a contract concluded January 26, 1907, whereby Fears, in consideration of $22,500 to be paid to him, bound himself to sell and convey the land, stock, etc., to Stalcup. Fears having refused to pay Smith a commission he claimed to be entitled to, on the ground that in the person of Stalcup he had procured a purchaser of the property, Smith brought his suit, alleging "that it was through his efforts and agency alone" that the sale was made to Stalcup, and setting up as a contract entitling him to demand and receive the commission of $1,112.50 claimed Fears' letter to him of January 20th, copied above. There was evidence showing that, while the contract as concluded on its face was for the purchase of the property by Stalcup alone, as a matter of fact he and Hyde and one Rouse jointly were the purchasers thereof; and in the trial court Fears contended, and on this appeal contends, that there was evidence sufficient to support a finding that Smith was a partner with Stalcup, Hyde, and Rouse in the purchase of the property. The court instructed the jury to find for Smith if they believed he was employed as a real estate broker by Fears to sell the property, and that in pursuance of such employment he procured in the person of Stalcup a purchaser thereof at the price and on the terms authorized by Fears; but to find for Fears, notwithstanding ing they believed he had agreed to pay Smith a commission, if they also believed that, unknown to him (Fears), Smith was a purchaser jointly with Stalcup and others of the property. The trial was before a jury and resulted in a verdict in favor of Fears. From a judgment in accordance with the verdict, Smith prosecutes this appeal.

Del W. Harrington and Wallace & Lumpkins, for appellant. J. S. Bailey and John W. Veale, for appellee.

WILLSON, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). Appellant insists that the language of appellee's letter of January 20th to him was unambiguous, and authorized him to sell the property for $22,250, and entitled him to demand and receive of appellee out of that sum a commission of $1,112.50. We agree that appellee's meaning as evidenced by the language used by him in the letter is plain enough; but we do not agree with appellant in the interpretation he places on that language. At the time and before the letter was written, appellant was authorized to sell the land alone for $19,000, exclusive of a commission to himself. He was to get compensation for his services in effecting a sale out of any sum in excess of $19,000 for which he might sell the land. Ignoring appellee's testimony as to the contents of appellant's letter to him (to the effect that it was a request to state the price at which he would sell the land, cattle, etc., and also to state the amount appellant was to be entitled to as a commission if he effected a sale, to be shown to prospective purchasers to convince them that he, appellant, was "not taxing up two or three dollars on the acre and selling the land to them at a big profit"), and looking alone to appellant's testimony as to the contents of that letter, we learn that it was a request to appellee to "tell him (appellant) what he would take for his place, including the stock and a 5 per cent. commission." In reply appellee wrote that "$22,250 your commission $1,112.50 this amount will buy the place." What amount? Twenty-two thousand, two hundred and fifty dollars, or $1,112.50, or the sum of both? The word "amount" is defined by Webster as "the sum total of two or more particular sums or quantities; as the amount of 7 and 9 is 16." Why should the word as used by Fears be held to refer to $22,250 as the total of particular sums not mentioned, instead of to the total of the particular sums—$22,250 and $1,112.50—mentioned by him? If there is anything in the remainder of the language used in the letter, or in the circumstances surrounding the parties, suggesting a reason for such an interpretation of the meaning of the word as used by him, it has not been pointed out to us, and we have not found it in the record. It is clear to us that in construing appellee's meaning by the language he used the word "amount" should be held to refer to the total of the two sums mentioned by him. If it should be, then it is clear that the authority given appellant was to sell the property for the amount of said two sums, to wit, for the sum of $23,362.50.

So construing the letter, it is clear that appellant's first assignment of error, complaining of the action of the court in overruling his motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict of the jury was contrary to the law and the evidence, in that the uncontroverted evidence showed that as a real estate broker he had been authorized by appellee to sell the property for $22,250, including a commission to him of $1,112.50, and had procured a purchaser thereof for that sum, is without merit.

Construing the language of the letter as we have suggested it should be construed, it is equally clear that, if the court erred in admitting as evidence the testimony complained of in the second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth assignments, the error was harmless, because that testimony could have affected only the question as to the construction to be given the language of the letter.

The assignments mentioned therefore are overruled, as is also the seventh, complaining of the action of the court in permitting appellee, over appellant's objection thereto on the ground that it was immaterial and irrelevant, on cross-examination of appellant to prove that, to enable Stalcup and Hyde to make the cash payment on the property, he had agreed to loan Stalcup and Hyde the commission of $1,112.50 he claimed to be entitled to as his compensation for selling the same. If we regarded the testimony as immaterial and irrelevant, we would be disinclined therefor to reverse the judgment, but we do not so regard it. We think it was material and relevant on the issue submitted to the jury as to whether appellant while acting as appellee's agent jointly with Stalcup and Hyde and Rouse was a purchaser of the property. Whether such an issue should have been submitted to the jury or not presents, we think, the only debatable question made by the assignments of error, and because we think that question must be determined against appellant we overrule not only said seventh, but also the eighth, assignment. January 26th appellant wrote appellee as follows: "Mr. Hyde has been connected with me on deal for your place. Go ahead and close up deal with Mr. Hyde, and I will approve deal." Appellant testified: "I really do not know who was interested in the purchase of that land besides Mr. Stalcup. * * * I was not interested in it at any time. I think Mr. Hyde spoke about being in it. * * * I did not make any trade with him. Hyde was to go up there, and represent Mr. Stalcup in drawing up the contract. It is a fact that Mr. Hyde went to Mr. Fears out there at my suggestion to carry out this contract and not to draw it up, but to carry it out. We spoke about drawing up the contract, and I told him I would write Mr. Fears a letter that I had sold the land to Stalcup. * * * I explain that letter by saying Mr. Hyde was to close it up. He was just connected in the deal to write the contract. I suppose that's all the connection he had with it, just writing the contract. That's the connection he had with it, and he might have been in the buying of it. I mean to say that Mr. Hyde was only connected with me on the deal for that place in writing the contract. Well, as to buying with me, he had no connection in the world. I don't know whether he was part owner of the land or not. Q. Was he part owner of the commission with you? A. I don't know whether he was or not. It is not a fact that there was an agreement made between myself and Mr. Stalcup and Mr. Hyde that all three of us were to buy the land and my commission was to be a part of the purchase price. It is not a fact that when this man refused to let me have my commission that they let me out of any deal. * * * I was to loan the boys that $1,112.50. I was going to loan it to them for 30 or 60 days. We had never agreed on any specific time. I don't remember whether they gave me any security at all. * * * I don't remember anything about the interest they were to pay. I said loan them some money. They gave me their note and secured it. * * * I had a connection with the deal to the extent that, after the deal was complete, I had a mortgage on the stock. I had that for money I had loaned them for this transaction. It was on January 26th. I think it was after the deal was closed up. I think it was one or two days after the deal was closed up. I think it was one or two days after the deal—a few days after the deal was closed—that I took the mortgage on the stock. I don't remember just exactly the date. I loaned them some money. They paid that money that I loaned them on this land. I think it was $2,000 that I loaned them. It seems to me like it was that." Stalcup testified that one Rouse jointly with himself and Hyde were the purchasers of the land. On his cross-examination by appellant appellee testified that Rouse told him that appellant also was one of the purchasers, and on his re-examination without objection testified: "Rouse told me that Smith was a partner with these people in this deal. He told me that after the contract was signed and I went home. I do not remember just the time that he told me—the date. It was just after the contract was completed. It was after the money had been delivered down here—in April some time. Myself and my wife and Mr. Rouse was talking, and Mr. Rouse told me that Smith was in on the purchase of this land." We think the testimony we have referred to tended to show that appellant jointly with Stalcup, Hyde, and Rouse was a purchaser of the property, and that the court did not err in submitting to the jury a question as to whether he was or not. The fact that the testimony referred to and the inferences to be drawn from it were rebutted by the testimony of appellant, Stalcup and Hyde denying that appellant was such a purchaser, furnished no reason for refusing to submit such an issue to the jury. The credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given to the testimony presented questions for the jury, and not for the court, to determine.

The judgment is affirmed.

SLEDGE v. DENTON.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 6, 1909.)

JUDGMENT (§ 443*)—FRAUD—VACATION—EQUITY—PLEA.

Plaintiff sued defendant for a firm accounting, shortly after which defendant became a bankrupt, and plaintiff was restrained from continuing the suit, and the remaining assets of the firm were delivered to the receiver. An account was thereafter had, in which it was found that defendant was not indebted to plaintiff, but the reverse. Plaintiff procured an order requiring the receiver to turn over the balance of the partnership assets to him for administration, and entered into a stipulation settling all claims arising out of the partnership so far as defendant was concerned. Defendant was thereupon advised by his attorneys that the action for accounting would be dismissed, but plaintiff secured a dissolution of the injunction without notice, and, also without notice, secured a judgment in that action by false testimony that defendant was indebted to him for $5,694.65, of which defendant acquired no knowledge until after the term at which the judgment was recovered. Held, that a petition by defendant alleging such facts stated a cause of action in equity for vacation of the judgment.

Appeal from District Court, Johnson County; O. L. Lockett, Judge.

Action by W. W. Sledge against T. H. Denton. From an order sustaining a demurrer to the petition and dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Smith & Lattimore and S. C. Padelford, for appellant. Phillips & Bledsoe and J. W. Still, for appellee.

RAINEY, C. J. This is an original action by Sledge against Denton to set aside and annul a judgment of the district court of Johnson county, wherein Denton recovered against Sledge. A general demurrer to plaintiff's petition was sustained and the action dismissed, and Sledge appeals.

The substance of plaintiff's petition, taken from appellant's brief, with slight changes, is as follows: That in the year 1896, plaintiff and defendant, under the firm name of Denton & Sledge, entered into a copartnership for the purpose of conducting a mercantile business in the town of Cresson, Tex.;

that plaintiff owned a one-fourth interest, and the defendant a three-fourths interest in said copartnership concern, and that the exclusive management of the business of said concern was turned over to plaintiff, and, in addition to his one-fourth of the profits, he was to receive $50 per month out of said concern, and that the defendant was to receive three-fourths of the profits of the said concern; that this copartnership continued until the 2d day of October, 1902, when the stock of goods and merchandise and business building owned and occupied by the firm were consumed by fire, and that on said last-mentioned day and date the said firm was dissolved; that after the firm was dissolved, the plaintiff engaged in another business in his individual capacity, which he conducted in his individual capacity, the said firm having no interest in said business, and that the plaintiff proceeded, as best he could after the dissolution of said firm, to wind up the same, and to satisfy all of the indebtedness of said concern; that the said firm owed indebtedness to the amount of about $12,996.45, and that the plaintiff paid off and satisfied of said amount the sum of $11,593.28, and that there was remaining in his hands on or about the — day of May, 1903, the sum of $2,300 of assets still belonging to the firm, consisting of choses in action, etc., as is shown fully in plaintiff's pleadings; that on or about the 13th day of June, 1903, the defendant, T. H. Denton, instituted suit in the district court of Johnson county, Tex., against appellant, W. W. Sledge, for a settlement of said copartnership affairs. The original petition filed in this case being fully shown by copy of same, marked "Exhibit A," and made a part of said amended original petition, and shown in said petition of dissolution, the defendant in this case, and plaintiff in that, prayed for the appointment of a receiver to take possession of, and administer all of, the copartnership effects of said firm of Denton & Sledge, which receiver was appointed and qualified, and that the plaintiff in this case, W. W. Sledge, turned over to said Fred T. Vickers all of the remaining assets of the said firm, which he had in his possession, amounting to the sum of $2,300; that the plaintiff in this case had paid out of his separate funds about $2,368.34 of the indebtedness of said concern, and that he used only $9,224.44 of the assets of the said firm in paying off and satisfying said firm's indebtedness of $11,593.28—he having paid out of his own separate funds $2,368.34 of said indebtedness—that is, the plaintiff's petition showed that he had in his possession only $11,224.44 at the time of the dissolution of said firm, and that he accounted for every cent of these assets, in that he paid $9,224.44 on the indebtedness of the firm, and turned the remainder of $2,300 over to the receiver appointed by the district court in the suit brought by the defendant against plaintiff in this case for a settlement of the said business of said concern, and that in addition plaintiff had paid out $2,368.34 of his individual money in settlement of the debts of the firm—thus showing that the firm was owing the plaintiff in this case said sum, and that the plaintiff did not owe the said concern one cent.

On the 21st day of December, 1903, the plaintiff, conducting his own private business as stated above, filed a petition for voluntary bankruptcy in the United States District Court of the Northern District of Texas, which court made an order on said day and date adjudging plaintiff a bankrupt, and in said bankruptcy proceedings granted and entered an order enjoining and restraining the defendant herein, and his agents and attorneys, and the said receiver mentioned above, from proceeding further with said suit filed by the defendant and against the plaintiff in the district court of Johnson county, Tex., notice of which injunction was on the 23d day of December, 1903, duly and legally served upon the defendant, which said injunction restrained the defendant, his agents and attorneys, and the receiver from further proceeding with said suit, which the defendant, Sledge, had instituted against the plaintiff, Denton, in the district court of Johnson county, Tex., and the federal court further appointed one Marshall Spoonst as receiver in bankruptcy in the bankruptcy proceedings, with power to take charge of all the property, in which the plaintiff, Sledge, had an interest; that on the 7th day of January, 1904, the receiver Fred Vickers, with full knowledge of the defendant and his attorneys, made a report to the district court of Johnson county, Tex., in said suit therein pending, showing that he had paid debts of said firm to the amount of $1,400; that he had collected $2,300 in money, and that he turned over to the federal receiver all the balance of the copartnership assets, notes, accounts, etc., including $625 in money, all the assets aggregating about $8,000, and that the said bankruptcy court appointed J. W. Stitt, one of the defendant's attorneys in this case, trustee in bankruptcy of said bankrupt estate of the plaintiff, and that all of the bankrupt estate, including the said copartnership effects, were turned over to, and placed in the hands of said J. W. Stitt, together with all of the property of every kind whatsoever, including notes, accounts, papers, books, real estate, moneys, copy of inventory, and all of the evidence of debt belonging to said copartnership, which had come into the possession of the receiver Vickers, all of which was fully known to the defendant and his attorneys, and concurred in without objection and agreed to; that after all of the effects, books, and accounts and inventories, and property had thus been turned over to J. W. Stitt, who was trustee in bankruptcy, and also one of the attorneys for the defendant, T. H. Denton, in this case, the plaintiff's attorney, and the defendant, T. H. Denton, and his two attorneys, R. F. Phillips and J. W. Stitt, and the receiver Vickers, met by appointment in Ft. Worth, Tex., in January or February, 1904, and went over all of the copartnership accounts, statements, etc., and that it was discovered, and all of said parties arrived at the conclusion that the plaintiff, W. W. Sledge, was not indebted to the defendant, T. H. Denton, in any amount whatsoever, either on a copartnership settlement, or otherwise, but that the defendant, Denton, was indebted to the plaintiff, Sledge, and that this conclusion was arrived at after a full investigation of all the accounts and evidence of indebtedness between the plaintiff and the defendant, and after all of the books and inventories of the firm had been examined by said parties, and that thereafter on another occasion the said Phillips again made another examination of said books, etc., and again stated to the said Browning, the attorney of the plaintiff, that the plaintiff was not indebted to the defendant in any amount, and that in a proceeding in bankruptcy the said Phillips fully and exhaustively examined the plaintiff, W. W. Sledge, as to said account, and after said examination, and after said accounting it was discovered by said parties that plaintiff was not indebted to the defendant in any amount; that the said R. S. Phillips was fully authorized by the defendant, T. H. Denton, to make said investigation, and settlement referred to above, and that the said attorneys of the plaintiff were authorized to adjust said account and to make said settlement; that the said Phillips in said settlement stated to the attorney of the plaintiff that the plaintiff did not owe the defendant anything on an accounting, and that a proper appropriation of all the funds and effects, which had come into the plaintiff's hands had been made by him, and that nothing wrong was discovered in, or shown by, said investigation, and that he found no evidence of fact supporting or maintaining the said suit, which he as the attorney of Denton had instituted in the district court of Johnson county, Tex., against the plaintiff, Sledge, and that he had brought said suit in Johnson county without an opportunity to investigate, and for the purpose only of ascertaining the status of the said copartnership; that the defendant, about April 25, 1904, made an application in said bankruptcy court and proceeding for authority to take into his own possession and administer all of the copartnership notes, accounts, effects, and other property of the firm of Denton & Sledge, which application was on May 12, 1904, granted by said court, and the said J. W. Stitt, trustee in bankruptcy, was ordered to turn over and deliver, and did turn over and deliver to the defendant, Denton, all of the property, effects, etc., of said firm, aggregating the sum of $7,874.85, as shown by report of said trustee; that in order to settle all controversy between plaintiff and the defendant in regard to a copartnership settlement between them, and in regard to the matters and claims set up in Denton's petition in the case brought by him against the plaintiff in this case in the district court of Johnson county, Tex., and in order that the plaintiff might not be put to any other and further trouble or expense in regard to said copartnership controversy in said suit, they on the 2d day of September, 1904, made and entered into a contract of settlement, by the terms of which the plaintiff transferred and released unto the defendant all of his property, both individual and copartnership, except his exemptions, upon the consideration that the defendant account merely to the plaintiff's creditors for whatever amount they might be entitled to receive out of the copartnership property, and release unto the defendant any residue of said property of every kind and character which might be left in the defendant's hands after paying all of the debts of the firm of Denton & Sledge, including any due the defendant, T. H. Denton; that said agreement was executed for the purpose of fully settling the copartnership affairs between the plaintiff and the defendant, and that the same did settle said copartnership affairs; that said agreement was made between the attorney of the plaintiff and the attorney of the defendant, who were authorized to make the same, the plaintiff at said time being in Ada, Okl., and that plaintiff's attorney wrote him that the said matters involved in said suit had been fully settled, and that by reason of said agreement of controversy between plaintiff and defendant all claims between plaintiff and defendant were fully settled; that subsequent to the making of the above the defendant, Denton, had sworn to and presented a claim in the bankruptcy court against the plaintiff, W. W. Sledge, in the bankruptcy proceedings for the amount of $635, which was by the referee in bankruptcy disallowed, and that after this, the above investigation and agreements of settlement were made, and that after said agreement of settlement had been made, the defendant, T. H. Denton, collected $1,072.99 of copartnership money, and in accordance with said agreement paid to J. W. Stitt, one-fourth thereof, to wit, $268.24, this being done on the 18th day of May, 1905, and swore that the said $268.24 was the property of the estate of W. W. Sledge, bankrupt, and filed said affidavit in the bankruptcy court, and that thereafter the defendant further recognized and admitted that under said agreement of settlement the plaintiff was not indebted to him in any amount arising out of said copartnership transaction, and that he did not intend and would not procure any further claim arising out of said firm business against the plaintiff, and that said suit in the district court of Johnson county, Tex., had been, or would be, abandoned, and that the defendant, Denton, on or about the 20th day of May, purchased from J. W. Stitt, trustee in bankruptcy, plaintiff's one-fourth interest in certain notes and accounts for $125, and paid same into said bankruptcy court, and also purchased plaintiff's one-fourth interest in real estate of said firm at and for $132.50 at a bankrupt sale, and paid same to the trustee in bankruptcy; that all of the above acts of the plaintiff were matters of record in said bankruptcy court, and were known to the plaintiff and his attorneys, and that the defendant in all of the ways mentioned above caused the plaintiff to believe he would not insist on any amount as due him, and that the suit pending in the district court of Johnson county, Tex., would be dismissed and abandoned, and was abandoned, and that the plaintiff's attorneys, by the said agreements and statements and actions of the defendant, Denton, were led to believe, and did believe, that the said suit had been abandoned and would not be further prosecuted; that shortly after the plaintiff was declared a bankrupt, he removed from Texas to Ada, Okl., and has since resided there, all of which was known to the defendant, Denton, and his attorneys; that by reason of the said letter written to the plaintiff by his attorney J. G. Browning he firmly believed that the said suit in the district court of Johnson county, Tex., of Denton v. Sledge was abandoned and dismissed, and that from all of the agreements and settlements and the actions of the defendant, Denton, and his attorneys the attorneys of the plaintiff, Sledge, were led to believe, and did believe and relied upon, the fact that the said suit in Johnson county, Tex., No. 5,253, had been abandoned and dismissed; that the defendant, Denton, through his attorney J. W. Stitt, without any notice whatsoever to the plaintiff and his attorneys, in May, 1905, made an application to Judge Meek in the state of Colorado for a dissolution of said injunction, and had the order restraining the defendant and his attorney from prosecuting the suit in Johnson county, Tex., dissolved; that the said application was made by the attorneys of the defendant in a foreign state, without notice to or knowledge of the plaintiff, and that the said order was not entered of record, but was made on a separate piece of paper, and filed away with disposed-of papers, and that neither the plaintiff nor his attorneys had any knowledge or notice that the said application to dissolve said injunction would be or was made, and that the said injunction was dissolved; that the plaintiff had no attorney in Johnson county, Tex., and that the attorneys for the plaintiff, and J. W. Stitt, the attorney for the defendant, resided in Ft. Worth, Tex., and had direct telephonic communication the one with the other, and that the said injunction was fraudulently and surreptitiously dissolved by the said Denton and his attorneys, and that they amended the petition in the case No. 5,253 in the district court of Johnson county, Tex., and, without any knowledge or notice whatsoever to the plaintiff and his attorneys, the plaintiff and his attorneys having been led to believe by the defendant and his attorneys that all of the matters involved in the suit in the district court of Johnson county, Tex., had been settled, that the said suit was, or would be, dismissed and would be no further prosecuted, the defendant, Denton, and his attorneys had said suit called up in the district court of Johnson county, Tex., and upon perjured testimony procured the district court of Johnson county, Tex., on the 13th day of May, 1907, to render a judgment against the plaintiff for the sum of $5,694.67; that said suit was rendered upon perjured testimony, and that the said Denton in the trial of said suit swore that the plaintiff was indebted to him in said sum of $5,694.65, which was false, the plaintiff at that time not being indebted to the said Denton in any amount whatsoever; that the said suit was procured by fraud, and upon false and perjured testimony, the petition setting forth therein all of the testimony upon which said judgment was obtained was false and perjured—that is, plaintiff's petition showed that the defendant and his attorneys knew that the plaintiff was not indebted to him in any amount for which the suit in Johnson county was brought, and in which the said judgment was recovered, and he presented a claim against the plaintiff in the court of bankruptcy, which was disallowed, which order of disallowance was still in full force and effect—and that the injunction was wrongfully and fraudulently caused to dissolve, and, without any knowledge or notice whatsoever to the plaintiff and his attorneys that the said suit, after having been settled, would be further prosecuted, the defendant and his attorneys fraudulently procured said judgment for said amount in said suit in the district court of Johnson county, Tex., upon false and perjured testimony, and that if plaintiff and his attorneys had known or suspected that said suit would be further prosecuted, they would and could have defeated the same by full and legal testimony.

All of the above is fully set forth, and all of the facts specifically alleged showing that the matters involved in the suit brought by Sledge against Denton in the district court of Johnson county, Tex., had been settled, and satisfied by an agreement between plaintiff and the defendant long prior to the recovery of the said judgment, and that the defendant admitted that he had no cause of action against the plaintiff by affidavit and record made in the bankruptcy court, and that by the agreements and settlements and actions of the defendant and his attorneys, the plaintiff and his attorneys believed, and were authorized in believing, that the said suit in Johnson county, Tex., would not be prosecuted and was abandoned, and that the defendant and his attorneys, for the purpose of obtaining a fraudulent judgment against the plaintiff, without any notice to the plaintiff and his attorneys, had said injunction dissolved, and amended the said petition in said cause, and procured said judgment upon false and perjured testimony. The plaintiff further pleaded that neither he nor his attorneys knew anything at all about the rendition of said judgment until long after the adjournment of the term of court at which said judgment was rendered, and that plaintiff was deprived of making a motion for a new trial during the term of court, and, there being no statement of facts, and the plaintiff not having had any opportunity to controvert the perjured testimony, the only relief that plaintiff has is and was by this proceeding in equity. The defendant prayed that the judgment be set aside and annulled, and that the defendant, Sledge, and his agents and attorneys be enjoined from enforcing said judgment.

The allegations of plaintiff's petition stated facts sufficient to show a cause of action, and show sufficient grounds to justify the plaintiff in believing that the suit of Denton v. Sledge would not be prosecuted, but be abandoned, and he was thereby excused from not appearing on the trial and making his defense which the petition alleges to exist. The court therefore erred in sustaining the general demurrer, and the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for trial on its merits.

Reversed and remanded.

McKAY et al. v. McKINNON et al.†

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909.
On Motion for Rehearing, Nov. 24, 1909.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 155*)—SALE OF LAND—CONTRACT ENFORCEABLE BY PURCHASER.

Where the agent of the vendor had authority to sell only for cash, a contract of sale for part cash with deferred payments which was repudiated by the vendor is not enforceable by the vendee.

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; Chas. E. Ashe, Judge.

Action by A. N. McKay and others against A. McKinnon and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

S. Talliaferro, G. L. Teat, and Brockman, Kahn & Newman, for appellants. Stewart, Stewart & Lockett, Campbell & Wren, John Archer Read, Bryan & McRae, and Vasmer & Briant, for appellees.

NEILL, J. This suit was brought by appellants against appellees to enforce specific performance of the alleged contract, copied below in our conclusions of fact, claimed by appellants to have been made by McKinnon to McKay for the sale of certain lands therein mentioned.

After a general denial, the defendant McKinnon pleaded specially: That he did not enter into the alleged contract, nor authorize any one else to make it for him, and that it is not his contract, nor the contract of any authorized agent acting for him. That plaintiff McKay claims to have bought the land from W. T. O'Connor, who pretended to act as the agent of defendant, and claims that O'Connor executed the contract sued on as defendant's agent. That O'Connor was not authorized to act as his agent at the time he pretended to act, nor was he authorized at any time to sell the land at the time and on the terms he is averred to have sold it to said plaintiff. That O'Connor never had any power to act as attorney in fact for him, nor power to sell the land in question at the time and at the price it is claimed he did sell. That the only dealings defendant ever had with O'Connor was merely as a real estate agent and broker with authority to sell the land at a certain price, which was not the price he sold for. That he never at any time conferred any authority upon O'Connor to execute a contract of sale; but that what dealings defendant had with him (which had terminated long before the time he is alleged to have sold to plaintiff) were to produce a purchaser for said land at a price different from the price (it being more) O'Connor is claimed to have sold to plaintiff. That the contract claimed by plaintiff was for the sale of land, and was not in writing signed by the defendant, nor by any authorized agent of defendant, and is contrary to the statute of frauds, which statute is specially pleaded by defendant.

The other defendants, John S. Stewart, P. H. Bryant, G. A. Brandt, F. E. Rue, and W. E. Humphreville, appellees herein, who acquired interests in the land after specially pleading certain matters, which we deem unnecessary to mention, adopted the answer of their codefendant, McKinnon, and by a cross-bill against plaintiffs and McKay claimed the land as their own, and asked judgment therefor.

The case was tried before a jury, who rendered a verdict in favor of the defendants in obedience to the peremptory instruction of the court.

Conclusions of Fact.

This is the writing sued on: "Houston, Texas, September 7, 1907. Received of A. N. McKay $200, being in part payment of purchase money on 245 acres of land belonging to A. McKinnon, near La Porte, in Harris county, Texas, located in the Scott survey. The consideration agreed upon is $2,200, half cash on the delivery of deed and satisfactory abstract, the remaining half to be paid in one and two years, equal annual payments at the rate of 7% per annum. If the title proves to be good and satisfactory, then the said McKay is to take his deed and make his payment within 30 days from the date hereof, and the said McKinnon is to furnish an abstract of title showing good title and deliver the deed within that time. If for any reason the said McKinnon does not comply with the contract within 30 days, then the said McKay is not bound hereby to make the payments as specified. If the said McKay refuses to accept deed when tendered with an abstract showing satisfactory title, then the $200 deposited as earnest money in this case shall be forfeited by him. W. T. O'Connor, Agent, A. McKinnon. Witness: Effie Keith."

Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to appellants, we conclude that it was sufficient to raise the issue as to whether O'Connor, who was a real estate broker, was authorized, as the agent of the defendant McKinnon, who was the owner of the land, to effect a sale thereof, for the latter for the sum of $1,700. But there is no evidence tending to show that O'Connor had any authority whatever to effect a sale of the premises upon any other terms than cash, or to confer upon any one an option to purchase the land upon any terms whatsoever.

Conclusions of Law.

We conclude, in view of the facts found, that the writing copied in the foregoing conclusions will not support plaintiff's action for a specific performance of a contract to convey land (J. B. Walkins Land Co. v. Campbell, 100 Tex. 542, 101 S. W. 1079; Colvin v. Blanchard [Sup.] 106 S. W. 323; Donnan v. Adams, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 615, 71 S. W. 581), and that, therefore, the court did not err in peremptorily instructing a verdict for the defendants.

Affirmed.

On Motion for Rehearing.

It is insisted in this motion that we erred in holding in the original opinion that there was no evidence tending to show that O'Connor had any authority whatever to effect the sale upon any other terms than cash. Here is the evidence upon which appellants rely to show that we erred in such finding, and that O'Connor was empowered to sell upon other terms, and to prove that, as McKinnon's agent, he was authorized to make the contract upon which this action is based: "Mrs. W. F. Cheek testified on behalf of the plaintiffs that she worked in the office of W. T. O'Connor during the few months prior to the making of the sale to the appellants in this case, as well as for several years previous, and was working for him at the time the sale was made; that O'Connor had had this land listed with him for something like three years, and that for a month or two before the sale of the land to appellants O'Connor had a deal on with one of the customers of an associate real estate firm, under the style of Clark & Gore, the customer being one W. S. Holmes; that the proposed sale to Holmes fell through; that McKinnon came into O'Connor's office shortly afterwards very much disappointed at the failure of the sale to Holmes, and said to O'Connor: 'I must sell that land. I want to sell it.' I don't know exactly what the judge said, but he said: 'I want to sell it. I need the money.' And he said: 'I will be willing to take $1,700; and, if not that, $1,600,' in a careless way, 'to get rid of it.' He said he had to sell it; he needed the money. Before that time he told Judge O'Connor, if he got a buyer, make out a contract, sign it, and send it to him, and he would send him the deed. This happened in the month of August (1907). With reference to the Clark & Gore matter, that sale was not on at that time. That was declared off. It was at the failure of that deal that McKinnon came into the office. He came in several times during that sale. It had not gone through, and, when it had not, he appeared anxious to sell. He said something to Judge O'Connor with reference to closing up and signing contracts if he should get a purchaser. In a conversation with the judge, he told him, he said: 'If you sell that land,' he said, 'I must get rid of it, because I need the money.' But I cannot state exactly when it was, but he gave the judge authority to sell it, and told him to sign up the contract and send it to him, and anything he did would be all right with him. That conversation and authorization was not after the Clark & Gore matter had fallen through. It was before. I heard McKinnon tell the judge. He was standing in the middle of the floor, and there was some gentleman with him, Mr. ———, and he said, 'Judge, I want you to sell that land,' and the gentleman said something about the price being too high, and he said: 'Well, if you can't get that, sell it for less, get $1,700, $1,600, if you can't get more. I have to have the money. I need it.' That conversation was right after the Clark & Gore failure to sell the land; that was in the month of August, or close to September. I do not remember the specific date it was. I know Mr. J. W. Oman. He did office at the same place. I know whether he was about there when the conversation was had. He was in the room waiting for the judge. I was in the office on the 7th of September."

This evidence is copied from the statement subjoined to the proposition under the fourth assignment of error in appellants' brief; and we think presents the evidence upon the question in the most favorable light that can be reflected from the record. After pondering over it and considering it as best we can, we are unable to reach the conclusion that it is sufficient to warrant a jury to find that McKinnon authorized O'Connor to make a contract of sale such as is set out in our conclusions of fact, or one upon any other terms than for a cash consideration. It is elementary that an agent to sell has no authority to sell on a credit unless specially authorized to do so by his principal. Authority not having been conferred by McKinnon upon O'Connor to sell upon other terms than cash, and the former having repudiated the written contract sued upon, we thought it sufficient to say in our original opinion that McKay could not enforce its specific performance.

Appellants insist that we further decide whether or not the contract was simply an option. Since a contract upon a sufficient consideration conferring upon one the right to purchase property upon specific terms within a definite period of time can, upon the purchaser's exercising his right to buy in accordance with the terms of such contract, be specifically enforced, we deem the question as to whether the writing sued on was an option or not purely academic; for, whether it is deemed an option or not, the contract cannot be enforced because O'Connor was not authorized by his principal to sell the land upon any other terms than for a cash consideration.

The motion is overruled.

MEDLIN MILLING CO. v. BOUTWELL.
(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 30, 1909.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 20, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 302*)—ASSAULT BY SERVANT—INITIATION OF NEW EMPLOYÉ—LIABILITY OF MASTER.

A master, though a corporation, authorizes an assault on a new employé by old employés, and so is liable for the injury, where it is in the course of an "initiation" of the new employé against his resistance by the old employés, by laying him across a barrel and applying a paddle, in accordance with a custom which had long existed in the establishment with the knowledge and acquiescence of the master.

Appeal from District Court, Hunt County; R. L. Porter, Judge.

Action by E. Boutwell against the Medlin Milling Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 108 S. W. 1025.

J. T. Jones, for appellant. J. P. Copeland, J. P. Yates, and H. L. Carpenter, for appellee.

RAINEY, C. J. This is an appeal from a judgment recovered by appellee against appellant in a suit brought for damages for the illegal whipping and injury to appellee, committed by appellant's servants under its authority and permission. A general demurrer to plaintiff's petition was overruled, exception duly reserved, and this is assigned as error.

This is the second appeal of this case. On a former trial the lower court sustained the demurrer to the action, and dismissed the case. On appeal the judgment was reversed and the cause remanded for a trial on the merits; this court holding that the petition showed grounds for a recovery. The overruling of the demurrer is assigned as error, and presented for our consideration. We are still of the opinion that our former holding is correct, and this assignment is overruled. See Boutwell v. Medlin Milling Co., 108 S. W. 1025. The evidence shows that appellee was employed as a laborer in appellant's milling plant, and, while he was engaged in the performance of his duties as such laborer, he was set upon by a number of others of appellant's employes for the purpose of "initiating" him, as they termed it. The "initiation" was performed by the administration of a paddle to the person by such employes. Appellee, being unwilling to receive the "initiation," resisted, and in the attempt of the other employes to enforce it over his resistance he was severely injured, to the extent of the amount of damages assessed by the jury. This manner of "initiation" of new employes had existed among the mill employes for quite a period and none escaped, except those who by superior force were able to successfully resist; the custom being to always send a force sufficient to overpower those who made resistance. This custom of "initiation" was known to all parties connected with the mill; some 15 or 16 persons having received it as they entered the service of the mill, and it is evident this custom was known and acquiesced in by the management of the mill, as it was shown that the president and manager had been so initiated.

We think the decision of this case depends upon the proposition of appellant that the verdict and judgment are contrary to the law and evidence, for, if the evidence shows liability on the part of appellant, no error is shown by the charge of the court; nor is error shown by the refusal to give requested charges as complained of. No corporation is invested by law with authority to commit a tort, and to make it liable for a wrong it must have authorized the commission of same, or the wrong must have been committed by an agent while in the performance of some duty within the scope of the authority vested in him. The act of whipping the appellee contrary to his will by the servants of appellant was an assault and battery, which was unlawful, although it may have been done to afford amusement for the participants. It is the duty of the master to use reasonable care for the safety of a servant while engaged in the performance of the master's business. Here the appellant, it seems, was doing nothing to protect appellee from harm, but, on the other hand, had for a long time permitted the old employees to "initiate" new employees by laying them across a barrel and applying a paddle. This custom had continued so long with the knowledge and acquiescence of the management that it had become a rule of the establishment, and the assault on appellee must be considered as having been authorized by the appellant, and the act being authorized by the corporation, it is liable for the damages sustained in its performance, though the damage be greater than anticipated in undertaking the wrongful act. The following authorities sustain the principle that a corporation is liable for an assault authorized by it: 1 Cooley on Torts (8d Ed.) § 136; 1 Cook, Corp. § 150; 7 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) 824, 825.

Believing the evidence shows liability, and no error being shown in the trial, the judgment is affirmed.

PLOTNER & STODDARD v. MARKHAM WAREHOUSE & ELEVATOR CO.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1900.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 24, 1909.)

1. SALES (§ 181*)—ACTIONS—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Plaintiffs contracted to buy for defendants a quantity of "Deering" binding twine, and delivered twine manufactured by the Deering Manufacturing Company branded "Superior." It appeared that the company also manufactured another brand of twine known as "Deering," and, in an action for the price, the petition did not allege that the twine bought for defendants was to be an article branded by the manufacturers, "Deering," but the answer alleged that, shortly after the twine was in defendants' warehouse, a person acting for them examined it, and found that it was not "Deering" twine, but was branded "Superior," a different brand than that ordered by defendants, that they took immediate steps to determine whether "Superior" twine was in fact "Deering" twine, and learned that such was not the fact, but that "Superior" twine was a cheaper grade, which allegation was sustained by evidence. Held, to show that the mere brand was not deemed by defendants as the essence of the contract, but that the grade or quality was, and evidence was admissible to show that the twine delivered and branded "Superior" was as good as that branded "Deering," and was sold to the trade as such.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 181.*]

2. SALES (§ 364*)—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

Defendants having by their pleading and evidence shown that their own construction of the contract was that the twine ordered was satisfied by a grade equal to that ordinarily marked "Deering," and that the brand was not the test of their obligation under the contract, they could not complain of charges that if plaintiff delivered a brand of twine different than the brand contracted for, but of an equally good quality, and if quality and not the brand was the essence of the contract, and if defendants did not within a reasonable time after discovering the difference in brand return the twine to plaintiff, plaintiff should recover, but if the brand, and not the quality, was the essence of the contract, and plaintiff did not comply with the contract, defendant should recover, and that the twine sold to defendants was a different brand from the ordinary "Deering" twine, which was the subject of the contract, but if it was as good in quality as the ordinary "Deering," and defendants received it and used a portion of it, and failed to return any of it to plaintiff, defendants would be liable for the price thereof; the charges being favorable to defendants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1065-1076; Dec. Dig. § 364.*]

3. SALES (§ 364*)—ACTIONS—REFUSAL OF REQUESTS.

For the same reason a requested charge that, if plaintiff delivered twine of a different brand than that ordered and failed to notify defendants that such brand was delivered, the delivery was at the risk of plaintiff, and defendants were under no obligation to return the twine to plaintiff, but that the loss of the twine in defendants' hands would be the loss of plaintiff, was properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1065-1076; Dec. Dig. § 364.*]

4. SALES (§ 364*)—ACTIONS FOR PRICE—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

It being undisputed that defendants purchased 5,000 pounds of twine from plaintiff at the price and terms alleged in the petition, and that defendants received the twine at the place of delivery, carried it away to their farm, and never returned it, a charge that if defendants purchased the 5,000 pounds of twine from plaintiff at the price and on the terms alleged in the petition, and received it at the place of delivery, carried it to their farm, and never returned it, plaintiff should recover, was properly refused, since the jury could not under it have considered any of the rights of defendants based on the delivery of a different twine than that contracted for.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1065-1076; Dec. Dig. § 364.*]

5. SALES (§ 94*)—DESTRUCTION OF GOODS IN BUYER'S HANDS AFTER AGREEMENT TO RETURN.

If the binding twine bought remained a week or 10 days after the delivery in the buyers' warehouse before examination by their manager, who then claimed that the twine was not as ordered, and immediately notified the broker through whom it was bought, declining to accept the twine, and the broker agreed that it might be returned to it at a specified place, and it was subsequently destroyed by fire in the buyers' warehouse, the broker was not liable on the agreement for return, as their willingness to have the twine returned contemplated its actual return to the place specified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 280; Dec. Dig. § 94.*]

6. SALES (§ 168*)—RIGHT OF EXAMINATION BY BUYER.

If goods bought do not conform to the contract, the buyer will have the right to reject them after fair opportunity to examine them as to their character.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 403-408; Dec. Dig. § 168.*]

7. SALES (§ 182*)—ACTIONS—QUESTION OF FACT.

Whether the buyer discovered an alleged variance between the goods delivered and the contract of sale and repudiated the transaction in a reasonable time, under the circumstances, is a question for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 182.*]

8. SALES (§ 131*)—REJECTION WITHIN REASONABLE TIME—SUBSEQUENT LOSS IN BUYER'S HANDS.

If buyers, discovering that goods delivered did not conform to their contract, repudiated the transaction within a reasonable time, they would from that time hold the goods as warehousemen, and be liable for the loss as such, and would not be bound to do more than notify the person through whom they were bought that they would not take the goods, and would not have to tender the goods back at the place stated in the contract for delivery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

9. SALES (§ 178*)—"ACCEPTANCE."

Fact that a part of goods alleged by buyers not to conform to the contract of sale was after delivery to the buyers delivered to their tenants, after discovery of the alleged difference, does not amount to an acceptance; it appearing that such issuance was against the positive orders of the buyers, and a mere mistake.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 451-455; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 53-57.]

10. SALES (§ 179*)—DELIVERY OF GOODS NOT ORDERED—USE OF PORTION BY BUYER.

Buyers having used a portion of goods delivered, not conforming to the contract of sale, after discovery of that fact, are liable for the portion used.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 456-468; Dec. Dig. § 179.*]

11. INTEREST (§ 39*)—COMPUTATION.

It being the duty of a broker through whom goods are bought to notify the buyer of the arrival of goods at place of delivery, the broker, upon recovering the price therefor, will be entitled to interest only from the time of such notification.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Interest, Cent. Dig. § 83; Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

12. BROKERS (§ 19*)—RIGHT OF BUYER TO REBATE FROM OTHER PARTY.

Where persons buy goods through brokers, paying them a specified brokerage, any rebate to the broker received from the other party should inure to the buyers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 16; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

Appeal from District Court, Matagorda County; Wells Thompson, Judge.

Action by the Markham Warehouse & Elevator Company against Plotner & Stoddard. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Gaines & Corbett, for appellants. Linn, Conger & Austin, for appellee.

JAMES, C. J. Plaintiff (the appellee) alleged: That on, to wit, June 24, 1907, plaintiff contracted with defendants, in consideration of 10¼ cents per pound and a reasonable brokerage in addition, to purchase for defendants and on their account, and to have same shipped and delivered to defendants at Markham, Tex., 5,000 pounds of Deering binding twine, said twine to be received by and delivered to defendants at Markham, Tex., on its arrival, and that defendants through their general manager, Chillson, agreed and promised to receive same at Markham, Tex., on its delivery at said point by the transportation company, and to pay plaintiff cash on delivery the sum of 10¼ cents per pound, together with a reasonable brokerage, which was ¾ of a cent per pound. That said twine was received by plaintiff ready to deliver to defendants on July 16, 1907. That, although defendants were duly notified thereof, they failed to call for and receive the same, and thereby plaintiff had to store same until September 16, 1907, on which date defendants received same at Markham and took same to their farm under their contract, and have from that time held same and have never returned or offered to return same or any part thereof, but, as plaintiff is informed and believes and so charges, not only took same, but thereafter used a large part thereof in the harvesting of their crops, and hold the balance thereof and refuse to pay for it, and praying for judgment for $550, with interest from July 16, 1907.

The amended original answer pleaded the general denial, and specially denied the purchase of the twine in the manner and form alleged by them or any one authorized to act for them, and alleged the purchase by defendants, through Chillson, of 5,000 pounds of Deering binder twine for which defendants were to pay actual cost delivered at Markham with a reasonable brokerage; that it was expressly agreed that the twine was to be the Deering, and none other; that on September 14, 1907, one Furber, for plaintiff, delivered to the drivers of defendants' teams at Markham 5,000 pounds of Superior binding twine, which was carried to and placed in defendants' warehouse; that shortly thereafter Chillson, acting for defendants, had occasion to examine same, and found it was not Deering twine, but was branded "Superior," another brand than that ordered by defendants, and they immediately took steps to determine whether or not Superior twine was in fact Deering twine, and learned that it was not, and was a cheaper and inferior article, and that immediately, on September 23d, they notified plaintiff that it was not Deering twine and asked for disposition of same as defendants could not use it; that Furber, plaintiff's president, then acknowledged it was not the twine ordered, but insisted that it was as good, if not better, and offered to guarantee the quality of it; that then defendants stated they could not, and would not, use the twine delivered as a substitute for what they had ordered, and again asked for disposition, and thereupon plaintiff, acting through its said president, admitted that it was not the twine ordered, and accepted the cancellation of the order, and admitted to defendants that they were not bound by reason of such fact, and that at all times the twine has been subject to plaintiff's order and well understood to be its property. It is not deemed necessary to state the substance of the plaintiff's supplemental pleading. The verdict was for plaintiff for the sum claimed.

Under the first seven assignments of error complaint is made of the admission of testimony by various witnesses to the effect that the twine which was delivered, and which was branded "Superior," was equally good as that branded "Deering," and was sold to the trade as such, for the objection that the petition contained no allegation to sustain such evidence, and because this suit was based upon an alleged specific contract for the purchase of "Deering" twine, which term was used by manufacturers to designate the quality and kind of twine, and such evidence was irrelevant to the issues made by the pleadings. There was evidence that the twine delivered was in one sense Deering twine, being manufactured by the Deering Manufacturing Company, though branded or stenciled "Superior." Plaintiff had not alleged that the twine sold or bought for defendants was to be an article that was branded by the manufacturers "Deering." Defendant raised this issue by its answer, but the answer, it seems to us, shows upon its face that the "brand" was not the determining fact. This is evident from defendant's allegation that "shortly after (after the twine was in defendants' warehouse) Chillson, acting for defendants, had occasion to examine the twine, and found that the same was not 'Deering' twine, but was branded 'Superior,' and was another and different brand than that ordered by defendants; that these defendants immediately took such steps as were necessary to determine whether or not 'Superior' twine was in truth and in fact Deering twine and learned that such was not the fact, but that 'Superior' twine was a cheaper and inferior grade of twine." This clearly indicates that the mere brand was not deemed by defendants as the essence of the contract, but that the grade or character and quality was, and this allegation was sustained by the testimony of Chillson. This narrowed the issue to that point. It is therefore idle to contend for these assignments.

The ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth assignments are as follows:

"(9) The court erred in giving in charge to the jury the second paragraph of the general charge as follows: 'If you believe that the plaintiff delivered to the defendants a brand of twine different from the "brand" contracted for, and you further believe that the twine delivered was of a quality equally as good as that contracted for, and you further believe that this "quality" and not the "brand" was the essence of the contract; and you further believe that defendants did not, within a reasonable time after discovering the difference in the brand of twine, return the same to the plaintiff—then you should find for plaintiff. But, on the other hand, if you believe that the "brand," and not the "quality," was the essence of the contract, and that the plaintiff did not comply with the contract, then you will find for defendants.'

"(10) The court erred in giving in charge to the jury plaintiffs' requested charge No. 2, reading as follows: 'At the request of the plaintiffs, you are instructed that the twine sold and delivered to the defendants by the plaintiffs was a different brand from the ordinary "Deering" twine, the subject-matter of the contract, but, if you believe from the evidence that the twine so delivered to the defendants was as good in quality as the ordinary "Deering," and that the defendants received the said twine and used a portion of it, and failed to return any part of said twine to plaintiffs at the delivery point, viz., Markham, Tex., then you are instructed that the defendants are liable for the purchase price thereof, and, if you so find, your verdict should be for the plaintiffs.'

"(11) The court erred in refusing to give in charge to the jury the defendants' requested charge No. 1, reading as follows: 'At the request of the defendants, you are charged that if you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff delivered twine to the teams of the defendants of another and different brand from that ordered, and failed to notify the defendants that it was delivering such brand, then that such delivery was at the risk of the plaintiff, and that the defendants were under no obligation to return said twine to the plaintiff, and the loss of said twine would be the loss of the plaintiff, and you are charged that, if you so believe, you must find for the defendants.'

"(12) The court erred in giving in charge to the jury the plaintiffs' special charge No. 1, reading as follows: 'At the request of the plaintiff, you are instructed that if you believe from the evidence that the defendants purchased the 5,000 pounds of twine from the plaintiff at the price and on the terms alleged in the petition, and you further believe that the defendants received the twine so purchased at the place of delivery agreed upon and carried the same away to their farm, and that said twine has never been returned to the plaintiff by the defendants, then you are instructed to find for the plaintiff."

As to the first of the above charges, inasmuch as the defendant, by its pleading and evidence, showed that its own construction of the contract was that the twine ordered was satisfied by a grade or quality of twine equal to that ordinarily marked or branded "Deering," and that the brand was not the test of their obligation under the contract, the charge was favorable to defendants, rather than otherwise; and the same is the case as to the second. The third, a requested charge, was for the same reason properly refused. The fourth was practically a peremptory charge for the plaintiff, because there was not a single fact stated therein which was not undisputed. It was undisputed that defendants purchased 5,000 pounds of twine from plaintiff, and at the price and terms alleged in the petition, and also that defendants received the twine at the place of delivery, and carried same away to their farm, and that it was never returned. The jury could not, if they regarded this particular instruction, have considered any of the rights of defendant based on the delivery of a different twine than that contracted for. This requires that the judgment be reversed.

In remanding the cause, it is proper that we state our views of the issues as made by the pleadings and evidence. It was shown by defendants that for a week or 10 days after delivery of the twine and the deposit of it in defendants' warehouse on their farm it was not examined by Chillson, defendants' manager, and, as soon as he did this and discovered, as he states, that it was not the twine ordered, he immediately notified plaintiffs of the fact, and declined to accept the goods, and asked what disposition to make of it, and this led, by correspondence, to an understanding between Chillson and Furber, plaintiff's president (though reluctantly by the latter), that the twine might be returned to plaintiff at Markham, but, before it was returned, the warehouse of defendant burned, and with it the twine. Upon this state of facts, we are of opinion that the latter arrangement amounted to nothing, inasmuch as the willingness of plaintiff to submit to the twine being returned contemplated its actual return at Markham, and this never took place. The right of plaintiff to recover, and the right of defendant to deny recovery, existed as if that arrangement had not been made. Therefore we say, if plaintiff performed its obligation by delivering twine substantially as contemplated by the contract, defendants have no reason to deny their liability. But, if the twine did not conform to what the contract meant, defendants had the right to reject it after a fair opportunity to examine it to find out its character. Whether or not defendants made the discovery of the defect and repudiated the transaction in a reasonable time under the circumstances would be a question for the jury, and, if they did not, they would be bound. Meacham on Agency, §§ 1380, 1381. But, if they did, it would be otherwise, and they would from that time hold the goods as warehousemen, and be liable for the loss only as such, and there was no evidence of negligence in this respect. We are of opinion that, if the twine was not what was bought, its delivery under the circumstances shown in the record was wrongful on the part of plaintiff, and defendants were not required to do more than notify plaintiff that they would not take the twine and would hold it subject to plaintiff's order. It was not necessary for them to have tendered it at Markham. There was, therefore, an issue of fact in the case whether or not defendants would be liable on the contract, even if the twine was not what the contract called for.

It seems to be thought that there was another theory on which defendants might be held, and this arose from certain testimony showing that about 700 or 800 pounds of the twine had, after discovery of its character, been issued to defendants' tenants. But the uncontroverted evidence was that this happened against the positive orders of the defendants, and was evidently a mere mistake, which should not be held an act of acceptance. Dauphiny v. Creamery Co., 123 Cal. 548, 56 Pac. 451. They would, however, be liable for the 700 or 800 pounds.

These views of the law relative to the pleadings and evidence in the case render it, we think, unnecessary for us to discuss the other assignments of error. But we should add that it was the duty of plaintiff on the arrival of the twine at Markham to notify defendants, and interest should be allowed plaintiff only from the time of such notification; and we also think that, inasmuch as plaintiff was acting as broker in behalf of defendants, any rebate plaintiff received from the factory on this transaction should inure to the benefit of defendants.

Appeal from District Court, McLennan County; Marshall Surratt, Judge.

Application for mandamus by Stephen Alfred Morse against the State Board of Medical Examiners. From a judgment dismissing the writ, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Baker & Thomas, for appellant. Scott, Sanford & Ross, for appellee.

KEY, J. Appellant, as relator, brought this suit against appellees, as respondents, whereby he sought a writ of mandamus to compel respondents to issue to him verification license to practice medicine. He alleged in his petition that he was legally licensed to practice medicine throughout the state of Texas on the 25th day of March, 1895, that he had presented such license to respondents, the State Board of Medical Examiners created under the act of April 17, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 224, c. 123), regulating the practice of medicine, and had in all other respects complied with the law, and that respondents had unlawfully refused to issue to him the verification license provided for in the act referred to. The answer of respondents, among other things, averred that relator had been guilty of grossly unprofessional or dishonorable conduct, of a character likely to deceive and defraud the public, setting forth in detail the conduct referred to, and assigned such conduct as their reason for refusing to issue to relator a verification license, and relied upon section 11 of the act referred to to support such refusal. By supplemental petition re-lator excepted to respondents' answer upon the ground that so much of the act referred to as attempted to authorize respondents to refuse to allow a license to practice medicine on account of "other grossly unprofessional or dishonorable conduct of a character likely to deceive or defraud the public" is void for the want of certainty and is retroactive in its effect. The trial court overruled relator's exceptions to respondents' answer and rendered judgment in favor of respondents, and relator has appealed and presents the case in this court upon three assignments of error, all of which present substantially the same question, which is the validity of that portion of the statute which authorizes respondents to refuse a license on account of grossly unprofessional or dishonorable conduct, etc.

The Thirtieth Legislature enacted a law intended to cover the whole subject of the practice of medicine in this state. Section 1 provides for the creation of a board of medical examiners for the state, the number and qualifications of its members, that the several schools of medicine shall be represented thereon, the manner of the appointment of the members, their term of office, etc. Section 2 provides for the organization and officers and meetings and internal government of the board. Section 3 provides for the keeping of the records of the board. Section 4 makes it unlawful for any person to practice medicine in the state except he first comply with the requirements of this act. Section 5 prescribes the manner and form of registration by the practitioner of his authority with the district clerk. Under section 6 it is made necessary for all lawful practitioners of medicine in the state to apply to said board and obtain from it a license, and also provides for reciprocity with other states. Sections 7-9 provide for the examination of applicants for licenses, who were not theretofore lawful practitioners. Section 10 names certain classes that are exempt from the operation of this act. Section 11 makes provision for the denial by the board of licenses, naming the causes for which such denial may be made. Section 12 provides for the revocation of licenses by the courts. Section 13 designates those who are subject to the provisions of this act. Section 14 prescribes the penalty for violation of the act. Section 15 specifies the time which will be allowed those who were theretofore lawful practitioners in which to obtain license. Section 16 defines the meaning of certain terms used in the act, and section 17 is the repealing clause. The section involved in this case reads as follows: "Sec. 11. The State Board of Medical Examiners may refuse to admit persons to its examinations or to issue the certificate provided for in this act for any of the following causes: First. The presentation to the board of any license, certificate or diploma which was illegally or fraudulently obtained, or when fraud or deception has been practiced in passing the examination. Second. Conviction of a crime of the grade of a felony or one which involves moral turpitude, or procuring or aiding or abetting the procuring of a criminal abortion. Third. Other grossly unprofessional or dishonorable conduct of a character likely to deceive or defraud the public; or for habits of intemperance or drug addiction calculated to endanger the lives of patients, provided that any applicant who may be refused admittance to examination before said board shall have his right of action to have such issue tried in the district court of the county in which some member of the board shall reside."

Appellant assails the first clause of the third subdivision of this section, the contention being that it is too general and uncertain, and therefore should be disregarded and the statute administered as though that clause was eliminated therefrom, and several cases have been cited in support of that contention, and especially Czarra v. Board of Medical Supervisors, 33 Wash. Law Rep. 470; Matthews v. Murphy (Ky.) 63 S. W. 785, 54 L. R. A. 415; Hewett v. Board of Medical Examiners, 148 Cal. 590, 84 Pac. 39, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315; School of Magnetic Healing v. McAnnulty, 187 U. S. 94, 23 Sup. Ct. 33, 47 L. Ed. 90; Ex parte McNulty, 77 Cal. 164, 19 Pac. 237, 11 Am. St. Rep. 257; Augustine v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. R. 59, 76, 52 S. W. 77, 96 Am. St. Rep. 765; State v. Gaster, 45 La. Ann. 636, 12 South. 789. In all these cases the proceedings complained of were for the purpose of canceling or revoking license to practice medicine, or were criminal prosecutions for alleged violation of penal statutes, while in this case appellant is not charged with violating any penal law, and it is not contended that appellees have attempted to cancel or revoke appellant's pre-existing license to practice medicine. An important distinction exists between granting a license and revoking a license, which distinction may justify the application of different rules of law. Many courts hold that the cancellation or revocation of a license to practice medicine constitutes a penalty; but such result does not follow from a refusal to grant such license. A license to practice medicine is a privilege or franchise granted by the government, and a refusal to grant such franchise, whatever the reason may be for such refusal, does not constitute a penalty. Furthermore, none of the statutes under consideration in the cases relied on by appellant are entirely analogous to the statute here involved. In the Czarra Case the statute authorized the board to refuse to grant and to revoke a license where the party was guilty "of unprofessional or dishonorable conduct," and that was an appeal from the action of the medical board revoking a license. The particular clause of the statute assailed in this case not only requires proof of unprofessional or dishonorable conduct, but it must be other grossly unprofessional or dishonorable conduct of a character likely to deceive or defraud the public. It is not unreasonable to conclude that, by the use of the word "other," the Legislature intended that the conduct referred to should be similar in its nature to that designated in the preceding subdivision of that section and defined as "a crime of the grade of a felony, or one which involves moral turpitude, or procuring or aiding or abetting the procuring of a criminal abortion." Not only that, but such conduct is further qualified by the use of the word "grossly." Furthermore, such conduct must not only be grossly unprofessional or dishonorable, but it must be of a character likely to deceive or defraud the public.

In none of the cases referred to have we found a statute as specific as ours, which restricts the condemned conduct to a certain specified class or kind, about which there can be much less room for disagreement among fair and just minds. It has been held, in construing a similar statute, that the language "unprofessional or dishonorable" was not intended to describe two classes of conduct, and that the word "unprofessional" was used in the same sense as "dishonorable," and not as signifying "unethical." State v. State Medical Examining Board, 32 Minn. 324, 20 N. W. 238, 50 Am. Rep. 575. We have reached the conclusion that the statute is not subject to the objection urged against it. Nearly if not all the states have statutes requiring applicants for license to practice either medicine or law to present satisfactory evidence of good moral character, and no case has been cited, and we know of none, in which it has ever been held that such a statute was invalid because of uncertainty. It would seem that statutes of the latter class afford as much room for difference of opinion as does the statute under consideration in this case.

While we have pointed out the fact that this case does not involve the revocation of a license or the imposition of any other penalty, we are not to be understood as holding that it would be invalid if the case was of the latter class and involved the question of penalty. Our federal anti-trust statute prescribes a penalty against every person entering into a contract or conspiracy "in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states or with foreign nations." Our state anti-trust statute makes it an offense, punishable by heavy penalty, to enter into a contract or conspiracy "to create or which may tend to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce or aids to commerce"; and both of these statutes have been unsuccessfully assailed upon the ground that they were too uncertain and indefinite. Waters-

Pierce Oil Co. v. State (Civ. App.) 106 S. W. 925, and cases there cited. In fact, unless it be permissible to use language as general as that involved in the statute under consideration, legislation in many instances could not be so framed as to accomplish all that was desired and afford full protection to the public, because of the impossibility of enumerating in detail every separate and distinct act intended to be prohibited.

In conclusion, the writer, speaking for himself only, deems it proper to add that he is strongly inclined to believe that, if appellant's contention be correct as to the construction to be placed upon the statute, nevertheless he has mistaken his remedy and should not prevail in this action. He has brought an action for a writ of mandamus, alleging that under one section of the statute referred to he is entitled to have the board grant to him a verification license. In reply the board answers that, by force of another section of the same statute invoked by appellant, the board had the power to refuse to grant such license for reasons specified in that section. Has appellant the right to invoke one section of the statute by which to compel appellees to do something which another section authorized them to refuse to do? In other words, can he, by affirmative action, and in a suit brought by him split the statute in two, and assert that part of it is valid and the other part invalid, and obtain affirmative relief founded upon such contention? On the contrary, it seems to me that his remedy would be to stand upon the defensive, and, when his right to practice medicine under his pre-existing license is challenged by any legal proceeding instituted for that purpose, to assert that his former license is not affected by the statute under consideration because of the objections urged against it in this case.

No error has been shown, and the judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

MAYO v. GOLDMAN.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 11, 1909.)

1. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§§ 9, 10*)—WORDS ACTIONABLE PER SE.

The rule that oral words, however opprobrious, are not actionable without proof of special damage, unless they impute the commission of a crime, is subject to the exception that such words affecting one injuriously in his office, profession, or occupation are actionable per se, regardless of the fact that they do not impute the commission of a crime.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 80-90, 41, 91-96; Dec. Dig. §§ 9, 10.*]

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 114*)—DAMAGES.

When words spoken are slanderous per se because imputing a crime or tending to injuriously affect complainant in his business, trade, or calling, he is entitled to at least nominal damages, if the speaking is not privileged, and the imputation conveyed is false.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 352; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

3. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 5*)—MALICE—PRESUMPTIONS.

In such case it is presumed that the words were spoken maliciously, in the absence of evidence tending to show the contrary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 278; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

4. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 10*)—WORDS SLANDEROUS PER SE.

To falsely impute to a clerk that he has been bribed to betray the confidence of his employer is per se slanderous.

5. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 124*)—MALICE—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for slander, where there was no evidence tending to show that the words as charged were used innocently, and were not intended to convey the imputation claimed for them, the court should in charging the jury have assumed that the words, if spoken at all, were spoken maliciously.

6. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 118*)—DAMAGES.

In an action for slander, where it appeared that plaintiff was not discharged by the company employing him as a result of the slanderous words used by defendant, but because defendant as president and manager of the company was dissatisfied with what he believed to be plaintiff's conduct while in the company's service, plaintiff was not entitled to recover anything because of his discharge.

Appeal from District Court, Lamar County; T. D. Montrose, Judge.

Action by Homer P. Mayo against Abe Goldman. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

See, also, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 80, 97 S. W. 1061.

Dudley & Dudley and B. B. Sturgeon, for appellant. Moore & Park, for appellee.

WILLSON, C. J. Appellee was the president and manager of the Goldman Grocer Company, a concern engaged in a wholesale grocery business in the city of Paris. Appellant was an employé of said company—a "utility man," he testified. His duty, it seems, was to keep his employer advised as to its stock and the market price of goods it handled. One Webber was a traveling salesman for dealers in grocers' specialties, including pickles, preserves, etc. In June, 1904, while in Paris, Webber endeavored to sell to appellant as the manager of the Goldman Grocer Company a car load of pickles, and during the negotiations, as claimed by appellee, presented to Mayo certain jellies, preserves, etc. The acceptance by Mayo of the gift, as claimed by appellee, was a violation, it seems, of the rules controlling in the conduct of the grocer company's business, and appellee protested against it. In doing so, according to the testimony on the part of appellant, appellee in the presence of Webber and other parties charged him (appellant) with having been bribed by Webber, and thereupon as president and manager of said grocer company discharged him from his employment for said company. On the ground that the charge was slanderous and had resulted in injury to him, appellant commenced and prosecuted the action for damages, resulting in the judgment in appellee's favor, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

The first assignment complains of the action of the court in instructing the jury, in effect, to find for appellee, notwithstanding they believed he had charged appellant with having been bribed, as alleged, unless they also believed that the charge was made maliciously. Appellant's contention is that the words alleged to have been spoken of and concerning him by appellee were slanderous per se, and therefore that it was immaterial, so far as his right to recover actual damages was concerned, whether they were spoken maliciously or not. We think the contention must be sustained. According to the testimony admitted on appellant's behalf, appellee, in an angry manner and in the presence of several parties, charged Webber with having bribed appellant, and charged appellant with having been bribed by Webber, and thereupon discharged him. The general rule is that "oral words, however opprobrious, are not actionable without proof of special damage, unless they impute to another the commission of a crime." 18 A. & E. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) pp. 908, 944, 965. To impute to a clerk that he has been bribed in connection with the discharge of duties he owes his employer does not charge him with a crime known to our laws, and therefore we are of the opinion that the imputation charged to appellee did not bring his case within the general rule. An exception, however, to the rule as well established, perhaps, as the rule itself, is that "words which affect a person injuriously in his office, profession, or occupation are actionable per se, though they are oral, regardless of the fact that they do not impute the commission of any crime." Id. p. 965. To impute to a clerk that he has been bribed to betray the confidence of his employer unquestionably tends to injure him in his vocation, and, if the imputation is false, it is per se slanderous. Fowles v. Bowen, 30 N. Y. 20; Railway Co. v. Richmond, 73 Tex. 573, 11 S. W. 555, 4 L. R. A. 280, 15 Am. St. Rep. 794. We understand the rule to be that when words spoken are per se slanderous, because they impute a crime or because they tend to injuriously affect the complainant in his business, or trade or calling, he is entitled to recover at least nominal damages, if the speaking thereof is not privileged, and if the imputation they convey is false. In such a case, in the absence of evidence tending to show the contrary, it will be presumed that the words were spoken maliciously. In the case we are considering there was no testimony tending to show that the words as charged, if used at all by appellee, were used jocularly or otherwise innocently, and were not intended to convey the imputation claimed for them. Hence an issue as to whether they were spoken maliciously or not was not raised by the evidence. Under such circumstances, in charging the jury, we think the court should have given effect to the presumption to be indulged in such cases by assuming that the words, if spoken at all, were spoken maliciously. Belo v. Fuller, 84 Tex. 450, 19 S. W. 616, 31 Am. St. Rep. 75; Ledgerwood v. Elliott, 51 S. W. 872; Brown v. Durham, 42 S. W. 331.

Another portion of the court's charge to the jury instructed them to find for appellee, notwithstanding they might believe he uttered the words as alleged, if they further believed that such words at the time and under the circumstances of their use "did not charge plaintiff with being bribed, or accepting a bribe," and were "not intended by defendant to injure plaintiff and charge him with acting dishonestly, and," the charge continued, "you believe from the evidence plaintiff suffered no injury therefrom, or if you believe from the evidence none of those present understood it as charging plaintiff with accepting a bribe, or being bribed, or of acting dishonestly, as alleged by plaintiff." The specific objection urged to such instructions is that, the words being per se actionable, appellant was entitled to recover "without proof of injury or special damages and without proof that defendant thereby intended to injure him." For reasons suggested in disposing of the first assignment, this contention on the part of the appellant also must be sustained. If, as we think is true, the words charged to have been spoken were per se slanderous and if they were spoken as charged, and the imputation they conveyed was a false one, appellant was entitled to recover at least nominal damages, without regard to appellee's intent in speaking them. 18 A. & E. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) p. 1088; Irwin v. Cook, 24 Tex. 244.

At appellee's request, the court instructed the jury, if they found for appellant, not to "allow him anything by reason of the fact that he lost employment with the Goldman Grocer Company." Appellant insists that the instruction was erroneous, "because Abe Goldman individually and as president of the Goldman Grocer Company are distinct legal entities, and loss of employment resulting from the slanderous words are recoverable." The assignment presenting this contention is overruled. Appellant, it appeared, was not discharged by the Goldman Grocer Company as a result and because of the use, as charged, by Goldman of the slanderous words, but because Goldman as the president and manager of the company was dissatisfied with what he believed to be his conduct while in the service of the company.

For the error referred to in the trial court's charge, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

WELLS v. HOBBS.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 4, 1909.)

1. WITNESSES (§ 140*)—COMPETENCY—TRANSACTIONS WITH DECEDENT — PERSONS EXCLUDED — PERSONS INTERESTED — HUSBAND AND WIFE.

In an action in the husband's name against an executor to recover on behalf of the community estate for services rendered testator, the wife is a real party in interest, and cannot testify to transactions by herself or her husband with decedent, unless called by the opposite party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 606; Dec. Dig. § 140.*]

2. WITNESSES (§ 159*)—COMPETENCY—TESTIMONY OF PARTIES AGAINST EXECUTORS—PERSONS EXCLUDED — PERSONS INTERESTED — HUSBAND AND WIFE—"TRANSACTIONS" WITH DECEDENT.

In an action in the husband's name against an executor to recover for services rendered testator, in which plaintiff's wife was in effect a party, the recovery being for the community estate, the wife testified that she rendered services for testator by milking, cooking, and performing other housework, and that her husband would take testator every place he wanted to go, and waited on him all over the place in tending to the stock, etc., and plaintiff testified that he cut wood, fed the cattle, put up the hay, etc., harnessed the buggy, and carried testator almost every place there was anything to see to, and that when he moved to testator's farm he took with him corn and pork and other provisions, and the corn was fed to his and testator's horses, and the other supplies, as well as groceries bought by plaintiff, were eaten by him and testator. 1 Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2302, provides that in actions against executors as such neither party can testify to transactions with testator unless called by the opposite party. Held, that the witness' testimony that her husband took testator every place he wanted to go, and waited on him all over the place in feeding, etc., and carried him almost every place there was anything to see to, as well as plaintiff's testimony that groceries purchased by him were used by testator, was as to "transactions" with testator, and not admissible, but the other testimony was admissible.

3. TRIAL (§ 85*)—OBJECTIONS—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE IN PART.

An objection to all of the testimony of a witness will be disregarded where a part of it is admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 223-225; Dec. Dig. § 85.*]

4. WITNESSES (§ 176*)—COMPETENCY—TESTIMONY AGAINST PERSONS REPRESENTED — CONVERSATION WITH DECEDENT.

In an action against an executor for services to testator, in which defendant's witness testified to a conversation with plaintiff, in which plaintiff stated the terms of his contract with testator and the latter's compliance therewith, testimony by plaintiff which merely gave a different version of such conversation with the witness, but did not refer to a different conversation with him, was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 717, 718; Dec. Dig. § 176.*]

5. WITNESSES (§ 183*)—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—CONVERSATION AS TO TRANSACTION WITH DECEDENT — DIFFERENT CONVERSATION.

In an action against an executor for services to testator, in which defendant's witness testified to a conversation with plaintiff, in which plaintiff stated the terms of his contract with testator and the latter's performance thereof, whether plaintiff's testimony that he had no such conversation with witness, but made other and different statements in a conversation with him, referred to a different conversation than that testified to by the witness so as to be inadmissible, was for the trial court's determination in ruling on its admissibility, where both plaintiff and such witness testified that they had only one conversation with each other on the subject, which occurred at the latter's house.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 781; Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

6. DAMAGES (§ 68*) — MEASURE — BREACH OF CONTRACT—VERBAL CONTRACT.

Interest is recoverable in an action for breach of a verbal contract, though not stipulated for in the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 141; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

7. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 431*)—ACTIONS AGAINST—PRESENTATION AND REJECTION OF CLAIM—NECESSITY—CLAIM FOR UNLIQUIDATED AMOUNT.

1 Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2082, providing that, when a claim for money against an estate is rejected by the executor, claimant may sue thereon and the executor's indorsements on the claim may be given in evidence to prove the facts stated therein without proof of his handwriting, unless denied under oath, does not require a claim for an unliquidated amount for services to testator, to be presented and rejected before suing the executor thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1679, 1681, 1682; Dec. Dig. § 431.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 843*) — REVIEW — QUESTIONS CONSIDERED—QUESTIONS UNNECESSARY TO DECISION.

Upon deciding, in an action against an executor for services rendered testator, that plaintiff's claim need not, under the statute, be presented to the executor and rejected before suing thereon, the appellate court need not decide whether the claim presented and rejected should have been excluded as evidence on the ground of variance between it and the account declared on in the petition.

Appeal from District Court, Lamar County; T. D. Montrose, Judge.

Action by John P. Hobbs against G. W. Wells, executor of James M. Braden, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Appellee was the plaintiff below. In his petition he alleged that appellant's testator, James M. Braden, deceased, in his lifetime, being old, infirm, almost helpless, and alone, undertook and agreed if he, appellee, and his wife, would move to his, Braden's, home, and care for him and for his property during the remainder of his life, to pay them well for so doing; that, relying upon such undertaking, he moved with his wife to Braden's home, and for 36 months thereafter remained there, caring for said Braden and managing his property; that during said 36 months he looked after Braden's farms and stock, collected rents due him, and generally superintended his entire business, and that during the same period his wife "attended to all the household duties, cooked, washed, and kept house for said Braden"; that at the expiration of said 36 months, to wit, on December 28, 1905, said Braden "discharged plaintiff and his wife from aforesaid employment," and they did not thereafter live with him; that the services specified performed by him and his wife for Braden reasonably were worth $50 per month, or, for the 36 months, $1,800; that said Braden died about November 15, 1906; and that after his death and after appellant had qualified as executor of his will he presented to appellant as such executor "his account for the sum of $1,800, duly verified, * * * which account was by said executor examined, rejected; he indorsing his rejection thereof on same." Appellee further alleged in his said petition that a time was not agreed upon as to when Braden was to pay for the services specified, but that "it was understood that, if it was not paid before, they would be fully compensated by said Braden in his will, but that in said will no provision whatever was made for same"; and he further alleged that "the amount due him under said contract became due and payable upon the breach thereof by the decedent, James M. Braden, to wit, on the 28th day of December, 1905." Appellant answered the petition by a general denial, and specially set up certain matters which need not be here stated.

The trial was before a jury. Over appellant's objection thereto, on the ground that same was a statement of transactions by and between appellee and his wife on one side and Braden on the other, about which he had not called her to testify, the court permitted Mrs. Hobbs to testify as follows: "I rendered services to Mr. Braden during the time we lived with him by milking, cooking, washing, and keeping house in general. I would help shuck corn sometimes and carry in wood. I washed Uncle Jimmie Braden's clothes, and washed for my family. His clothes were in very bad condition, as he was feeble and very nervous, and could not control himself very well. I washed his underclothes when he could not control his bowels. I performed the services above enumerated for three years. My husband would go with Uncle Jimmie, take him every place he wanted to go, and waited on him all over the place—that is, in feeding and tending to all of the stock and all outside work, everything. He did all the outside work that was done about the place." Over appellant's objection thereto on like ground, the court permitted appellee to testify as follows: "I done a good deal while I lived there. I could tell a heap of it. I hauled wood, cut wood. I fed cattle. I fed mules, collected rents, harnessed the old man's buggy, and carried him almost every place that there was anything to see to. I went with him. I attended to putting up hay. There was about 500 or 600 acres of meadow. I superintended the putting up of that hay while I was there. I have never received one cent in compensation for what I done while living on the Braden place." And further to testify as follows: "When I moved to Mr. Braden's place, I took there with me 300 bushels of corn, 1000 pounds of pork, some sugar and coffee. The corn was put into Mr. Braden's crib and fed out to my horses and his. The other supplies I carried there was cooked and eaten there. Supplies were furnished by me while I lived there. I bought them uptown at the grocer's. I could not state what proportion of the supplies used on the place was furnished by me." Appellant duly excepted to the action of the court in admitting as evidence the testimony quoted above. The trial was before a jury, and the appeal is from a judgment in favor of appellee for the sum of $471.40, interest and costs.

G. W. Wells and Allen & Dohoney, for appellant. J. S. Patrick and W. F. Moore, for appellee.

WILLSON, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). Appellant's first, second, and sixth assignments of error are predicated upon the action of the court in admitting as evidence the testimony of appellee and his wife quoted in the foregoing statement. If the testimony of Mrs. Hobbs referred to should have been excluded had she by name been a party to the suit, the fact that she was not such a party would not be a reason for overruling the objection to it. The recovery sought was on behalf of the community estate between herself and her husband, and therefore she was a real party to the suit. That the wife in such a suit cannot, unless called to do so by the opposite party, testify to transactions had by her or by her husband with the decedent, is not an open question in this state. It is settled that she cannot testify as to such transactions. Simpson v. Brotherton, 62 Tex. 170; Anglin v. Barlow (Tex. Civ. App.) 45 S. W. 827; Padlock v. Lewis, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 265, 35 S. W. 320; Hedges v. Williams, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 551, 64 S. W. 77. Her testimony therefore is to be treated as that of a party to the suit, and its admissibility must be determined with reference to the rules applicable to the testimony of appellee, her husband.

The statute declares that "in actions by or against executors * * * in which judgment may be rendered for or against them as such, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with, or statement by the testator * * * unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party." 1 Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2302. Was the testimony of appellee or that of his wife as quoted as to a transaction or transactions by either of them with Braden? We think it must be answered that portions of the testimony of each clearly were as to such transactions. "My husband," Mrs. Hobbs testified, "would go with Uncle Jimmie (Braden), take him every place he wanted to go, and waited on him all over the place—that is, in feeding and tending to all of the stock and all outside work, everything." Going with Braden, taking him from place to place and waiting on him, when sought to be made the basis of a recovery of compensation therefor, certainly were "transactions with" Braden. So, as clearly, was carrying him "most every place that there was anything to see to," as testified to by appellee, a transaction by him with Braden. Garwood v. Schlicheumaier, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 176, 60 S. W. 574; Williams v. Walden, 82 Ark. 136, 100 S. W. 900; Abbott v. Stiff (Tex. Civ. App.) 81 S. W. 563; Johnson v. Lockhart, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 32, 40 S. W. 640. And, while not so well satisfied about it, we think appellee's testimony that groceries purchased by him were used by Braden also was within the inhibition of the statute. The remainder of the testimony of appellee and his wife admitted as evidence over appellant's objection we think was not inadmissible on the ground stated. It was as to what the witnesses, respectively, did, and not as to "transactions with" the decedent. Potter v. Wheat, 53 Tex. 408. The testimony of Mrs. Hobbs as quoted having been objected to in its entirety, and portions of same being admissible and other portions inadmissible, did the court err in overruling the objection thereto and in admitting the testimony as evidence? We think not. The rule seems to be that "if the exception goes to the whole of the testimony complained of, and a part is admissible, the objection to the evidence will not be considered." Dolan v. Meehan (Tex. Civ. App.) 80 S. W. 101; Railway Co. v. Frazier (Tex. Civ. App.) 87 S. W. 400; Railway Co. v. Cuneo (Tex. Civ. App.) 108 S. W. 718; Wandelohr v. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 106 S. W. 416; Tuttle v. Moody, 100 Tex. 240, 97 S. W. 1067; Rhodes-Haverty Furniture Co. v. Henry (Tex. Civ. App.) 67 S. W. 341; Railway Co. v. Hall, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 464, 72 S. W. 1053; Moore v. Bank, 38 U. S. 302, 10 L. Ed. 173. For a like reason—that is, because a portion of it was admissible—the court did not err in overruling appellant's objection to the testimony of appellee quoted in said statement. The assignments specified therefore must be overruled.

One Crow and his son having testified to a conversation they asserted they had had with appellee, in the course of which appellee made certain statements tending to show the terms of the contract between himself and Braden and a compliance by the latter with his obligations thereunder, appellee, after testifying that he had had no such conversations with the Crows as the one recounted by them, over appellant's objection, was permitted to further testify as to other and different statements which he asserted he had made to the Crows in a conversation between himself and them. The grounds of appellant's objection were that the conversation testified to by appellee was another and different one from that testified to by the Crows, was self-serving, and within the inhibition of the statute above referred to, because it detailed transactions by appellee with the decedent, Braden, and as well statements by him in regard to such transactions. If the conversation testified to by appellee was not the conversation testified to by the Crows, the objection interposed by appellant to appellee's testimony should have been sustained. But the elder Crow and appellee both testified that they had never had more than one conversation with each other involving matters they respectively were testifying about, and each denied that the conversation as detailed by the other ever occurred. If the testimony objected to, instead of referring to another and different conversation, was appellee's version of the conversation testified to by the Crows, we think it was admissible. 1 Elliott on Ev. § 241, p. 351; 1 Ency. of Ev. p. 608, note; Railway Co. v. Frazier (Tex. Civ. App.) 87 S. W. 400; Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Dorrough, 107 Fed. 398, 48 C. C. A. 364. It was competent for appellee, not only to deny the statements in the conversation attributed to him by the Crows, but also to support such denial by giving his version of the conversation. Whether the testimony objected to referred to the conversation detailed by the Crows or to another conversation presented a question for determination by the trial court in ruling on the admissibility of said testimony. The sufficiency of the predicate laid to justify the admission of the testimony is attacked in no other way than by an assumption in the assignment that it was shown that the conversation recounted by appellee occurred at a time and place different from the time and place when and where the conversation recounted by the Crows occurred. We do not think it so indisputably appears from the record. Both the Crows and appellee testified that the conversation they respectively recounted occurred at the elder Crow's home. The time it occurred was fixed by the Crows as in April, 1905, while appellee by his testimony did not fix a time. In the condition stated of the record we think the assignment should be overruled.

The trial court did not err in instructing the jury, if they found for appellee, to find in his favor as interest 6 per cent. on the sum they believed to be due to him by Braden on December 28, 1905. Appellant's contention, based on the ruling in Close v. Fields, 2 Tex. 238, that, unless stipulated for, interest is not recoverable in a suit for a breach of a verbal contract, cannot be sustained in view of the holding in Watkins v. Junker, 90 Tex. 586, 40 S. W. 11, and other cases. See Weaver v. Goodman (Tex. Civ. App.) 51 S. W. 862; Railway Co. v. Timon, (Tex. Civ. App.) 110 S. W. 83; Railway Co. v. Graves, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 375, 101 S. W. 488. In support of the allegation in his petition that he had presented to appellant as Braden's executor an account for $1,800 covering the services on which he sought a recovery, and that appellant as such executor had rejected same, appellee offered as evidence an account, and the indorsement thereon, as follows:

"Estate of James M. Braden to J. P. Hobbs, Dr. To services rendered from December 28th, 1902, to December 28th, 1905, 36 months, at $50 per month, said time being employed in superintending his farms, stock, and managing his business for him, under an agreement made by the said James M. Braden, to pay said Hobbs and his wife, and pay them well if they would move to his home and care for him, $1,800.

"The State of Texas, County of Lamar. Before the undersigned authority this day personally appeared J. P. Hobbs, who, on oath, says that the attached claim of Eighteen Hundred Dollars, against the estate of James M. Braden, deceased, is just, and that all legal offsets, payments and credits, known to affiant, have been allowed. J. P. Hobbs.

"Sworn to and subscribed before me, this 17th day of April, A. D. 1907. Wm. Hodges, Notary Public, Lamar Co., Tex.

"The within claim of J. P. Hobbs against the J. M. Braden estate having been presented to me for allowance, I hereby reject the same. G. W. Wells, Executor of the J. M. Braden Estate."

The court admitted the account as evidence, over appellant's objection thereto on the ground that there was a variance between it and the account declared upon in the petition, in that the account offered as evidence was only for services rendered to Braden in superintending his farms and managing his business, while the account declared upon was also for certain personal services, manual labor, etc., alleged to have been performed for Braden by appellee and his wife. After the court had admitted as evidence the account offered by appellee, appellant asked the court "to strike from the record, exclude, and withdraw from the jury all testimony of said plaintiff (appellee) and his wife Mrs. Hobbs as to personal services rendered said Braden by Mrs. Hobbs and work and labor performed by her for him, and all testimony as to manual labor and work performed by plaintiff for said Braden and all services rendered by plaintiff in the way of waiting upon him and personal care and attention rendered by plaintiff to said Braden," upon the ground that the account proven to have been presented to and rejected by him as executor "did not contain any charge for such labor, personal care, and attention and services, but was only for services rendered by plaintiff in superintending said Braden's farms and stock and managing his business for him." The court overruled the motion, and also refused to instruct the jury, as appellant requested him to do, not to find for appellee anything on account of his wife's services "in keeping house for and waiting upon Braden, nor for manual labor and services rendered said Braden by plaintiff."

In passing upon the assignments presenting for revision the action of the court in the particulars just stated, it is proper first to determine whether the claim made the basis of appellee's suit was such a claim as must have been rejected by the executor before a suit could be maintained on it. 1 Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1895, art. 2082; Thompson, Adm'r, v. Branch's Adm'r, 35 Tex. 25; Ballard v. Murphy (Tex. App.) 15 S. W. 42. The claim was "for money against an estate"; and the amount, if any, justly due appellee on it, though unliquidated, was capable of ascertainment by proof made in the ordinary way. If we regarded the question presented as an open one, keeping in mind the purposes of the statute (Graham v. Vining, 1 Tex. 644; Garrett v. Gaines, 6 Tex. 441), we would be strongly inclined to hold the claim to be one which must have been presented to and rejected by the executor before the suit could be maintained. But it seems to be settled that claims for unliquidated amounts need not be so presented and rejected as a prerequisite to the holder's right to sue thereon. Evans v. Hardeman, 15 Tex. 483; Ferrill's Adm'r v. Mooney's Ex'r, 33 Tex. 224; Sutton v. Page, 4 Tex. 142; King's Adm'r v. Cassidy's Adm'r, 36 Tex. 538; Blum v. Welborne, 58 Tex. 159. In the Evans-Hardeman Case, cited above, Evans had located a land certificate for Hardeman, and for his services was to have one-half of the land. The location as made was not satisfactory to Hardeman, but he accepted it as a performance on the part of Evans of his obligation under the contract between them covering the location of the certificate on Evans' guaranty to him of $1 per acre for his part of the land located. Evans expected to negotiate a sale of the land in New York, but died before he had done so. The suit was by Hardeman against Evans' administrator on Evans' guaranty for the difference between the market value of the land and its value at $1 per acre. Hardeman having recovered a judgment, on appeal it was objected that his claim had not been presented to Evans' administrator before the suit thereon was commenced. In disposing of this objection the court said: "It is a sufficient answer that the petition was framed with a double aspect in respect to the relief sought. In the aspect in which it was maintainable, and was maintained, it was a demand for uncertain or unliquidated damages, being the amount which the land fell short in value of the sum of $1 per acre, and being a sum which was uncertain, and could only be rendered certain by proof, it was not necessary that it should have been presented to the administrator for allowance." In Ferrill's Adm'r v. Mooney's Ex'r, supra, the action was to recover the value of certain hogs belonging to the Ferrill estate alleged to have been killed by Mooney in his lifetime. The claim had been presented to and rejected by Mooney's executor, but suit thereon had not been commenced within 90 days after it was so rejected, as was required by the statute. In passing upon a question made as to whether it was necessary that the claim should have been presented to and rejected by the executor before a suit thereon could be maintained, the court said: "The words 'claim for money' have received the construction of this court to mean liquidated claims. Hall v. McCormick, 7 Tex. 275. It certainly could not be in the minds of the Legislature to cause a party to make oath as to the amount due on a claim upon which there had been no agreement between the parties, and thus open a door to perjury, and to favor a person in an inverse ratio to his conscience." If, as seems to be the case, the effect of the decisions cited is to hold the statute operative only when the claim for money is a liquidated one, it is clear that appellee's claim was not within the statute, and, as a prerequisite to a suit thereon, need not have been rejected by appellant as Braden's executor. As, out of respect to what we believe to be the construction placed upon the statute by the Supreme Court in the cases cited above, we feel constrained to hold that the claim sued upon was one which need not have been presented to the executor, it is unnecessary to determine whether on the grounds urged the claim rejected by the executor should have been excluded as evidence or not.

We do not think the charge of the court was erroneous in the particular pointed out in the eighth assignment, nor do we think the court erred in refusing to give to the jury the special charge requested by appellant, referred to in his tenth assignment. Both of said assignments therefore are overruled, as is also the twelfth, which questions the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict of the jury. The evidence as it appears in the record we think is sufficient to support the amount found in appellee's favor.

The judgment is affirmed.

BLEDSOE v. HANEY.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 24, 1909.)

1. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 54*)—ADMISSIBILITY OF INSTRUMENT IN EVIDENCE—"ACKNOWLEDGED IN THE MANNER PROVIDED BY THE LAWS," ETC.

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2312, provides for the introduction of every instrument which is permitted or required to be recorded, and which has been recorded after being "acknowledged in the manner provided by the laws in force at the time of its registration." Held, that the quoted words mean not only that the certificate of acknowledgment itself must be formal, but also that the officer taking the same must have had authority to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 278, 279; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

2. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 6*)—EVIDENCE.

Under Act April 23, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 308, c. 165), amending Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2312, providing that after an instrument has been recorded for 10 years it shall be no objection to its admission in evidence, or to that of a certified copy thereof, that the certificate of acknowledgment is not in form and substance such as required by law, a deed, or certified copy thereof, which has been recorded for 10 years, is admissible in evidence whether duly acknowledged or not.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. § 57; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 805*)—TAX TITLE—LIMITATIONS.

The possession of land under a tax deed is not adverse to the owner during the two years within which the land may be redeemed, and limitations do not run during that time.

Appeal from District Court, Lubbock County; L. S. Kinder, Judge.

Action by Jasper N. Haney against W. E. Bledsoe. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Geo. L. Beatty and John R. McGee, for appellant. Bean & Klett, H. C. Randolph, and Dillard & Dillard, for appellee.

RICE, J. This is an action of trespass to try title, brought in the usual form by appellee against appellant for the title and possession of 80 acres of land in Lubbock county, Tex. The defendant answered by plea of not guilty and the five-year statute of limitations. The case was tried by the court without a jury, resulting in a judgment in favor of appellee, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

The appellee showed title from the sovereignty of the soil to himself by deeds properly recorded, and the judgment rendered in his favor is proper, provided the action of the court was correct in excluding a deed offered in evidence by appellant, showing an outstanding legal title in one Thomas W. Campbell to the land in controversy, or the conclusion of the court to the effect that the statute of limitations did not apply.

Appellant contends by his first assignment that the trial court erred in refusing to admit in evidence the deed from Charles W. Lindley and Marian T. Lindley, his wife, purporting to convey said land to Thomas W. Campbell, dated the 14th day of February, 1881, and recorded in the proper county on the 24th of February next thereafter, contending by his proposition thereunder that, if the same had been so admitted, it would have shown a conveyance of an outstanding legal title to the land in controversy to said Campbell, long prior to the time when plaintiff acquired the deed under which he claims from said Lindley. On the trial the defendant offered in evidence a deed from Lindley and wife of Park county, in the state of Indiana, conveying the land involved to Thomas W. Campbell. This deed was acknowledged by Lindley and wife before John J. Woody, a justice of the peace in and for said county on the 14th day of February, 1881, and duly recorded on the 24th day of February, 1881, in the proper county; but the certificate of acknowledgment was defective and not in accordance with our statute. At the time this acknowledgment was taken, no officer was authorized outside of this state to take acknowledgments to deeds of lands in this state, except a notary public, the clerk of a court of record, or a commissioner of deeds for this state. Appellee therefore contends that the action of the court in excluding said deed so offered in evidence was correct; said acknowledgment having been taken by an Indiana justice of the peace who was not authorized so to do. But appellant insists that, notwithstanding this fact, the same should have been admitted in evidence, because the act of the Thirtieth Legislature approved April 23, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 308, c. 165), so changed the law as to permit its introduction, by providing for the admission in evidence of any deed which may have been actually recorded for a period of 10 years in the proper county, irrespective of whether the same was proved or acknowledged in the manner provided by the laws of this state or not. The act in question reads as follows, to wit:

"Section 1. That article 2312 of the Revised Civil Statutes of the State of Texas, be and the same is hereby amended so as hereafter to read as follows, to wit: "Art. 2312. Every instrument of writing which is permitted or required by law to be recorded in the office of the clerk of the county court, and which has been or hereafter, may be so recorded, after being proved or acknowledged in the manner provided by the laws of this state in force at the time of its registration, or at the time it was proved or acknowledged, or every instrument which has been or hereafter may be actually recorded for a period of ten years in the book used by said clerk for the recording of such instruments, whether proved or acknowledged in such manner or not, shall be admitted as evidence in any suit in this state without the necessity of proving its execution; provided no claim adverse or inconsistent to the one evidenced by such instrument shall have been asserted during that ten years; provided, that the party to give such instrument in evidence shall file the same among the papers of the suit in which he proposes to use it, at least three days before the commencement of the trial of such suit, and give notice of such filing to the opposite party or his attorney of record; and unless such opposite party, or some other person for him, shall, within three days before the trial of the cause, file an affidavit stating that he believes such instrument of writing to be forged. And whenever any party to a suit shall file among the papers of the cause an affidavit stating that any instrument of writing, recorded as aforesaid, has been lost, or that he cannot procure the original, a certified copy of the record of any such instrument shall be admitted in evidence in like manner as the original could be. And after such instrument shall have been actually recorded as herein provided for a period of ten years, it shall be no objection to the admission of same, or a certified copy thereof, as evidence, that the certificate of the officer who took such proof or acknowledgment, is not in form or substance such as required by the laws of this state, and said instrument shall be given the same effect as if it were not so defective.

"Sec. 2. The fact that there are no adequate laws to relieve persons whose titles to their lands have been clouded by insufficient acknowledgments and proofs taken and made by ignorant and incompetent officers, creates an imperative public necessity for the suspension of the constitutional rule requiring bills to be read on three several days, and an emergency exists that this act take effect and be in force from and after its passage, and it is so enacted."

It will be observed that the first clause of said act is not essentially different from the old law. The second clause, however, provides for a different contingency entirely from the first, and seems to permit the introduction in evidence of every instrument which has been or may hereafter be actually recorded for a period of 10 years in the record of deeds by the clerk, irrespective of whether the same may have been proven or acknowledged in the manner required by law or not, provided no claim adverse or inconsistent with the one evidenced by such instrument shall have been asserted during that 10 years.

The question therefore for consideration is: What is meant by this new clause, and what construction must be given to its words? It is evident that the Legislature intended to make a radical departure from the system prevailing in the introduction of recorded instruments in evidence at the time of its adoption. The old law (article 2312 of the Revised Statutes) permitted the introduction in evidence of every instrument of writing which was permitted or required by law to be recorded in the office of the clerk of the county court, and which has been or may be so recorded after being proven or acknowledged "in the manner provided by the laws in force at the time of its registration," and the expression "in the manner provided by the laws in force at the time of its registration" has been oftentimes construed to mean, not only that the certificate itself must be formal, but that the officer taking the same must have the authority and power so to do, and, if it appeared from the certificate that the officer taking the same was not so authorized, the instrument so offered would be rejected, notwithstanding the fact it may have been duly recorded.

In Craddock v. Merrill, 2 Tex. 494, Judge Lipscomb, speaking with reference to the execution of a bond, where the same was attested by two subscribing witnesses and where there had been no effort to prove the execution by either of said witnesses, nor was any evidence offered that said testimony could not be procured, it having been admitted to record on the certificate of the officer who certified that he was the presiding judge of the county court of Searcy county in the state of Arkansas, before whom the same was acknowledged, said: "There seems to be an insuperable objection to the admissibility of the evidence as offered. It was not proven in any way required by the laws of this state, nor in accordance with the known rules of evidence. It was not proven that the subscribing witnesses were dead or beyond the jurisdiction of the court, so that their testimony could not be had. This was an essential requisite to open the way for secondary evidence. The bond acquired no authenticity from having been in point of fact recorded, because it was not proven in the mode required for its admission to record. It was not acknowledged before any officer known to our laws, nor was it proven by one of the subscribing witnesses," etc. So, here, it was held that the execution of the bond was not proven in the manner required by the laws of this state, and therefore it was not admissible in evidence; thus holding that the words "not proven in the manner required by the laws of this state" not only had reference to the manner of the taking of the acknowledgment, but went farther, and embraced the authority of the officer who took the same. Mr. Webster defines the word "manner" as: "Mode of action; way of performing or effecting anything; method; style; form or fashion." In the Century Dictionary (volume 5) it is said the word "manner" means, first: "The way in which an action is performed; method of doing anything; mode of proceeding in any case or situation; mode; way; method."

So, it seems to us, the expression "whether proved or acknowledged in such manner or not," used in the new statute, was certainly intended by the lawmakers to have the same force and effect as the same expression in the old statute, and we have seen that in the old this expression was held to apply, not only to the formality of certifying what was done by the officer, but as well to the power of the officer to take acknowledgment of the person to the instrument. Besides, if we give to these words their usual and ordinary signification and the meaning attached to them by the lexicographers, the expression must be held, in our judgment, to mean the way in which acknowledgments had formerly been taken—the mode of proceeding in such cases, which the Legislature seems to have intended to dispense with. The last clause of the first section of this act, which provides that it shall be no objection to the admission of the same or certified copy thereof as evidence that the certificate of the officer who took such proof or acknowledgment is not, in form or substance, such as required by the laws of this state, and such instrument shall be given the same effect as if it were not so defective, does not, we think, militate against this position, but rather tends to strengthen it, as this clause refers alone to the character of the certificate to the instrument, and does not relate to the authority of the officer taking it. We therefore hold that by this act the Legislature clearly intended to provide for the introduction in evidence of deeds which have been recorded in the proper office, under two separate and distinct conditions: First, every instrument which may have been recorded after being properly acknowledged, as required by law, before the proper officer; second, every instrument which had been actually recorded for a period of 10 years, whether the same had been properly acknowledged in accordance with law or not. So believing, we sustain said assignment, and hold that the court erred in excluding said deed.

By his third assignment of error appellant insists that the court erred in holding that appellee's alleged cause of action was not barred by the statute of limitation of five years, pleaded and proven by the defendant on the trial of this case. Appellant introduced in evidence a tax deed from the sheriff of Lubbock county conveying the land in controversy to Geo. L. Beaty, of date May 7, 1901, and duly registered on the 18th day of July, 1901; a deed from Beaty purporting to convey the same land to himself, of date January 3, 1903, filed for record same day and duly recorded January 5, 1903, and showed that he and his vendor had said land inclosed and actually and continuously used and occupied the same, claiming title thereto during the period covered thereby, and had paid all taxes thereon for the years 1900 to 1907, inclusive. The suit was filed June 19, 1907, thus embracing a period of more than seven years that he had held same before the filing of this suit. Appellee contends, however, that the ruling of the court holding that the statute of limitations did not apply to and therefore bar him of the right of recovery was correct, for the reason that appellant's claim was based on a tax deed from the sheriff to Beaty, and that in such cases the five-year statute of limitations did not begin to run until two years after the execution of said sheriff's deed to Beaty, during which time the owner of said land had the right of redemption, and that such period of two years should be excluded from the computation. If this is true, then it appears that defendant's holding was not for a period of five years, as contemplated by the statute. We are inclined to agree with appellee in this contention, and to hold that the court did not err in this respect. In the case of Beatty v. O'Harrow, 109 S. W. 414, in which a writ of error was denied by the Supreme Court, it was held, as shown by the syllabus thereof, that the possession by a purchaser of land sold for taxes is not adverse to the owner during the two years from the execution of the deed within which the land may be redeemed, and limitation does not begin to run against the owner before the expiration of the redemption period, citing in support thereof Davis v. Hurst, 14 S. W. 610, which last decision was approved by the Supreme Court. The law provides that the owner, during said two years, shall have the right to redeem, and during such period it is evident that there can be no adverse holding under the statute of limitation. The action of the court holding that the statute was not applicable is correct. We therefore overrule this assignment.

On account, however, of the error heretofore pointed out, the judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause remanded. Reversed and remanded.

MISSOURI, K. & T. RY. CO. OF TEXAS v. GRAVES.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 6, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 92*)—ACCIDENT TO RAILROAD EMPLOYÉ—NEGLIGENCE IN PROVIDING MEDICAL ATTENTION.

A railroad employé contributed monthly to a fund for the relief of injured employés under a contract with the railroad company. An accident to such employé happened about 6 p. m., and he was not carried to the place where the company's nearest local surgeon resided till next morning about 6 or 8 a. m., and no effort was made to have him conveyed there, though there was an engine at hand on which he might have been taken within two or three hours after the accident. Held, that it was defendant's duty, notwithstanding a rule of its hospital department requiring removal of injured employés on the first train, to have exercised ordinary care to have carried plaintiff to such place within a reasonable time after his injury, or to have provided him with as skillful treatment where he was as he would have received if he had been carried on the first train pursuant to such rule.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 143; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 293*)—ACCIDENT TO RAILROAD EMPLOYÉ—NEGLIGENCE IN PROVIDING MEDICAL ATTENTION—INSTRUCTIONS.

There being evidence warranting the jury in concluding that a rule pursuant to which plaintiff was carried by the first train to the place where defendant's nearest local surgeon resided was reasonable, and that a competent physician and surgeon gave plaintiff prompt and proper medical attention at the place where he was hurt, such as he would have received at the hands of defendant's local surgeon, and that the latter in conjunction with another, within a reasonable time after his arrival on the train, gave him proper attention, it was error to refuse a charge exonerating defendant from liability if the evidence established such a state of facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1148; Dec. Dig. § 293.*]

3. DEPOSITIONS (§ 75*)—SUFFICIENCY OF CERTIFICATE.

The caption of a deposition recited that, pursuant to the commission and interrogatories, a notary summoned the witness before him, and that he was "first duly sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth." Then followed the answers to the direct interrogatories, signed "W. C. G., Witness," with the following jurat: "Subscribed and sworn to before me," etc. Following answers to cross-interrogatories were likewise signed, followed by a jurat identical with the last quoted. The notary's certificate showed that defendant "was by me duly sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth in the case mentioned in the caption"; that the deposition was reduced to writing on a typewriter by the notary in the presence of defendant, who subscribed the same in the notary's presence, etc. Held, that the statutory requirement that the certificate, either alone or considered with the caption, must show that answers to the interrogatories and cross-interrogatories were signed and sworn to by the witness before the officer taking the deposition, was not complied with.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Depositions, Cent. Dig. §§ 182-189; Dec. Dig. § 75.*]

4. COURTS (§ 91*)—PREVIOUS DECISION OF SUPREME COURT CONTROLLING IN COURT OF CIVIL APPEALS.

It is the duty of the Court of Civil Appeals to follow rulings of the Supreme Court, though it might have reached a different conclusion had the question been presented as an original proposition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 325, 326; Dec. Dig. § 91.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 512*)—EXPERT OPINION AS TO MEDICAL TREATMENT.

While expert testimony is admissible to prove the character of treatment which should be given a patient, or the probable effect of the lack thereof, the opinion of an expert as to whether another physician should or should not have gone to a patient under particular circumstances is inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2316; Dec. Dig. § 512.*]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 270*)—INJURY TO RAILROAD EMPLOYE—NEGLIGENCE IN PROVIDING MEDICAL ATTENTION—EVIDENCE.

In a suit against a railroad for negligence in providing an injured employe with medical attention, the testimony of a witness that at plaintiff's request he notified defendant's local agent of the injury was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 913; Dec. Dig. § 270.*]

7. EVIDENCE (§ 317*)—HEARSAY—STATEMENTS BY PERSON OTHER THAN PARTY TESTIFYING.

In a suit against a railroad for negligence in providing an injured employe with medical attention, testimony of plaintiff that in reply to messages sent to defendant's local agent a third person told him, shortly after he was injured, that the agent would have a train up from the place where defendant's nearest local surgeon resided at 9 o'clock that night, and take him there; that after he failed to get out at 9 o'clock he had such person make from three to six trips to the agent; and that, in response to messages sent to the agent by this person on these trips, the latter told him that the agent said, "They would have a train and that it should have gone," and also, "We will have a train stop at a certain street and give four blasts of the whistle and wait until he (plaintiff) can be carried on the cot; that he had gone to his house and got a cot to put him on early in the evening." Held, that the testimony was hearsay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1174-1192; Dec. Dig. § 317.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 556*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—HEARSAY—STATEMENTS IN MEDICAL BOOKS.

In a suit against a railroad for negligence in providing medical attention for an employe, injured in the knee, a physician testifying for plaintiff was permitted, after stating that a compound comminuted fracture not receiving proper attention for a period of 15 hours would be a great deal more likely, if not practically certain, to become infected, and by reason of the weakened condition of the patient render him more easily a prey to septic germs, and that these germs multiply rapidly in a proper soil like blood and serum, and to further state "so that from a single germ, according to Koch, in 24 hours more than 8,000,000 would develop. They divide themselves by fission once every hour." Held, that this testimony was hearsay; the witness' statement not purporting to be an expression of his own opinion or knowledge of the subject on which he was speaking, but that of the person Koch.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2377; Dec. Dig. § 556.*]

9. TRIAL (§ 260*)—REFUSAL OF SPECIAL CHARGES COVERED BY MAIN CHARGE AND OTHER SPECIAL CHARGES GIVEN.

No error can be predicated on the refusal of special charges sufficiently covered by the court's main charge and other special charges given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 651; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

10. TRIAL (§ 233*)—MISLEADING INSTRUCTIONS—STATEMENT AS TO ISSUES WITHDRAWN.

To avoid the probability of misleading the jury, they should not be instructed that all other issues raised by the pleadings, other than those submitted, are withdrawn from their consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 527-530; Dec. Dig. § 233.*]

Appeal from District Court, Hill County; W. C. Wear, Judge.

Action by George W. Graves against the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Coke, Miller & Coke and Ramsey & Odell, for appellant. C. B. Stuart and Collins & Cummings, for appellee.

TALBOT, J. Appellee sued appellant to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by him on account of the loss of his leg as a result of the negligence of appellant in not using reasonable diligence to provide him with proper medical and surgical attention after he had received an accidental injury resulting in the fracture of the kneecap of said leg. The petition alleged that on the 12th day of May, 1907, plaintiff was, and had been for some time, in the employ of the defendant in the capacity of chief clerk in its offices in the city of Hillsboro, Hill County, Tex., and that among other duties it was his duty, especially in the absence of the defendant's local agent at Hillsboro in case of a wreck along defendant's line of railway where the property of defendant was in danger of being damaged or destroyed, etc., to go to the scene of such wreck and assist in the preservation of its property; that on said 12th day of May, 1907, a serious wreck occurred on defendant's line of railway at Milford, a small station about 15 miles north from Hillsboro, in which much of its property was damaged and destroyed; that the plaintiff, on hearing of said wreck, defendant's local agent at Hillsboro being absent, went at once to Milford for the purpose of caring for the property of defendant, and, while viewing the wreck from the top of a freight car which had been overturned, he received the injury to his knee. It was further alleged that at the time plaintiff entered the service of the defendant he entered into a contract with the defendant, by the terms of which the defendant agreed, in consideration of its retaining 50 cents each and every month out of the plaintiff's salary for hospital fees and medical attention, that it would, in case of injury to or sickness of the plaintiff while in the discharge of his duties from any cause, immediately convey the plaintiff to a hospital or to a place where he could receive proper medical and surgical attention, and that in case the plaintiff, by reason of any such injury or sickness, should be in such condition as that he could not be removed by the means at hand, he should be placed in charge of the local agent and cared for until the arrival of the nearest local surgeon, whose duty it would then become to go immediately equipped with necessary and proper apparatus and medicines to give plaintiff such medical and surgical attention as the injury or sickness should require; that plaintiff relied upon said contract, and consented for the defendant to retain, and defendant did retain, each month for a period of five years while plaintiff was in its employ, including the month in which he was injured, 50 cents from his salary to defray the expense of medical attention and treatment, etc., in the event he should become sick or injured; that, immediately after receiving the injury mentioned, he caused the defendant's local agent at Milford and its nearest local surgeon, Dr. J. W. Miller of Hillsboro, to be notified of his said injury and the necessity for immediate surgical attention; that notwithstanding it was only 15 miles from Milford to Hillsboro, at which last-named place were situated competent surgeons and suitable surroundings for sanitary treatment, which were not available at Milford, Tex., and notwithstanding that defendant had idle engines and crews at Hillsboro which it could have used either for the purpose of conveying the appellee to Hillsboro or for conveying its local surgeon and proper apparatus for performing the needful operation, it negligently refused to do either and permitted the appellee to remain at Milford for a period of 15 hours after receiving said injury without proper medical and surgical attention; that said delay was unreasonable and negligent, and, as the direct result thereof, sepsis set in and plaintiff's kneecap and kneejoint became infected before any operation was performed upon the same, and because thereof it afterwards became necessary to, and he did, have his leg amputated near his hip joint, and that such operation would not have been necessary if he had received proper surgical attention within a reasonable time. The appellee further alleged that it was impossible for him to reach proper surgical attention by his own efforts, but that the appellant, in the exercise of ordinary care, could have conveyed the plaintiff to a place where he could and would have received proper surgical attention within a reasonable time, and that it could have sent its local surgeon from Hillsboro to Milford, where appellee was, who could and would have given him proper surgical attention within a few hours after his injury.

The defendant pleaded a general denial and specially that, if the contract existed between it and the plaintiff as alleged by him, the plaintiff at the time of his injury was not engaged in the discharge of any duty as an employé of defendant, and therefore not entitled to receive medical treatment; that, if the contract existed, it was expressly provided therein that, when any injured employé was able to be moved, he should be taken or sent to the nearest local surgeon in the direction in which the first train should be going, and the local surgeon notified of his coming and of the character of the injury, and that said contract was in all things complied with by the appellant; that, after appellee's injury, he was properly attended at Milford by Dr. Rogers, a careful and skillful surgeon, by whom proper medical attention was rendered him at the expense of the appellant, and that he was thereafter removed from Milford to Hillsboro upon the first train going in that direction, and upon his arrival was properly attended by Drs. Miller and Davis, by whom he was given proper attention at the expense of the appellant, and that, by reason thereof, appellant had used reasonable and proper care to provide appellee with proper attention and treatment; that if, under the terms of the alleged contract, it was the duty of appellant's surgeon at Hillsboro to go to Milford to give attention to appellee, he was unable to go, and in the exercise of ordinary care could not have done so by reason of illness in his own family and the bad condition of the roads between Milford and Hillsboro; that, if it became necessary to amputate appellee's leg, as alleged by him, that same did not arise from any alleged delay in his receiving medical attention, but by reason of natural or other causes wholly independent of such delay, and the appellant was in no wise responsible therefor; that same was due to his voluntary act in leaving the care and attention of Drs. Miller and Davis at Hillsboro shortly after said alleged injury and going from Hillsboro, a distance of more than 200 miles, to McAlester, Okl., with his leg in such a dangerous and serious condition as it was by reason of said alleged injury, and that his act in so doing constituted contributory negligence, which was the proximate cause of the loss of his leg; that if plaintiff was caused to suffer great mental and physical pain by reason of lack of attention at Milford, as alleged by him, the same was caused by and due to his own negligence in failing to request such attention which was the proximate cause of any such suffering. It is undisputed that appellee was accidentally injured as alleged; that appellant's local surgeon at Hillsboro, Dr. Miller, was shortly thereafter notified of his injuries, and did not go to Milford and dress and treat the wound; that Dr. Rogers did visit plaintiff at Milford very soon after he was hurt, and gave the wound a temporary dressing; that appellee was carried from Milford to Hillsboro on the morning after his injury upon the first train running from Milford to Hillsboro, and, at his request, was taken to the sanitarium of Dr. C. C. Davis. A jury trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of appellee for the sum of $12,500, and the appellant has appealed the case to this court.

It is assigned that the trial court erred in refusing to instruct the jury, as requested by appellant, that "under the rules and regulations of the defendant for the government of its hospital department in force at the time of plaintiff's alleged injury, and at the time of plaintiff's employment by the defendant, it was provided that, in the event an injured employé was able to be moved, he should be taken or sent to the nearest local surgeon in the direction in which the first train should be going, and the local surgeon notified of his coming and the character of his injury, and, it being shown from the uncontradicted evidence in this case that after the receipt of his alleged injury the plaintiff was able to be moved, and that he was taken to Hillsboro, where the nearest local surgeon of the defendant resided, upon the first train moving in the direction of Hillsboro, and defendant's local surgeon notified of his coming and the character of his injury, you are therefore instructed that in so far as the plaintiff seeks to recover for the alleged negligence of the defendant in delaying sending him from Milford, Tex., to Hillsboro, Tex., you will find for defendant." This charge seems to have been requested in view of a rule of the appellant for the government of its hospital department, to the effect that, when an injured employé is able to be moved, "take or send him to the nearest local surgeon in the direction in which the first train is going, notify the surgeon of his coming and the character of his injuries"; and there was testimony tending to show that this rule had been complied with in this case. We are not prepared to hold that the charge under the facts should have been given. The accident alleged happened about 6 o'clock in the afternoon of May 12, 1907, and appellee was not carried to Hillsboro, where appellant's nearest local surgeon resided, until the next morning about 6 or 8 o'clock; nor does it appear that appellant made any effort to have appellee conveyed to Hillsboro until that time, notwithstanding it had an engine at hand south of the wreck upon which he might have been taken to that place within two or three hours after the accident occurred. We are inclined to think that under the circumstances shown it was appellant's duty, notwithstanding the rule governing its hospital department, above referred to, to exercise ordinary care to have appellee carried to Hillsboro within a reasonable time after he received the injury described in his petition, or to have provided him with as skillful surgical treatment at Milford as he would have received at Hillsboro, and that, inasmuch as the requested charge failed to impose such duty upon it, there was no error in refusing it.

The fifth assignment of error complains of the refusal of the court to give the following charge, requested by appellant: "It is shown from uncontradicted evidence that, under the rules and regulations of the defendant for the government and regulation of its hospital department in force at the time of plaintiff's injuries, employés of the defendant who were able to be moved should be taken or sent to the nearest local surgeon in the direction in which the first train should be going, and the local surgeon notified of his coming and the character of his injury, and that plaintiff, after receiving the injury complained of in this case, was able to be moved and was brought to Hillsboro, where the nearest local surgeon of the defendant resided, on the first train moving in the direction of Hillsboro, and the local surgeon notified of his coming and the character of his injury, and if you believe that said rule and regulation was a reasonable one, and that the plaintiff received from Dr. Will Rogers at Milford proper attention, and such as would have been given him by a careful and competent physician and surgeon in the exercise of ordinary care prior to the time of his removal to Hillsboro, and that, after the arrival of the plaintiff in Hillsboro, the operation performed by Drs. Davis and Miller was performed within a reasonable time, or that they exercised ordinary care to do so, then and in such event you will find for the defendant." We are of the opinion this charge was applicable to the facts, and its refusal error. The charge correctly states the rule of appellant in force at the time appellee entered its service and for a long time prior thereto, and continuously up to the time of his injury, and there was testimony from which the jury would have been warranted in concluding that the rule was a reasonable one, and that appellee received at the instance of appellant prompt and proper medical attention at Milford after he was hurt in the services rendered by Dr. Will Rogers; that Dr. Rogers was a careful and competent physician and surgeon, and that his treatment of appellee before his removal to Hillsboro was such as he would have received at the hands of Dr. Miller, appellant's local surgeon at Hillsboro, had he gone to Milford when notified of appellee's injury and treated him in person. It was also shown without contradiction that appellee was, in fact, carried from Milford to Hillsboro after he received his injury on the first train of appellant going there, and that, within a reasonable time after he arrived at Hillsboro, appellant's local surgeon, Dr. Miller, in conjunction with Dr. Davis, attended appellee, and performed an operation upon him which appellee admits was proper and skillfully done. Dr. C. C. Davis testified that, if the antiseptic preparations of Dr. Rogers were thorough, the temporary treatment given appellee was the proper temporary treatment to give that kind of a wound; that, if appellee had been brought to his sanitarium in the night in the condition in which he found him next day with his wound dressed as he found it dressed, he would have postponed the operation until daylight. It would seem that the special charge grouped facts which appellant was entitled to have specifically submitted to the jury, and, if found to be true, were sufficient to exonerate it from liability. Neither the general charge nor any special charge given by the court, all of which we have carefully considered, sufficiently enumerated the particular facts and submitted for the consideration of the jury the phases of the case presented in the special charge under consideration.

On the trial of the case appellee offered in evidence the deposition of Dr. W. C. Graves, taken before a notary public in and for Pittsburg county, Okl. The depositions of this witness were not filed until after the trial began, and, when offered in evidence, counsel for appellant objected to the admission of the same, and by motion in writing moved to quash said depositions on the ground that the officer before whom they were taken did not certify that the answers were sworn to before him by said witness. Both the objection to the admission of the testimony and the motion to suppress the depositions were overruled, and the same admitted in evidence, to which action of the court proper exception was reserved by appellant, and the same is here assigned as error. The testimony of this witness was most material. It covered fully his treatment of the appellee from the time of appellee's arrival at McAlester, and his opinion as an expert to the effect that the amputation of appellee's leg resulted from delay in the performance of the operation performed by Drs. Davis and Miller at Hillsboro, and other material features of the case. The caption of the depositions, omitting the style of the case, is as follows: "Pursuant to the attached commission and interrogatories, I, E. Allen Boyd, a notary public within and for the county of Pittsburg, state of Oklahoma, summoned before me Dr. W. C. Graves, who, being first duly sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, testified as follows:" The answers to the direct interrogatories then follow in consecutive order, and are signed, "W. C. Graves, Witness," with the following jurat of the officer: "Subscribed and sworn to before me this 5th day of September, 1908. My commission expires March 31st, 1911. E. Allen Boyd." The answers to the cross-interrogatories then follow in consecutive order, and are signed, "W. C. Graves, Witness," followed by a jurat identical with that last quoted, and there is then attached to the depositions the following certificate: "State of Oklahoma, Pittsburg county. I, E. Allen Boyd, a notary public, in and for Pittsburg county, Oklahoma, do hereby certify that the above named Dr. W. C. Graves, the witness whose name is subscribed to the foregoing depositions, was by me first duly sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth in the case mentioned in the caption, and that the deposition by him subscribed was reduced to writing upon a type-writer by me in the presence of said witness, and the same was subscribed by him in my presence, said depositions being taken upon the attached direct and cross-interrogatories, and pursuant to the attached commission, and the same were taken on the 5th day of September, 1908, between the hours of 10 o'clock in the forenoon and 6 o'clock in the afternoon, at the office of Boyd & Moore, at 108½ East Choctaw avenue, in the city of McAlester, Pittsburg county, Oklahoma; that neither plaintiff nor defendant was present during the examination of the witness in person or by attorney; that I am not related to, nor attorney for either of said parties, nor otherwise interested in the outcome of the action. I so certify. My commission expires March 31, 1911. E. Allen Boyd, Notary Public."

Our statute provides, and it is well settled by the decisions construing the same, that the certificate of the officer taking a deposition either alone or considered in connection with the caption thereto must show that the answers of the witness to the interrogatories and cross-interrogatories were signed and sworn to by the witness before such officer. Does it appear from the certificate or from the caption and certificate in this case that this requirement has been complied with? Under the decisions of the courts in this state, we think the question must be answered in the negative. Chapman v. Allen, 15 Tex. 282; Carroll v. Welch, 26 Tex. 184; Slaughter v. Rivenbark, 35 Tex. 68; Railway Co. v. Brouard, 69 Tex. 617, 7 S. W. 374; Bush v. Barron, 78 Tex. 8, 14 S. W. 238; Emerson v. McKenna (App.) 16 S. W. 419; McFaddin v. Sims (Civ. App.) 97 S. W. 335. In the case of Railway Company v. Brouard, supra, Judge Stayton, in writing the opinion of the Supreme Court, says: "The only way in which it can be known that what appears to be the answers of a witness taken through interrogatories and a commission, within the meaning of the law, are such answers, is by the certificate of the officer to the fact that the answers of the witness were signed and sworn to by the witness before him. That which is thus verified becomes evidence; but no statement made by the officer that matters appearing as the answers which does not show that they become so by the facts that the witness signed and swore to them before the officer can be received. If we take what is stated in the caption to the deposition of Bradley Johnson and attach it to the certificate of the officer which follows, it will stand thus: 'Answers of Bradley Johnson to direct interrogatories in the above suit, I, G. W. Paine, a justice of the peace in and for precinct No. 8, and ex officio notary public of said county and state, do hereby certify under my hand and official seal that the foregoing answers were made, subscribed, and sworn to before me at Sabine Pass, Jefferson county and state of Texas, on this fourth day of April, A. D. 1887.'" From this it may be suspected that the answers were signed and sworn to by Bradley Johnson; but this is not enough. It must appear through the officer's certificate that this is true, or the deposition should be rejected. In Bush v. Barron, cited above, the certificate of the officer was as follows: "Sworn to and subscribed before me this August 25, A. D. 1887. John H. Smith, Justice of the Peace, Ellis County, Texas." The caption was: "Answers to interrogatories propounded by plaintiff to Joe Barron, a resident of Ellis county, Texas." The Supreme Court in holding the certificate in this case insufficient said: "This [caption] does not when read in connection with the certificate show that the answers were signed by the witness before the officer." In Emberson v. McKenna, supra, the caption, after stating the style of the case, is as follows: "Answers of interrogatories of S. E. Hartline in a suit pending in county court of Grayson county, Texas, March term, 1888. Interrogatories to S. E. Hartline. The certificate is as follows: 'The State of Texas, County of Hunt. Before me, A. D. Jackson, a notary public in and for Hunt county, on this day personally appeared before me S: E. Hartline, and, after being duly sworn according to law, answered on oath the within interrogatories and cross-interrogatories, and says they are true and correct to the best of his knowledge and belief. Sworn to and subscribed before me this the 7th day of March, 1888. A. D. Jackson, Notary Public Hunt County, Texas.'" In passing upon the sufficiency of this certificate the court, among other things, said: "The certificate does not state that the answers were signed and sworn to by the witness before him." Again, in the case of McFaddin v. Sims, 97 S. W. 335, the certificate to the deposition was in this language: "State of Kansas, County of Montgomery. I, the undersigned, Walter Zeigler, a notary public in and for the county of Montgomery, state of Kansas, do hereby certify that Harry Nolte was by me first duly sworn to make the answers to the above and foregoing direct and cross-interrogatories, and that his answers as given were reduced to writing and that the same were subscribed and sworn to by said witness." The objection urged was that the certificate did not show that the answers of the witness were sworn to and subscribed by him before the officer taking the same. It was held that, notwithstanding the certificate recited that the witness was sworn by the officer taking the deposition before the interrogatories were propounded to him, and his answers thereto were reduced to writing, and were subscribed and sworn to by him, still the same was not equivalent to a statement, as required by the statute, that the answers of the witness were signed and sworn to by him before said officer, and therefore the certificate was fatally defective. We are of opinion that the certificate in the present case is no more definite and certain with respect to the requirement of the statute that it shall show that the answers of the witness to the interrogatories were sworn to by the witness before the officer taking said answers than the certificates in the cases cited were with respect to the defect pointed out in each of them. That the statement in the caption in this case to the effect that the witness Graves was "first duly sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth," was not a sufficient compliance with the statute requiring the certificate to show that the answers of the witness were sworn to by him is affirmed in the cases of Emberson v. McKenna and McFaddin v. Sims, supra; and that it no more certainly appears that the witness Graves swore to the answers objected to in the case at bar than in the case of Railway Company v. Brouard seems very clear. In the latter case the caption shows that the answers sought to be introduced in evidence were the answers of Bradley Johnson, whose deposition the officer was directed by the commission to take, and, notwithstanding the officer certifies "that the foregoing answers (Bradley Johnson's answers) were made, subscribed, and sworn to before him," yet the Supreme Court said it could only be suspected that said answers were signed and sworn to by Bradley Johnson, which was not enough to authorize the admission of the depositions. If it could not be said that it appears by necessary implication from the language of the captions and certificates used in this and other cases cited above that the respective answers of the witnesses to the interrogatories propounded were sworn to by said witnesses, we are unable to perceive how it can be said that it does so appear from the language used in the caption and certificate in question that Dr. W. C. Graves swore to the answers introduced in evidence in this case, and of which complaint is made. Appellee cites the case of Railway Company v. Hennessy, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 316, 49 S. W. 917, in support of his contention that the certificate here in question, when read in connection with the caption, shows a substantial compliance with the statute, which is all that is necessary. The case apparently sustains this view, and, if it does, it is, in our opinion, contrary to the decisions made by our Supreme Court in the cases cited in this opinion, wherein very similar certificates were construed and held to be fatally defective. In such case we conceive it to be the duty of this court to follow the ruling of the Supreme Court, even though we might have reached a different conclusion had the question been presented to us as an original proposition.

The twenty-first assignment is to the effect that the court erred in admitting in evidence, over the objection of the defendant, the testimony of the witness Dr. B. H. Vaughan that assuming that a surgeon, whose duty it was to attend to the case, was informed immediately or very soon after the accident that appellee's knee had been severely injured, and the patella badly broken, in his judgment the proper thing for the surgeon to do would be to go immediately and dress and treat the case. The admission of this testimony, we think, was material error. One of the important issues in the case was whether or not appellant's local surgeon at Hillsboro, Dr. Miller, upon receiving notice of appellee's injury shortly after the accident, should in the exercise of ordinary care have gone to Milford and treated the case in person, and the affirmative of this issue could not be established under the facts of this case by the opinion of an expert witness. As argued by counsel for appellant, while expert testimony is admissible to prove the character of treatment which should be given a patient or the probable effect of the lack of such treatment, the opinion of such expert as to whether another physician should or should not have gone to the patient under particular circumstances was inadmissible. The practical effect of the testimony objected to was to tell the jury that in the opinion of the witness it became the duty of Dr. Miller, when he was notified that appellee had been hurt, to go to Milford and dress and treat his wounds. Whether he should have done so was not the subject of expert testimony, and the opinion of Dr. Vaughan as to what he should have done in this respect should have been rejected by the court.

We are also of the opinion that the court erred in permitting the plaintiff, George W. Graves, to testify, over the objection of appellant that the testimony was hearsay, that in reply to messages sent to appellant's local agent at Milford Charles Beck told him, plaintiff, shortly after he was injured that he, said agent, would have a train out from Hillsboro at 9 o'clock that night and take him to Hillsboro; that, after he failed to get out at 9 o'clock, he had Mr. Beck make anywhere from three to six trips to the agent, and that, in response to messages sent to the agent by Beck on these trips Beck told him that the agent said, "They would have a train and that it should have gone"; that he said, "We will have a train stopped at a certain street and give four blasts of the whistle, and wait until he (plaintiff) can be carried on the cot; that he had gone to his house and got the cot to put him on early in the evening." The testimony of the witness Beck to the effect that at the request of the appellee he had notified the agent at Milford of appellee's injury was admissible but the testimony objected to and quoted above was clearly obnoxious to the objection that it was hearsay, and, being material, its admission must be regarded as hurtful to appellant's rights.

The court also erred, we think, in permitting the witness Dr. W. C. Graves, after stating that a compound comminuted fracture not receiving proper attention for a period of 15 hours would be a great deal more likely, if not practically certain, to become infected, and by reason of the weakened condition of the patient render him more easily a prey to septic germs, and that these germs multiply rapidly in a proper soil like blood and serum, to further state: "So that from a single germ, according to Koch, in 24 hours more than 8,000,000 would develop. They divide themselves by fission once every hour." This testimony was subject to the objection urged that it was hearsay. The statement of the witness does not purport to be an expression of his own opinion or knowledge of the subject upon which he is speaking, but that of the person Koch. The question is practically the same as would have been raised had appellee read the statement made by the witness from some medical treatise or standard work on medical jurisprudence, and that the reading of such an excerpt would not have been admissible seems to be well established. Railway Co. v. Jones (Sup.) 14 S. W. 306; Boehringer v. Richards, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 284, 29 S. W. 508; Railway Co. v. Hanway (Civ. App.) 57 S. W. 695; Lawson Expert & Opinion Ev. p. 205; Burt v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. R. 397, 40 S. W. 1000, 43 S. W. 344, 39 L. R. A. 305, 330; Railway Co. v. Farmer (Civ. App.) 108 S. W. 729. We think the testimony upon the objection of appellant should have been excluded.

There are a number of assignments which have not been discussed, none of which in our opinion pointed out reversible error. Those relating to special charges asked by the appellant and refused were, we think, sufficiently covered by the court's main charge and other special charges given. Those complaining of the court's main charge probably disclose no reversible error, or, if so, they are not likely to occur upon another trial. The paragraph relating to the measure of damages, when the entire language thereof is considered, is not perhaps subject to the criticism urged against it, but we suggest that the portion thereof authorizing the jury, in the event they find for plaintiff, to take into consideration the value of the time lost by him during the period of his disabilities upon another trial, be made to more accurately and with greater certainty apply to the time lost by reason of injury suffered subsequent to the infliction of the original wound, as a result of appellant's negligence, if any. We also think the paragraph instructing the jury that all other issues raised by the pleadings other than those submitted are withdrawn from their consideration should, to avoid any probability of misleading the jury, be omitted.

For the errors indicated, the judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause remanded.

STATE v. WEAVER.

(Supreme Court of Tennessee. Nov. 20, 1909.)

1. ELECTIONS (§ 95*)—REGISTRATION OF VOTERS—NATURE OF PROVISION.

The registration laws authorized by Const. art. 4, § 1, authorizing the General Assembly to enact laws to secure the freedom of elections and the purity of the ballot box, prescribe no qualifications of electors, but are to regulate the exercise of the elective franchise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 95, 96; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

2. ELECTIONS (§ 96*)—REGISTRATION OF VOTERS—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

Shannon's Code, § 1189, provides that, in all civil districts, wards, and voting precincts in counties having a population of 50,000 or over, every voter shall be registered. Section 1198 provides that registration, as provided for, shall be a prerequisite to voting in all elections in such territory. Section 1199 provides no voter shall be allowed to vote in any election wherein registration is required by law, unless he shall have first registered under the provisions of the article as much as 20 days before the election is held. Held, that the sections apply to all elections, including those of municipalities in the counties falling within their provisions, and to all voters, whether property holders or residents voting in the elections, and hence apply to municipal elections in the town of Lonsdale, Knox county, which county has a population of over 50,000, though the town charter (Laws 1907, p. 1048, c. 305) merely defines the qualifications of voters at municipal elections, and does not provide for registration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 97; Dec. Dig. § 96.*]

3. ELECTIONS (§ 313*)—VIOLATION OF LAWS—VOTING WITHOUT REGISTRATION.

The statute making registration a prerequisite to voting in all elections in the specified counties, a person who voted without registering at a municipal election in the town of Lonsdale, in Knox county, was guilty of a misdemeanor under Code 1838, § 4596, providing that when the performance of any act is prohibited by statute, and no penalty for violation is imposed, the doing of such act is a misdemeanor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 338; Dec. Dig. § 313.*]

4. ELECTIONS (§ 97*)—REGISTRATION—PLACE.

In view of Shannon's Code, § 1217, requiring the registrars of each district or voting precinct to appear at the place where the election is held with the books in which the voters are numbered, which are made evidence of registration, and occupy places inside the polling precincts, and check off or mark said voters as each voter therein registered shall vote, a voter must register in the civil district, ward, or voting precinct where he proposes to vote, as a prerequisite to his right to vote therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 92; Dec. Dig. § 97.*]

Error to Criminal Court, Knox County; T. A. R. Nelson, Judge.

R. W. Weaver was indicted for illegal voting. A motion to quash the indictment was overruled on one ground and sustained on another, and both parties bring error. Motion overruled, and case remanded for trial.

W. W. Faw, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State, R. A. Brown, for defendant.

SHIELDS, J. The defendant was indicted in the criminal court of Knox county for knowingly voting, as the owner of real estate situated in the town of Lonsdale, Knox county, in a municipal election held in that town, without first having there registered 20 days or more before the election, as provided by chapter 25, p. 59, Acts Ex. Sess. 1890, chapter 224, p. 438, Acts 1891, and chapter 12, p. 30, Acts Ex. Sess. 1891.

A motion was made to quash the indictment, upon the grounds that it was not a misdemeanor to vote illegally in a municipal election, and that registration was not required of owners of real estate in Lonsdale in municipal elections there held. The trial judge overruled the first ground of the motion, and sustained the latter, and quashed the indictment. The state and the defendant both prosecuted appeals in the nature of writ of error, and have assigned the action of the trial judge adverse to them, respectively, as error.

We think the first ground of the motion was properly overruled, and the second erroneously sustained.

The contention of the defendant is predicated upon the provision of the charter of Lonsdale (chapter 305, p. 1048, Acts 1907) defining the qualifications of voters in elections to be held in the municipality for the election of municipal officers, which is in these words:

"The votes shall be by ballot, all persons owning real estate within said corporation, all persons living therein and who have been residents thereof for six months previous to said election and who are entitled to vote for members of the General Assembly shall be entitled to vote in said election."

The qualification here prescribed applies to all voters, whether they be owners of real estate in the municipality or residents therein.

To be entitled to vote for members of the General Assembly, under the Constitution, the voter must be a male person who is 21 years old, a citizen of the United States, and a resident of the state for 12 months and of the county 6 months; and the only other qualification which can be prescribed is the payment of poll taxes and the production of satisfactory evidence of such payment for such preceding period as the Legislature shall prescribe and at such time as may be prescribed by law. Const. art. 4, § 1.

These are all the qualifications required of those authorized to vote in elections held in the municipality.

The registration laws of the state do not prescribe qualifications of electors, but were enacted for the purpose of regulating the exercise of the elective franchise, and are authorized by the concluding clause of section 1, art. 4, of the Constitution, ordaining that the General Assembly shall have power to enact laws to secure the freedom of elections and the purity of the ballot box.

In Madison v. Wade, 88 Ga. 699, 16 S. E. 21, it is held that registration adds no qualification to voters, but merely serves to identify them as a person qualified to vote. In People v. Hoffman, 116 Ill. 611, 5 N. E. 596, 8 N. E. 788, 56 Am. Rep. 793, it is said that a registry law is merely a mode of ascertaining and determining whether or not a man possesses the necessary qualifications of a voter. In State v. Butts, 31 Kan. 550, 2 Pac. 618, 619, Judge Brewer, now Mr. Justice Brewer of the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking for the court, said:

"It is evident that a proper enforcement of this statute, in securing 10 days before every election a full registry of all persons entitled to vote, furnishes a very efficient check against fraudulent voting. At any election in which much interest is felt, and where the opposing parties are supposed to be nearly equal in numbers, most careful scrutiny will be made of these registry lists, every voter's name and residence taken, and his right to vote verified by examination. The matter will not be left to the pressure and excitement of election day, but will all be ascertained and determined prior thereto. The value of such a registry for the preservation of the purity of the ballot box cannot be too highly estimated. * * * Obviously, what was contemplated was the ascertaining beforehand, by proper proof, of the persons who should on the day of election be entitled to vote; and any reasonable provision for making such ascertainment must be upheld. Requiring a party to be registered is not in any true sense imposing an additional qualification, any more than requiring a voter to go to a specific place for the purpose of voting, or requiring him to prove by his own oath or the oaths of other parties his right to vote when challenged, or than requiring a naturalized foreigner to present his naturalization papers. Each and all of these are simply matters of proof, steps to be taken in order to ascertain who are and who are not entitled to vote."

Judge Cooley in his work on Constitutional Limitations (page 601), said:

"In some of the states it has also been regarded as important that lists of voters should be prepared before the day of election, in which should be registered the names of every person entitled to vote. Under such a registration the officers whose duty it is to administer the election laws are enabled to proceed with more deliberation in the discharge of their duties, and to avoid the haste and confusion that must attend the determination upon election day of the various and sometimes difficult questions concerning the right of individuals to exercise this important franchise. Electors, also, by means of this registry, are notified in advance of the persons claiming the right to vote, and are enabled to make the necessary examination to determine whether the claim is well founded, and to exercise the right of challenge if satisfied any person registered is unqualified. When the Constitution has established no such rule, and is entirely silent on the subject, it has sometimes been claimed that the statute requiring voters to be registered before the day of election and excluding from the right all whose names do not appear upon the list was unconstitutional and void, as adding another test to the qualifications of electors which the Constitution has prescribed, and as having the effect, where the electors are not registered, to exclude from voting persons who have an absolute right to that franchise by the fundamental law. This position, however, has not been accepted as sound by the courts. The provision for a registry deprives no one of his right, but is only a reasonable regulation under which the right may be exercised. Such regulations must always have been within the power of the Legislature unless forbidden."

This was quoted by this court with approval in the case of Moore v. Sharp, 98 Tenn. 498, 41 S. W. 587.

These registration laws apply to all elections, including those of municipalities, in the counties and civil districts falling within their provisions. We quote the sections evidencing this as codified in Shannon's edition of the Code, viz.:

"Sec. 1189. In all civil districts, wards, and voting precincts in counties which have a population of 50,000 or over that number, computed by the federal census of 1890, or which may hereafter have that number or over, computed by any subsequent federal census, and in all cities, towns, and civil districts, having a population of 2,500 inhabitants or over that number computed by the federal census of 1890, or may hereafter have that number or over, computed by any subsequent federal census, each and every voter, in addition to the other regulations required by law, shall be registered as a voter as hereinafter provided before he shall be allowed to exercise the elective franchise in any election held in any civil district, ward, or voting precinct in said counties having a population as herein provided: Provided, that the last published census shall control in every case. (Ex. Sess. 1890, c. 25, § 1; 1891, c. 224, § 1; Ex. Sess. 1891, c. 12.)"

"Sec. 1198. Registration, as provided for in section 1197, and the other provisions thereof, shall be a prerequisite to voting in all elections in such territory; and when such registration has been made under the provisions of this article, no other or further general registration for two and four years shall be made or required as a prerequisite to his voting, except in cases where the voter has changed his residence. (Id. § 3.)"

"Sec. 1199. No voter shall be allowed to vote in any election wherein registration is required by law, unless he shall have first registered, under the provisions of this article, as much as twenty days before the election wherein he offers to vote is held. But registration of voters shall only be required every four years hereafter in the civil districts having less than five thousand population, according to last census, whenever said civil districts are in the counties not wholly subject by the present laws to registration. (Id. § 4.)

They not only apply to all elections in the territory coming within the provisions of the statute, but to all voters, whether as property holders or residents, voting in the election. No exception of any kind is made. They make registration a prerequisite to voting in all elections and prohibit voters from voting without lawful registration. All who do so are guilty of a misdemeanor. Code 1858, § 4596. Knox county falls within the provisions of these laws, and they therefore apply to all elections and voters in the municipality of Lonsdale.

The voter must register in the civil district, ward, or voting precinct where he offers to vote. This clearly appears from a consideration of all the provisions of the statutes, and such has been their practical construction. Section 1217 requires the registrars of each district, or voting precinct, to appear at the place where the election is held with the books in which the voters are numbered, which are made evidence of registration, and occupy places inside the polling precincts, and check off or mark said voters as each voter therein registered shall vote. The voter's name cannot appear upon these books unless he has there registered. No other registration books are required or authorized to be present or used, and a registration in another precinct would not avail the voter anything. If the registration laws did not apply to the place of the residence of the nonresident voter, and the law was as insisted, he could not register anywhere, although he could not vote at the place where the laws do apply without registration. The registration must be in the district or ward where the vote is proposed to be cast.

When considered from the viewpoint of the objects and purposes of the registration law, the reasons for requiring registration of nonresident real estate owners, and resident real estate owners who may not have lived in the town of Lonsdale for a sufficient length of time to otherwise qualify them to vote, are more weighty than in the case of voters who have lived there for a sufficient length of time to qualify them to vote without regard to the real estate qualifications; for, ordinarily, there is more likelihood that the voters of the latter class, and their qualifications, will be known to the judges of election, and the candidates and their friends, than those of the former class. As was well said by Mr. Justice Brewer, in State v. Butts, supra, viz.: "Obviously what was contemplated was the ascertaining beforehand, by proper proof, of the persons who should on the day of election be entitled to vote," so that "the matter will not be left to the pressure and excitement of election day, but will all be ascertained and determined prior thereto."

The motion to quash is overruled, and the case remanded for trial.

NASHVILLE, C. & ST. L. RY. CO. v. PATTERSON et al.

(Supreme Court of Tennessee. Dec. Term, 1908.)

1. TAXATION (§ 391*)—RAILROADS—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION—"DISTRIBUTABLE"—"LOCALIZED."

Acts 1897, p. 102, c. 5, requiring railroads to file a schedule setting forth the length in miles of its railroad bed, switches, and side tracks, and the value of the whole, providing that the road of any railroad shall include side tracks, switches, etc., and that the roadbed, rolling stock, franchises, choses in action, and personal property having no actual situs shall be known as "distributable property," and shall be valued separately, and that the depot buildings and other property, real, personal, and mixed, having an actual situs, shall be known as the "localized property," and shall be valued separately, divides the taxation of railroad property into "localized" and "distributable" property; and switches and industrial tracks off the main right of way, but used as a part of the general system, and for the same purposes as switch tracks on the right of way are used, must be assessed as "distributable" property, but all buildings, coal bins, roundhouses, machine shops, depot buildings, and other structures located on the terminal yards must be assessed as "localized" property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 391.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 391*)—VOID ASSESSMENTS—LIABILITY OF TAXPAYER.

Where switch and industrial tracks off the main right of way of a railroad are separately assessed as localized trackage off the right of way, though the property belongs to the distributable class, within Acts 1897, p. 102, c. 5, authorizing the taxation of railroad property, the separate assessment is void, and no tax can be collected thereon as distributable property.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Davidson County; T. E. Matthews, Judge.

Certiorari by the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway Company against Malcolm R. Patterson, Chairman, and others, constituting the Board of Equalization for Assessment of Railroad Property, to review an assessment. From a judgment quashing an assessment, both parties appeal. Reversed and rendered.

Claude Waller, for plaintiff. Attorney General Cates and James C. Bradford, for defendants.

McALISTER, J. This cause is before the court on the cross-appeals of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway Company and the board of equalization from a judgment of the circuit court of Davidson county quashing an assessment of certain alleged localized property of the railroad, on account of vagueness and indefiniteness in the description of the property assessed. The main controversy, however, presented on the record, is whether the property involved should have been assessed as localized or distributable property. The genesis of the controversy, as well as its progress and development, may be thus stated: On August 1, 1907, the Railroad Commission made the following order, to wit:

The commission took up the petition of Mayor Frierson and City Attorney Chamlee, of Chattanooga, in regard to the assessment of the yards and terminals of railroad companies as localized property, and, after considering the opinion of the Attorney General of the state in the case, the petition was granted.

The commission proceeded to the consideration of the method to be pursued in assessing the trackage of railroads off the main right of way as localized property, and decided to value and assess it as railroad track on a mileage basis, whereupon the following order was adopted:

"That every railroad company doing business in Tennessee be required to file a statement under oath on or before August 15, 1907, setting forth the number of miles of side track, switch track, and spur track owned by it in the state of Tennessee, exclusive of such track on the main right of way; the statement to show the number of miles of such track in each county and municipality through which the road runs, together with the value of same.

"It is further ordered that each and every railroad company owning terminal yards and switch yards, or switch yards, be required to file with this commission as a part of its returns a blue print, or blue prints, showing the main line, side tracks and switches, and such terminal yards and switch yards."

In pursuance of this order the following letter was addressed to the tax agent or other representative of each railroad company doing business in Tennessee, who has been heretofore designated to make out, swear to, and return the tax schedules to the Comptroller of the State Treasury for the use of the commission making the assessment of railroad property for the years 1907 and 1908:

"Dear Sir: The Attorney General of the state holds that, under the law, this commission must assess [as] localized property, all the side tracks, spur tracks, and switch tracks off the main right of way of all railroads in Tennessee. To secure the information necessary to complete the assessment, the commission has entered an order on its records, requiring returns to be made to the commission by all railroads in Tennessee, on or before August 15, 1907, under oath, giving the number of miles of such side track, spur track, and switch track belonging to each road in Tennessee that is off the main right of way, and to report the number of miles of such track in each county and municipality in Tennessee through which the road runs, with the value in each instance of such track, the report to be accompanied by a blue print, showing the main line and side tracks in all switch yards as terminal yards."

The schedules and blue prints were accordingly filed by the railroad authorities. The following assessment was then made of Localized Track off Main Right of Way.

After the work of the Railroad Commission had been completed, the petitioner filed its exception to the action of that body as to the assessment of all its property, and specifically excepted to the assessment of "localized track off main right of way" in the following language:

"The honorable Railroad Commission in making the assessments of the several divisions of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway within the state of Tennessee has divided the said property in the following classes, to wit: (1) Localized property; (2) localized trackage; (3) distributable property. In the division known and designated as "localized trackage" it has undertaken to assess separately and distinctly from the road itself certain tracks, switches, ties, rails, and the superstructure thereon, together with the property upon which they are located, and has specifically assessed this company as follows on localized trackage:

On the main line—that is, the line running from Nashville to Chattanooga—it has assessed what is designated as localized trackage at the sum of.....	$351,155 50
On the Western & Atlantic Division it has assessed localized trackage at the sum of	32,980 00
On the Middle Tennessee & Alabama Branch it has assessed localized trackage at the sum of.....	200 00
On the West Nashville Branch it has assessed localized trackage at the sum of	12,850 00
On the Centreville Branch it has assessed localized trackage at the sum of	17,025 00
On the Sequatchie Valley Branch it has assessed localized trackage at the sum of	30,875 00
On the Tracy City Branch it has assessed localized trackage at the sum of	25,575 00
On the Columbia Branch it has assessed localized trackage at the sum of.....	3,940 00
On the McMinnville Branch it has assessed localized trackage at the sum of	6,225 00
On the Lebanon Branch it has assessed localized trackage at the sum of.....	800 00
On the Shelbyville Branch it has assessed localized trackage at the sum of	1,475 00
On the Paducah & Memphis Division it has assessed localized trackage at the sum of.....	7,775 00
On the Northwestern Division it has assessed localized trackage at the sum of	44,333 00

"All of said localized trackage is property that is completely covered by tracks, switches, ties, rails, and the superstructure thereon, and is used, not in the performance of local business, but in the handling of the general business of the company on each of the said branches. Said trackage is used precisely for the same purposes and in the same manner as the trackage on the main right of way of each of the several divisions of the company's property. The honorable Railroad Commission has seen proper to class all trackage—including tracks, switches, ties, rails, and the superstructure thereon—located upon the right of way of each of said divisions as a part of the distributable property of said company, but has assessed all of said trackage off of said right of way as localized trackage.

"It is respectfully submitted that there is nothing in the act under which this honorable Railroad Commission assesses the property in question which justifies it in assessing any of said tracks, switches, ties, rails, and superstructure thereon off of the right of way as localized property, but that under and by the express terms of the act—being chapter 5 of the Acts of 1897—said property is a part of the distributable property, and must be assessed as a whole in connection with each division. Said act provides that 'the roadbed, rolling stock, franchises, choses in action and personal property of a railroad property having no actual situs, shall be known as distributable property and shall be valued separately from the other property.' And section 6 of said act provides that 'the road of any railroad property shall include all side tracks, switches, bridges, trestles, ties, rails and superstructure of every kind.' All of said localized trackage as above assessed is a part of the distributable property of each of the several divisions that have been assessed, and the assessment of said side tracks, switches, bridges, ties, rails, and superstructure thereon as localized property is unauthorized and void.

"The Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway, therefore, excepts to all of the assessments designated as 'localized trackage' because said assessments are wholly void and unauthorized by the act under which the honorable Railroad Commission is proceeding. For proof as to the character of said localized trackage, reference is hereby made to the proof already on file before the honorable Railroad Commission."

This exception was specifically overruled by the Railroad Commission.

When the Railroad Commission had finally completed its work and overruled the exceptions of the petitioner, the record reached the hands of the board of equalization in the manner designated by the statute, and before that body the exception to the assessment of localized trackage off main right of way was renewed, but was overruled by that board, viz.:

"In the matter of the assessment of side tracks, spur tracks, switch tracks, and yards outside the main right of way of the * * * Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis * * * (the same having been assessed and denominated as 'localized trackage' by the State Tax Assessors), the board heard the arguments of counsel and upon consideration thereof and the whole record did confirm the assessment, as localized property, of said side tracks, switch tracks, spur tracks, and yards as the same had been made by the Railroad Commission, acting ex officio as State Tax Assessors of railroad property."

The assessments made by the Railroad Commission of localized property and distributable property were also approved by the board of equalization and certified to the Comptroller.

The assessments of "localized track off main right of way" were not certified to the Comptroller, because of the fact that the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway filed in the circuit court of Davidson county a petition for certiorari and supersedeas.

The prayer of the petition is as follows:

"Premises considered, your petitioner prays that proper process issue making the above-named defendants parties hereto, and that a writ of certiorari issue against the defendants to produce into this honorable court the minutes, orders, proceedings, records, and proof, including all maps and other evidence as to the assessments of the property of the petitioner now on file with the board of equalization and in the hands of the defendant Malcolm R. Patterson, and that a writ of supersedeas issue to supersede the assessments by the said board of equalization of the side tracks, switch tracks, spur tracks, industrial tracks, and yards, outside of petitioner's main right of way, as localized property, and to restrain the certification of the same, but not to restrain or stay the certification of the remainder of the assessments made by the board of equalization of the petitioner's property, and that on final hearing the assessment of said side tracks, switch tracks, spur tracks, industrial tracks, and yards of your petitioner, situated outside of the petitioner's main right of way, as localized property, be declared to be illegal, null, and void, and that said assessment itself be declared to be illegal, null, and void, as not authorized by the act, chapter 5 of the Acts of 1897. Petitioner prays for such other and further general relief as the circumstances may require."

It is said on behalf of the state that "localized trackage off the main right of way" does not simply embrace side tracks and spur tracks, but includes the real estate on which said side tracks and spur tracks are located. It is said the land and the said road tracks traversing it are the constituent elements of valuation, and are inappropriately designated "localized trackage." The insistence of the state is that the so-called localized trackage at Chattanooga and Nashville is shown to be several tracts of land, comprising many acres, upon which are built shops, roundhouses, and other buildings, and also railway tracks used for switching and parking cars and other incidental and convenient uses. The Railroad Commission ascertained the number of miles of railroad track on each lot, and in making the assessment considered the individual value of the land and the tracks. This is shown by the following extract from the brief of the Railroad Commission, which is filed as an exhibit to its answer, viz.:

"In assessing localized tracks, the commission has taken into consideration the value of the ground and the value of the superstructure. This makes a wide difference in the valuation placed upon the side tracks in the city and in the country, on account of the high valuation placed on city property as compared with country property."

It is to be noted in this connection that these several tracts, upon which were situated the railway side tracks, were not assessed under the head of localized property, as other real estate is assessed. In other words, if they were not assessed as localized trackage, they were not assessed at all.

The said properties are thus described in the answer and return of board of equalization:

"Localized Trackage in the City of Chattanooga and Hamilton County.

"As hereinbefore adverted to, it was shown by proof taken by the board of assessors, under the controversy before said board between the municipal authorities of Chattanooga and petitioner, that petitioner was and is the owner of 14 acres of land lying practically in the heart of the city of Chattanooga, and in control, under lease from the state of Georgia, of about 10 acres adjoining the aforesaid 14-acre tract, which was used as the yards of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway and of the Western & Atlantic Railroad, which yards were largely covered by tracks, some of which were used for switching purposes, but the major portion of which (particularly on the 10-acre tract) were used for storage purposes and for repairing cars, and that on the 14-acre tract was located a machine shop, a turntable, or uncovered roundhouse, bins for the storage of coal, a sandhouse, an office building, and perhaps some other structures."

Again the answer avers, on the subject of localized trackage in Nashville:

"Further, it will be seen by an inspection of Exhibit No. 10 hereto, in connection with Exhibit No. 12 hereto, that the five several tracts of land bounded in red as shown upon said Exhibit No. 10, all owned by petitioner and containing 25.80 acres, were reported by petitioner's engineer, Trabue, as having on them 12.07 miles of track, and that, in addition to this track there were three separate industrial tracks leading, one to the Cumberland Mill, another to the Model Mill, and the third to the National Fertilizer Works, aggregating .33 miles of track, and this, added to the 12.07 miles of track above referred to, aggregated 12.40 miles, which the board of assessors valued and assessed as 'localized trackage' belonging to petitioner in the city of Nashville.

"Further, it will be seen by an inspection of said Exhibit No. 10 hereto that there are six separate tracts of land designated on said map and bounded by yellow lines, which several tracts aggregate 28.66 acres, and are owned by the Louisville & Nashville Terminal Company, but leased to the petitioner and the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. As located upon these six separate tracts of land, petitioner's engineer, Trabue, reported 6.5 miles of track, and one-half this mileage, to wit, 3.25 miles, the board of assessors assessed against petitioner, without any further description of said six several tracts of land, and without showing upon which of said tracts said 3.25 miles of trackage were located.

"No map showing location of the 'localized trackage' assessed against petitioner on account of its Northwestern Division was furnished by petitioner, but an inspection of Exhibit No. 19 hereto shows that the 'localized track' assessed against petitioner on account of its Northwestern Division in the city of Nashville and in the county of Davidson aggregated 10.85 miles.

"Exhibit C to Trabue deposition, Exhibit No. 12 hereto, p. 5, shows that this 'localized track,' aggregating 10.85 miles, covers some 12 industrial tracks leading from petitioner's property to different manufacturing or other business establishments, and the shops belonging to petitioner's Northwestern Division upon the shop track. Petitioner's engineer reports 8.12 miles of track, but does not give the acreage of this tract."

As to the other properties, the answer further states:

"Respondents deny that the assessment or valuation of petitioner's property, assessed as aforesaid under the name or classification of 'localized trackage' was included either by the board of assessors or by your respondents in the assessment and valuation of petitioner's distributable property, and this is clearly shown in Exhibit No. 15 to this answer and return; and the respondents also deny that said localized property so assessed as 'localized trackage' ought to have been included within the assessment and valuation of petitioner's distributable property, because, as respondents aver, said property is 'localized property,' as defined by section 8 of chapter 5 of the Acts of 1897.

"Respondents also deny that the assessment of petitioner's localized property under the name and classification of 'localized trackage,' as hereinbefore shown, was or is void, and deny that the petitioner is entitled to have said assessment set aside and annulled, or that it is entitled to any of the relief prayed in its petition."

The answer further avers:

"After the board of assessors had called upon petitioner for a supplemental statement, said petitioner filed as Exhibit B to the 'deposition' of its engineer, Trabue (which Exhibit B is said Exhibit No. 11 to this answer and return), a copy of said map, Exhibit No. 2 hereto, and designated thereon in black lines what said Trabue called the right of way (200 feet in width) of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway, and also a right of way of like width of the Western & Atlantic Railroad. Said Trabue also designated by red lines that part of said yards not included within the alleged rights of way of said petitioner and of the Western & Atlantic Railroad. An inspection of said Exhibit No. 11 hereto will show that petitioner's alleged right of way, as laid down by Trabue—which was done without other evidence of the existence or extent of said right of way than his simple declaration—was made to include, not only the Union Depot train shed, but a considerable part of petitioner's freight depot; and the right of way of the Western & Atlantic Railroad, as designated by said Trabue, in the same manner was made to include the principal part of the 10 acres leased by petitioner from the state of Georgia, and which the proof shows was and is covered with tracks used principally for storage purposes.

"Localized Trackage in Nashville—Chattanooga Division.

"An examination of Exhibit A to Trabue's deposition (Exhibit No. 10 to this return and answer) will show that petitioner's engineer, Trabue, laid down and designated a right of way for petitioner 200 feet in width bounded by black lines. However, there is no other evidence of the location or width of all this alleged right of way except the mere declaration of Mr. Trabue. But said right of way, as laid down on said map, said Exhibit No. 10 hereto, was made to include the principal part of petitioner's freight depot, its entire general office building, a considerable part of a number of wholesale warehouses, part of the Union Station, the baggage, mail, and express building, and perhaps some other structures, all 'localized property' in character and use."

An examination of the assessment actually made by the Railroad Commission will show that the value of the ground upon which the general office building of the company at Nashville was located, being in the right of way laid off by the engineer, was deducted and included in the class of distributable property assessed, and only the value of the buildings was assessed as localized property.

Another item is 5.58 acres between Cedar and Church streets in Nashville. In regard to this the assessment of the Railroad Commission finds .5 of an acre on the so-called right of way, which it values at $3,000, and deducts it from the valuation of the whole. And so, also, the land, .97 acre, between Church and Broad streets, upon which is built the freight depot, being within the right of way delimited on the map, is deducted from localized property and thrown into distributable property, and only the value of the superstructure is assessed as localized property.

We have made this elaborate statement of the action of the Railroad Commission, approved by the state board of equalization, in order to intelligently present the questions of law arising on the record. It has already been stated that the complaint of the railroad presented in its petition for certiorari is directed to the "assessment of its side tracks, switch tracks, spur tracks, industrial tracks, and yards outside of its main right of way as localized property." The law governing the assessment of railroad property for taxation is chapter 5, p. 102, Acts 1897, and is entitled:

"An act to provide just and equitable laws for the assessment and collection of revenue for state, county and municipal purposes whereby revenue is collected from the assessment of railroad, telegraph and telephone properties in the state of Tennessee."

And sections 6, 7, and 8 of that act are as follows:

"Sec. 6: That the road of any railroad property shall include all said (side) tracks, switches, bridges, trestles, ties, rails and superstructure of every kind. * * *

"Sec. 7. That the roadbed, rolling stock, franchises, choses in action and personal property of a railroad property having no actual situs, shall be known as distributable property, and shall be valued separately from the other property; and after ascertaining the total value of such distributable property wherever situated, and after having deducted from this value $1,000, said assessors shall divide the remainder by the number of miles of the entire length of the road, and the result shall be the value per mile of such distributable property for the purpose of taxation; and the value per mile of such distributable property shall be multiplied by the number of miles in this state, and the product thereof shall be the sum to be assessed against such property for state purposes; and the value per mile so ascertained shall be multiplied by the number of miles in each county or incorporated city, and the product shall be the amount to be assessed upon such property by said counties and incorporated towns respectively.

"Sec. 8. That the depot buildings and other property, real, personal and mixed, having an actual situs, shall be known as the localized property of such railroad, and shall be valued separately accordingly as the same may be located in any of the counties or incorporated towns in this state."

Now, it will be observed that by the terms of this act all railroad property for the purposes of taxation is divided into two classes, localized and distributable. There is no classification of "localized trackage off the main right of way." No such nomenclature appears anywhere in the act, yet the Railroad Commission assessed the property of this company under three heads: (1) Localized property; (2) distributable property; (3) localized trackage off the main right of way. Under this head the commission assessed for taxation, as localized property, every side track, every spur track, every switch track, every industrial track, located off the main right of way of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway. In other words, the commission adopted the margin of the right of way as the line of cleavage, and all side tracks, spur tracks, and switch tracks inside this delimited line were assessed as distributable property, and all such tracks outside this arbitrary line were assessed as localized property. Section 7 of the act of 1897 provides: "That the roadbed, rolling stock, franchises, choses in action and personal property of a railroad property having no actual situs shall be known as distributable property and shall be valued separate from the other property," etc. Section 6 of the act of 1897 defines the roadbed of a railroad, viz.: "That the road of any railroad property shall include all side tracks, switches, bridges, trestles, ties, rails and superstructure of every kind." Section 8 of the act of 1897: "That the depot buildings and other property, real, personal and mixed, having an actual situs, shall be known as the localized property of said railroad," etc. It thus appears that by plain statutory definition the roadbed includes "all side tracks and switches," and the direction of the statute is that the roadbed shall be assessed as distributable property. Is there any authority under the statute for making another classification of side tracks and switches, outside of the main right of way, as localized property? The proof in the record is to the effect that these side tracks and switches are auxiliary to the main line and form a constituent and component part of the railway system. The terminal yards of a railroad are frequently a network of side tracks, switches, and turnouts; nor are they exclusively used for local business. They are used to facilitate the transportation of trains engaged in interstate, as well as intrastate, commerce. Yet, the Railroad Commission assessed these side tracks, switches, and spur tracks as localized property, regardless of their connection with the main line and the purposes of their construction. The proof is that these side tracks are used as part of a general system and for all purposes necessary in operating the railroad. According to the proof the side tracks and switch tracks located off the right of way are used for the same purposes as those that are located on the right of way. They are all operated indiscriminately as one system, and to transact the general business of the company. As to the industrial tracks, the proof is that all industries located on such industrial tracks are given the rates of the city, town, or station where they are located. Such industrial tracks are considered a part of the terminals of the company at that point, and no extra charges are made for delivering freight to such industries. It appears, further, that no extra charge is made for shipping from an industry on such a track to a foreign point. The roadbed and trackage of a railroad must be viewed as a unit for all purposes of taxation, except as otherwise directed by statute. The rationale of railroad assessment for taxation is nowhere more lucidly expounded than by the late Justice Cooper in Franklin Co. v. N. C. & St. L. Railway, decided in 1881, and reported in 12 Lea, 521. Judge Cooper stated:

"The property of a railroad company for purposes of taxation consists of its realty, its local personality, its rolling stock, its choses in action, and its franchise. The franchise is the privilege conferred by the charter of incorporation, namely, the right to exercise all the powers granted in the mode prescribed for the purpose of profit. It is a unit not confined to any one county in which it may be exercised. The principal part of the franchise is the right to charge for freight and passengers, the charge being limited with a prescribed or reasonable rate for carriage in the proportion of the distance of transportation. Obviously, after ascertaining the value of the entire franchise in the state as a unit, no more approximate or just division of this value can be made for purposes of taxation than to allot it among the counties through which the track runs in the proportion of the length of track in the county to the entire length of road in the state. And this is what was done by the acts under consideration."

Again the court says:

"The roadway itself of a railroad depends for its value upon the traffic of the company, and not merely upon the narrow strip of land appropriated for the use of the road and the bars and cross-ties thereon. The value of the roadway at any given time is not the original cost, nor a fortiori its ultimate cost after years of expenditure in repairs and improvements. On the other hand, its value cannot be determined by ascertaining the value of the land included in the roadway assessed at the market price of adjacent lands, and adding the value of the cross-ties, rails, and spikes."

Again he says:

"The assessable value for taxation of a railroad track can only be determined by looking to the elements on which the financial condition of the company depends, its traffic as evidenced by the rolling stock and gross earnings, in connection with its capital stock. No local estimate of the fraction in one county of a railroad track, running through several counties can be based upon sufficient data to make it at all reliable, unless, indeed, the local assessors are furnished with the means of estimating the whole road."

Again the court says:

"No part of the mere roadway can be said to be more valuable than any other part, when considered as a track, for the exercise of the franchises of the company as a common carrier. It is, like the franchise itself, a unit for the purposes intended; these purposes being not merely the use of the road for the profit of the company, but its use for the benefit of the public."

Again the court says:

"The real estate of a railroad company other than its roadway, and its personal property having a local situs, may stand upon a different footing, for such property may be estimated and assessed like other similar property of the county, district, or ward where it is situated." (Italics ours.)

This opinion of Judge Cooper was quoted with commendatory language by the United States Supreme Court in two cases, namely: Columbus Southern Railway v. Wright, 151 U. S. 470, 14 Sup. Ct. 396, 38 L. Ed. 238, and Pittsburg Railway Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 14 Sup. Ct. 1114, 38 L. Ed. 1031.

The leading idea advanced by Judge Cooper is that the franchise of a railroad is a unit, and the roadway itself depends for its value upon the traffic of the company, and not merely upon the land and cross-ties. It is true that "the side tracks and switch tracks off the main right of way" are wholly useless and valueless when dissociated from the main line. They are indissolubly connected with the main line, and one cannot be operated without the other. They are a unit in value and in operation, as is well said by counsel. Side tracks and switch tracks off the main right of way are as essential to the operation of the railroad as the side tracks and switches on the main right of way. The order of the Railroad Commission was that any side track, spur track, and switch, of whatsoever kind, "off the main right of way," regardless of its use, should be assessed as localized property. There is no provision in the act of 1897 which justifies such a classification. If the term "roadbed" includes all "side tracks," it includes a side track "off the main right of way" as well as one on the main right of way. The same may be said of switch tracks, trestles, and bridges. It is said, however, that the act of 1882 (Laws Ex. Sess. 1882, p. 20, c. 16), which first classified railroad property for purposes of taxation into localized and distributable properties, and under which the railroads were assessed, contained this provision:

"Sec. 4. Be it further enacted, that the depot buildings, yards, grounds and other property, real, personal and mixed, having an actual situs, shall be known as the localized property of such railroad, and shall be valued by the county assessors and city assessors of the several districts and wards in which such property is situated, in the same manner and upon the same principles that govern the assessment of similar property owned by individuals, and it shall be valued by said county assessors and city assessors in the respective counties, towns and cities in which it is located. The state shall be entitled to a tax upon all such localized property, the counties, towns and cities shall be entitled to a tax upon the value of all such localized property as is situated within their respective limits."

The words "yards and grounds," found in the section quoted from the act of 1882, are claimed to evince the intention of the Legislature that switching yards with side tracks were intended to be classified as localized property. It will be noticed that in the act of 1882 the words "yards and grounds" are used in connection with depot buildings, and were probably intended to refer to depot yards. It is significant that no such construction as is now urged was ever placed on the act of 1882, and that for a period of 25 years no tax assessor ever assessed the side tracks or switch tracks "on or off" the right of way as localized property.

It is said in the brief of counsel for the railroad, viz.: "It is a part of the history of the assessment of railroad properties in the state of Tennessee that every board of state assessors from 1882 to 1907 assessed all tracks, including side tracks, spur tracks, and switch tracks, both 'on' and 'off' 'the main right of way,' as a part of the unit known as 'distributable property.' Such assessments were approved by every Governor of the state during that period as a member of the board of examiners or equalization."

We are entirely satisfied with the correctness of this statement. But, whatever potency there may have been in the terms "yards and grounds," found in the assessment act of 1882, they were entirely omitted from the act of 1897, under which the present assessment was made. This is shown by a comparison of the two acts, viz.:

Section 4, Act of 1882.

That the depot buildings, yards, grounds and other property, real, personal and mixed, having an actual situs, shall be known as the localized property of such railroad, etc.

Section 3, Act of 1897.

That the depot buildings and other property, real, personal and mixed, having an actual situs, shall be known as the localized property of such railroad, etc.

This change in the phraseology of the law removes any ground for the contention that "yards and grounds" covered with tracks should be included under the head of localized property. The words "yards and grounds," having been expressly omitted from the act of 1897, cannot now be read into the latter act for the purpose of covering this feature of the assessment. The other features of the two acts are identical, as will appear from the following parallel columns:

Section 2, Act of 1882.

That the roadbed of a railroad shall include all side tracks, switches, trestles, bridges and the ties, rails, fastenings and superstructure of every kind.

Section 6, Act of 1897.

That the road of any railroad property shall include all side tracks, switches, bridges, trestles, ties, rails and superstructure of every kind.

It will be observed that the only difference in these two sections is that the word "roadbed" was used in the act of 1882 where the word "road" was used in the act of 1897. Whether the change was intentional, or a mere inadvertence, is not material. It is conceded by counsel on both sides that this change was immaterial, and that the words "roadbed" and "road," employed in the two acts, mean substantially the same thing.

Section 3 of the act of 1882 and section 7 of the act of 1897 undertake to define what shall be "distributable property." These two sections are substantially identical in language, viz.:

Section 3, Act of 1882.

That the roadbed, rolling stock, franchises, choses in action and personal property of a railroad property having no actual situs, shall be known as its distributable property, and shall be valued by said assessors separate from the other property, etc.

Section 7, Act of 1897.

That the roadbed, rolling stock, franchises, choses in action and personal property of a railroad property having no actual situs, shall be known as distributable property and shall be valued separately from the other property, etc.

The term "roadbed," under both acts, included all side tracks and switch tracks, wherever situated, and, with the rolling stock, franchises, choses in action, and personal property of a railroad having no actual situs, must be assessed separately as distributable property. Again chapter 5, p. 102, of the Acts of 1897 (section 2) requires railroads to file with the State Comptroller a schedule, among other things, "setting forth therein the length in miles of its entire roadbed, switches and side tracks, showing the number of miles lying in this state, in each county of this state, and in each incorporated town in this state," and the "value of the whole." The Legislature would not have required a schedule showing the "value of the whole" of "its entire roadbed, switches and side tracks," if switches and side tracks "off the main right of way" were intended to be assessed separately and distinct from the switches and side tracks "on the main right of way."

The principle of assessing side tracks and switch tracks as distributable property, under chapter 5, Acts 1897, was distinctly recognized and enforced in the case of Kansas City, Ft. Scott & Memphis Railroad v. King, Comptroller, decided by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at Cincinnati, and reported in 120 Fed. 614, 57 C. C. A. 278. That was a Tennessee case, and involved the construction of the act of 1897, with which we are now dealing. This property was shown to cover a considerable acreage, and included about 20 miles of trackage in the city of Memphis. In its schedules the railroad company reported that 2 miles of this trackage was main line, and that the remainder consisted of side tracks and switches. In fact, the whole constituted the terminals of said company in the city of Memphis. The total mileage of the railroad returned for taxation consisted of 959 miles, of which the railroad company claimed that 675 miles were main line and the remainder side tracks and switches, including 18 miles of side tracks and switches in Memphis. The total valuation placed on the distributable property of the entire line of road (959 miles, including main lines, side tracks, etc.) was about $13,400,000. The commission divided this aggregate amount by the total mileage—both main and side lines—and in order to arrive at a fair and approximate assessment, the proof showing that the property in Memphis was worth at least $250,000, the quotient of $14,000 obtained by this method was, as unit of value, multiplied by the total mileage of all tracks in Memphis, resulting in an assessment of about $250,000.

It was insisted on behalf of the railroad company that the total valuation should be divided by the 675 miles of main line, and that the quotient thus obtained should be multiplied by the 2 miles of main line, as claimed by it, in Memphis; the result being that the railroad claimed that it could only be assessed upon a valuation of about $38,000 on property shown to be worth $250,000. The assessment actually made was as follows:

The Railroad Commission of the state of Tennessee, acting ex officio as state tax assessors of railroad, telegraph, and telephone properties assessable for taxation in said state, after consideration of the distributable property of the above-named railroad, namely, its rolling stock, franchises, roadbed, side tracks, switches, bridges, trestles, ties, rails, and superstructures pertaining to said roadbed, and all other property of said road other than localized property, for the purpose of assessing the same for taxation, state, county, and municipal, for the years 1899 and 1900, find the terminals of said road to be Kansas City, Mo., and Memphis, Tenn., with 959.50 miles of entire main line, of which there is 21.16 miles of terminal line in Tennessee, and the number of miles as hereinafter set out in each county and municipality of said main line, and compute the value for assessment for taxation of the said distributable property of the said road, and do so value the same for taxation, state, county, and municipal, for the years 1899 and 1900, as hereinafter set out, to be apportioned, state, county, and municipal, as hereinafter set out, viz.:

Value of distributable property of entire line of road, 959.50 miles.....	$13,434,000
Less legal exemptions.....	1,000
Assessable balance in Tennessee.....	296,240
Assessable value per mile.....	14,000

Apportionment for Tennessee.

21.16 miles at $14,000 per mile.....	$296,240
---------------------------------------	-----------

Apportionment for Counties—Shelby.

21.16 miles at $14,000 per mile.....	$296,240
---------------------------------------	-----------

Apportionment for Municipalities—Memphis.

21.16 miles at $14,000 per mile.....	$296,240
---------------------------------------	-----------

An examination of above assessment will show that the Railroad Commission assessed all the terminal tracks, side tracks, and switch tracks of said company in the city of Memphis as distributable property. The real controversy in the case was over the method adopted for valuing the distributable property. The company insisted it had only two or three miles of main line in Memphis, but on account of the side tracks and terminal tracks the commission estimated the main line as 18.18 miles in length. The court, speaking through Judge Day, said:

"The terminal property of the appellant is composed of a large number of tracks, a network in fact, used to make connections, and to afford storage room for cars, and the means of handling, receiving, and delivering freight and making connections—a situation which may be generally described as embracing the terminal facilities of this railroad at Memphis. It is insisted for the railroad company that only that small portion of some two miles connecting with other roads can be regarded as main line, and included in the 'entire length of the road,' for the purpose of tax distribution under the statute. It is claimed that in this way the statute is consistently carried into effect, and this company taxed by the method which prevails in assessing other railroads in the state. It appears that in assessing a railroad traversing the state, which it is claimed the complainant's does, it has been the practice to find the 'length of the road' without including side tracks, and assess the distributable property by multiplying the value per mile by the number of miles in the state included in the length of the road as thus obtained. The practice of taxing distributable property by this mileage method is quite common, and is prescribed by statute in a number of states. This means of reaching the distributing value of railroad property for the purpose of taxation has met with approval in a number of Supreme Court decisions. They are collected in the opinion of Mr. Justice Brewer in Railroad Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 14 Sup. Ct. 1114, 38 L. Ed. 1031."

It will be noticed that the property assessed in that case embraced the terminal facilities of the railroad at Memphis, with a network of tracks used for handling, receiving, and delivering freight, and making connections, and yet it was all assessed as distributable property. There was no insistence that those terminal tracks, side tracks, and switch tracks should be assessed as "localized property." The court then examined section 7, c. 5, Acts 1897, providing for the assessment of distributable property, and further wrote:

"Undoubtedly, wherever applicable, this rule must be followed, and in most cases it will work substantial justice; but, as was said by Mr. Justice Brewer in Railroad Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 14 Sup. Ct. 1114, 38 L. Ed. 1031, the law does not require that the valuation of the property within the state shall be absolutely determined upon the mileage basis. In the case at hand, we cannot perceive any reason for calling the connecting part of these terminal tracks main line and the balance side tracks. We have a situation where the 'length of the road' rule, as construed in practical application to other roads differently situated, will not afford a means of reaching the value of the property of this company in Tennessee.

To treat the two miles as main line, and as furnishing a number by which to multiply the total valuation, divided by the number of miles of main line of the whole road, will value this property at about $39,000—a sum which the testimony discloses to be so far below its true value as to give an absurd preference to this property in taxing railroads in Tennessee. The situation was apparent to the assessors, as their report discloses. While the mileage rule was inapplicable, they were, nevertheless, authorized by the statute to value this and all other property of the company in Tennessee for taxation. This property was not to be valued as a distinct and separate entity, but was to be treated as a part of the system to which it belonged."

There are many authorities from other states to the effect that the side tracks and switch tracks of a railroad are part and parcel of the system, and must be assessed as such under statutes providing a method of valuing railroad property for taxation. In Illinois a statute provided that a state board should assess "the railroad track," and that the local tax assessors should assess all property not "upon the right of way," or not included in the term "railroad track." Section 42 of the revenue law (Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 120) provided as follows:

"Such right of way, including the superstructure of main, side, or second track and turnouts, and the station and improvements of the railroad company on such right of way, shall be held to be real estate for the purpose of taxation, and denominated 'railroad track,' and shall be so listed and valued; and shall be described in the assessment thereof as a strip of land extending on each side of such railroad track, and embracing the same, together with all the stations and improvements thereon, commencing at a point where such railroad track crosses the boundary line in entering the county, city, town or village, and extending to the point where such track crosses the boundary line leaving such county, city, town or village."

The collector of McLean county, Ill., undertook to collect taxes on certain land in the city of Bloomington, and the objection urged by the railroad company was that the property was held by the railroad company for its right of way, and was embraced in a class of property denominated by the revenue law as "railroad track," and therefore not assessable by the local assessors. The court says, in speaking of section 42 above quoted:

"What was intended by the enactment of this section of the statute by the use of the words here employed, 'such right of way'? Were these words intended to mean merely the strip of land a certain number of feet wide, upon which the railroad company had constructed its main track, or did the framers of the section intend to embrace, not only the main line of the road, but all side tracks, turnouts, and switches which are connected with the main track, and which are in actual use by the railroad company as a common carrier?

"We can see no reason why the term 'right of way' should be confined to the land over which the main track of a railroad shall be constructed. The land upon which a side track, a switch, or a turnout is built and in actual use by the company in the business for which it was organized, for all practical purposes, is as much held for right of way as is the land upon which the main track is constructed. In the operation of a railroad, it is necessary that trains should pass each other, and hence the necessity of turnouts, switches, and side tracks. In the loading of cars, transfer of cars, the making up of trains, and in innumerable other instances that might be named, in the prosecution of its business as a common carrier, side tracks, switches, and turnouts are as indispensable to a proper transaction of its business as the main track itself. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the land held and in actual use by a railroad company for side tracks, switches, and turnouts must be regarded, within the meaning of the revenue law, as a part of the right of way of the company. It is used in the transportation of freight, and also for the purpose of carrying passengers, alike with the land upon which the main track is constructed, and upon what principle the land upon which the main track is laid can be held to be right of way, and the land over which a side track, switch, or a turnout passes can be termed something else, we are at a loss to understand." Chicago & Alton Railroad Co. v. People ex rel., 98 Ill. 356.

This case was reaffirmed by the Supreme Court of Illinois in the later case of People ex rel. City of Chicago v. State Board of Equalization, decided in 1903, and reported in 205 Ill. 296, 68 N. E. 943. The court said:

"The right of way of a railroad company cannot be cut up, for the purposes of assessment, into parts, either by dividing it into sections by the lines of the different taxing bodies which it crosses, or by severing from its main track the portions that lie outside of some arbitrary line drawn through the center of the right of way. A railroad is a unit, and for the purposes of assessment its right of way must be treated as a whole. The switch or side track at which it receives coal, grain, stock, or freight in a country village is as essential to the successful operation of the road as is the switch or side track in the city at which the articles which it handles as a common carrier are discharged, and the land upon which its side or second track and turnouts, and its station, machine shops, roundhouse, etc., stand, is as necessary to the successful operation of the road and as much a part of the right of way as the land upon which the main track is laid, and the value of each piece of its right of way must be determined by taking into consideration the value of the entire right of way, rather than the value of each piece for commercial purposes wholly disconnected from the use to which it has been applied, as compared with contiguous property used for purposes other than right of way."

In this case it was urged that such a construction would render the act unconstitutional. This was fully discussed, and the court discarded the idea that it was unconstitutional, and says:

"The method provided in said act for assessing 'railroad track' does not remove real estate used for railroad right of way from within the limits of one taxing body and place it within the limits of another taxing body, but merely establishes a method of valuing the proportionate share of each taxing body through which the road runs, in the right of way as a whole, which, as we have seen, is equitable and just, and that method of assessing railroad right of way has frequently been approved by the courts of this and other states, as well as in the Supreme Court of the United States." Porter v. Rockford Railroad Co. (76 Ill. 561) supra; Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385; State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, 23 L. Ed. 663; City of Dubuque v. C. & M. Railroad Co., 47 Iowa, 196.

The state of Indiana also has a statute like that of Illinois. In the case of Pfaff, Auditor, v. Terre Haute & Indianapolis R. R. Co., 108 Ind. 144, 9 N. E. 93, the facts were that the railroad company owned tracts of land and certain parts of lots in the city of Indianapolis, aggregating about 12 acres. Across these lots certain tracks were laid, used for switching purposes and for the purposes of a roundhouse. These lots were attempted to be assessed by the local tax assessors under a statute almost precisely similar to that of the state of Illinois. The Indiana court held that such lots were a part of the "right of way," or "railroad track," in the sense of the statute, and must be assessed as such. See, also, State ex rel. v. Hannibal R. R. Co., 135 Mo. 618, 37 S. W. 532, for the construction of the Missouri statute, and wherein the court, among other things, said:

"The tracks in a yard may properly be termed side tracks, and include the ground necessary for the convenient and safe movement of cars, and for loading and unloading them."

See, also, State ex rel. v. Chicago, Rock Island Railroad Co., 162 Mo. 391, 63 S. W. 495; St. Louis, Iron Mountain, etc., Railroad Co. v. Miller Co., 67 Ark. 498, 55 S. W. 926; Burlington Railroad Co. v. Lancaster Co., 15 Neb. 252, 18 N. W. 71; Red Willow Co. v. Chicago Railroad Co., 26 Neb. 660, 42 N. W. 879. The cases already cited are sufficient to show how, under analogous statutes in other states, side tracks, switches, and turnouts are regarded in the assessment of the properties of a railroad system. The railroad is everywhere regarded as a unit, and the side tracks and switch tracks as a part of the unit, which are not separately assessed for taxation but are included in the system. In this state this matter is not left to construction; but the statute expressly declares that the roadbed shall include all side tracks, switches, etc., etc. We therefore hold that the circuit court was in error in holding that "side tracks off the main right of way" were properly assessed as localized property. They should have been assessed as distributable property.

It is insisted, however, on behalf of the state, that "even if all the property denominated 'localized property off main right of way' be insufficiently described, and even if it be not 'localized property' under chapter 5 of the Acts of 1897, still it is distributable property, and the state is entitled to its tax on said property."

The above contention of respondent is more particularly set out in their seventh assignment of error as follows:

"The court erred in not sustaining the sixth ground of defendant's motion to quash, to the effect that in any event petitioner is liable for the state tax upon the assessment of petitioner's property in controversy under the name of 'localized trackage,' because the record shows that the amount of said assessment was not included in the assessment of petitioner's 'distributable property,' and, if the same is not assessable as 'localized property,' then the valuation should have been added to the valuation of the distributable property, and so certified. In no event was petitioner entitled to escape the state tax upon the valuation of said property as made and assessed by the state board, and the supersedeas should have been modified, so as to allow said valuation to be certified for state tax."

We are of opinion this contention is unsound. As we have held, this property belonged to the distributable class, which is assessed as a unit. There is no authority in the act of 1897 for the separate assessments of side tracks and switch tracks in any county, and then add that assessment to the valuation of distributable property. The separate assessment of this property as "localized trackage off the main right of way" was absolutely void, and no tax can be collected on such an assessment as distributable property. It should have been included in the general assessment of all distributable property.

While we hold that this trackage and the roadbed on which it is situated must be assessed as distributable property, all buildings, coal bins, roundhouses, machine shops, depot buildings, and other structures located on the terminal yards at Nashville and at Chattanooga, or elsewhere, must be assessed as localized property, and the railroad company should return in its schedule a description of the real estate so far as it is occupied by such buildings. The circuit court quashed the assessment of localized trackage off the main right of way because of vagueness and indefiniteness of description of the property. In this action the court was correct; but he should have further adjudged said assessment void, for the reason that the property assessed as "localized trackage" should have been assessed as "distributable property."

The proper judgment will be entered here, and the costs will be certified to the Comptroller for payment.

MCCOWN v. WILSON et al.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 1, 1909.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 130*)—RES INTER ALIOS ACTA.

In an action to replevin property mortgaged to secure a note executed by defendants for a store account, in which the defense was payment of the account, testimony that, when witness went to plaintiff's store to settle an account, the same bookkeeper who kept the books when defendants claimed to have settled said that witness still owed another account, but upon examining other papers admitted that it had been settled, was irrelevant and incompetent; its purpose being to show that, because the bookkeeper had failed to give credit to another customer, he failed to give credit to defendants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 403; Dec. Dig. § 130.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—PREJUDICIAL EFFECT.

The admission of the testimony was prejudicial to plaintiff; the evidence on the issue of payment being sharply conflicting.

3. WITNESSES (§ 351*) — IMPEACHMENT — FOUNDATION—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action to replevin property mortgaged to secure a note given by defendants for a store account, in which plaintiff's bookkeeper testified that the note had not been paid, and defendants claimed it had, testimony by another customer that the bookkeeper had insisted that witness had not paid an account, but after examining his papers admitted that it had been paid, was inadmissible to impeach the bookkeeper's testimony, in the absence of proper foundation.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Arkansas County; Eugene Lankford, Judge.

Action by A. H. McCown, as administrator, against W. W. Wilson and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and remanded for new trial.

Thomas, Lee & Smith, for appellant. R. D. Rasco, for appellees.

WOOD, J. This suit was begun in the justice court to replevin certain property mortgaged to secure a note executed by appellees to J. H. Merritt & Co., September 9, 1905, for the sum of $253. J. H. Merritt & Co. was a partnership composed of J. H. Merritt and W. A. Merritt. The firm was engaged in the mercantile business. The note and mortgage were executed to cover an account that appellees had contracted with J. H. Merritt & Co. The defense was payment, and this presented a question of fact, upon which there was a sharp conflict in the evidence.

During the progress of the trial a witness, W. P. Ruffin, testified as follows: "Q. Have you had any business transaction with the firm of J. H. Merritt & Co.? A. I guess I have. I have been trading with that house at least about 20 or 22 years. Q. Do you remember about a short time ago, some time within a year, that Mr. Burnett, in looking through the books, told you that you owed them a certain amount, secured by note and mortgage? A. Yes, sir. Q. If you remember the incident, tell the jury how it was? A. In the spring of the year 1907, this spring a year ago, I went to Mr. McCown's store here. I had been dealing with the house there for a long time, and I told Mr. McCown that I would like to make arrangements to get supplies last year; and he says, 'Mr. Burnett will fix up the papers,' and we went into a room, and we hadn't been in there but a while, and he got out some papers, but before he got to writing any he said to me, 'What are you going to do with this old J. H. Merritt account?' that I owed them. I said that I didn't owe them nothing. He said, 'You do,' and I said, 'No; you are mistaken. I didn't owe them a cent. I paid that off quite a while ago,' and he said, 'Mr. Ruffin, you don't dispute the account, do you?' and I said, 'Yes; I do,' and he said, 'Here it is,' and carried me to the books, and showed me where it was on the books charged up—thirty-some-odd dollars, and I said I did not owe it, and finally he contended that I did, and it made me a little vexed, and I just pointed my forefinger at him and said, 'Mr. Burnett, I am a poor man; but, if you will produce that note and mortgage, I will pay it before sundown,' and he went into the desk where he kept a little book of notes, and looked through the papers, and he just turned around and said, 'I guess you have got her.' There have been no words said about it from that day to this." This evidence was objected to by appellant, and he duly excepted to the ruling of the court in admitting it, and makes such ruling one of the grounds of his motion for new trial.

The evidence was wholly irrelevant and incompetent. It was likewise prejudicial. It tended to make the jury believe that Burnett, the bookkeeper who had charge of the settlement of the accounts of J. H. Merritt & Co., had failed to give proper credit to a customer who had paid his account, and, after the account had been paid, still carried the account on the books as a subsisting obligation. This was the same bookkeeper, too, who was in charge of the books at the time appellees claimed to have paid the account (or, rather, note evidencing same in suit), and who testified that the note in suit had not been paid. The purpose of the testimony was to show that, if the bookkeeper had failed to give proper credit to one customer, who had paid his account, such fact would show that he had also failed to give appellees proper credit. Moreover, it tended to prejudice the testimony of the bookkeeper, who was an important witness for appellant, and to impeach his evidence, without laying the proper foundation for such impeachment.

This is the only error we find in the record; but for this the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for new trial.

McRAE v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 4, 1909.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 598*) — CONTINUANCE — RIGHT TO CONTINUANCE—DILIGENCE.

On a motion for continuance to obtain testimony of an absent witness, proper diligence to procure the attendance of the witness must be shown, and a mere showing that the witness resided in the town where the court was held, and that a subpoena had been served on him requiring his attendance at that term of court, without otherwise accounting for his whereabouts or showing that he was then beyond reach by the process of the court, was insufficient.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Monroe County; Eugene Lankford, Judge.

Lecil McRae was convicted of selling whisky without a license, and appeals. Affirmed.

H. A. Parker for appellant. Hal L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., and C. A. Cunningham, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

McCULLOCH, C. J. Appellant was tried and convicted in the circuit court of Monroe county for selling whisky without license, and appeals to this court.

He was convicted on the testimony of one Smith, who testified that he purchased the whisky from appellant. The only assignment of error insisted on here is as to the refusal of the trial court to grant a continuance on account of the absence of a witness. Appellant alleged in his motion for continuance that he could prove by the absent witness Flemons that Smith had stated to him, Flemons, that he had never purchased any whisky from appellant, and did not know of appellant ever having sold whisky.

It is also alleged in the motion that the witness Flemons lived in Clarendon, and that a subpoena had been issued and served on him requiring his attendance at that term of court. Before a party can complain at the ruling of a court in refusing to postpone a trial, he must affirmatively set forth facts in his motion which show that he is entitled to the postponement. He must show that he has exercised proper diligence to procure the attendance of the witness at that time, and that his efforts in that direction have failed. Now, the motion for continuance in the present case affirmatively shows that the witness resides in Clarendon, where the court was held, but it does not otherwise account for his whereabouts. For aught that appears to the contrary, the witness may then have been in the town or county, and his attendance could have been secured at that time by the compulsory process of the court if that had been sought, without postponing the trial to a distant date. Appellant contented himself with having a subpoena issued and served, without seeking any other process of the court, and without showing that the witness was then beyond reach by the process of the court. We are unable, therefore, to discover in the ruling of the court any abuse of discretion. The appellant had a fair trial, and the evidence was sufficient to sustain the judgment.

Affirmed.

G. Smith in the Faulkner chancery court, to foreclose a vendor's lien on certain lands. He alleged in his complaint: That on the 26th day of February, 1895, he sold the lands to Griffith for the sum of $1,000, and that Griffith executed to him for the same his eight promissory notes, as follows: Six, for $100 each, due and payable, respectively, on the 15th day of November, 1895, 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899, and 1900, and two notes, for $200 each, due and payable, respectively, on the 15th day of November, 1902 and 1904, all bearing interest at the rate of 10 per cent. from date. That at the time of the sale he conveyed the lands to Griffith, and retained in the deed a lien on the land for the payment of the purchase money. That Griffith in November, 1902, paid $200 on the notes, and is indebted to him for the lands in the sum of $1,000, with 10 per cent. per annum interest thereon from the 26th day of February, 1895, less the sum of $200. That Griffith, in July, 1907, in a letter to him, acknowledged the justice and correctness of the foregoing claim. He asked for judgment against Griffith for the balance due on the notes, and that such judgment be declared a lien on the lands, and that it be foreclosed and the lands sold to satisfy the same.

Griffith did not answer the complaint, but made default.

The defendant Smith answered, and severally denied all the foregoing allegations, and alleged as follows:

"The defendant O. A. Griffith was the owner of the lands described in plaintiff's complaint on February 3, 1902, and that he was and had been the owner thereof for more than seven years prior to that date, and the defendant O. A. Griffith continuously for more than seven years prior to February 3, 1902, and from and up until February 3, 1902, had been in the open, notorious and adverse possession of the lands described in the complaint, and during all that time claimed to own the same as his own, free from any lien of any kind; that the defendant Smith, on the 3d day of February, 1902, did believe and understand that O. A. Griffith was the owner of the land free from any liens or incumbrances of any kind, and, so believing, the defendant Smith did on February 3, 1902, purchase the land from O. A. Griffith, together with other lands owned by Griffith, and on that day did pay Griffith therefor the sum of $3,500; and that for said sum on that day O. A. Griffith did bargain and sell the lands, together with other lands, to S. G. Smith, and on said day did execute to him a deed therefor, which deed was duly filed for record in the recorder's office of Faulkner county on February 25, 1902. * * *

"The defendant says that the land described in the complaint is a part of and lies adjoining the other lands which this defendant bought from Griffith on said day, and together make and form one farm; and this defendant says that under the purchase and the deed the defendant Griffith did place this defendant in the possession of the land on February 3, 1902, and that this defendant thereunder has been in the quiet, peaceable, open, and notorious possession of the land continuously since said date, claiming to be the owner thereof. This defendant says that at the time he purchased the land as aforesaid from Griffith he did not know or have any information of any debt or claim due plaintiff for the purchase money, or otherwise any right or claim of the plaintiff, and that he did not have such knowledge of such claim, right, or interest of plaintiff at any time prior to the purchase, and has had no knowledge or information of any such claim of plaintiff at any time since the purchase until the summons in this case was served upon him; and, plaintiff further answering, says that, in the event O. A. Griffith did purchase from the plaintiff the land, and did execute to the plaintiff for the purchase money thereof the notes set out in the complaint, or any notes, then in that event this defendant says that more than five years have elapsed after the maturity of each and all of the notes, and after the maturity of the alleged indebtedness, and before the institution of this suit. And this defendant does now specifically plead the statute of limitation of five years against each and all of the alleged notes."

The court, upon final hearing, found that Griffith is indebted to plaintiff, Benedict, in the sum of $2,300, and that plaintiff had no lien on the lands for the indebtedness of Griffith to plaintiff; "said indebtedness, in so far as the lands involved in this suit and the rights of the defendant S. G. Smith thereto are concerned, and the alleged vendor's lien, having been barred by the statute of limitation and by laches." Plaintiff appealed.

The deed and notes mentioned in the pleadings have been lost or destroyed. Evidence was adduced to prove their contents, which was based upon the memory of witnesses.

Plaintiff alleged that he retained a lien on the lands for the purchase money in the deed executed by him to Griffith, and that the purchase money was unpaid. This lien was an incident to the debt it secured, and expired when the debt was barred by limitation. Stephens v. Shannon, 43 Ark. 464; Chase v. Cartright, 53 Ark. 358, 14 S. W. 90, 22 Am. St. Rep. 207.

After Griffith conveyed the lands to Smith, it was beyond his power "to affect the running of the statute of limitation as to such lands." Smith not being liable for the debt secured by the lien thereon, his declarations and acts after that time are inadmissible for that purpose. The land had passed beyond his power to bind or affect by his liabilities. Hughes v. Redus, 90 Ark. 149, 118 S. W. 414, 415; Mayo v. Cartwright, 30 Ark. 407; George v. Butler, 26 Wash. 456, 67 Pac. 263, 57 L. R. A. 396, 90 Am. St. Rep. 756; Wood on Limitation (3d Ed.) § 230.

Payments made or letters written by Griffith after he sold and conveyed the land to Smith could not continue the lien beyond the time it was valid and subsisting when the land was sold to Smith. Griffith sold and conveyed the land to Smith on the 3d day of February, 1902. Witnesses differ as to the time when the notes of Griffith to Benedict were executed. They endeavor to fix the time by the death of the wife of Griffith, which was on the 23d of July, 1894. Benedict, the plaintiff, and Mrs. Dora Adams, testified that the land was sold to Smith about two years before the death of Mrs. Griffith. Griffith testified that the sale was after her death. He had previously stated that it was one or two years before her death; but he says that he had refreshed his memory since he made the latter statement, and discovered that he was in error, and that the sale was after her death. His memory as to this fact was uncertain.

Witnesses also differ as to when the notes were payable. Benedict, the plaintiff, testified: "My recollection is there were eight notes. The first six were due one year apart; one beginning the 1st day of November, 1895, then one each year up to 1900. The two last notes were for $200 each, due two years apart, one in 1902 and the other in 1904." Griffith testified that the notes matured annually, one every year, until the last one mentioned, so that, if the notes were executed in 1892 or 1893, the first note matured in November, 1892 or 1893, or the 1st day of January, 1893 or 1894, the second one year after the maturity of the first, the third two years, the fourth three years, the fifth four years, the sixth five years, the seventh six years, and the eighth seven years.

The chancellor evidently found that the notes were executed in 1892 or 1893, and that the first of them matured on or before the 1st of January, 1894, and the last matured on or before the 1st of January, 1901, and that this suit was barred; it having been brought on the 10th day of August, 1907, more than five years since their maturity, the time prescribed by the statute of limitation for the bringing of such suits. After a careful review of the evidence in the case, we cannot say the findings of the chancellor were contrary to the preponderance thereof.

Decree affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Sebastian County; Daniel Hon, Judge.

W. H. Potts was convicted of a misdemeanor in justice's court, and, from a judgment of the circuit court dismissing his appeal, he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Geo. W. Dodd, for appellant. Hal. L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., C. A. Cunningham, Asst. Atty. Gen., and A. A. McDonald, Pros. Atty., for the State.

FRAUENTHAL, J. The appellant was convicted in the court of a justice of the peace of Sebastian county of a misdemeanor; and from that judgment he appealed to the circuit court. The judgment of conviction was entered on June 16, 1909, and on June 24, 1909, he filed with the justice of the peace an appeal bond and made an application for appeal, and thereupon the justice of the peace made the following order: "Bond approved and appeal allowed." The appellant did not make or file with the justice of the peace an affidavit for appeal; but the transcript of the orders on his docket and the original papers in the case were filed in the circuit court within the time prescribed by law. Upon motion of the state the circuit court dismissed the appeal because no affidavit for appeal had been made or filed with the justice of the peace. From the judgment of the circuit court thus dismissing his appeal, the appellant now presents this appeal to this court.

It is provided by article 7, § 42, Const. 1874, that "appeals may be taken from the final judgments of the justices of the peace to the circuit court under such regulations as are now or may be provided by law." Unless the Legislature has provided that the filing of an affidavit is a necessary condition or prerequisite to obtaining an appeal from a judgment of conviction in a criminal case in a court of a justice of the peace, such affidavit would not be essential for the circuit court to acquire jurisdiction of such case upon appeal. By the act of the Legislature which became a law April 11, 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 375), it is provided: "Any person convicted before any justice court or police, or city court of any crime, misdemeanor, breach of the penal laws of this state, or of violation of any city or town ordinance, may appeal therefrom to the circuit court of the county in which said conviction occurred at any time within sixty days thereafter." The sections of that act following prescribe the duties of the justice of the peace in regard to sending up transcripts, and also prescribe the time the appeal shall stand for trial in the circuit court and the procedure. But nowhere in the act is it prescribed that an affidavit for appeal shall be made or filed, and in no other provision of the statutes do we find that it is prescribed that an affidavit for appeal must be made or filed in order to obtain an appeal from a judgment of conviction on a trial of a criminal case before a justice of the peace.

It is urged that section 4666 of Kirby's Digest provides that the appellant must make and file with the justice an affidavit as a condition and prerequisite to obtain an appeal to the circuit court from a judgment of a justice of the peace, and that this provision of the statute applies also to judgments of justices of the peace in criminal cases. This provision of the statute and this section of Kirby's Digest is taken from the act of the General Assembly of Arkansas, approved April 29, 1873 (Acts 1873, p. 430). That is an act entitled "An act to define the jurisdiction and regulate the course of proceedings in the courts of justices of the peace in civil actions"; and by section 125 of the act it is specifically stated that the provisions of the act apply to the proceedings in civil actions before justices of the peace. Nowhere does the act prescribe that any of its provisions shall apply to proceedings or trials in criminal actions before the courts of the justices of the peace. It follows that the requirement in section 4666 of Kirby's Digest of an affidavit in order to obtain an appeal only applies to civil actions, and does not apply to judgments of conviction entered upon criminal proceedings. Furthermore in the Code of Criminal Procedure, there is a subdivision or chapter relating to and regulating the manner of taking appeals from the judgment of justices of the peace in criminal cases (Kirby's Dig. §§ 2576-2582), but it is not provided therein that an affidavit for appeal is necessary to obtain such appeal. The Legislature has not prescribed that it is a requisite or condition in obtaining an appeal from a judgment of conviction of a justice of the peace in a criminal proceeding to make or file an affidavit for appeal. The circuit court therefore erred in dismissing the appeal in this case for the want of an affidavit for appeal.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed, and this cause is remanded, with directions to overrule the motion to dismiss the appeal, and to proceed with the trial of appellant.

BEEBE STAVE CO. v. AUSTIN et al.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 8, 1909.)

1. LIENS (§ 15*)—RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PURCHASERS OF PROPERTY.

One having a lien on property which is purchased and converted by another with notice of the lien may have his lien fixed on the proceeds, where the lien on the property has been destroyed by the wrongdoer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Liens, Cent. Dig. § 20; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 158*)—INADEQUACY OF CONSIDERATION—AS EVIDENCE OF FRAUD.

Mere inadequacy of price of realty is not sufficient to put a purchaser on inquiry or to invalidate the sale, but proof of a grossly inadequate price is evidence affecting the good faith of the purchaser, from which it may be inferred as a fact that he knew of the fraudulent intent of his grantor, and assisted him in the commission of the fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 500, 501; Dec. Dig. § 158.*]

3. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—PURCHASE OF TIMBER—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE.

A grantee in an unrecorded deed which recited the payment of the price offered to sell the timber on the land to a company engaged in purchasing timber and in logging near the land and presented the deed to the company. The consideration named in the deed was a reasonably fair price. The company bought the timber for a price not unreasonably small, and paid it without notice that the grantor had a vendor's lien. Held, that the company was a purchaser of the timber in good faith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. § 9; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

4. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—SALE OF TIMBER—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE.

Where a purchaser of standing timber without notice of a lien on the land executed negotiable notes for the price which the vendor accepted as payment and then transferred them to an innocent person, the purchaser made full payment, and was a bona fide purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. § 9; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Appeal from Perry Chancery Court; Jeremiah G. Wallace, Chancellor.

Suit by Mrs. John Austin and another against J. D. Richards and another. From a decree for plaintiffs, defendant, the Beebe Stave Company, appeals. Reversed and rendered.

J. A. Comer, for appellant. John L. Hill, for appellees.

FRAUENTHAL, J. The appellees, Mrs. John Austin and the First National Bank of Perry, the plaintiffs below, instituted this suit against the defendants below, J. D. Richards and the Beebe Stave Company, to enforce a vendor's lien upon certain land, and to charge the Beebe Stave Company with the value of the timber cut therefrom. It is alleged in the complaint that Mrs. Austin sold the lands to Richards and conveyed same to him by a deed which recited that the consideration had been paid in full, but that the recital was untrue, and that Richards had not in fact paid said purchase money or any part thereof, but had given notes therefor which were unpaid, and for a recovery of the notes the suit was brought; that Richards sold the timber on said land to the Beebe Stave Company, who purchased with full knowledge that said purchase money of the land had not been paid. The prayer was for judgment against Richards for the amount of the notes and that same be declared a vendor's lien upon the land and for sale thereof in event of nonpayment of the judgment, and also for judgment against the Beebe Stave Company for the value of said timber. The Beebe Stave Company made answer that it purchased the timber from Richards in good faith and for a valuable consideration, and without any notice that any of the purchase money for the land was unpaid.

It appears from the evidence that the plaintiff Mrs. Austin, who was a nonresident of the state, had employed one G. W. Rhea to sell the land for her, and agreed to sell same for $500, and to pay him $20 for his services. He thereupon sold the land to defendant J. L. Richards, and sent to her a deed for execution, which recited that the consideration was $480, and also recited that the purchase money was paid in full. She duly executed the deed on January, 28, 1907, and returned the same to her agent, Rhea, who delivered it to Richards. The Beebe Stave Company was engaged in buying timber with its office at Little Rock, Ark., and at this time was engaged in logging near the land in controversy. One of the men who was logging for the company had gone over the land in controversy, and had estimated the amount of timber on the land. This party had desired to borrow from the Beebe Stave Company money with which to purchase this timber, but the officers of the company told him that the company would purchase the timber if it was for sale. On February 27, 1907, Richards went to the office of the Beebe Stave Company at Little Rock, and offered to sell the timber on the land for the sum of $200. He had with him his deed from Mrs. Austin, which was examined by the secretary of the Beebe Stave Company, and, relying upon his statement that he owned the land, and the recital of the deed that the purchase money was paid, it bought the timber from Richards, who executed to it a timber deed therefor. In payment for the timber the Beebe Stave Company executed to Richards two negotiable notes, each for $100, and due, respectively, 90 and 120 days after date, and Richards accepted these notes in payment for the timber. At this time the deed from Mrs. Austin to Richards had not been recorded. On the following day, February 28, 1907, Richards for value sold and transferred the two notes to the German National Bank of Little Rock, Ark., who then became the true owner thereof.

It appears from the testimony that Rhea, the agent of Mrs. Austin, actually sold the land to Richards for $625, taking from him two notes, each of which was dated January 28, 1907, and due 12 months thereafter, and recited that it was given as payment for said land. One of these notes was for $500 and made payable to Mrs. John Austin, and the other was for $125, and was made payable to G. W. Rhea. This latter note Rhea sold and transferred to the first National Bank of Perry, one of the plaintiffs. It is upon these two notes aggregating $625 that this suit is instituted. It appears that the Beebe Stave Company began cutting the timber on the land soon after their purchase, and in May, 1907, they had cut a great part thereof, when they were notified that Richards had not paid the purchase money. The amount of timber cut by them from the land was estimated to be of the value of $400. The chancery court rendered a judgment against Richards by default for $625, the amount of the notes, and decreed a sale of the land for its payment. The land was sold by a master under this decree pending the further litigation against the Beebe Stave Company, and brought $259.40, exclusive of the cost of the suit to that date. Thereupon the court found that the plaintiffs had a lien on the timber sold to the Beebe Stave Company for the purchase money of the land, and rendered a judgment against that company in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $220.60, the difference between the amount named in the deed as the purchase price of the land, to wit, $480, and the above net amount, after payment of cost, for which the land was sold by the master. From the decree thus rendered against it, the Beebe Stave Company prosecutes this appeal.

The only question involved upon this appeal is the right of the plaintiffs to recover from the Beebe Stave Company the proceeds of the timber which they cut and removed from the land or any part of said proceeds. The plaintiffs contend that they had a vendor's lien for the purchase money upon the land involved in the suit, and therefore upon the standing trees thereon as a part of the land; that the Beebe Stave Company purchased the trees and timber with notice that the purchase money had not been paid, and therefore with notice of their lien therefor, and thereafter removed the trees from the land, and wrongfully converted them to its own use. It is a principle of equity that when one has a lien upon property which is taken, and said property is wrongfully converted by another, with notice of such lien, the owner may have his lien fixed upon the proceeds of the property where the lien on the property has thus been destroyed by the wrongdoer. 3 Pomeroy, Eq. (3d Ed.) § 1233; Reavis v. Barnes, 36 Ark. 575; Judge v. Curtis, 72 Ark. 132, 78 S. W. 746. And it is upon this equitable doctrine that the plaintiffs base their right to equitable relief in this case against the Beebe Stave Company. But from the evidence in this case we are of the opinion that it clearly appears that the Beebe Stave Company at the time it purchased and paid for this timber was a bona fide purchaser thereof for a fair and adequate consideration, and without any notice, either actual or constructive, that the purchase money was not paid, or that plaintiffs had any lien on the timber therefor. The Beebe Stave Company was engaged in purchasing timber at this time, and was then logging near the land in controversy. It had been buying timber on lands in that locality from parties indiscriminately, and it was not unreasonable for them to have told one of their logging men who desired to purchase the timber on the land that the company would rather purchase it. From this party the company learned the amount and character of the timber upon the land, so that, when Richards offered to sell the timber, it was sufficiently advised as to the value of the timber to make a price therefor. Richards came to the office of the company in the ordinary way of doing business, and made the offer to sell the timber in the usual course of business. He presented his deed for inspection, and claimed to own the land. That the deed was not recorded was no suspicious circumstance, as urged by plaintiffs, because numbers of good and honest men do not place their deeds on record. The deed recited the amount of the consideration of the land, and that the entire purchase money was paid. The amount of the consideration named in the deed was a reasonably fair price for the land and the timber thereon, because all that the plaintiff asked therefor was $500, and the deed named the amount of the consideration to be $480. The land contained 160 acres, and the sum of $200, as the price named for the timber thereon, was not an unreasonably small price. The company then paid for the timber with its negotiable notes. There was nothing in the acts or conduct of Richards in his transaction with the Beebe Stave Company to arouse any suspicion that he was endeavoring to defraud the plaintiff; and there is not a particle of testimony that indicates that the officers of this company intended to defraud the plaintiff or had any reason or right to believe that Richards was endeavoring to do so. There is no act or word of Richards or circumstance that was sufficient to give them notice that the purchase money was not paid or to cause them to make any further inquiry, so that they could have learned that it was not paid.

It is urged by the plaintiffs that the price paid by the company was so inadequate as to put it on inquiry, and that such inadequacy of price stamps the transaction as fraudulent. But mere inadequacy of price is not sufficient to put the purchaser upon inquiry or to invalidate the sale. Mr. Pomeroy in his work on Equity says: "The doctrine is now well settled that mere inadequacy—that is, inequality in value between the subject-matter and the price—is not sufficient to constitute constructive fraud." "When the inadequacy of price is so gross that it shocks the conscience, and furnishes satisfactory and decisive evidence of fraud, it will be sufficient proof that the purchase is not bona fide." 2 Pomeroy on Equity, §§ 923, 927. Another writer says the inequality must be so great as to shock the sense of justice. 6 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 701. The proof of a grossly inadequate price paid for the property is really evidence affecting the good faith of the purchaser, from which it might be inferred as a fact that the purchaser knew of the fraudulent intent of his grantor, and thus assisted him in his commission of fraud. Hogg v. Thurman, 90 Ark. 93, 117 S. W. 1070. In the case at bar the price of the land with the timber thereon was placed by the owner at $500. The land after the timber had been cut off sold by the master for $300. It cannot then be said that $200 was a grossly inadequate price for the timber. It is true that an estimate had been placed on the timber of a value of $400 by some parties. But, when the vicissitudes of the logging and timber business are considered, it cannot be said that an ordinarily prudent and careful business man who wishes to make some profit upon his trades has given a grossly inadequate price in paying only the price that the Beebe Stave Company paid for this timber. It is not sufficient to definitely prove that the officers of the company had reason to believe that Richards was trying to defraud his vendor; and, when the deed was shown to them reciting that the vendor acknowledged full payment of the purchase money, the price at which Richards agreed to sell the timber was not sufficient to arouse a just suspicion in them which would reasonably call upon them to make further inquiry. Fly v. Screeton, 64 Ark. 185, 41 S. W. 704; Huskins v. Fayetteville Gro. Co., 79 Ark. 390, 96 S. W. 195. And from the evidence we do not find proof of any other fact or circumstance of suspicion which gave the officers of the company notice of any fraudulent intent on the part of Richards or that the purchase money was not paid; nor of any circumstance sufficient to cause them to make further inquiry. It is urged by plaintiffs that in May, 1907, and before all the timber had been cut and removed, actual notice was given to the Beebe Stave Company that the purchase money had not been paid. But at that time said company had fully paid for the timber and the timber was then its property. It had given for the timber negotiable notes which were accepted as payment, and these notes had been long before sold and transferred to an innocent third person who then held and owned the notes, and thereafter the Beebe Stave Company made payment of these notes to this third person, the German National Bank, the true owner thereof. This constituted a full payment, as the notes were sold and transferred long before the notice received by the company. 80 Cyc. 1203.

It follows, therefore, that the chancery court erred in holding that the Beebe Stave Company bought the timber with notice either actual or constructive of the equitable rights or lien of the plaintiff, and that it erred in rendering any judgment against the Beebe Stave Company.

The decree of the chancery court is reversed, and a decree is here rendered dismissing the prayer of the complaint in so far as it seeks any judgment against the Beebe Stave Company.

CHEROKEE CONST. CO. v. HARRIS et al.
(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 8, 1909.)

1. HOMESTEAD (§ 2*)—CREATION—EXTRATERRITORIAL FORCE OF STATUTE.

The right of homestead is purely the creation of statute, which has no extraterritorial force.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

2. LIFE ESTATES (§ 11*)—ACTS CONSTITUTING WASTE.

While a tenant for life or years takes the land in the condition in which it is when the estate vests in him, and he is entitled to all the rents and profits that then issue therefrom, and to continue to use and enjoy them to the same extent until the termination of the estate, he may not commit waste by doing anything that essentially injures or impairs the estate in remainder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Life Estates, Cent. Dig. §§ 29, 42; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

3. LIFE ESTATES (§ 12*)—ACTS CONSTITUTING WASTE—MINES.

It is waste for a tenant for life or years to open lands to search for new mines; but, where there are mines opened when he takes the estate, it is not waste to continue to work them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Life Estates, Cent. Dig. §§ 31, 42; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

4. HOMESTEAD (§ 142*) — RIGHTS OF ADULT HEIRS.

Const. art. 9, § 6, vesting the rents and profits of the homestead on the death of the owner in the widow for life and children during minority, etc., secures to the widow and minor children a home during the life of the widow and the minority of the children, but it does not create any estate greater than that of occupancy and the right to the enjoyment of the rents and profits, and, as affecting the rights of the adult heirs, the homestead estate is one for life or for years, and the widow and minor children may not as against the adult heirs or their grantee commit waste by opening on the land new mines, and mine and sell mineral therefrom, or lease the same to others for that purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 271, 272; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

Appeal from Sebastian Chancery Court; J. V. Bourland, Chancellor.

Action by the Cherokee Construction Company against Charles Harris and others. From a judgment dismissing the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Ira D. Oglesby, for appellant. T. B. Pryor, for appellees.

FRAUENTHAL, J. The appellant, who was the plaintiff below, instituted this suit in the chancery court against the appellees, the defendants below, seeking to have certain lands partitioned, and to enjoin the defendants from committing waste by mining and removing from the lands the coal underlying the same. It alleged that one Matthew Pew was the owner of the lands in his lifetime, and that plaintiff became the owner of a one-half interest in the lands by purchase from the adult heirs of said Pew. The defendants alleged that the land was the homestead of said Pew, and that it was occupied as such homestead by his widow, who was one of the defendants, and his minor children; that the widow for herself and minor children made a lease to the other defendants of the right to take and mine the coal underlying the land; and that, by virtue of their homestead estate in the land, they had the right to mine said coal.

It is conceded that the facts developed in the case are as follows: The land in controversy was at the death of Matthew Pew his homestead, and was occupied as such. At the time of his death he left surviving him his widow, defendant herein, who after his death married W. B. Thompson, with whom she now resides on said land. The deceased, Matthew Pew, at the time of his death had six adult and four minor children. That plaintiff is owner of a half interest in said land by purchase from the adult children of Matthew Pew, as set out in the complaint. That each of the four minor children own an undivided one-tenth interest in the lands, and they now reside on it with their mother, Mrs. W. B. Thompson, one of the defendants. At the time of the death of Matthew Pew, it was used and occupied as a farm for farming purposes only, and was so used at the time of the marriage of his widow with Thompson, and was so used thereafter, and is still so used. That at the time of the death of Matthew Pew no coal was mined, or had ever been mined from said land, and no opening of any kind whatsoever made for the purposes. That in the year 1907 defendant Mrs. Thompson, for herself and minor children, made a lease to the defendants herein, Harris, Williams, and Welchel, of the right to take and mine the coal from under said land, for which they were to pay a royalty of 10 cents per ton, which produces $75 per acre, and they are now, and have been since the execution of said lease, mining coal from said land, and have sunk a slope or shaft on same for this purpose. That all the royalty under said lease is being paid to Mrs. Thompson for herself and children. That the youngest child is about four years of age, and the oldest of the minors nine years old. That the value of said land, including the coal, is $75 per acre, and its value after the coal is removed $10 per acre. That rental or income of the land if used only for farming purposes would not exceed $100 a year. That under the terms of said lease a larger part, if not all, of the coal under said land will be mined out before the youngest child reaches lawful age.

The chancery court denied the plaintiff any relief, holding that the widow and minor children had the right to open new coal mines and to mine and remove the coal underlying the land, and dismissed the complaint. From that decree, the plaintiff presents this appeal.

Upon the fact being developed that the land was the homestead of Matthew Pew at the date of his death, and was at the institution of this suit occupied by his widow and minor children claiming same as a homestead, the plaintiff did not press that portion of his complaint which sought to partition the land, but did seek the relief, and does now seek only the relief, of enjoining the mining and removal of the coal from under said lands. The question involved in this case is whether, during the continuance of the homestead estate of the widow and minor children, they have the right as against the adult children or their grantee to open on the land coal mines where none had been opened during the lifetime of the husband and parent, and to take and mine the coal therefrom solely for the purpose of sale. The defendants assert this right by virtue of the homestead provided for the widow and minor children by the Constitution. Article 9, § 6, of the Constitution provides: "If the owner of a homestead die, leaving a widow and no children, and said widow has no separate homestead in her own right, the same shall be exempt, and the rent and profits shall vest in her during her natural life; provided, that if the owner leaves children, one or more, said child or children shall share with said widow and be entitled to half the rents and profits until each of them arrives at twenty one years of age, each child's right to cease at twenty one years of age, and then all to go to the widow, and provided, that said widow or child reside on the homestead or not, and, in case of the death of the widow, the homestead shall be vested in the minor children of the testator or intestate." The chief purpose of this constitutional provision was to secure to the widow and minor children a fixed home during the life of the widow or minority of the children. To secure this object, it was made exempt from sale; so that it cannot be sold to pay the decedent's debts, and it cannot be partitioned, either in kind or for sale. Trotter v. Trotter, 31 Ark. 145; Kirksey v. Cole, 47 Ark. 504, 1 S. W. 778; McCloy v. Arnett, 47 Ark. 445, 2 S. W. 71; Nichols v. Shearon, 49 Ark. 76, 4 S. W. 167; Stayton v. Halpern, 50 Ark. 329, 7 S. W. 304; Burgett v. Apperson, 52 Ark. 213, 12 S. W. 559; Bond v. Montgomery, 56 Ark. 563, 20 S. W. 525; Sparkman v. Roberts, 61 Ark. 26, 31 S. W. 742. It protects the occupant in the possession of the land, and holds it together as a place of residence and a home preserved against sale or partition. It cannot be sold or alienated by the widow. By the act of sale she abandons it as a homestead. Garabaldi v. Jones, 48 Ark. 230, 2 S. W. 844; Sansom v. Harrell, 55 Ark. 572, 18 S. W. 1047. But the homestead law does not create any estate greater or any right more enlarged than that of the occupancy of the land and the right to the enjoyment of the rents and profits therefrom during the life of the widow or minority of the children.

In the case of Kessinger v. Wilson, 53 Ark. 400, 14 S. W. 96, 22 Am. St. Rep. 220, it is held that, when one dies seised of a homestead, his minor children have two separate and distinct estates in the land—the estate of homestead and of inheritance. These two do not merge; but the right to the enjoyment and possession of the one follows the other, and the right by inheritance cannot be impaired by the right of enjoyment of the homestead during their minority. After the estate of homestead has terminated by the death of the widow and the majority of the minor children, the land is still liable for the debts of the parent. McAndrew v. Hollingsworth, 72 Ark. 446, 81 S. W. 610. And the homestead cannot be devised so as to free it from those debts after the termination of the homestead estate. Winters v. Davis, 51 Ark. 335, 11 S. W. 420. And subject to the homestead estate the heirs of the decedent have an estate of inheritance in the land. As affecting the rights of the heirs, therefore, the homestead estate is one for life or for years.

"The right of homestead is purely the creation of statutes, which have no extraterritorial force. It is generally spoken of as an estate in land and created as an estate for life." 1 Washburn on Real Prop. § 540. Now, a tenant for life or for years must not commit waste. Anything that is done or permitted to be done that essentially injures or impairs the estate of the remainderman or reversioner is waste. It is the duty of the life tenant or tenant for years to protect the land from injury to the freehold. 1 Tiedeman on Real Property, § 75; 1 Washburn on Real Property, § 270; 1 Lomax, Dig. 504; 1 White & T. Lead. Cases Eq. 1011; 30 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) 236. In the case of McLeod v. Dial, 63 Ark. 10, 37 S. W. 306, it is held that "a life tenant has no right to cut trees growing upon land or to allow them to be cut, except so far as it might be necessary to the proper enjoyment of his life estate in conformity with good husbandry, so as not to materially lessen the value of the inheritance." Modlin v. Kennedy, 53 Ind. 267. In the case of Smith v. Smith, 105 Ga. 106, 31 S. E. 135, it was held that a widow who has taken a homestead in her deceased husband's land cannot, as against the rights of those entitled to the property in reversion after the homestead estate shall have expired, make a sale of the standing timber on the land when same will injure the value of the freehold, and is not essential to the legitimate use of the property for homestead purposes. Parker v. Chambliss, 12 Ga. 235. It is uniformly held that it is waste to open lands to search for new mines. If there are mines already opened on the land when the tenant takes the estate, it is not waste to continue to work them. The offense of waste consists in the first penetration and opening of the soil. And so it has been held that a mine which was opened at the vesting of the life estate or estate for years may be worked by the tenant even to exhaustion. 1 Lomax, Dig. 54; 1 Washburn on Real Property, § 280; Crouch v. Puryear, 1 Rand. (Va.) 258, 10 Am. Dec. 528. But tenants for life or for years are guilty of waste in opening and working new mines and which were unopened at the time of the vesting of the estate. 20 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 769; 1 Washburn on Real Property, § 280; 16 Cyc. 625. They may use the premises as they may see fit, provided it does not injure the inheritance. They may work old mines already opened when they obtained the estate; but they cannot open new mines. Tiedeman on Real Property, § 75; Hook v. Garfield Coal Co., 112 Iowa, 210, 83 N. W. 963; Gerkins v. Ky. Salt Co., 100 Ky. 734, 39 S. W. 444, 66 Am. St. Rep. 370; Koen v. Bartlett, 41 W. Va. 559, 23 S. E. 664, 31 L. R. A. 128, 56 Am. St. Rep. 884; Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 562, 27 S. E. 411, 38 L. R. A. 694, 64 Am. St. Rep. 891; People's Gas Co. v. Tyner, 131 Ind. 277, 31 N. E. 59, 16 L. R. A. 443, 31 Am. St. Rep. 433.

It follows that the life tenant has the right to use and enjoy the premises as he may see fit, provided he commits no injury to the inheritance. He takes the land in the condition in which it was when the estate vested in him, and he is entitled to all the rents and profits that then issued therefrom, and to continue to use and enjoy them to the same extent until the termination of the estate. But such tenant by an original act of his own is not entitled to obtain from the land any profit that would result in an injury to the inheritance. And the widow and minor children do not obtain by the homestead law any greater right in the use and enjoyment of the homestead than this. They have not the right in their use of the homestead to commit waste, and cannot during their occupancy do or permit any act to be done that will prove an injury to the estate of the reversioner. It is urged by counsel for appellee that they should have the right to open new mines under the authority of the case of Russell v. Berry, 70 Ark. 313, 67 S. W. 864. But it was there only determined that the coal underlying the surface of the earth was land and a part of the homestead; and that, therefore, the exemption of the homestead extended thereto, so that the coal could not be sold to pay the debts of the decedent. But it was there expressly stated that it was not decided that the widow and children have the right to mine and sell the coal. We therefore hold that during the continuance of the homestead estate of the widow and minor children they do not have the right as incident to the homestead estate to open on the land new mines and to mine and sell coal therefrom, or to lease the same to others for that purpose.

We do not, however, pass upon the question as to whether or not the probate court in which the guardianship of these minors may be pending has the power to order for their benefit the sale of the entire interest of the minors, in the underlying coal of the homestead left them by their parent. Merrill v. Harris, 65 Ark. 355, 46 S. W. 538, 41 L. R. A. 714, 67 Am. St. Rep. 929.

It follows, therefore, that the chancery court erred in holding that the widow and minor children had the right to open new coal mines upon the homestead, and to mine and remove the coal underlying the same for the purpose of sale.

The decree is reversed and the cause is remanded, with directions to enter a decree in accordance with this opinion.

WALKER v. NOLL.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 1, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 697*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—CONTENTS—SUFFICIENCY.

A bill of exceptions is sufficient if it appears inferentially that all the evidence is brought up.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2920; Dec. Dig. § 697.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 697*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—CONTENTS.

Where a bill of exceptions recited that certain testimony was all the testimony introduced on the hearing of a motion to dismiss an appeal, it sufficiently showed that it contained all the testimony then heard.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2923; Dec. Dig. § 697.*]

3. WITNESSES (§ 227*)—NECESSITY OF OATH.

On an issue as to the sufficiency of an affidavit for an appeal from the probate to the circuit court, it was error for the court, over objection, to permit the probate clerk to make a statement as to the making and filing of the affidavit without swearing him as a witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 798; Dec. Dig. § 227.*]

4. COURTS (§ 202*)—PROCEDURE IN PROBATE COURT—APPEAL—AFFIDAVIT.

Claimant's attorney filed in the probate court an instrument reciting that claimant prayed for and was granted an appeal; that it was not taken for delay, etc. The statement contained no jurat, and was presented to the clerk of the probate court in vacation by the attorney with the remark: "I will swear to this." The paper was filed with the clerk, but no jurat was attached. Held, that the paper was not properly sworn to as an affidavit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 486; Dec. Dig. § 202.*]

5. COURTS (§ 202*)—APPEAL FROM PROBATE—AFFIDAVIT.

Where the necessary affidavit for an appeal from the probate to the circuit court was never presented to nor acted on by the probate court, as required by Kirby's Dig. § 1348, and no order granting an appeal was ever made by the court after the filing of the alleged affidavit, the appeal was not properly taken.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 486; Dec. Dig. § 202.*]

6. COURTS (§ 202*)—ORDER GRANTING APPEAL—DIRECT ATTACK.

A motion to dismiss an appeal from the probate to the circuit court for irregularities in the proceedings was a direct, and not a collateral, attack, and hence it would not be conclusively presumed from the court's order granting the appeal that all the necessary conditions had been complied with.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 486; Dec. Dig. § 202.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lonoke County; Eugene Lankford, Judge.

Claim by Mary E. Noll against J. F. Walker, as administrator of the estate of R. O. Walker, deceased. From a judgment of the circuit court allowing the claim in full on appeal from the probate court allowing it in part only, the administrator appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Trimble, Robinson & Trimble and Jas. B. Gray, for appellant. George M. Chapline, for appellee.

FRAUENTHAL, J. At the April term, 1907, of the Lonoke probate court, the appellee presented her claim against the estate of R. O. Walker, deceased. In that court the appellant, as administrator of said estate, filed an answer to the pleading, seeking an allowance of the claim. Upon a trial of the matter the probate court allowed a portion of the claim and disallowed the remainder, and rendered judgment accordingly, and in the order it is recited: "Whereupon counsel for plaintiff prayed an appeal to the circuit court, which was granted." In the circuit court the appellant filed a motion to dismiss the appeal from the probate court upon the ground that no affidavit for appeal was made in the time or manner required by law, and at no step in the proceeding was this affidavit waived by the appellant, nor the necessity of making it dispensed with. The circuit court denied the motion to dismiss the appeal over the objection of appellant, and rendered judgment for the full amount of the claim. From that judgment, the appellant prosecutes this appeal.

It would appear that the judgment of the probate court was rendered on April 22, 1907, and that no affidavit for appeal from that judgment was then made or filed. On May 14, 1907, and in vacation, the attorney of appellee presented to the clerk of the probate court an instrument purporting to be an affidavit, as follows: "Comes George M. Chapline, as agent and attorney in fact for the plaintiff herein, and states that the said plaintiff, M. Noll, is a nonresident of the state of Arkansas, and states that this appeal, prayed for and granted, is not taken for delay, but that justice may be done. [Signed] Geo. M. Chapline, Agt. and Atty. for Plaintiff"—with the remark, "I will swear to this," and, without further formality, left the office. The paper was filed by the clerk, but no jurat was attached thereto, nor was the purported affidavit ever presented to or acted upon by the probate court. In the trial upon this motion to dismiss in the circuit court, the clerk of the probate court was allowed to make the above statement relative to the purported affidavit without being sworn as a witness, over the objection of appellant duly made at the time. It appears from the bill of exceptions that this was all the alleged testimony that was introduced upon the hearing of the motion to dismiss the appeal. It is urged by counsel for appellee that, inasmuch as the bill of exceptions does not state specifically that this was all the testimony heard in the matter, the finding and decision of the circuit court should be presumed to be correct. But it does sufficiently appear from the bill of exceptions that it contains all the testimony heard on the trial of the matter by the circuit court, and negatives the idea that any other testimony was heard; and the bill of exceptions is sufficient if it appears inferentially that all the evidence is brought up. Thomas v. Hinkle, 35 Ark. 450; Leggett v. Grimmer, 36 Ark. 496; Overman v. State, 49 Ark. 364, 5 S. W. 588.

We are of the opinion that it was error for the trial court to hear the statement of the probate clerk without actually first swearing him as a witness when the appellant was at the time objecting to his statement being received as evidence without his first being sworn. There was therefore no legal evidence that the instrument purporting to be an affidavit was actually sworn to. As a matter of fact, under the statement of the clerk, the instrument was not formally sworn to. It was only handed to the clerk with the remark that, "I will swear to this." While there is no particular formality required either in the use of the words or the manner of administering an oath in making an affidavit, nevertheless the actual swearing by the affiant must be done before a proper officer, and the requirements of the law as to the manner of administering the oath must be substantially complied with. It is not necessary to determine whether that was done in this case, for the reason that we do not think that the purported affidavit was made or filed within the time or manner prescribed by law, so that the circuit court could acquire jurisdiction of the matter.

It is provided by article 7, § 35, Const., that "appeals may be taken from judgments and orders of the probate court under such regulations as may be prescribed by law." In order to obtain an appeal from an order or judgment of the probate court, it is prescribed by Kirby's Dig. § 1348, as follows: "Appeals may be taken to the circuit court from all final orders and judgments of the probate court at any time within twelve months after the rendition thereof by the party aggrieved filing an affidavit and prayer for appeal with the clerk of the probate court; and upon the filing of such affidavit the court shall order an appeal at the term at which such judgment or order shall be rendered, or at any term held within twelve months thereafter. The party aggrieved, his agent, or attorney, shall swear in said affidavit that the appeal is taken because he verily believes he is aggrieved and is not taken for the purpose of vexation or delay." It will be seen from this that the probate court must grant the appeal at a term of the court, and that, as a prerequisite to the granting of such appeal, it is necessary that an affidavit for appeal must be filed. It is essential that the affidavit for appeal be made and filed before the probate court can grant the appeal, and that the probate court must itself act on such affidavit and prayer for appeal, and grant same by an order.

In the case of Johnson, Adm'x, v. Duval,

Adm'x, 27 Ark. 599, it was held that an affidavit for appeal is a prerequisite to obtain such appeal from a judgment of the probate court, if the same is not waived or dispensed with; and, further, that, if the appeal is not taken substantially in the manner and within the time prescribed by law, it will be dismissed for the want of jurisdiction. In the case of Matthews v. Lane, 65 Ark. 419, 46 S. W. 946, it was held that, in order to invest the circuit court with jurisdiction upon appeal from the probate court, it is necessary that it appear that the affidavit and prayer for appeal were presented to the probate court, and that the appeal was granted. In the case of Neal v. Peay, 21 Ark. 93, it was held that the affidavit and prayer for appeal from a judgment of the probate court do not invest the circuit court with jurisdiction unless the appeal be granted by an order of the probate court. Crow v. Hardage, 24 Ark. 282; Hanna v. Pitman, 25 Ark. 275; Love v. McAlister, 42 Ark. 183. In the case at bar, the instrument purporting to be an affidavit for appeal was never presented to the probate court, and was never acted upon by that court, and no order granting an appeal was made by that court after the filing of that instrument. It therefore follows that the appeal in this case from the judgment of the probate court was not taken substantially in the manner as prescribed by law.

It is urged by counsel for appellee that inasmuch as the order of the probate court made on April 22, 1907, stated that "counsel for plaintiff prayed an appeal to the circuit court, which was granted," it must be conclusively presumed that all the necessary conditions and prerequisites of the law had been complied with. And this contention is based on the principle that an order or judgment of the probate court cannot be collaterally attacked; but this proceeding was a direct appeal from the order of the probate court. The direct matter involved in the hearing of the appeal from this order was whether the appeal was taken in the manner prescribed by law. It was not therefore a collateral attack of that order.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed, and this cause is remanded, with directions to dismiss the appeal.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. v. GRIFFIN.

SAME v. GORDON.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 18, 1909.
On Rehearing, Nov. 20, 1909.)

1. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 66*)— FAILURE TO DELIVER—NEGLIGENCE.

A finding that a telegraph company, which agreed to send a telegram to W., a town of 3,500 inhabitants, and deliver it to the addressee, who lived 18 or 20 miles therefrom, necessitating sending it by a special messenger, failed to make reasonable efforts to get a conveyance to take the message, is sustained by evidence that, without success, the telegraph operator merely asked several parties to deliver the message.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 63; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

2. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 68*)—NOTICE TO COMPANY FROM MESSAGE.

A telegram announcing the death of a person, and stating "come at once; answer at my expense"—puts the company on notice that the funeral would be postponed till expiration of a reasonable time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 70; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

3. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 68*) — FAILURE TO DELIVER—MENTAL ANGUISH.

The relation of son-in-law of the sender of a telegram to the addressee is sufficient to sustain an action for mental anguish occasioned by nondelivery of the telegram announcing the death of the sender's wife, whereby the addressee was prevented from attending the funeral.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. §§ 69, 70; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

4. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 27*) — FAILURE TO DELIVER—DAMAGES FOR MENTAL ANGUISH—CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Though the negligence in failing to deliver a telegram, sent from one state to another, was in the state to which the message was sent, yet, as the addressee's right of action primarily grows out of the contract made with the company by the sender in the state from which it was sent, he suing there may have recovery for mental anguish, an element of damage recognized by the statute of that state, though not by the laws of the state where delivery was to be made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Faulkner County; Eugene Lankford, Judge.

Two actions, one by Ben L. Griffin, the other by A. A. Gordon, against the Western Union Telegraph Company. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. H. Fearons and Rose, Hemingway, Cantrell & Loughborough, for appellant. R. W. Robins, for appellees.

BATTLE, J. On Sunday, March 24, 1907, Mrs. Genie Griffin, wife of Ben L. Griffin, died, and the following telegram was delivered to the Western Union Telegraph Company at Conway, Ark., on that day, about 1 o'clock p. m., to be sent to A. A. Gordon, at Banner, Miss.:

"A. A. Gordon, Banner, Miss., via Water Valley, Miss.

"Genie died very suddenly at one p. m. today. Come at once; answer my expense.

"Ben L. Griffin."

The funeral of Mrs. Griffin took place at Conway on the 25th of March, 1907, at about 5 o'clock p. m. A. A. Gordon was not present; the telegram not having been delivered to him until three or four days thereafter.

Ben L. Griffin and A. A. Gordon brought separate actions against the telegraph company to recover the damages occasioned by the failure to deliver the message in time.

Ben L. Griffin alleged in his complaint, substantially, as follows:

"The defendant is a corporation, engaged in transmitting telegrams, and on March 24th, at 1 o'clock p. m., plaintiff delivered to it the following telegram: 'A. A. Gordon, Banner, Miss., via Water Valley, Miss. Genie died very suddenly at one p. m. today. Come at once; answer my expense. Ben L. Griffin.'

"That at the time the message was delivered to defendant it was notified that A. A. Gordon was the father of 'Genie,' and that plaintiff was very anxious for prompt delivery of the message, so that the addressee could come at once and be present at the funeral, which was to occur at Conway. That the addressee was then at Banner, and plaintiff desired him to be present at the funeral. That the price for transmitting the message was paid and charges for its prompt delivery guaranteed. That defendant agreed to transmit the message and deliver it promptly to the addressee. Alleges that defendant wantonly, willfully, and negligently failed to deliver the message promptly, or within a reasonable time, and that the message was not delivered until March 29th. That, on account of the failure to deliver the message, the addressee did not attend the funeral and was not with the plaintiff before and at the time of the funeral"—which was the occasion to him of great mental anguish, and caused him to suffer damages in the sum of $1,500.

The defendant answered and denied the material allegations in the complaint.

A. A. Gordon alleged in his complaint, substantially: That the telegram was sent in the manner alleged in Griffin's complaint; "that it was not delivered to plaintiff within a reasonable time, because of the negligence of the defendant; that it was not received by plaintiff until March 29th; that had he received the message promptly, or within a reasonable time, he could and would have gone to Conway and been present at the funeral; that, solely because of the failure to deliver the message promptly, he was not present at the funeral; that his failure to attend the funeral occasioned him mental anguish in the sum of $1,500."

The defendant denied material allegations.

By consent the two actions were heard as one, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of each of the plaintiffs for $200, and judgment was rendered accordingly, and the defendant appealed.

In the trial of the issues in the case evidence was adduced tending to prove the following facts:

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

On the 24th of March, about 12 o'clock, Mrs. Genie Griffin died at her home in Conway, Ark. She was the wife of Ben L. Griffin, and the daughter of A. A. Gordon. About 1 o'clock p. m. of the same day, Griffin delivered to the defendant, at Conway, a telegram in words and figures, set out above, to be sent to A. A. Gordon, at Banner, Miss. J. R. Pearcy delivered the telegram for him, and told the defendant's operator, at the time he delivered it, that "Genie" mentioned in the message was the wife of Griffin and the daughter of Gordon, explained to the operator about the funeral, and told him that a reply to the message was desired at once, so that Griffin might know whether or not to expect Gordon to come to the funeral, and told him where Gordon resided, which was about 18 miles from the defendant's telegraph office at Water Valley, Miss., and that it would be necessary to send the telegram to him from Water Valley by special messenger, and offered and agreed to pay all charges for sending the message and extra charges for sending it from Water Valley to Gordon, and defendant agreed to transmit the message and send it to Gordon by special messenger.

The body of Mrs. Griffin was embalmed so as to preserve it for a week or two, and the time of the funeral was postponed, awaiting a reply to the message. The telegram was sent, and reached Water Valley on the 24th of March, 1907, at 4:07 p. m. The operator at that place testified: "After making inquiries from several parties, none of whom knew Mr. Gordon, I asked several parties to deliver said message, without success. I then placed a copy of message in post office at about 5 o'clock, Sunday afternoon, directing it to Banner, Miss.; Banner being 20 miles from this place (Water Valley), there being no telephone communication there, and this being the quickest way to get it to destination." Water Valley is a town of about 3,500 or 4,000 inhabitants, and the distance between it and Gordon's residence could have been traveled by horse in three hours. Gordon was at home on Sunday and Sunday night, which was the 24th of March, 1907, and remained there until 5 o'clock a. m. of the day following. If he had received the telegram on or before 10 o'clock p. m. on Sunday, he could have reached Conway at 6 or 10 o'clock p. m. of the next day. If Gordon had received the telegram on or before 10 o'clock Sunday night, he could and would have sent telegram to Griffin that he would come, and that he could and would have come to Conway at once, and that if such a message had been received by Griffin he could and would have postponed the funeral of his wife until Gordon arrived.

After many ineffectual efforts to hear from his message, Griffin heard on the morning after it had been delivered to the defendant for transmission, at 11 o'clock, that it had been received at Water Valley and had been placed in the post office at Water Valley addressed to Gordon at Banner, to be sent to him by mail. It was then uncertain when it would reach him, and in fact did not until the 29th of March, 1907. When he heard the message had been sent to Gordon by mail, he caused his wife to be buried on Monday evening, March 25th, at about 5 o'clock, and Gordon was not present. While he was waiting to hear from his telegram, he was anxious and much worried.

The court instructed the jury, in part, at the request of the defendant, as follows: "You are instructed that the defendant was not compelled to attempt to deliver said telegram otherwise than by sending it to Water Valley, and from there attempting to deliver it to the addressee; and if you find from the evidence that the defendant transmitted said message to Water Valley with reasonable dispatch, and made the efforts of a reasonably prudent person under the circumstances to send it by special messenger from Water Valley to Banner, Miss., but was unable to secure such special messenger, your verdict will be for the defendant."

And refused to instruct as follows:

"You are instructed that the telegram in suit was transmitted to Water Valley, Miss., with reasonable dispatch, and that defendant committed no act of negligence in the transmission of said message that would have occasioned plaintiff any damages unless in the delay in delivery of the message from Water Valley to Banner, Miss.; but even if you find that defendant was guilty of negligence in not delivering said message from Water Valley to Banner, in the state of Mississippi, sooner than it did, you are instructed that its tort was committed in the state of Mississippi, and the law of Mississippi will govern as to plaintiff's right of recovery for mental anguish; and you are further instructed that the law of Mississippi does not allow a recovery for mental anguish in such cases, and your verdict will be for the defendant, as to the plaintiff A. A. Gordon."

Many instructions were given and refused.

The evidence adduced in the trial court tended to prove that the telegram delivered to appellant to be sent to Gordon reached Water Valley at seven minutes after 4 o'clock p. m. on the day it was sent. Appellant agreed to deliver it to Gordon, who resided near Banner, in Mississippi, 18 or 20 miles from Water Valley, and Griffin, who sent the message, agreed to pay the expenses of sending it from the latter place to him. To do so it was necessary to send it by a special messenger. The operator at Water Valley testified that she asked several parties to deliver the message without success. Was that sufficient? Water Valley is a town of 3,500 or 4,000 inhabitants, and it was not shown that a horse and rider or conveyance and driver could not have been hired in that place to carry the message to Gordon. The question as to whether reasonable efforts were made to secure such a conveyance was submitted to a jury, and they found in the negative, and the evidence sustains them.

If appellant had sent the message to Gordon by special messenger, as it agreed to do, the evidence tends to prove that the funeral would have been postponed, and Gordon would have been present, and in this respect sustains the verdict of the jury.

Appellant says it had no notice that the funeral of Mrs. Griffin was in abeyance. The evidence shows that it did have. The message was sufficient to put it on notice that it would be postponed until the expiration of a reasonable time. The message to Gordon was to: "Come at once; answer my expense." It expressed a desire for him to come and a request for an answer. The answer was, evidently, for the purpose of ascertaining whether he would come, and, if so, when, so that the funeral could be postponed to a time when he could be present. All this indicated that the funeral was in abeyance at the time the message was delivered.

Appellant says that the relation of son-in-law by Griffin to Gordon was not sufficient to sustain an action for mental anguish occasioned by the failure to deliver a telegram; but it was held to the contrary in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Moxley, 80 Ark. 554, 98 S. W. 112. Two opinions were delivered in that case, and it was held as stated in the first opinion, and this much of the first opinion was not retracted or modified by the second.

It is contended that, if there was any negligence in failing to deliver the message in question, it occurred in the state of Mississippi, where damages on account of mental anguish without personal injury are not recoverable, and appellees cannot recover in their actions. This view is not sustained by Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Woodward, 84 Ark. 323, 105 S. W. 579. In that case a message was sent from Fayetteville, Tenn., to Stuttgart, Ark., notifying the addressee of the death of his sister. The message never reached this state. After quoting from Wharton on the Conflict of Laws, the court said:

"Applying this principle here, it is not material in this case which view is generally taken as to the action, whether ex delicto, ex contractu or statutory; for the actions must be sustained by reason of the Tennessee contract. It is held in Tennessee that the addressee recovers upon the contract of the sender inuring to his benefit, and that mental anguish is a recoverable element in such contracts. * * *

"In this case, although there may be no statutory action arising in Arkansas, for the reason that no negligence has occurred actionable under the statute, yet there is a contract which, under the laws of Tennessee, where it was made, between the sender and the telegraph company, inured to the benefit of the addressee; and one element of the contract was the right to recover for mental anguish. That action is, under the principles heretofore quoted from Wharton (which seem fully supported by the authorities), sustainable here, and that is as far as the court is required to go in this case."

According to that case these actions are sustained by the contracts sued on; it having been made, like the Tennessee contract, under a statute which allows the recovery of damages for mental anguish.

Judgment affirmed.

FRAUENTHAL, J., disqualified and not participating.

On Rehearing.

MCCULLOCH, C. J. It is insisted that the conclusion reached in the present case is in conflict with the decision in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ford, 77 Ark. 531, 92 S. W. 528. In that case a telegram was sent from Missouri, where damages on account of mental anguish are not recoverable, into Arkansas, and the negligence occurred here. Suit was brought by the addressee, and we held that damages for mental anguish could be recovered, although not recoverable in the state whence the message came. The opinion in that case contains inaccurate language which is in conflict with other decisions of this court. We said that the right to recover such damages did not depend on any contractual relation existing between the telegraph company and the person injured, and that no contract existed between the addressee of the message and the company. Now the addressee is one for whose benefit the contract is made. Therefore a contractual relation with him is established. We have in other cases recognized the principle that the cause of action to recover damages on account of mental anguish arises out of contract, although the element of damages is created by statute.

In Ark. & La. Ry. Co. v. Stroude, 77 Ark. 109, 91 S. W. 18, 113 Am. St. Rep. 130, we said of this statute that: "Manifestly, it was the intention of the lawmakers to change by statute the law as declared by this court in the case referred to above, and to make mental pain and anguish an element of damages resulting from a negligent failure to receive, transmit, or deliver a telegraphic message." In other cases we have held that the contract governs to the extent that a stipulation therein, requiring notice of a claim for damages, is enforceable, and that no recovery can be had unless notice be given in accordance with the terms of the contract. W. U. Tel. Co. v. Moxley, 80 Ark. 554, 98 S. W. 112; W. U. Tel. Co. v. Nelson, 86 Ark. 336, 111 S. W. 274.

In W. U. Tel. Co. v. Raines, 78 Ark. 545, 94 S. W. 700, and in W. U. Tel. Co. v. Hogue, 79 Ark. 33, 94 S. W. 924, we recognized the force of the contractual rights of the parties by holding that the rule in Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341, would control so as to exclude a recovery of damages when notice was not given that the same might accrue. Judge Riddick, speaking for the court in the Hogue Case, said: "Such damages may, under our statute, be recovered in some cases; but the statute does not change the rule that, when a plaintiff seeks to recover of a defendant special damages on account of the breach of a contract, he must show that at the time the defendant entered into the contract he had notice of the special circumstances out of which the special damages arose, so that it may be reasonably said, as a matter of law, that such special damages were in contemplation of the parties at the time they made the contract." He then quoted the following from the American & English Encyclopedia of Law (volume 27, p. 1059): "While actions against telegraph companies are not necessarily or usually ex contractu, but ex delicto for a breach of a public duty, the cause of action is so far dependent upon the original contract of sending as to make the rule just stated controlling, and it has been universally applied in this class of actions without regard to whether the particular action is ex contractu or ex delicto."

In the Raines Case, Judge Battle, speaking for the court, said: "The damages recoverable under the statute are such as the jury may conclude resulted from the negligence of the telegraph company. Such damages are allowed as a compensation for the mental anguish or suffering; and the liability of the company for the same depends upon its having had notice, before or at the time of receiving the telegram, of the special circumstances on account of which mental suffering was caused by negligence in transmitting or delivering the message. This notice may be given by or through the telegram itself, or otherwise."

We think the decisions in all these cases are reconcilable with the decision in the Ford Case, though some of the language used in the Ford Case is, as already stated, inaccurate. The Ford Case is also reconcilable with the conclusion reached in the present case. Mr. Wharton, in his work on Conflict of Laws, states the principles upon which a recovery can, without conflict of principles, be had in each of these cases. Wharton on Conflict of Laws (3d Ed.) § 471f. He states that "the general rule seems to be that a contract made in one state or country for the transmission of a telegram from a point in that state or country to a point in another is governed by the law of the state or country in which the contract is made and from which the telegram is sent, rather than by that of the state in which it is received," but that some cases "assume that the performance of the contract is the delivery of the telegram, and that the transmission is merely a means of enabling the telegraph company to perform; and they therefore refer the contract to the law of the place of delivery as the sole place of performance." He then proceeds: "Assuming, however, that the former rule is the correct one, it does not apply to matters that relate to the remedy, as distinguished from the substantive contract, and therefore does not operate to relieve a contract from the effect of a statute, which is remedial rather than substantive, of the state in which the telegram was to be delivered, if the action is brought in that state."

This fully sustains, without conflict, the decision in the Ford Case and in the present case. The statute makes mental anguish an element of recoverable damage for failure to receive, transmit, or deliver a telegram; yet the relation out of which the duty arises is created by contract, and the cause of action primarily grows out of the contract. For this reason a recovery may be had here for negligent failure to deliver a message, even though the negligence occurred in a state where mental anguish is not an element of recoverable damages. On the other hand, as in the Ford Case, a recovery may be had for a negligent failure here to deliver a message sent from another state, where such element of damage is not recognized. When the negligence occurs here, the statute of this state applies and makes mental anguish an element of damages, regardless of the law of the state whence the message came, for the statute is intended to give redress for negligent failure to perform the contract to deliver a message.

The petition for rehearing is therefore denied.

GILMORE v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 8, 1909.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 63*)—MANSLAUGHTER—HOMICIDE IN COMMISSION OF ASSAULT.

Where blows given decedent, riding in a wagon, by accused, caused decedent to fall from the wagon and under a wheel that passed over his body, inflicting a fatal injury, the blows contributed directly to produce decedent's death, and were the cause of his death, authorizing a conviction of involuntary manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 86, 87; Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 309*)—MANSLAUGHTER—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the evidence showed that accused struck decedent, riding in a wagon, with a six-foot binding pole, and that decedent was either knocked off the wagon or fell from it and was fatally injured by a wheel running over him, the court properly charged on manslaughter in the language of the statute, and that the jury could convict accused if they believed that he struck decedent and knocked him off the wagon, or caused decedent to fall from the wagon, and that a wheel ran over him, and that he died in consequence of such striking and being run over.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 649-656; Dec. Dig. § 809.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 116*)—SELF-DEFENSE.

One may defend himself against an assault by another, and use such force as reasonably appears to him at the time to be necessary to repel such assault, and when accused struck decedent without fault or carelessness on his part, honestly believing that decedent was about to cut him with a knife, and that it was necessary for him to strike decedent to prevent decedent from cutting him, the jury could acquit accused.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Sevier County; James S. Steel, Judge.

George Gilmore was convicted of involuntary manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

The appellant was indicted for voluntary manslaughter, was convicted of involuntary manslaughter, and sentenced to seven months' imprisonment in the penitentiary. He appeals to this court.

In October, 1907, appellant and several others, including Nick White, were in a wagon going from De Queen to Utama Thule. Appellant and White had a fight. Appellant left the wagon, seized a "binding pole" about six feet long, and struck at White three times. White was on the wagon, and the wagon was in motion. Appellant struck White two blows. White got on his hands and knees and attempted to turn around as if to put his hands on the side of the wagon; but he missed the "wagon bed" and fell. The left hind wheel of the wagon ran over his shoulder and down his body. White went down the road a short distance and lay down. It was shown that the stick with which appellant struck White was crooked, and the witness for the state did not know whether the blows knocked White off the wagon or not. The doctor who was called to see White soon after he was hurt testified that his bowels were badly injured, and it was his opinion that White's death resulted from the injury to his bowels. White complained only of the injury to his bowels where the wheel ran over him, and the body indicated that the bowels had been badly mashed and injured. It was shown that in a dying declaration White said "that the boys had butchered him up so that he could not live, that George (appellant) knocked him out of the wagon, and Jim Polk (the driver) ran the wagon over him." He received his injuries in Sevier county, and died there about six days after. One of the witnesses for the defense, who was on the wagon and saw the fight, testified, substantially, as follows: "I was sitting by Tom Polk, who was driving. The first I knew of the matter was Tom said they were going to have a dance, and George said he was going. Nick began to curse George. Tom told him to shut up, and told George that he was just drinking and cutting up. George jumped off the wagon and got the stick. He struck at Nick, but hit the side of the wagon and the coal oil tank. He didn't strike Nick at all. Nick tried to get his knife out and attempted to put his hand on the side of the wagon, but missed it and grasped the wheel. It threw him under the wagon, and he was run over. Mr. Dale was sitting on the back end of the wagon. He and George had two pints of whisky. Yes, sir; I saw him drink some of it. Nick had his knife in his hand when he was trying to get off the wagon and fell under."

The court, among others, gave the following prayers of the state:

"(1) 'Manslaughter' is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, express or implied, and without deliberation. Manslaughter may be voluntary or involuntary."

"(12) If the jury believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant struck the deceased with a binding pole, and knocked him off the wagon, or the deceased fell from the wagon as a result of the blow, and the wagon wheel ran over the deceased, and the deceased died in consequence of such striking and being run over by the wagon wheel, then the defendant would be guilty, provided you believe such striking was done without legal excuse or justification."

Appellant objected to the giving of these requests and excepted to the ruling of the court.

The following instruction was asked on behalf of the defendant, and given, after being modified by the court, by inserting the words "without fault or carelessness on his part": "You are told that the defendant had the right to defend himself against an assault made upon him by the deceased, and to use such force as reasonably appeared to him at the time to be necessary to repel such assault, and if he struck the deceased, 'without fault or carelessness on his part,' honestly believing at the time that deceased was about to cut him with a knife, and that it was necessary for him to strike deceased to prevent deceased from cutting him, you may acquit the defendant, although you may believe deceased was knocked from the wagon and run over as a result of such blow." Appellant objected to the modification of his prayer by the court and duly excepted to the ruling.

The grounds of the motion for new trial are that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, and that the court erred in giving instructions numbered respectively 1 and 12 requested by the state, and erred in modifying appellant's prayer No. 4 and giving same as modified.

Hal L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., and C. A. Cunningham, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

WOOD, J. (after stating the facts as above). There was evidence to warrant the jury in finding that the blows given White by appellant caused him to fall from the wagon and under the wheel that passed over his body, and that these blows contributed directly to produce the death of White. They were the cause of his death.

We find no error in the instructions. No. 1 was a copy of section 1777, Kirby's Dig., and proper to be given in such cases. No. 12 announced a correct principle, applicable to the facts here, and likewise No. 4 as modified. These, with other instructions, presented the law of the case to the jury.

There was no error in the trial.

Let the judgment be affirmed.

Appeal from Mississippi Chancery Court; Edward D. Robertson, Chancellor.

Suit by Davis & Rhea against J. C. Spann to recover timber cut. From a decree for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Thomason & Thomason and J. T. Corton, for appellants. W. J. Lamb, for appellee.

McCULLOCH, C. J. Mrs. Elizabeth Ballew, a resident of Tennessee, owned a tract of land in Mississippi county, Ark., and Judge Thomason, an attorney of Osceola, Ark., was her agent; the particular extent of his authority not being shown in this record as abstracted by counsel for appellants. Appellee, Spann, made an offer to Judge Thomason to purchase the timber on the land for $100, and the latter accepted the offer, subject to the approval of his principal. After submitting the offer to Mrs. Ballew and receiving her approval, Judge Thomason accepted appellee's offer and executed to the latter a deed signing his principal's name thereto as her agent, conveying the timber, and stating a stipulated time within which it should be removed. The deed, as it now appears in the record, specified 3½ years as the period of time within which the timber must be removed; but appellants contend that the deed was originally written specifying only 3 years, and that it has been changed since it was delivered to appellee. Appellee contends that the deed has not been changed since it was delivered to him, and we must accept this as true, since the chancellor so found on conflicting testimony, and appellants have not abstracted the testimony. Afterwards appellants purchased the land from Mrs. Ballew, with notice that the timber had been sold to appellee, and they instituted this suit to recover from him the timber cut during the half-year disputed period. The chancellor denied them any relief, and they appealed to this court.

Judge Thomason testified that the only authority he had from his principal to sell the timber was contained in her letter to him authorizing him to accept appellee's offer of $100, in which she directed him to allow three years within which to remove the timber. Appellants insist that the testimony on this point is uncontradicted; but counsel for appellee dispute this, and, as the testimony is not abstracted, we cannot, without exploring the record, determine which contention is correct. It is our duty therefore to sustain the findings of the chancellor. It is the duty of an appellant to abstract the record so as to show that the judgment or decree appealed is erroneous; otherwise we indulge the presumption that it is correct. Files v. Law, 88 Ark. 449, 115 S. W. 373; Shorter University v. Franklin, 75 Ark. 571, 88 S. W. 587, 974. Appellants do not even abstract the letter which they claim constituted the authority of Judge Thomason to sell the timber, nor do they refer to it in the record. We have no information at all that the record contains it.

Learned counsel are also in error when they insist that under the law authority to sell land must be in writing. This court has held to the contrary. They overlook the distinction between authority to sell and authority to convey land. Authority to convey land must be conferred by an instrument of equal dignity with the instrument of conveyance; but authority to sell and to make a binding contract of sale may be conferred verbally. Forrester-Duncan Land Co. v. Evatt, 119 S. W. 282; McCurry v. Hawkins, 83 Ark. 202, 103 S. W. 600. This distinction is not important in the present case, for, even if Judge Thomason exceeded his authority in the execution of the timber deed, appellee was the equitable owner under his contract of purchase, and having paid the purchase price, entered upon the land by permission, and cut the timber, he can in equity successfully defend his possession. Daniel v. Garner, 71 Ark. 484, 76 S. W. 1063.

We are unable to discover any error in the proceedings, as abstracted, so the decree is affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Sebastian County; Daniel Hon, Judge.

Mandamus by Thomas Boles against R. A. Young and others. From a judgment awarding the writ as to part of the relief prayed, defendants appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Brizzalara & Fitzhugh, Ben Cravens, and Oscar L. Miles, for appellants. W. A. Falconer, Read & McDonough, and Youmans & Youmans, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. Jno. H. Holland and appellee, Thomas Boles, were rival candidates at the September election, 1908, for the office of state senator for the Twenty-Eighth senatorial district, which is composed of Sebastian county. Holland received the certificate of election, and Boles instituted contest. He made demand upon the election commissioners of Sebastian county for a recount of the ballots in certain specified townships, and, upon a refusal, instituted this action in the circuit court for the Ft. Smith district of Sebastian county, asking for a writ of peremptory mandamus compelling the appellants, Young and others, as election commissioners, to recount the ballots. Upon a hearing of the cause the court awarded a writ, directing a recount in certain of the townships named, but denied the writ as to certain other townships. Both parties noted their exceptions, and the election commissioners took an appeal to this court. They forthwith gave bond, with sureties, in accordance with the provisions of the statute, to supersede the judgment. Whether or not the judgment awarding the writ of mandamus in this case was such as could be superseded by a statutory bond, and whether or not the bond was effective for that purpose, we need not now consider.

The contest of Boles against Holland progressed before the state Senate, and in January, 1909, during the early part of the session, Holland was duly declared to be entitled to retain the seat. This, of course, ended the contest, as the Senate was the only tribunal under the Constitution of this state competent to adjudicate that contest. The original appeal in the case was never perfected; but on May 4, 1909, the election commissioners, Young and others, prayed an appeal, and obtained it from the clerk of this court. Appellee, Boles, now moves the court to dismiss the appeal, on the ground that the contest of Boles against Holland was settled before the appeal was taken, and that there is nothing left about which to litigate.

This court concludes that appellee's contention is a sound one, and that the appeal should be dismissed. The statutes of this state which bear upon the subject read as follows:

"Sec. 1227. Where the appeal or writ of error was improperly granted, or the appellant's right of further prosecuting the same has ceased, the appellee, in lieu of pleading, may move the court to dismiss the appeal or writ of error, the grounds of which motion shall be stated in writing, signed by the appellee or his counsel, and, if not appearing on the face of the record, or by a writing purporting to have been signed by the appellant and filed, shall be verified by affidavit. The motion shall not be heard or determined before the day on which the appeal or writ of error is set for trial on the docket, unless the appellant consents thereto.

"Sec. 1228. The appellee may, by answer filed and verified by himself, or agent or attorney, plead any fact or facts which render the granting of the appeal or writ of error improper, or destroys the appellant's right of further prosecuting the same; to which answer the appellant shall file a reply, likewise verified by affidavit of himself, agent or attorney, and the questions of law or fact thereon shall be determined by the court."

The fact that the contest case had been settled has been properly brought to our attention by the statement of facts in the motion, and it is conceded to be true. Whether or not we would take judicial knowledge of the judgment of the state Senate we need not decide.

The purpose of the present action was to compel a recount of the ballots in aid of the contest; and, since the contest has ended, no useful purpose would be served by continuing the litigation in this court. There is nothing to litigate over. In Mills v. Green, 159 U. S. 651, 16 Sup. Ct. 132, 40 L. Ed. 293, Mr. Justice Gray, speaking for the court, said: "The duty of this court, as of every other judicial tribunal, is to decide actual controversies by a judgment which can be carried into effect, and not to give opinions upon moot questions or abstract propositions, or to declare principles or rules of law which cannot affect the matter in issue in the case before it. It necessarily follows that when, pending an appeal from the judgment of a lower court, and without any fault of the defendant, an event occurs which renders it impossible for this court, if it should decide the case in favor of the plaintiff, to grant him any effectual relief whatever, the court will not proceed to a formal judgment, but will dismiss the appeal. And such a fact, when not appearing on the record, may be proved by extrinsic evidence." The same rule is announced in Jones v. Montague, 194 U. S. 147, 24 Sup. Ct. 611, 48 L. Ed. 913, in Tennessee v. Condon, 189 U. S. 64, 23 Sup. Ct. 579, 47 L. Ed. 709, and in Codlin v. Kohlhansen, 181 U. S. 151, 21 Sup. Ct. 584, 45 L. Ed. 793.

Appellants are not even burdened with a judgment for costs, as none was rendered in this case. They should properly pay the cost of this appeal, for they prayed the appeal unnecessarily, after the subject-matter of the litigation had been fully settled.

Appeal dismissed, at cost of appellants.

BAILEY v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 8, 1909.)

1. LARCENY (§ 3*)—INTENT—INTENT TO ACQUIRE PROPERTY.

If accused took a pistol dropped by a policeman, who was attempting to arrest him, only to disarm the policeman or prevent the latter from defending himself, he was not guilty of larceny in taking it, notwithstanding any evil motive in doing so.

4. LARCENY (§ 71*)—PROSECUTION—INSTRUCTIONS—INTENT.

Where, in a prosecution for larceny in taking a pistol dropped by a policeman while arresting accused, the evidence made it a jury question whether accused took the pistol merely to disarm the policeman without intending to steal it, the court should have specifically instructed, on request, that, if such was the fact, accused was not guilty; a general instruction that, if the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that accused took the pistol with intent to deprive the owner of his property, they should convict, being insufficient.

5. LARCENY (§ 44*)—PROSECUTION—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—INTENT.

In a prosecution for stealing a pistol dropped by a policeman, where accused claimed that he took it merely to disarm the policeman, and without intent to steal it, evidence that the policeman had repeatedly threatened to kill accused was admissible.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Sebastian County; Daniel Hon, Judge.

Pete Bailey was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Jo. Johnson, for appellant. Hal L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., and C. A. Cunningham, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

MCCULLOCH, C. J. Appellant, Pete Bailey was convicted under an indictment charging him with grand larceny by stealing a pistol, the property of one Adams. The testimony adduced at the trial below by the state tended to establish the following facts: Appellant lived in the city of Ft. Smith, and Adams, who was a policeman, went to the former's house and attempted to arrest him for permitting gambling in his house. Adams had no warrant for appellant's arrest, but claims that he saw a crowd of negroes shooting craps in appellant's house, that he had a warrant for the arrest of Arthur Edwards, who was one of them, and that when he went to the house all of them ran away, and he attempted to arrest appellant for permitting gambling to be carried on in his house. When Adams attempted to make the arrest, appellant and Edwards set upon him, knocked him down, beat him into insensibility, and took his pistol from him and ran away with it. Adams testified that he did not know which one of them took the pistol, but said that in the mêlée he felt it move out of the scabbard. Appellant testified that during the fight the pistol fell out on the ground, and that Adams and Edwards both reached for it; the latter getting to it first and securing it. Appellant and Edwards ran away, pursued by officers or persons seeking to apprehend them. They crossed the river into Oklahoma, and the next day were arrested by officers at the town of Sallisaw, in that state. When arrested appellant had the pistol on his person, and he stated to the officer that he came from St. Louis, where he resided, and that the pistol had been given to him by his father. Appellant testified at the trial that Edwards took the pistol and gave it to him to keep during the night, and that they never intended to steal the pistol, but intended to return it at the first opportunity. He testified that, after he and Edwards had escaped from their pursuers, they talked about the pistol, and agreed that he (appellant) should return to Ft. Smith and "turn it over."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Appellant requested the court to give instructions to the effect that if he or Edwards took the pistol without any intention of stealing it, but only for the purpose of disarming Adams, then they would not be guilty of larceny. This is the law, and the court should have so instructed the jury. There was evidence sufficient to warrant a submission of that question to the jury, and appellant was entitled to a specific instruction to that effect.

It is true that the court in all of its instructions told the jury, in general terms, that if they believed, beyond a reasonable doubt, that appellant stole and carried away the pistol with intent to deprive the owner of his property, or aided or abetted Edwards in doing so, they should convict him, thus making his conviction depend upon the finding of these facts beyond a reasonable doubt; but the existence of an intent to steal being an essential element of the crime of larceny, and there being sufficient evidence to justify a finding that the pistol was not taken with any such intent, appellant was entitled to a specific instruction as asked. In Gooch v. State, 60 Ark. 5, 28 S. W. 510, Judge Riddick, speaking for the court, said: "To constitute larceny, the taking must be done with a felonious intent. It has been held that a person who takes muskets to prevent their being used against himself and friends does not commit larceny; there being no lucri causa." He added a quotation from Bishop, that "a better reason for this just decision would have been that his motive was not to deprive the owner of his ownership in them." In this case the taking and carrying away of the pistol was conceded, and the only question substantially in dispute was as to the intent. The testimony adduced by the state was sufficient to warrant a finding that Edwards, aided and abetted by appellant, took the pistol from Adams and carried it away with the felonious intent to steal it; and, on the other hand, the jury could have found that there was no intent to steal the pistol, but that they took it away from Adams in order to disarm him, either for the purpose of preventing him from successfully defending himself from their assault or from arresting them. It is unimportant what the real motive was, whether it was good or evil, so long as there was no intent to steal; and whether or not such an intent existed was, under the circumstances of the case, a question for the jury to decide under proper instructions. The minds of the jury should have been directed to this particular point by a specific instruction; at least, when the appellant asked for such an instruction, he was entitled to it. St. L. & S. F. R. Co. v. Crabtree, 69 Ark. 134, 62 S. W. 64; Prescott & N. W. R. Co. v. Weldy, 80 Ark. 454, 97 S. W. 452; Western Coal & M. Co. v. Buchanan, 82 Ark. 499, 102 S. W. 694; Western Coal & M. Co. v. Burns, 84 Ark. 74, 104 S. W. 535; St. L. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dyer, 87 Ark. 531, 113 S. W. 49; Jackson v. State, 122 S. W. 101.

Appellant offered to prove by his own testimony that, previous to this occurrence, Adams had repeatedly threatened to kill him, and that they were on bad terms; but the court refused to permit such proof to be made. We think this testimony was competent for the purpose of showing the intent with which appellant participated in the act of taking the pistol away from Adams and carrying it away. It tended to strengthen appellant's contention that he did not intend to steal the pistol, and it might have induced the jury to find that appellant aided or encouraged Edwards to take the pistol away from Adams because he was afraid of Adams and wanted to disarm him.

Other errors are assigned, not of sufficient importance to discuss; but, for the error indicated, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with directions to grant appellant a new trial.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Cleburne County; Brice B. Hudgins, Judge.

Proceeding by the State against William Qualls to affiliate a bastard child, and compel him to aid in its support. Judgment against defendant in the circuit court on appeal from the county court, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. W. Reed and Grant Green, for appellant. Hal L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., and C. A. Cunningham, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HART, J. This was a proceeding begun in the county court for the purpose of affiliating a bastard child, and compelling the father to aid in its support. From a judgment rendered against him there, the defendant, William Qualls, appealed to the circuit court. Judgment was rendered against him in the circuit court, and he has appealed to this court.

The sole issue raised by the appeal is: Was the evidence sufficient to support the verdict? Mary Fortner, the mother of the child, testified that the child was born in Cleburne county, Ark., on the 30th day of May, 1908, and that the defendant was its father. She said that the defendant had intercourse with her several times in White county just before and after Christmas in 1906; that about the last of August, 1907, she went to the defendant's house in Cleburne county to pick cotton, and that while there the defendant had intercourse with her one time; that no one except Qualls had had intercourse with her since the birth of her first child, three years ago. The defendant, Qualls, testified in his own behalf, and denied that he had ever had sexual intercourse with her. Evidence was adduced in his behalf tending to show that she was pregnant when she came to his house in 1907, and that she came there in October, instead of August. It was also shown that she had made contradictory statements in regard to her intercourse with the defendant, and also stated that he was not the father of the child. A physician testified that he was called to see her in October, 1907, while she was at Qualls' house, and that she told him that her monthly periods had stopped; that he examined her, and found that she was two or three months in pregnancy; that the period of gestation with woman is 280 days.

In this state "proceedings to affiliate a bastard child and compel the reputed father to aid in its support are of a civil, and not criminal, nature." Chambers v. State, 45 Ark. 56; Pearce v. State, 55 Ark. 387, 18 S. W. 380; Land v. State, 84 Ark. 199, 105 S. W. 90, 120 Am. St. Rep. 25; Wimberly v. State, 119 S. W. 668. Our statutes expressly provide that the mother shall be a competent witness in all cases of bastardy unless she be legally incompetent in any case. Kirby's Dig. § 492. But they do not require that her testimony should be corroborated. "In the absence of any statute requiring the testimony of the prosecutrix to be corroborated, the jury may find that the accused is the father of the child upon the testimony of the mother alone, provided they believe it is credible." Underhill on Criminal Evidence, § 529; 5 Cyc. 664, and cases; State v. Nichols, 29 Minn. 357, 13 N. W. 153; Evans v. State, 165 Ind. 309, 74 N. E. 244, 75 N. E. 651, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 619, and cases cited. "In regard to the period of gestation, no precise time is referred to as a rule of law, though the term of 280 days * * * is recognized as the usual period. But, the birth of a child being liable to be accelerated or delayed by circumstances, the gestation is purely a matter of fact to be decided upon all the evidence, both physical and moral, in the particular case." 2 Greenleaf on Evidence (16th Ed.) § 152.

Tested by these rules of law, we cannot say that there is no evidence to support the verdict. The prosecutrix testified unequivocally that she went to the defendant's house in August, 1907, and remained there two or three weeks; that he did have sexual intercourse with her while there; and that no other men had had sexual intercourse with her since her first child was born about three years before the birth of the one in question. It is true that her testimony was weakened by contradictory statements said to have been made by her, and by other evidence tending to show that she was pregnant at the time she says conception took place, but this was a matter to be pressed upon the jury as affecting her credit as a witness. We cannot disturb a verdict which has legal evidence to support it.

The judgment must therefore be affirmed.

SETTLES v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 8, 1909.)

1. LARCENY (§ 15*)—CONVERSION BY BAILEE—CONDITIONAL SALES—INTEREST OF BUYER.

The buyer of personal property sold on condition that the title shall remain in the seller until the purchase money is paid acquires an interest in such property which he may sell or mortgage, and is not a bailee within Kirby's Dig. § 1839, making it larceny for a bailee to convert to his own use property which has been placed in his custody.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. § 39; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

2. WORDS AND PHRASES—"BAILEE."

The term "bailee," in statutes defining larceny by a bailee, is used, not in its large, but in its limited, sense, as including simply those bailees who are authorized to keep, transfer, or deliver, and who receive the goods bona fide and then fraudulently convert, and, where it does not appear that a fiduciary duty is imposed upon the person to return the specific goods of which the alleged bailment is composed, there is no bailment under the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, p. 672.]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pulaski County; Robert J. Lea, Judge.

R. H. Settles was convicted of larceny by embezzlement, and appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Jno. D. Shackleford and Robt. L. Rogers, for appellant. Hal L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., and C. A. Cunningham, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HART, J. R. H. Settles has appealed from a judgment of conviction of larceny by embezzlement. The facts, as developed by the state at the trial, briefly stated, are as follows: In September, 1907, J. C. Womble delivered to the defendant, R. H. Settles, a piano upon the understanding that Settles should repair it and sell it for $60. The piano remained in the possession of Settles until the 1st of August, 1908, at which time, by a contract in writing, the piano was sold to Settles for $50 upon condition that the title should remain in Womble until the purchase price was paid. Settles never paid any part of the purchase price, and on the 3d day of August, 1908, sold the piano to Miss Bertha Guebel for $25. He sold the piano without the knowledge or consent of Womble, and represented to Miss Guebel that it belonged to him, and that he had a right to sell it.

The indictment was found under section 1839 of Kirby's Digest, which is as follows: "If any carrier or any bailee shall embezzle or convert to his own use or make way with or secrete with intent to embezzle or convert to his own use any money, goods, rights in action, property effects or valuable securities which shall have come to his possession, or have been delivered to him, or placed in his care or custody, such bailee, although he shall not break any trunk, package, box or other thing in which he received them shall be deemed guilty of larceny and on conviction shall be punished as in cases of larceny." The record as amended on certiorari contains a correct copy of the indictment. The indictment contained all the essential allegations necessary to a charge of larceny by embezzlement under the statute quoted, as approved by this court in the following cases: Fleener v. State, 58 Ark. 98, 23 S. W. 1; Dotson v. State, 51 Ark. 119, 10 S. W. 18; Ritter v. State, 70 Ark. 472, 69 S. W. 262. The views we shall hereinafter express render a more extended discussion of the indictment useless. Was the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment?

This court has frequently held that the vendee of personal property, sold on condition that the title shall remain in the vendor until the purchase money is paid, acquires an interest in such property, which he may sell or mortgage. Phillips v. Hollenberg Music Co., 82 Ark. 9, 99 S. W. 1105; Sunny South Lumber Co. v. Neimeyer Lumber Co., 63 Ark. 269, 38 S. W. 902, and cases cited. In discussing the question in the case of Phillips v. Hollenberg Music Co., supra, in regard to the sale of a piano, the court said: "The obligation of the appellant to pay the purchase money became absolute upon the delivery of the piano, and was not conditioned upon the vesting of the title in the purchaser." In the case of Dedman v. Earle, 52 Ark. 164, 12 S. W. 330, where the subject of the conditional sale was a mule, the court said: "He [referring to the purchaser] did not become a mere custodian of the mule. He had a right to sell him at such a profit as he could make." In the case of Krause v. Commonwealth, 93 Pa. 418, 39 Am. Rep. 762, the syllabus is as follows: "The owner of horses delivered them to defendant under an agreement that the defendant was to buy them; the horses to remain the property of the owner till paid for, and to be returned at a specified period if not paid for. The defendant refused to pay for them, or to return them. Held not larceny, nor larceny by a bailee." In discussing a similar statute of that state (Act March 31, 1860 [P. L. 409] § 108), the court said: "The term 'bailee' is one to be used, not in its large, but in its limited, sense, as including simply those bailees who are authorized to keep, to transfer, or to deliver, and who receives the goods bona fide, and then fraudulently converts. Where it does not appear that a fiduciary duty is imposed on the defendant to return the specific goods of which the alleged bailment is composed, a bailment under the statute is not constituted. Whart. Crim. Law (8th Ed.) § 1855."

The court said: "A delivery of chattels upon a sale made on condition that the title shall pass upon payment of the purchase money at a future day is something more than a bailment. It gives the buyer a conditional title." So, in the present case, the payment of the purchase money would have been a complete performance of the contract. Settles was not bound to return the identical property. He was something more than a bailee. He had an interest which he could sell or mortgage. Hence we conclude that Settles was not a bailee within the meaning of section 1839, Kirby's Dig., under which the indictment was found, and that there was no evidence which would warrant the jury in finding a verdict of guilty.

Therefore the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded.

SMITH v. SCOTT et al.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 1, 1909.)

1. HOMESTEAD (§ 143*)—RIGHTS OF MINOR CHILDREN.

Under Const. art. 9, §§ 6, 10, providing that the homestead inures to the benefit of the minor children at the death of the parent, a homestead, at the death of the father, inures to his minor children, and their right to share with their mother becomes a vested interest at that time, so that during minority the mother has no absolute dominion over it, and a sale by her under order of the probate court after she has abandoned the homestead and acquired a new one in a sister state is void as against the children.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 127*)—AMENDMENT OF PLEADINGS.

Where the complaint, in ejectment against several defendants for a specified tract and other land, alleged that plaintiffs were the owners of the tract specified and other land, and that defendants were in the unlawful possession thereof, an amended complaint eliminating the other land and the defendants in possession thereof, and confining the action to the specified tract and the defendant in possession thereof, did not change the cause of action, and that the amendment was filed after the running of limitations did not defeat the action.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 44*)—ACCRUAL OF RIGHT OF ACTION—ADULT HEIRS—HOMESTEAD OF MINOR HEIRS—EFFECT.

As adult heirs have no right to the possession of the homestead of the decedent until the termination of the homestead of a minor heir, which occurs on his reaching full age, limitations within which to sue for the possession of the homestead do not begin to run until the homestead right of the minor heir ceases.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 930*)—VERDICT—PRESUMPTIONS.

In the absence of an abstract setting forth the evidence, the court on appeal must assume that there was evidence sufficient to uphold the verdict rendered on correct instructions.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 923*)—INSTRUCTIONS—PRESUMPTIONS.

In the absence of an abstract of the evidence, the court on appeal must presume that the instructions given were based on the evidence.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Columbia County; George W. Hays, Judge.

Ejectment by Dan Scott and others against A. W. Smith. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This is an ejectment suit instituted on the 9th day of August, 1906, in the Columbia circuit court by the appellees, Dan Scott et al., against the appellant, A. W. Smith, to recover possession of certain lands in Columbia county, Ark. The appellees claim title to this land through their father, William Scott, who died the owner and occupying same as his homestead in October, 1883. At the time of his death appellees were minors. Soon after their father's death, their mother, Fannie R. Scott, moved to Louisiana and acquired land and established a home for herself and children there. She moved to Louisiana with no intention of returning to Arkansas to live. On the 11th day of November, 1885, the probate court of Columbia county, Ark., made an order vesting title to the land in controversy (which was the land occupied as a homestead by William Scott at the time of his death) in his widow, Fannie R., and the minor children. Fannie R. Scott deeded the land to J. C. Green on March 18, 1886, and Green deeded the land to appellant, Smith, on the 25th of April, 1894. Appellant claims title through his deed from Green deraigned as above.

Stevens & Stevens and J. E. Hawkins, for appellant. McKay & Lile, for appellees.

WOOD, J. (after stating the facts as above). Under sections 6 and 10, art. 9, of the Constitution, appellees, at the death of their father, acquired homestead rights in the land in controversy of which their mother, the widow, could not deprive them by establishing another home and by selling the one occupied by the husband and father at the time of his death. The homestead of the minors in the land in controversy inured to them through the death of their father. Section 10, art. 9, supra. The abandonment by the widow and mother of the interest which she acquired in the same homestead by the death of her husband in no manner affected the rights of the appellees, the minor children. The right to share it equally and to one-half of the rents and profits thereon became a vested interest in the children upon the death of their father. During minority the widow and mother could share it equally with the children; but she had no absolute control or dominion over it. At the time the probate court declared the widow the owner of the land in controversy, and at the time she conveyed same to Green, the appellees had no homestead rights in the home of their mother in Louisiana. Their homestead in that land could only inure at the death of their mother. Section 10, art. 9, Const, supra. So the question of inconsistent homestead rights is not before us. The only homestead rights they had at the time the order of the probate court was made were in the land in controversy. Having homestead rights in this land at the time of such order, it follows that same was void, and appellant therefore acquired no title. Sansom v. Harrell, 51 Ark. 429, 11 S. W. 683; Harrison v. Lamar, 33 Ark. 827. See, also, Grimes v. Luster, 73 Ark. 266, 84 S. W. 223, 108 Am. St. Rep. 34, for review of homestead cases, and discussion of inconsistent rights of homestead.

Second. Appellant pleads the statutes of limitations of three and seven years. The youngest child of William Scott was 21 years of age April 21, 1904. This suit was instituted August 9, 1906, against appellant and others for the recovery of the land in controversy and other lands, and for $1,500 damages for the detention thereof. January 10, 1908, appellees amended their complaint dismissing the action as to all the defendants except appellant, and as to all the lands except the land in controversy, and praying for the possession of this and for damages for the detention thereof in the sum of $1,500. Appellant contends that the amendment to the complaint was tantamount to the bringing of a new suit against appellant, and that therefore the suit should date from the filing of the amendment, January 10, 1908; but we are of the opinion that the amendment did not change the cause of action. The suit still remained a suit by appellees against appellant for the land in controversy. The original complaint, although it included other lands and was against other parties, also included the tract in controversy, and was against appellant. The amendment did not allege that appellant held by any other or different title than that set up in the complaint before it was amended. The complaint before amendment was not a suit "for several distinct parcels of land in possession of several defendants each claiming for himself," as appellant contends. The complaint before amendment was simply a suit in ejectment against several defendants, including appellant, for the tract of land in controversy, and other lands, alleging that the appellees were the owners of all the land including the tract in controversy, and that the defendants, including appellant, were in the unlawful possession thereof. A mistake as to the other tracts of land and as other defendants being in possession of the tract in controversy did not alter the case as to the tract in suit, and as to appellant being in possession of that tract. Correcting the mistake by an amendment to the complaint eliminating the defendants and the lands that should not have been embraced in the complaint in the first place did not change the cause of action as to the tract that was sued for and the party who was really in possession thereof. The allegations of the original complaint as to the tract in suit and as to the appellant being in the unlawful possession thereof were not changed by the amendment. The suit as to the tract in controversy was therefore brought within three years after the youngest child became of age. As to the appellees who were adults at the time the youngest child became of age, the statute of limitation of seven years does not bar them, for this statute did not begin to run against them until the termination of the homestead of the youngest child. Their right of entry to the land in controversy did not accrue till the homestead right of the youngest child ceased. Kessinger v. Wilson, 53 Ark. 400, 14 S. W. 96, 22 Am. St. Rep. 220; Gannon v. Moore, 83 Ark. 196, 104 S. W. 139; Harris v. Brady, 87 Ark. 428, 112 S. W. 974. The homestead of the widow in the land in controversy terminated upon her abandonment thereof soon after her husband's death. Appellees therefore are not barred by any statutes of limitation.

Third. The court submitted the question of betterments, rents and taxes upon correct instructions. Appellant does not abstract the evidence on these questions. In the absence of an abstract setting forth the evidence pro and con, we must assume that there was evidence sufficient to uphold the verdict. Appellant sets forth in his brief a statement of the improvements made by him and of the taxes paid, and a statement as to the value of the rents since the filing of the complaint; but he does not cite us to the page of the transcript where the evidence supporting this statement is to be found, and he makes no statement as to what the rental value of the land was for three years next before the commencement of the suit. The court correctly instructed the jury to consider this. Brown v. Nelms, 86 Ark. 386, 112 S. W. 373; Schofield v. Rankin, 124 S. W. —. In the absence of an abstract of the evidence showing to the contrary, we must presume that the instructions were based upon the evidence, and that the verdict had sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in its finding.

There is no error.

Affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Independence County; Frederick D. Fulkerson, Judge.

Consolidated actions by W. R. O'Neal and S. Heineman against A. B. Bailey and others. From a judgment for plaintiff in each action, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Stuckey & Stuckey, Gustave Jones, S. D. Campbell, and Morris M. Cohn, for appellants.

HART, J. W. R. O'Neal and S. Heineman brought separate suits in the Jackson circuit court against A. D. Bailey, George W. Becker, Thomas J. Graham, J. M. Jones, Joseph M. Stayton, E. P. Shoffner, and T. S. Stephen. The complaint in each case in substance alleges: That the Bank of Newport was a corporation, organized under the laws of the state of Arkansas, and was engaged in carrying on a general banking business at Newport, Ark. That the plaintiff was a depositor in said bank, and that the defendants were directors thereof. That said bank became insolvent, and on the 20th day of April, 1906, a receiver was appointed by the chancellor of Jackson chancery court to take charge of its affairs. That the defendants as directors of said bank intentionally neglected and refused to perform the duties required of them by statute, and that thereby the bank became insolvent. Wherefore plaintiff asks judgment for the amount due him as a depositor of said bank. The defendants answered, denying any liability under the statutes. The cases were consolidated for the purpose of trial for the reason that they were causes of a like nature and relative to the same question. See Acts 1905, p. 798. On petition of the defendants a change of venue was granted to the Independence circuit court. The cause was heard before a jury, and at the conclusion of the testimony, after hearing the argument of counsel on the instructions, the court directed the jury to return a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, which was accordingly done. From the judgment rendered upon the verdict, the defendants have appealed to this court.

It is first insisted by counsel for the defendants that the plaintiffs as creditors of the bank could not maintain the action, but that it should have been brought by the receivers. In considering this question, it may be well to set out all our statutes that may have any bearing on the subject. They are the sections of Kirby's Digest, which read as follows:

Section 841: "The stock, property, affairs and business of every such corporation shall be under the care of, and shall be managed by not less than three directors, who shall be chosen annually by the stockholders, at such time and place as shall be provided by the by-laws of said corporation, and shall hold their offices for one year, and until others shall be chosen in their stead."

Section 848: "The president and secretary of every corporation shall annually make a certificate showing the condition of the affairs of the corporation," etc.

Section 859: "If the president or secretary of any such corporation shall neglect or refuse to comply with the provisions of section 848 and to perform the duties required of them respectively, the persons so neglecting or refusing shall jointly and severally be liable to an action founded on this statute, for all debts of such corporation contracted during the period of any such neglect or refusal."

Section 862: "If the directors of any such corporation shall declare and pay a dividend when the corporation is insolvent, or any dividend the payment of which would render it so, the directors assenting thereunto shall be jointly and severally liable in an action founded on this statute for all debts due from any such corporation at the time of such dividend."

Section 863: "If the president, directors or secretary of any such corporation shall intentionally neglect or refuse to comply with the provisions of this act, and to perform the duties therein required of them respectively, such of them as so neglect and refuse shall be jointly and severally liable, in an action founded on this statute, for all the debts of such corporation contracted during the period of any such neglect or refusal."

Section 864: "If any corporation, organized and established under the authority of the act, shall violate any of its provisions, and shall thereby become insolvent, the directors ordering or assenting to such violation shall be jointly and severally liable, in an action founded on this statute, for all debts contracted after such violation as aforesaid."

In construing section 859, this court has recognized the right of the creditor to bring suit against the officers of the corporation. Nebraska National Bank v. Walsh, 68 Ark. 433, 59 S. W. 952, 82 Am. St. Rep. 301; Beekman Lbr. Co. v. Ahern, 75 Ark. 107, 86 S. W. 842; Myar v. Poe, 79 Ark. 465, 95 S. W. 1005; Jones v. Harris, 90 Ark. 51, 117 S. W. 1077. It is true that in Fletcher v. Eagle, 74 Ark. 585, 86 S. W. 810, 109 Am. St. Rep. 100, a case precisely similar to the one at bar, the suit was brought by the creditors in the name of the receiver of the bank, but no objection was made on that account, and the case turned on other issues. In the case of Beekman Lumber Co. v. Ahern, supra, the court held that when an officer fails to file the annual certificate as required by section 848, and, upon discovering his oversight, files it, he is not liable for debts thereafter contracted by the corporation until he makes another default in filing another statement. The reason given for such holding is "that it was the intention of the law to make it to the interest of the officer to file his statement at as early a day as possible, when he discovers the oversight." The object of each of the statutes is to make the officers named therein liable for the debts of the corporation during the period of their neglect. Liable to whom? Manifestly to the creditors of the corporation; for any other rule would ignore the real policy of the statute, which is for the protection of the creditor. The act expressly provides that the director shall be liable in any action founded on the statute for certain debts of the corporation, and it plainly means that he is liable to the person to whom the debt is due. In each of the sections of the statute above quoted the liability is directly to the creditor, and not to the corporation. In the case of Patterson v. Stewart, 41 Minn. 84, 42 N. W. 926, 4 L. R. A. 745, 16 Am. St. Rep. 671, the Supreme Court, in a well-considered opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Mitchell, in construing a similar statute of the state of Minnesota, expressly held that a right of action is given to the creditor directly against the directors, and that the fact that the affairs of the corporation have been placed in the hands of a receiver neither takes away nor suspends this right of action. See, also, 3 Thompson on Corporations, § 4265. In such cases the decision reached must come from the terms of the statutes themselves. Hence there can be no profit in reviewing decisions based upon the common law, or upon statutes, unlike those now under consideration.

The most serious question in this case arises upon the merits, and is: Did the court err in directing a verdict for the plaintiff? In considering this question we must determine whether malfeasance or nonfeasance on the part of the directors is the test of their liability. This action is founded on sections 863 and 864 of our statutes quoted above. The statute creates the duty to be performed by the directors, and the liability that attaches for a failure to perform that duty. It changes the rule of the common law, and is therefore the exclusive test of liability. Hence it will not be pertinent or useful to consider whether the defendants are liable at common law, and a review of the cases based upon the common law or upon statutes essentially different from our statutes will be passed by. Our statutes in question have been construed by this court in the case of Fletcher v. Eagle, 74 Ark. 585, 86 S. W. 810, 109 Am. St. Rep. 100. Chief Justice Hill, who delivered the opinion of the court, in discussing the instructions given in the case, said: "The circumstances mentioned in the sixth instruction, and they are sustained by the evidence, fully authorized the directors to have implicit confidence in England, and justified their selection of him as president; but no circumstances justify directors in committing the management of the bank to the president further than the duties of that office require. No matter how honest and capable the president is, the directors have their duties to perform, and cannot fail to perform them because their confidence in the president renders them unnecessary in their opinion. It was their duty as directors to perform the functions required of them by statute, common usage, and the by-laws of the corporation; and any committal of management to the president which meant a non-fulfillment of their duties as directors was negligence for which they are liable, provided other facts fixing their liability were present. See, also, Patterson v. Stewart, supra. Section 841 requires that the affairs and business of the corporation shall be under the care of, and shall be managed by, the directors of such corporation.

By law certain duties also devolve upon the cashier of a bank. The cashier and directors of a bank stand in a reciprocal relation to each other. The duties of a cashler are rather executive, and those of the directors administrative. They have the power to appoint a cashier, and to confer upon him the powers and duties usually exercised in such an office; but they cannot divest themselves of the duty of general supervision and control. They must not be mere figureheads, and may not confide the exclusive management of the affairs of the bank to the cashier. They cannot rely entirely on his good faith and judgment; and thereby escape liability. In short, the law by positive enactment makes it the duty of the directors to manage the affairs of the corporation; and they cannot discharge that duty by delegating it to another person. Sections 863 and 864 do not make the directors liable for a single act of negligence however inconsequential, but they make them liable for a series of connected acts of negligence continued for such a length of time as it must be inferred that their acts of negligence were intentional. Tested by this rule, we are of the opinion that the evidence in this case considered in its most favorable light to the defendants renders them liable under our statutes. The testimony taken in the case was very voluminous, and embraced a vast amount of details in connection with the conduct of the affairs of the bank. Having reached the conclusion that the undisputed evidence in the case makes the directors liable, it will not be necessary to abstract all of the testimony, but only to state the substance of that part of it that goes to fix the liability of the defendants.

The Bank of Newport was organized in 1899, with a capital stock of $50,000, 50 per cent. of which was paid up, for the purpose of doing a general banking business. It conducted its business as a bank until the 30th day of April, 1906, at which time it applied to the chancellor of the Jackson chancery court in vacation for a receiver, stating in its petition therefor that it was insolvent. Alcorn Ferguson and T. D. Kinman were appointed receivers. At the time of its application for a receiver the plaintiffs were depositors of the bank and the defendants were its directors. Almost from its inception C. B. Kelley and the Kelley Lumber Company, of which he was the principal stockholder, were the principal borrowers from the bank. The indebtedness of the Kelley Lumber Company and the various other subsidiary corporations chiefly owned by C. B. Kelley increased their debt to the bank by progression. In the statement for 1902 the indebtedness of the Kelley companies to the bank had increased to over $70,000. The statement for 1903 shows the amount to exceed $120,000. For 1904 the bank's statement shows that it had increased to $157,415, and for 1905 it had reached the sum of $162,197.43. The condition of the bank on April 28, 1906, the time of its failure, in short, was as follows: liabilities, $241,684; assets, $324,154.44; Kelley indebtedness, $174,646.94. The Kelley indebtedness was never secured by anything except the stock of the various companies. In September, 1903, it had reached the sum of $80,000. V. Y. Cook, then one of the directors of the bank, began to complain of this increase, and ordered it stopped. In November of that year he resigned. All the directors knew that the Kelley indebtedness was rapidly increasing, and that no security other than the stock of the companies was being given to the bank. They knew that the Kelley Lumber Company was in the business of running a sawmill, and that the ability to pay the debt depended upon the profits of the business. All of the directors had been in office since 1903, and most of them for several years prior to that time. They all knew and recognized the hazard of the enterprise engaged in by Kelley. They talked over the situation in 1903, and knew that the debt was being rapidly increased. They knew that prospects of paying the Kelley indebtedness depended entirely upon the profits to be made by the companies. They knew that the failure of the bank would cause the failure of the Kelley corporations, and must have known that, if the Kelley companies increased their indebtedness, it would mean the insolvency of the bank. They say they relied entirely in the matter upon the cashier. No more than one-half of the subscribed capital stock was ever paid up. Here we have the anomalous condition of directors, whose duty it was to manage the affairs of the bank, allowing the cashier to lend to one man and his various enterprises without security sums of money largely in excess of the capital stock of the bank, and to continue that course of dealing for a period of several years. In 1903 the debt had been increased to $80,000. With a knowledge of this fact, they still permitted the cashier to pursue the same reckless course of dealing, so that at the time of the failure of the bank the indebtedness had been increased to the sum of $174,646.94. The inevitable result of such management of the affairs of the bank was the insolvency of the bank and of the Kelley Lumber Company and its subsidiary corporations. Reasonable minds could come to no other conclusion, and the defendants must be presumed to have intended the natural and probable consequence of such acts of negligence on their part which continued for a period of several years and to have assented to the negligent acts of the cashier. To hold otherwise would be to say that the statute imposes no duty on the directors other than to elect a cashier whom they believe to be competent, and then to turn over to him the management of the bank. Such was not the intention of our lawmakers. They prescribed certain positive duties upon the directors, and imposed certain liabilities upon them for the intentional neglect of these duties, and for assenting to such violation whereby the corporation becomes insolvent; and we are of the opinion that the facts and circumstances in this case will lead all fair-minded men to believe that the directors must have known that their neglect of their duties would lead to the insolvency of the bank. Therefore there was no question of fact to be submitted to the jury, and the trial court was right in directing a verdict for the plaintiffs.

Having reached this conclusion from the evidence, admittedly competent, it is not necessary to review the assignments of error in regard to the admission and exclusion of evidence; for no prejudice could have resulted to the defendants in that regard.

Finding no prejudicial error in the record, the judgment will be affirmed.

DERRICK v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 18, 1900.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1153*)—APPEAL—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

The allowing of leading questions by the state's attorney in examining a witness is not reversible error unless the trial judge abused his discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3064; Dec. Dig. § 1153.*]

2. WITNESSES (§ 380*)—IMPEACHMENT—INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS.

Where the state's attorney is surprised at the testimony of a witness called by him, he may examine the witness as to his testimony before the grand jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1219; Dec. Dig. § 380.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 715*)—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL.

Where, on a trial for assault with intent to kill by cutting with a knife, accused made no denial as to the number of times he cut prosecutor, nor as to the places where the wounds were inflicted, and prosecutor identified the coat worn by him at the time of the assault, it was not improper for the state's attorney to refer, in his closing argument, to the coat, and hold it before the jury commenting on its appearance, though it was not formally introduced in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1666; Dec. Dig. § 715.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1171*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where, on a trial for assault with intent to kill by cutting with a knife, the evidence showed that accused cut prosecutor nine times, once after he was down, and continued the assault until a third person interfered, the inaccuracy of the argument of the state's attorney that the proof showed that accused tried to cut prosecutor's throat after he was on the ground was not ground for reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3126, 3127; Dec. Dig. § 1171.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 823*)—INSTRUCTIONS—MISLEADING INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, on a trial for assault with intent to kill, the court charged on all the degrees of assault, and stated that, if the jury had reasonable doubt of accused's intention to kill, they should acquit him of that charge and then consider aggravated assault, etc., referring in turn to all the degrees of assault, a charge that insulting language did not justify an assault, and that if accused assaulted prosecutor because of insulting language used by prosecutor the jury would find accused guilty "as charged in the indictment," was not misleading as leaving it open to the jury to find accused guilty of the higher crime without finding the specific intent to kill.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 823.*]

6. HOMICIDE (§ 96*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—SELF-DEFENSE.

The jury, in considering whether one charged with assault with intent to kill acted in self-defense, should consider the physical facts and circumstances connected with the assault, the condition of prosecutor as to being drunk or sober, and the nature and extent of the wounds inflicted by accused, with all the other facts shown by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 96.*]

Wood, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Monroe County; Eugene Lankford, Judge.

Sam Derrick was convicted of assault with intent to kill, and he appeals. Affirmed.

H. A. Parker, for appellant. Hal L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., and C. A. Cunningham, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

MCCULLOCH, C. J. Appellant was indicted for assault with intent to kill, and was convicted of that offense. The alleged offense consisted of cutting one Newton with a pocketknife. The testimony shows that he cut Newton nine times, two or three of the wounds inflicted being serious ones, and the last was inflicted after Newton fell to the ground. Newton was intoxicated at the time, and does not pretend to remember all that occurred, but relates a good deal that he says he remembers. Suffice it to say that the testimony which he gave at the trial of the case was sufficient to make out a case of assault with intent to kill against appellant. The testimony introduced by appellant was sufficient, if it had been accredited by the jury, to reduce the offense below the crime of assault with intent to kill; but it is doubtful that his own testimony is sufficient to show that he was justified in cutting Newton as he did, for it is probable, even according to his own version of the facts, that he continued to cut Newton after the necessity therefor, in what appeared to him to be his own defense, ceased.

Appellant, in his motion for new trial and in oral argument of his counsel before this court, attacks the method of the state's attorney in examining witnesses; but we do not find that his grounds of attack are fully borne out by the record. It is true that there are some leading questions asked; but this is not reversible error without an abuse being shown of discretion of the trial judge in regulating and controlling the examination of witnesses. Traylor v. State, 80 Ark. 617, 96 S. W. 505.

The propriety of the conduct of the state's attorney is also challenged in asking one of his witnesses, who appeared to be an unwilling one, as to his testimony before the grand jury, and in producing the minutes of the grand jury and examining the witness as to same. There was no impropriety in this, for, if the prosecuting attorney was surprised at the testimony of his witness, he had a right to examine him as to what his testimony before the grand jury had been.

The coat said to have been worn by Newton when he was cut was handed to him while on the witness stand, and he identified it. It was not formally offered in evidence; but in his closing argument the state's attorney referred to the coat and held it before the jury, commenting upon its appearance. This was objected to by appellant and assigned as error. After the coat was identified as the one worn by Newton, it was not improper for the prosecuting attorney to refer to it in argument, although it had not been formally offered in evidence. Appellant had an opportunity to cross-examine Newton concerning the coat if he desired to do so, or he could have introduced any other testimony to show that it was not the coat worn by Newton. He contented himself merely with an objection to the state's attorney making reference to the coat in his argument. We can really see no hurtful effect anyway, in the reference to the coat, as all it could have shown was the rents in it made by the knife thrusts of the appellant, and appellant made no denial as to the number of times he had cut Newton, nor as to the places where the wounds were inflicted.

Objection is also made to the following remark of the state's attorney in his closing argument: "The proof shows that the defendant not only murderously cut the said Newton, but tried to cut his throat after he was on the ground." The only evidence which justified this remark was the statement of Newton to the effect that the defendant had jumped on him after he had fallen to the ground and cut him again, and had to be stopped by a third person. No witness testified that appellant tried to cut Newton's throat after he fell; but it was competent for the state's attorney to argue from the evidence that the defendant persisted in his effort to murder Newton after the latter fell to the ground, and this is about all that the remarks amounted to. It added little, if anything, to the force of the statement for him to say that defendant tried to cut Newton's throat after the latter had fallen, when in fact he did cut Newton nine times, once after he was down, and continued his vicious assault until it was arrested by the interference of Yelvington. We do not think that such inaccuracy in the statement or deduction from the evidence by the prosecuting attorney in argument, under the circumstances of this case, calls for a reversal.

The giving of the following instruction is assigned as error: "The court instructs the jury that language, be it ever so vile or insulting, does not justify an assault. So, you are instructed that, if you believe from the evidence that the defendant made an assault upon Luther Newton because of any insulting language so used by the said Newton to the defendant, you will find the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment." The objection urged to this instruction is that it fails to take account of the degree of assault or of the specific intent to kill, and leaves it open to the jury to find appellant guilty of the higher crime of assault with intent to kill, without finding that the specific intent to kill existed at the time. We are not prepared to say that this instruction, if it stood alone in the record, would be free from that objection; but it must be read and considered in connection with the others given to the jury along with it. The court gave to the jury instructions in the language of the statute on all degrees of assault, and then gave one containing the following statement of the law: "If you have reasonable doubt of his intention to kill Newton, then you should acquit him of that charge, and then next take up and consider aggravated assault," etc., referring in turn to all the degrees of assault. Now, when these instructions are read together, we do not think they have any misleading effect, as they show clearly that the court did not, by the concluding words of the first instructions, "as charged in the indictment," mean that an assault made because of insulting language necessarily constituted assault with intent to kill. The jury could only have understood it to mean just what the court intended, that an assault merely because of insulting words would be an unlawful assault, and would not be justifiable in law.

Another instruction objected to and assigned as error is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that, in determining whether the defendant was acting in necessary self-defense, you should take into consideration all the physical facts and circumstances connected therewith, and the condition of the party assaulted with reference to being drunk or sober, and the nature and extent of the wounds made upon the witness Newton by defendant, with all the other facts and circumstances shown by the evidence." No well-founded objection can be stated to this instruction, as it was proper for the court to submit all the circumstances which there was any evidence tending to establish.

Other objections were made to the rulings of the court in giving and in refusing instructions; but we find no error in this respect, and nothing calling for further discussion. The case was fairly tried, and the defendant was convicted on legally sufficient evidence.

Therefore the judgment is affirmed.

WARD et al. v. BLYTHE et al.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 8, 1909.)

1. PLEADING (§ 409*)—ANSWER—WAIVER.

In a suit to foreclose a trust deed in which the mortgagor and his grantee were parties defendant, plaintiff cannot take advantage of the grantee's failure to answer the complaint where he went to trial and no judgment was entered against the grantee, since the answer was waived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 1376; Dec. Dig. § 409.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1033*)—DETERMINATION OF CAUSE—LACK OF INJURY.

A trust deed was given to secure notes, which deed and notes were void for usury, and thereafter the mortgagor conveyed the premises under an agreement that the grantee should pay all legal liens existing at the time. In a suit to foreclose, the grantee filed no answer, and no judgment was rendered against him and judgment went for plaintiff for the debt, minus the interest and for foreclosure, and plaintiff appealed. Held, that plaintiff had no right to complain, as the deeds and notes were void, and as the mortgagor did not complain the judgment would be affirmed.

Appeal from Cross Chancery Court; Edward D. Robertson, Chancellor.

Suit by Joe Ward, trustee, and others, against T. S. Blythe and others, to foreclose a trust deed. From a decree for plaintiffs for an insufficient amount, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

T. E. Hare and J. H. Watson, for appellants. John B. Jones, for appellees.

BATTLE, J. T. S. Blythe borrowed of H. C. Grigger $1,500, and, in consideration thereof, executed to him his note for $1,725 and 10 per cent. per annum interest from maturity; the note being dated January 11, 1902, at Smithdale, Ark., and payable one year after date at the First National Bank of Memphis, Tenn. Blythe and his wife, Fannie M. Blythe, conveyed certain lands in the state of Arkansas to Joe Ward in trust to secure the payment of the note. In the deed of trust it was stipulated: "This contract embodied in this conveyance and the note secured hereby shall in all other respects be construed according to the laws of the state of Arkansas, where the same is made." The mortgage was duly acknowledged and filed for record on the 18th day of January, 1902. On the 24th day of October, 1902, Blythe sold and conveyed the land to O. N. Killough, and entered into the following agreement in writing as to such sale:

"The said T. S. Blythe guarantees the lands, this day sold to O. N. Killough, are incumbered only for the following amounts, for which amounts mortgages have been by him executed, to wit: $3,267 of date 1-11-1902, to Crosgry, trustee, on Nov. 15, 1903;

$500 of date 8-12-1902, to Cross County Investment Co., due 2-12-1903; and that this is all the debts and liens against the lands, except for $1,725 to one Grigger, which Blythe states is usurious and void, and Blythe agrees to resist the payment of the same, provided suit is brought against him to recover. O. N. Killough agrees on his part to satisfy and pay all the liens existing at this time on the lands this day purchased of Blythe that may be declared legal."

Ward and Grigger are citizens and residents of the state of Tennessee, and Blythe and his wife are citizens and residents of the state of Arkansas.

On the 24th day of August, 1903, Ward and Grigger brought suit on the note and deed of trust in the Cross chancery court against Blythe and his wife, and O. N. Killough and Blanche Killough, his wife, to foreclose the deed of trust. An answer was filed for Blythe, in which he alleged that the note was void for usury. Killough and his wife did not answer, and no judgment was rendered against them on account of the failure to do so. Evidence was adduced which proved that Blythe borrowed of Grigger $1,500, and executed him the note sued on in consideration of the same.

Upon final hearing, the court found "for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,500, and that the same bear interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the note," and rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff H. C. Grigger for $2,050, and decreed that the deed of trust was a lien on the lands for that amount, and ordered the same sold to satisfy the lien. Plaintiffs appealed.

An answer by Killough to the complaint was waived by plaintiff by the failure to take judgment against him and going to trial. The parties thereby treated the cause at issue, and cannot now take advantage of the failure to answer. Pembroke v. Logan, 71 Ark. 364, 74 S. W. 297; Oribbs v. Walker, 74 Ark. 104, 85 S. W. 244.

Killough by the stipulation made by him in the purchase of the lands did not unconditionally assume payment of the note of Blythe for $1,725. Blythe represented the note as usurious and void and agreed to resist the payment of the same, provided suit should be brought against him to recover, and only so far as it may be declared legal did Killough agree to pay it, and only to that extent he is bound.

By the stipulation in the deed of trust the parties made the note and deed an Arkansas contract. Lanier v. Union Mortgage, Banking & Trust Co., 64 Ark. 39, 40 S. W. 406. And, being such, they are void for usury. Appellants therefore have no right to complain, and appellees do not.

Decree affirmed.

CHESAPEAKE & O. RY. CO. v. NASH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 24, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 286, 289*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

While a railroad repair crew, living in camp cars, was at a station on the way to a job, the engine and some cars were temporarily detached. Held, that the engineer, on returning, might reasonably expect some of the crew to be moving about, or from car to car, so that the shock of recoupling might cause injury, imposing the duty of giving warning of the return, and rendering it a question for the jury whether on the evidence there was failure to do so; nor could a member of the crew be held negligent as a matter of law in going from one car to another at such time, if he was without warning of the return of the engine.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1032-1050, 1116-1122; Dec. Dig. §§ 286, 289.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 137*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE OF MASTER.

The engineer in charge of the detached engine and cars owed the duty under the circumstances of giving warning of the return of the engine to couple, and the ringing of the bell, being the warning ordinarily given in such cases, was the only warning to which the occupants of the camp cars were entitled, and it was not necessary to blow the whistle or send to the camp cars to inform the occupants that the engine was returning.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Campbell County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by John R. Nash against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff against the defendant named, which appeals. Reversed, and remanded for new trial.

Worthington, Cochran & Browning and Galvin & Galvin, for appellant. George Doniphan and James C. Wright, for appellee.

CLAY, C. Appellee, John R. Nash, instituted this action against appellant, Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, John T. Dwyer, and Albert A. King to recover damages for personal injuries. The jury found for Dwyer and King, but returned a verdict in appellee's favor for $10,000 against the railroad company, and from the judgment based thereon the latter appeals.

The facts of the case are as follows: In the month of January, 1907, there was a washout on the line of appellant's railway between Glenn Park and Melbourne, in Campbell county, Ky. On the morning of January 23, 1907, a freight train, consisting of an engine and eight cars, in charge of Albert A. King, conductor, left K. C. Junction, Covington, Ky., for the point of the washout. At Newport, Ky., the train picked up six camp cars, containing the road carpenter force; appellee Nash being one of the force. The train next stopped at Dayton, Ky., and laid a hand car on a flat car and got the balance of the men. About two miles east of Dayton, at a point called D. N. Cabin, the train again stopped and picked up 50 or 60 laborers. It then proceeded to a station called Brent. Here the engine and some of the cars were uncoupled for the purpose of doing some switching, and the conductor went to the telegraph office to receive orders. The engine and cars engaged in the switching went ahead about 65 car lengths, and the camp cars were left standing upon the main line. At the time of the accident appellee was in one of these cars. After completing the work of switching, the engine, with two or three material cars, returned for the purpose of securing the camp cars, which had been left on the main line, and then proceeding to the train's destination. The camp cars were used to carry the force of carpenters from place to place on appellant's road, for the purpose of doing such repair work as might be necessary. These cars were ordinary box freight cars, with doors in each end. One of them was known as the "kitchen car." The carpenters made their home in these camp cars while being transported from point to point on the railroad. There were no platforms at either end, and in passing from one car to another it was necessary to step over the coupling apparatus. At the time of the accident, appellee had been in appellant's employ for some three or four months. He was boarded and transported from place to place in the camp cars. He was paid by appellant for the time taken in carrying him the same as if he were actually at work. Appellee knew that the train had stopped at Brent on the main line, and that the engine and a few cars had left the balance of the cars standing thereon. He also knew that they had not reached their destination, and that the engine had to return and get the camp cars before they proceeded on their way. Just before the accident the appellee passed from one car to another and got a pair of gum boots. He then started a second time for the kitchen car, for what purpose does not appear. While walking to the end of the car, and when very near to the door, the engine was backed up and against the train. The shock caused him to be thrown forward. He caught the jamb of the open door, and his body was swung out. His head was caught between two cars, and he was seriously and permanently injured. Appellant's witnesses testify that the bell on the engine was being rung as the engine approached the camp cars. On the other hand, appellee and others, who were in position to hear, testified that they did not hear the ringing of the bell.

It is first insisted by appellant that the court erred in failing to give a peremptory instruction in its favor. In this connection it is argued that it was not shown that any rule of the company required those in charge of the engine and cars under such circumstances to give warning of their approach. This may be true; but negligence does not always depend upon whether a rule of the company has or has not been violated. Sometimes the company's rules may require a greater or less degree of care than the law requires. So the company may be negligent in certain respects, where there is no rule covering such a case. But it is contended that the company had a right to presume that appellee and others on the camp cars were in a place of safety, and was not required to anticipate that any one of them would be in a position so dangerous that the ordinary coupling of a car, without great force or violence, would injure any one. Then, too, it is further claimed that appellee was himself guilty of contributory negligence in placing himself in a position of danger when he had reason to believe that the engine and the cars thereto attached would return and get the camp cars. In discussing these questions it must be borne in mind that the appellee and other members of the carpenter force were making their home in the camp cars. That they would move about in the cars was not an unreasonable expectation. That being the case, we cannot say, as a matter of law, that appellee was guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to go from one car to another, especially in view of the fact that he knew that the engine and cars had been detached from the camp cars, and claims to have received no warning that they were then approaching. Our conclusion is that the engineer and conductor in charge of the engine and detached cars could reasonably anticipate that some one in the camp cars would be moving about, or proceeding from one car to the other, and that the shock of coupling under such circumstances might cause injury. It follows, therefore, that the probability of injury was such as to impose upon the company the duty of giving warning of the return of the engine. The case was, therefore, one for the jury, and the court did not err in refusing to award appellant a peremptory instruction.

The court in its instructions authorized a recovery by appellee if the railway company, by its agents and servants in charge of the locomotive and train of cars, at the time and place described in the proof, without timely warning and with negligence, moved its locomotive so that it came against the cars at a time when appellee was rightfully upon one of said cars and exercising ordinary care for his own safety. Thus the court left to the jury to determine what was a timely warning. The ringing of the bell, however, in our opinion, was sufficient warning, under the circumstances of this case. Had the engine whistled, it would not have apprised appellee of the fact that the engine, with the detached cars, was then returning for the purpose of coupling. Nor do we think it was necessary for the conductor or engineer to send some one to the camp cars to inform those occupying them that the engine was returning. While it is true that appellee and others engaged in a similar work were not like ordinary trainmen, in that they were required to be on the lookout for the return of the engine, yet they knew they had not reached their destination, and that the engine would return. In view of the position those on the camp cars thus occupied, it seems to us that the only warning to which they were entitled was the one ordinarily used for that purpose, to wit, the ringing of the bell. Upon the next trial, the court, in addition to the instructions given, will instruct the jury to the effect that the timely ringing of the bell as the train came back was a timely warning of the approach of the engine, within the meaning of the first instruction.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial consistent with this opinion.

REES v. WILSON et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 23, 1909.)

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 97*) — ELECTIONS—PETITION TO DECLARE VOID—DEMURRER.

Where the petition in an action to have an election whether a school district should issue bonds for erecting a schoolhouse, declared void, and to prevent the issue of the bonds, shows that the election was conducted strictly according to law, and that the citizens of the district had a fair chance to vote, and there was nothing alleged showing that the election was conducted improperly, or that it should be declared void, a demurrer to the petition was properly sustained.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Henry County. "Not to be officially reported."

Action by W. A. Rees against James H. Wilson, and others. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the petition, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

NUNN, C. J. In the early part of the year 1909 the schoolhouse of the graded common school district in Eminence, Henry county, Ky., was condemned as being unfit and unsafe in which to teach school. The trustees of the district took necessary steps to have a vote on the proposition as to whether or not the district should issue and sell bonds to the value of $15,000 for the purpose of erecting a suitable building to be used as a schoolhouse. The vote was taken on the 23d day of July, 1909, and 155 voted for the issual of the bonds and 55 against it.

Appellant, W. A. Rees, instituted this action ostensibly for the purpose of having the election declared void and to prevent the issual of the bonds. In his petition he alleged minutely every fact and every step necessary to have been taken to a valid election, as required by sections 4464 to 4500, inclusive, of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's St. §§ 5736-5739, 5741-5747, 5751-5778), and in addition negatived the supposed defects which were claimed to have existed in the case of Taylor v. Sparks, 118 S. W. 970, and, after stating all the steps taken by the trustees in calling and conducting the election, which were necessary to make it complete, fair, and valid, he closed his petition with the following language, to wit: "Plaintiff alleges that said bonds, if so issued, and said tax, if so levied, would each and all be entirely null and void, and work great and irreparable hardship on this plaintiff and others similarly situated; that the proceedings herein taken were each and all contrary to law, and null and void. Plaintiff says that he brings this suit as a taxpayer, for himself and all others similarly situated, and that he believes the proceedings as hereinabove set out are improper and irregular, and are all null and void." He does not allege a fact or give an intimation of any act or proceeding by the trustees or any one else that would make the election or the issual of the bonds null and void, improper, or irregular. Appellees filed a demurrer to the petition, which was sustained.

The proceedings as alleged in the petition show that the election was conducted strictly according to law, and that the citizens of that district had a fair and full opportunity to exercise their right of suffrage in regard thereto, and there was not one thing stated which would indicate that the election was conducted improperly, or that it should be declared null and void. See the case of Taylor v. Sparks, supra.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

FUNK v. FUNK.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 23, 1909.)
CONTRACTS (§ 334*) — ACTION — PLEADING — CONSIDERATION.

In an action on a contract to pay for the support and maintenance of certain infants, the petition was insufficient in not alleging consideration for the promise, or showing any duty or obligation to pay for such support.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Bullitt County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Margaret Funk against A. E. Funk. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

See, also, 118 S. W. 419.

Ben Chapeze and E. C. Waide, for appellant. J. F. Combs, for appellee.

NUNN, C. J. This appeal is from a judgment for $840 against appellant. Appellant filed a demurrer to appellee's first petition, which was sustained, and the petition was then amended, and another demurrer was filed to the petition as amended, which was overruled. Appellant then answered, denying specifically the allegations contained therein, which answer he afterwards withdrew, and elected to stand by his demurrer. The court then rendered the judgment above mentioned, and he has appealed.

As the petition and amended petition are short, we copy them. The petition is as follows: "The plaintiff, Margaret Funk, states that on the ——— day of March, 1904, Joseph L. Funk died, leaving surviving him a daughter, Viola Funk, and sons, G. B. Funk, W. J. Funk, Everet Funk, and Earl Funk, all infants under 12 years of age, and the defendant, A. E. Funk, was by an order of the Bullitt-county court, duly and regularly made on the 11th day of April, 1904, appointed guardian of said infants and accepted the appointment. The plaintiff avers that said infants were left under her care and in her custody, and she has since the 1st day of March, 1905, up to the 1st day of May, 1908, furnished to the said Viola Funk food, clothing, books, washing, ironing, and all things necessary to her care and maintenance, and to the other said infants from the 1st of March, 1905, up to the 1st of December, 1908, food, clothing, books, washing, ironing, and all things necessary to their maintenance, and the defendant, A. E. Funk, agreed with the plaintiff to pay her the reasonable value of the food, clothing, books, and things furnished said infants, and the reasonable value thereof was $75 per year. She says she has been paid the sum of $250 on her demand, but the remainder is wholly unpaid and is due. Wherefore plaintiff prays a judgment for the sum of $1,087 and her cost herein expended."

The amended petition is as follows: "The plaintiff, for amended petition, adopts the allegations of the original as part of this, and avers that early in the year 1905 the defendant promised to pay this plaintiff, and at divers times thereafter promised to pay plaintiff, a reasonable sum for the maintenance, clothing, books, and necessary things furnished said infants; that the defendant refused to pay this plaintiff anything for maintenance of said infants from the death of their father up until the 1st of March, 1905, because the plaintiff claimed articles usually set apart by law to widows, and the payment of $250 made was applied to that part of her account accruing in the year 1905, and plaintiff is willing to accept $60 per year for each infant from defendant, if paid. Wherefore she prays as in her original petition."

A year or two before the filing of this suit appellee instituted an action against appellant, as guardian for her children, and recovered a judgment in the lower court; but this court reversed it. See opinion in 113 S. W. 419, to be officially reported. In that opinion the court said: "Before a judgment will be rendered in such action, it should be made to appear what estate the ward has, as upon that fact will largely depend the reasonableness of the charge—a fact which cannot be substituted by the admission of the guardian and the judgment of a court of law upon it. The petition should have set out what estate the ward has, its kind and productiveness, the age and sex of the ward, so that the court might have seen whether the allegation was well founded that the application of the principal of the estate was required, in addition to its income, to properly maintain and educate them."

On the return of the case to the lower court, instead of appellee preparing her case against appellant, as guardian, as indicated in that opinion, she filed the petition and amended petition above copied, in which she sought to recover from appellant individually the amount sued for on his verbal promise to pay her for the support furnished her children. Appellee's counsel concedes that appellant is not responsible, as guardian for the infant children, for the judgment obtained against him, but contends that he is responsible as an individual, and should pay it out of his estate.

We are of the opinion that the court erred in failing to sustain the demurrer to the petition as amended. It contains no averment showing the slightest consideration for the alleged agreement and promise by appellant; nor does it state any fact or circumstance from which the court could determine there was an obligation or duty devolving upon appellant to pay for the support of her children. It is a universal rule of pleading, when suing upon a contract not in writing, to allege the consideration for the agreement and promise to pay upon the part of the defendant, or, at least, to allege facts from which the court might determine that there was a legal obligation resting upon the defendant to pay the amount sued for. In Newman on Pleading and Practice, p. 322, it is said: "The consideration is another of the general facts which must ordinarily be alleged in an action founded upon a contract, expressed or implied. The consideration of a contract is the recompense or reason which induces the contracting party to enter into the agreement. When applied to ordinary contracts, which require a valuable consideration, it is that which has been or is to be given, done, or suffered as the reason that the other party agrees to do, to give, or to suffer something; and in bringing an action to enforce the performance of the undertaking, as the consideration is essential, it must in general be stated in the petition. A good and sufficient consideration or recompense for making, or motive or inducement to make, the promise upon which the party is sought to be charged, is of the very essence of the contract."

In the case of Adams' Trustee v. Wathen, 50 S. W. 962, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 101, it was alleged that Wathen promised and agreed to pay $1,000 for his sister, a part of the purchase price of a tract of land she had bought; that he had failed and refused to pay; and she sought to recover a judgment against him for that amount. No consideration was alleged or proved for the promise on his part, and the court adjudged that the petition was insufficient, and dismissed it. Many other cases might be cited to the same effect, and we believe that none to the contrary can be found in this state. We are at a loss to understand upon what principle appellant is legally bound to pay for the support of appellee's children. There is nothing showing that he is related to them, other than he is of the same name, and, if related at all, it cannot be nearer than uncle.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

SANDERS v. IDOL.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 23, 1909.)

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 121*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action by a purchaser to compel the vendor to convey an acre of a tract of about 19 acres which was inclosed under a single fence, and which the purchaser claimed to have bought and paid for with the remainder of the tract, evidence held to show that the vendor, either by mistake or with fraudulent intent, omitted to include the acre in his deed to the purchaser who was ignorant of the omission, so as not to sustain a finding for the vendor.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Oldham County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Henry Sanders against William Idol. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

A. T. Ladd, Edwards, Ogden & Peak, and Chas. H. Morris, for appellant. William H. Holt and R. T. Crowe, for appellee.

NUNN, C. J. Appellee on and prior to January 15, 1907, owned a survey of land, on which he lived, which actually contained 18²⁵/₁₀₀ acres, situated on the Rollington pike and near the town of Pewee Valley, in Oldham county, Ky. The whole survey was inclosed as one tract; there being no separate lots or division fences. It appears that appellee became the owner of the land by two purchases—one from the Jennie Rest Cottage Association of $17^{95}/_{100}$ acres, and the other from Sallie Sherman for an acre. This acre was situated in one corner of the survey, and abutted on the Rollington pike. Appellant claims that he purchased the whole survey from appellee at the price of $3,000 in cash. Appellee made him a deed of conveyance on January 15, 1907, and only conveyed the Jennie Rest Cottage part of the survey. The one acre was omitted from the description given in the deed. Appellant was put into possession of the whole survey, and remained in possession thereof until the trial of this action in the lower court. The action was instituted by appellant to compel appellee to convey to him the one acre he obtained from Sallie Sherman, or to recover its value, $400. On a trial in the lower court appellant's petition was dismissed, and he appealed.

After a careful investigation of the record, we have arrived at the conclusion that appellant thought he was buying and that the deed included the whole survey of land which was surrounded by one fence; that he did not know, at the time, that appellee had obtained it by two conveyances; that appellee knew at the time that appellant so understood the contract and believed that the deed covered the whole of the land. It is a doubtful proposition, however, as to whether or not appellee innocently or intentionally excluded the Sallie Sherman acre from the deed, but this cannot affect the rights of appellant. The testimony shows, without contradiction, that appellant was without education, that he could neither read nor write nor understand figures. His testimony, and that of one other witness who was present, shows that at the time he first met appellee, which was on the pike near the Sherman lot, appellee represented that he would sell his place to appellant for $3,000 in cash; that he pointed out the boundary of it, including both pieces, and never said a word to him about not including the Sherman lot, but did point out a boundary which included it. Appellant introduced two other witnesses, who stated that appellee came to their house to have one of them telephone a Mr. Ellis, who lived near where appellant then lived, in the edge of Shelby county, about 15 miles distant. The message he directed sent to Mr. Ellis was to have him send a man over and "tell Henry Sanders to come down; that he would sell him his property—20 acres for $3,000." The witnesses stated that they showed appellee the phone and told him to telephone himself, but he said that he was in a hurry, and, as the exchange in La Grange was so slow, he wanted them to do it. The witnesses said that they sent the message as directed, and appellant stated that he so received it. Another witness, C. J. Maher, a neighbor of appellee, testified, in effect, that on the afternoon of the day the deed was executed, when appellee returned to his home, he said to him (witness) that he did not own a foot of land in Oldham county, and that he believed that he would go to Tennessee and buy him a home. Another witness, O. J. Smith, an acquaintance and friend of appellee, testified that on one occasion several months after the conveyance he was at appellee's house, and in speaking about the trade he asked appellee if he had not made a good trade, and appellee answered that he believed he had, that he still owned one acre of that place, but never intended to say anything about it so long as Henry Sanders lived.

Appellee and his step-son, William Sinkhorn, who was present at the time appellee showed appellant the property from the pike and near the Sherman lot, denied, in part, the testimony of appellant and his witnesses as to what occurred at that time; but admit that appellee showed Sanders the corners of both lots, and say that it was for the purpose of defining the boundaries of each lot and explaining to him that he desired to sell only the Jennie Rest Cottage property. They denied that appellee told Sanders that there were 20 acres in the lot, but admitted that he said there were between 18 and 20. Appellee admits that he went to the house of the two witnesses referred to, to telephone Mr. Ellis to send a man over to Henry Sanders, and inform him that he was ready to convey the Jennie Rest Cottage property to him for $3,000, but says that he did the telephoning himself from the home of these witnesses, and that he did not ask either of them to do it for him. We will here remark that appellant testified that he never heard of this property being called the "Jennie Rest Cottage property" until the deed was prepared; that he had no knowledge or information from whom appellee obtained the property until that time; that he never heard of the Sherman lot until long after the deed was executed; that, when he bought the property, it was all under one fence. The fact that appellant testified that he never heard the land called the "Jennie Rest Cottage property" until the deed was executed makes the telephone message to Ellis very important, as it aids the court in getting at this issue of fact between the parties. We have two disinterested persons and a party in interest on one side and the other party in interest on the other. If appellee had telephoned the message himself, it was important to him to introduce Ellis to prove that fact, but Ellis was not introduced. Appellee also positively denied that he had any conversation with C. J. Maher as related by him. He also stated that he did not remember having the conversation related by Smith.

Appellee introduced as a witness the attorney who prepared the deed. He testified that he read the deed to Sanders very carefully; that it described the land conveyed as the "Jennie Rest Cottage property," being $17^{95}/_{100}$ acres; that appellant made no objections and accepted the deed; that there was nothing said at any time in his presence about the Sherman lot. Appellant testified that he did not know at the time from whom appellee purchased the property; that he did not know anything about the lines and corners as called for in the deed; that he did not know what "ninety-five hundredths acres" meant, but supposed that he was getting a conveyance for the land he had purchased, the whole of it, and did not know the difference until long afterwards, when the tax collector visited him and inquired if appellee did not own an acre of land there in that boundary, and it was then that he began to investigate the matter and found that he had an acre inclosed that his deed did not cover. There is one other circumstance that convinces us more strongly of the equity of appellant's contention, and that is appellee nowhere in the pleadings or testimony indicates that he had any understanding with appellant with reference to the acre which he says he did not, or intend to, convey to him. He knew, as he admits, that the acre was inclosed with the premises which he put appellant in possession of; that appellant used it the same as he did the other portions of the survey, but, notwithstanding this knowledge on the part of appellee, he at no time approached Sanders or said anything to him about how long he could continue to use it in this way. It looks reasonable that at the time of the execution of the deed, or at least some time thereafter, appellee would have had some understanding with Sanders as to when he was to cease using the acre, and as to when they would build their division fence. The testimony clearly indicates that appellee either by mistake left the one acre out of the conveyance, or intentionally left it out with a view of defrauding appellant, for appellee knew at the time that Sanders was ignorant of the fact that it was being retained.

Our opinion is that appellant is entitled to this acre of land, and the judgment is reversed and remanded, with directions to the lower court to make an order directing appellee to convey the acre of land to appellant, giving him a reasonable time within which to comply therewith, and, in case of his failure to do so, to direct the commissioner to convey it at the expense of appellee, and to render judgment for appellant's cost.

ILLINOIS CENT R. CO. v. GUNTERMAN.
(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 23, 1900.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 320*)—PASSENGERS—INJURIES BY CARRIER'S AGENT—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for injuries to a passenger from a shot fired at a third person by the carrier's flagman, evidence held to warrant submission to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 320.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 302*)—PASSENGERS—INJURIES.

It is the duty of a carrier to protect its passengers not only on the train, but while they are alighting, and until they have a reasonable time to leave the platform.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1221; Dec. Dig. § 302.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 284*)—PASSENGERS—PROTECTION FROM THIRD PERSONS.

It is a carrier's duty to protect passengers from unruly persons.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1126; Dec. Dig. § 284.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 283*)—PASSENGERS—INJURIES FROM ACTS OF FLAGMAN.

Where trainmen were attacked, and the flagman in the performance of his duty while repelling the attack shot and injured an innocent passenger, the carrier was liable if the act was wrongful.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1121; Dec. Dig. § 283.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 305*)—INJURY TO PASSENGER—ACT OF FLAGMAN—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Where a conductor, hearing a disturbance in a car, entered and quieted the passengers causing the trouble, his failure to eject such passengers was not the proximate cause of injury to an innocent passenger from a renewal of the difficulty after reaching a station.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1245; Dec. Dig. § 305.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 252*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO PROOF—INJURY TO PASSENGER—ACT OF CARRIER'S AGENT.

In an action by a passenger for an injury from being shot by a flagman who attempted to shoot another who had attacked him, there being no question of negligence, an instruction using the word "negligently," instead of the words "not in the necessary or apparently necessary defense of himself or associates," was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 602, 603; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

7. CARRIERS (§ 321*)—INJURY TO PASSENGER—SHOOTING BY TRAINMAN—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action by a passenger for injury from being shot by a trainman, who shot at another person, an instruction to find for defendant unless one of defendant's agents while attempting to shoot another person negligently shot plaintiff, should have stated that if defendant's trainman, when he fired the shot, believed and had reasonable ground to believe that it was necessary to fire the same to protect himself or associates from death or harm, and he so fired the shot to protect himself or associates, they should find for defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1326; Dec. Dig. § 321.*]

8. CARRIERS (§ 321*)—INJURY TO PASSENGER—INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injury to a passenger from being shot during a disturbance between the trainmen and disorderly passengers, where the evidence was conflicting as to whether the shot injuring plaintiff was fired by a trainman or a passenger, the court should have instructed that defendant was not liable if the shot was fired by a passenger.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Muhlenberg County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by G. W. Gunterman against the Illinois Central Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Trabue, Doolan & Cox, R. Y. Thomas, Jr., Taylor & Eaves, and Blewett Lee, for appellant. Willis & Meredith, for appellee.

HOBSON, J. G. W. Gunterman was a passenger on the accommodation train of the Illinois Central Railroad Company running from Central City westward. The train was much crowded, and Gunterman rode upon the platform of one of the cars, as his destination was a station known as Mercer, about three miles from Central City. The proof for him tends to show these facts: After the train pulled out from Central City, a crash was heard in the smoking car, and there was some disturbance in there. The conductor went forward hurriedly to the car, and soon he and the flagman came out bringing with them a man named Jackson, whom the conductor said he was going to put off; but he then decided not to put him off, but to take him on to Greenville, and allowed him to go back into the car. After Jackson returned to the car, there was still a disturbance in there. When the train reached Mercer, Gunterman got off and was standing on the platform, while the flagman was helping a lady off. At this juncture a man named Laswell, who had gotten off the train, picked up a rock and knocked down the porter, who was by the side of the car, and struck Langley, the flagman. The proof for the plaintiff shows that at this point the conductor and Langley took out their pistols and Langley began shooting; one of the balls from Langley's pistol striking Gunterman in the back of the neck.

The proof for the railroad company is to the effect that, when the conductor went forward into the smoker, he found that Jackson and Laswell had kicked down the door to the water-closet, claiming that some one had locked them in there, although the fact was that they simply had failed to turn the lock the right way. The conductor undertook to quiet them, and, Jackson being unruly, the conductor struck him. He thereupon quieted and took a seat; and the conductor left the car and went back to the ladies' car to take up his fares. After the conductor left, Laswell, who was with Jackson in the water-closet, became boisterous again, and the flagman, who was in the car, undertook to quiet him, and struck him on the head, from which he bled considerably. He then became quiet, and soon the train pulled into Mercer, where Jackson, Laswell, and a man named Hopkins, among others, left the train. As soon as Laswell got on the ground, he began hunting for a rock, with which he knocked down the porter who had his back to him, and then struck Langley, the flagman, and Langley drew his pistol and snapped it. At this juncture Hopkins drew his pistol and fired two shots at Langley, the first of which struck Gunterman in the neck. The conductor was standing on the platform of the car, but had not gotten off the car when the difficulty took place. There was testimony for the plaintiff to the effect that Hopkins had drawn his pistol in the car before he reached Mercer; but there was no proof that any of the railroad men saw this, or that he was in any way connected with the difficulty that had taken place in the car. The proof for the railroad company was to the effect that Hopkins had done nothing until after the difficulty began on the ground. On this conflicting testimony the circuit court instructed the jury as follows:

"(1) The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was a passenger on the defendant's (railroad company's) train from Central City to Mercer station, and that when the plaintiff was on the station platform at Mercer Station on the occasion of his leaving the cars after he had been carried from Central City to Mercer Station, and before he had had a reasonable opportunity to leave said station platform after getting off the cars, the agents of defendant railway company, or any of them in charge of said passenger train, while attempting to shoot another person, unintentionally but negligently shot and wounded the plaintiff upon his body and person with a pistol, then, and in that event, the jury should find for the plaintiff such compensatory damages, if any, as were thereby caused to the plaintiff, and which were the direct and natural result of the negligence aforesaid, not exceeding $1,000 the amount claimed.

"(2) The jury should find for defendant unless they should believe from the evidence that some one of the defendant's agents in charge of said train while attempting to shoot another person negligently shot and wounded the plaintiff while he was on the station platform, and before he had had a reasonable opportunity to leave the platform after getting off the cars."

"(4) Negligence as used in the instructions means the failure to use ordinary care, and ordinary care is such care as an ordinarily prudent person would usually exercise under similar circumstances in matters involving his own interest."

He refused to give this instruction, which was asked by the defendant: "The court instructs the jury that, although they may believe from the evidence that one of the defendant's agents fired the shot which struck and injured the plaintiff, but should further believe from the evidence that the said agent who fired said shot, if he did so fire it, was being attacked by some other person, and at the time believed or had reasonable grounds to believe that it was necessary for him to fire same to protect himself from death or great bodily harm at the hands of said person, then the law is for the defendant, and they will so find."

The jury found for Gunterman, and fixed his damages at $1,000. The railroad company appeals.

The court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant, for in helping the passengers from the train the flagman was discharging a duty assigned him by the defendant. It was the duty of the defendant to protect its passengers, not only on the train, but while they were alighting from it, and until they had had a reasonable time to leave the platform. It was incumbent upon it to protect its passengers from unruly persons as they alighted from the train no less than while they were on the train. If the flagman was attacked while he was performing the duty assigned him by the defendant, he had a right to stand his ground and meet force with force, and to use as much force as was necessary to protect him or his associates from death or great bodily harm at the hands of their assailants. In doing all this he was acting for the company, and therefore it is responsible for his acts. Gunterman had just alighted from the train, and a reasonable time had not elapsed when the shooting was done.

The court also properly refused to submit to the jury the question whether the conductor in the exercise of ordinary care should have put Jackson and Laswell off the train before they reached Mercer. When the conductor went to Jackson, he quieted down, and it does not appear that he was afterwards disorderly on the train. There was nothing in the conduct of Laswell and Jackson that should have made the conductor anticipate that after they reached Mercer and got upon the ground they would make an attack upon the trainmen. As what happened at Mercer was not to be reasonably anticipated from what had taken place in the presence of the conductor on the train, it cannot be said that his failure to put Laswell and Jackson off before they reached Mercer was the proximate cause of this trouble. The fact is that the difficulty at Mercer seems to have followed the flagman striking Laswell after the conductor had left the car and without his knowledge; for it is evident that Laswell got the rock and began the assault at Mercer to avenge himself for the blow which the flagman had given him on the train. This occurred just as the train was pulling into Mercer, and the conductor had no opportunity to do anything before the train reached Mercer. He was then taking up the tickets in the ladies' car, and had no knowledge of it until after the difficulty at Mercer. There was no evidence in the case that any one of the trainmen but Langley, the flagman, did any shooting. In instruction No. 1, in lieu of the words "the agents of defendant railroad company or any of them in charge of said passenger train," the court should have used the words,

"the defendant's flagman, Langley." There is no question of negligence in the case. If Langley drew his pistol and fired it into the crowd, shooting the plaintiff, the company is responsible unless he acted in self-defense. In lieu of the words in the first instruction "but negligently," the court should have used the words "and not in the necessary or apparently necessary defense of himself or his associates on the train." In lieu of instruction No. 2, the court should have told the jury that it was the duty of the defendant's agents in charge of the train to protect the passengers while they were alighting from the car, and that, if they were attacked, they had a right to stand their ground and meet force with force, and that, though they should believe from the evidence that Langley fired the shot which struck the plaintiff, yet, if they further believed from the evidence that when he so fired it he or his associates on the train were being attacked by some other person or persons, and he believed, and had reasonable grounds to believe, that it was then necessary for him to fire same to protect himself or them from death or great bodily harm at the hands of such person or persons, and he so fired the shot to protect himself or one of his associates from the said danger real or to him apparent, they should find for the defendant. Crabtree v. Dawson, 119 Ky. 148, 83 S. W. 557, 26 Ky. Law Rep. 1046, 67 L. R. A. 565, 115 Am. St. Rep. 243. By another instruction the jury should have been told that the defendant was not liable if the shot which struck the plaintiff was fired by Hopkins.

The other objections urged are as to matters which will probably not occur on another trial. In view of all the evidence, we conclude that there should be a new trial.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

4. LARCENY (§ 23*)—PETIT LARCENY—WHAT CONSTITUTES—MONEY TAKEN FROM PERSONS UNDER ARREST.

In a prosecution for robbery, where it appeared that accused, a deputy sheriff, arrested the complaining witnesses for being drunk and disorderly, and after making the arrests searched their persons and obtained an amount of money, which he did not return upon releasing them, it was error not to charge the jury on petit larceny, since, if accused made the search in good faith, and not for the purpose of robbing them, but after thus getting the money feloniously kept and converted it to his own use, his act in so doing was petit larceny.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Hopkins County.
"To be officially reported."

James Wynn was convicted of robbery, and appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Jonson & Jennings, for appellant. James Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and Tom B. McGregor, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

SETTLE, J. This is an appeal from two judgments of the Hopkins circuit court, each convicting the appellant, James Wynn, of the crime of robbery. By agreement he was tried under the two indictments at the same time, and by the single verdict of the jury his punishment under one of the indictments was fixed at three and under the other at two years' confinement in the penitentiary.

According to the commonwealth's evidence, the alleged robberies were committed by appellant in the village of Nortonville, at night, in August, 1907, under the following circumstances: Naaman Wilson and J. L. Kenny, who were going from Central City to Crofton, reached Nortonville upon a train of the Illinois Central Railroad, at which place they had to await a later train of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad upon which to go to Crofton, situated upon the last-named railroad. Having several hours to wait at Nortonville, Wilson and Kenny visited one or more saloons and took two drinks of beer and one of whisky each, and then went to the depot, intending to take the Louisville & Nashville Railroad train upon its arrival. While in the depot, Kenny became sick from intoxication or the mixture of drinks he had taken, and vomited upon the floor, which displeased the ticket agent in charge of the depot, who ordered both Kenny and Wilson from the building. At this juncture, appellant, who claimed to be acting as deputy marshal of Nortonville, appeared on the scene and arrested Wilson and Kenny, and ostensibly started with them to the town prison. They both testified that appellant upon reaching a point on the railroad track about 75 yards from the depot stopped and told them he would have to search their persons, to which they objected, but that he nevertheless proceeded with the search, and took from the pocket of Wilson two $5 bills, after which he told Wilson and Kenny that if they would go to an adjoining woodland, which he pointed out to them, and quietly remain there until the time arrived for reaching the depot to take the train upon which they expected to go to Crofton, he would release them from arrest, whereupon they agreed to follow appellant's commands and were discharged by him, but that he retained the money he took from Wilson, and did not thereafter return it. Wilson and Kenny further testified that they went to the woods as directed by appellant, but there encountered some negroes who "bummed" them for money, and that, to avoid the negroes, they returned to the depot, and were again arrested by appellant, who took them to the place of the first search, and again searched their persons, taking at that time from Kenny $2, which he appropriated as he had done the $10 of Wilson, after which appellant turned them loose, and again ordered them to the woods. In addition to the testimony of Wilson and Kenny, the commonwealth proved the flight of appellant to Indiana after his indictment for the robberies, and the forfeiture of the bail bonds executed to secure his appearance for trial under the indictments. Appellant in testifying admitted his escape from jail and flight to Indiana, but claimed that he was confined in jail for a misdemeanor, and that the escape and flight were caused by the need of his services by his family in Indiana, some of whom were then ill. It does not appear from the evidence, however, whether his return from Indiana for trial was voluntary or because of his arrest for that purpose; but it does appear that his bail in the robbery cases, following his escape and flight, procured of the clerk of the Hopkins circuit court copies of the bail bonds, with a view to his arrest and return to answer the indictments.

Appellant, upon being introduced as a witness in his own behalf, admitted that he twice arrested Wilson and Kenny as stated by them, but denied that he searched or took any money from either of them. He was corroborated as to what took place at each arrest by three companions who claimed to have been with him at the time, one of whom was a saloon keeper who seemed to have been considerably under the influence of intoxicants. In addition, appellant proved by the ticket agent that Wilson and Kenny after their arrest accused him of being the person who robbed them, but later retracted the accusation, apologized to him therefor, and informed him that appellant was the guilty party. It also appeared from the evidence that the ticket agent resembled appellant in figure, and wore clothing of the same fashion and color. Appellant also proved by one of the town trustees that Wilson and Kenny on the morning following the robberies claimed that they had been robbed by a man who had arrested them as marshal, but that they failed to identify appellant as the guilty party when he was called to them.

Appellant contends that he should have been granted a new trial, and is entitled to a reversal of the judgments of conviction, because the verdict was contrary to and unauthorized by the evidence. This contention cannot prevail, for the reason that the testimony of both Wilson and Kenny make it appear that he was the guilty party, both identified him as the perpetrator of the crimes, and related with particularity the facts and circumstances tending to establish his guilt, and the jury had the right to accept their testimony as against that of appellant and his witnesses. And the trial court, even if of opinion that the weight of the evidence conducted to prove appellant's innocence, could not have usurped the powers of the jury by determining the matter of his guilt or innocence.

It is further contended by appellant that the trial court in addition to the instructions given should have given one under which the jury might have found appellant guilty of petit larceny. We are disposed to sustain this contention. If Wilson and Kenny when found by appellant were drunk or disorderly, he had the right as deputy marshal of Nortonville to arrest them without a warrant, and, following such arrest, to search their persons for the purpose of ascertaining whether they were in possession of weapons or other means of resisting his authority as an officer, or of effecting their escape if imprisoned, but, if in making such search appellant obtained from their persons money, it was his duty to return it upon discharging them from arrest. If, however, after making the arrest, he took advantage of the duress under which such arrest placed them, and by force or by putting them in fear took from them money in their possession, feloniously intending at the time to convert it to his own use, his act in doing so was robbery. On the other hand, if appellant searched Wilson and Kenny in good faith, and not for the purpose of robbing them, but after thus getting the money feloniously kept and converted it to his own use, his act in so doing constituted petit larceny.

We are of opinion, therefore, that on a retrial of the case the circuit court in addition to the instructions given on the former trial should give another or others embodying substantially in terms as above indicated the law as to petit larceny.

On account of the error of the trial court in instructing the jury, the judgments are reversed and cases remanded for a new trial in conformity to the opinion.

RECTOR et al. v. RECTOR.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 9, 1909.)

1. DEEDS (§ 124*)—CONSTRUCTION—ESTATES CONVEYED.

A deed conveying land to the grantee, his heirs and assigns, prohibited the sale or renting thereof during the life of the grantors, husband and wife, and stated that the title should remain with the grantors during their lives, and that the grantee could make improvements on the land, and to have and hold the property unto himself, his heirs and assigns forever. The land was not homestead, and was owned by the husband in fee, in which the wife had only an inchoate right of dower. The grantee died after the death of the husband, but during the lifetime of the wife. Held that, on the husband's death, the fee passed to the grantee, subject only to the dower right of the wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 346; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1171*)—TRIVIAL ERROR.

The error in a judgment awarding dower arising from the failure of the court to take into consideration the life interest of a third person living at the time of the institution of the suit for dower, but dying before the rendition of the judgment, is infinitesimal, and does not authorize a reversal.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Casey County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Bettie W. Rector against W. S. Rector and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

N. H. W. Aaron and McQuown & Beckham, for appellants. Stone & Stone, for appellee.

NUNN, C. J. This litigation involves the proper construction of the following deed: "This indenture made, this 12th day of January, 1900, between S. L. Rector and J. M. Rector his wife, of Casey county, Ky., parties of the first part and R. S. Rector, their son, of the same county and state, party of the second part, witnesseth: That in consideration of the love and affection which they have and do bear toward the party of the second part and for the sum of one dollar in hand paid, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, the parties of the first part have bargained and sold and do hereby give, grant and convey unto the party of the second part, his heirs and assigns the following described land on the terms and conditions named below: [The boundary of 250 acres of land is here given.] This indenture prohibits the sale or renting of the above described real estate during the life of parties of the first part except by their consent, the title to remain with the parties of the first part during their lives and by this indenture they forfeit none of their rights and privileges therein. Party of the second part has the right to make any improvements on the said land. To have and to hold said property unto the party of the second part his heirs and assigns forever. In testimony whereof the parties of the first part hereunto set their hands the year and day above written." The grantee, immediately after the execution of the deed, entered upon and took possession and control of the land conveyed, and proceeded to and did erect a dwelling house and outbuildings thereon and made lasting and valuable improvements, and continued in the actual possession and control of the land for his own benefit from the time he entered to the date of his death, June, 1908. The grantor, S. L. Rector, who owned the fee-simple title at the date of the deed, died a few months after the execution thereof, and left surviving him his wife, J. M. Rector, who had only an inchoate right of dower in the land. This action was instituted by Bettie Rector, the widow of R. S. Rector, to have dower allotted to her in the 250 acres of land conveyed to her husband. J. M. Rector, the widow of S. L. Rector, who took by descent from her son, R. S. Rector, all the interest he had in the land, defended the action, controverting appellee's right to dower or any interest in the land. After the case was prepared for trial and submitted, but before any judgment was rendered, J. M. Rector died and her heirs, appellants, filed a pleading and entered their appearance to the action, and the case was resubmitted for judgment, and the lower court awarded appellee a dower interest in the land. Hence this appeal.

It will be observed that the granting and habendum clauses of the deed conveyed to R. S. Rector a fee-simple title in the land, but between the granting and habendum clauses the following conditions were inserted, to wit: "This indenture prohibits the sale or renting of the above described real estate during the life of parties of the first part except by their consent, the title to remain with the parties of the first part during their lives and by this indenture they forfeit none of their rights and privileges therein. Party of the second part has the right to make any improvements on the said land." Appellants contend that by reason of this insertion the grantor reserved a life estate in the land, and that the grantee, R. S. Rector, took the fee in remainder after the termination of the life estate of the grantors, and that as the grantee, R. S. Rector, died after his father and during the lifetime of J. M. Rector, that his estate in fee in remainder did not vest during his lifetime, and therefore he was not during coverture with his wife, Bettie Rector, or at the time of his death, seised of such an estate in the land as entitled his widow, appellee, to dower therein. Appellee's contention is that, by the conditions in the deed referred to, the sole intention was to limit and restrain the grantee's power, right, and authority to either rent or alienate the land conveyed to him during the lifetime of the grantors, and that, by reason of the deed, the grantee took and became vested with an estate in fee, with a restriction only upon the power and right to either rent or sell the land during the lifetime of the grantors without their consent. Appellee also contends that R. S. Rector took under the deed an estate in fee, subject to the life estate therein by the grantor S. L. Rector and to a dower right of the grantor J. M. Rector, as the surviving wife of S. L. Rector.

The parties, by counsel, present their contentions with much ability and reasoning. We have not been cited to nor have we been able to find a case wherein a conveyance containing conditions like those contained in the deed in the case at bar has been discussed. Appellants' counsel, in support of their contention that R. S. Rector took a fee in remainder after the death of his mother and father, and that appellee has no dower interest in the land, cited several cases. The first—Arnold's Heirs, etc., v. Arnold's Adm'r, 8 B. Mon. 202—is unlike the case at bar. In that case John Arnold devised to William W. Arnold the plantation on which he lived with his wife, containing about 300 acres. He requested his son to remain with himself and mother as long as they might live and cultivate the farm; and the son was to have a third of the surplus made on the farm. By the second clause of the will he devised to his wife the use of the plantation during her life. In the case before us the home place of S. L. Rector and wife was not conveyed by the deed. It appears to have been a separate place. The important difference is that by the deed S. L. Rector did not convey to his wife anything. Her interest in the land remained as it existed prior to the execution of the deed, to wit, an inchoate right of dower. Another case referred to is Northcut, etc., v. Whipp and Wife, 12 B. Mon. 63. In that case Archer Northcut devised to his wife one-half of all his land, slaves, and personal property during her life, then to her son, William L. Northcut. He devised the other half to William L. Northcut in fee. By another provision of his will he stated that if his son, William L. Northcut, should die before his mother without children, then that portion devised to him should go to testator's four sisters. William L. Northcut married, and died before his mother and without children. His widow sought dower in the land. The court decided that she was not entitled to dower in the one-half which was devised to testator's wife for life, but that she was entitled to dower in the half devised to his son, her husband, he taking the fee in that portion subject to be defeated only in the event that he died without children before his mother. In that case the court said: "Upon principle and authority, therefore, we are satisfied the true and substantial test of the right of dower is that the issue of the wife by the marriage might inherit the estate from the husband as his heir or heirs. And, as W. L. Northcut had in the lands devised to him immediately in fee an estate of inheritance which must have descended on his death to any surviving issue of his marriage, we are satisfied that, although he died without leaving such issue, his widow is entitled to dower in the land." In the case at bar S. L. Rector did not convey the land to his wife for life, but she only retained the interest she had in it at the date of the deed. The other two cases referred to by counsel for appellants are Reynolds v. McFarland & Co., 11 S. W. 202, 10 Ky. Law Rep. 932, and Hunt v. Hunt, 119 Ky. 39, 82 S. W. 998, 26 Ky. Law Rep. 973, 68 L. R. A. 180. In each of these cases the conveyance was by father and mother to their child or children of the home place, and each contained this recital, to wit: "This deed is not to take effect until the death of the grantors." And it was held that a life estate was reserved and the child or children took a fee in remainder. These cases are unlike the one before us. In this case the homestead was not conveyed. The grantors only restrained the grantee from selling or renting the land within the lifetime of the grantors. They gave the grantee possession at once with power to improve and use the same for his sole benefit. The main thought and purpose uppermost in the minds of the grantors was to compel the grantee to reside upon the place and improve it, and therefore they prohibited the renting or selling of it. The deed was evidently drawn by a layman, and it was evidently thought that the first words used in the condition did not accomplish that purpose; hence the insertion of the words in the condition referred to, to wit, "the title to remain in the parties of the first part during their lives and by this indenture they forfeit none of their rights and privileges therein."

What we have said is upon the idea that the sole purpose of the condition and restriction in the deed was to compel the grantee to reside upon and improve the land, and that he was not to enjoy the benefits thereof by sale or renting it, and that the fee simple passed to the grantee subject only to these restrictions. Conceding, however, for the purpose of this case the construction we have given the inserted conditions in the deed to be erroneous, it appears that S. L. Rector owned the fee simple in the whole of the land, and his wife, J. M. Rector, owned only an inchoate right of dower in same, and there is nothing in the terms of the deed to change in any way their interest therein. Therefore, when S. L. Rector, the father, died, which occurred before the death of the son, the fee passed immediately to the son, subject only to the dower right of his mother, J. M. Rector. The lower court in rendering judgment in behalf of appellee committed a slight error in not taking into consideration the life interest of the mother, J. M. Rector; but, as she died before the judgment was rendered, her interest in that should have been considered as infinitesimal, and does not authorize a reversal of the case.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

BRANDENBURG v. SANDIDGE'S COMMITTEE.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 23, 1909.)

INSANE PERSONS (§ 67*)—SALE OF REAL ESTATE—VALIDITY.

Where the appointment of a committee for a lunatic was void, and an order for the sale of the lunatic's real estate to pay debts made in a suit by the committee against the lunatic confined in an asylum and his creditors was void, the court could not compel the purchaser to accept a deed from the lunatic while in the asylum on the mere ex parte affidavit of the asylum physician, averring that the lunatic had been restored to reason.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. § 101; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Hardin County. "To be officially reported."

Action by James Matt Sandidge's committee for the sale of land to pay debts. From a judgment requiring W. A. Brandenburg, purchaser of the real estate, to purchase the same, he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

H. L. James, for appellant. Layman & Holbert and L. A. Faurest, for appellees.

NUNN, C. J. Prior to May 25, 1908, one James Matt Sandidge owned about 185 acres of land in one body in Hardin county, Ky. He was indebted to the Leitchfield Deposit Bank in the sum of about $2,300, which was secured by a mortgage on the land and to C. Z., and something over $100, which was also secured by a mortgage on the land. He owed two or three merchants' accounts which were unsecured. All of his indebtedness amounted to something like $2,700. On the date above named Sandidge was given a form of trial as to his sanity in the county court. The jury found him of unsound mind and to be a lunatic. The court so adjudged him, and directed his immediate conveyance to the asylum in Lakeland, Ky., which was done. W. H. Gardner was appointed his committee, and he instituted this action, alleging that Sandidge was a lunatic and then confined in the asylum in Lakeland, and made him a de-defendant with the creditors of Sandidge, and asked that the land be sold to satisfy the creditors. The case was referred to a master commissioner to take proof of and report claims against Sandidge's estate. He reported the amount thereof, which was, in substance, as stated. The court directed a sale of all the land for the reason that it could not be divided without materially impairing its value, and directed that the creditors of Sandidge be paid out of the purchase price. The land was sold by the commissioner, and appellant, Brandenburg, bid the sum of $4,450, about $1,200 or $1,400 more than the proof shows that it was worth. The sale was reported by the commissioner to the court, and at the first term after the sale a guardian ad litem appeared for Sandidge's infant children and filed exceptions to the sale of the whole of the land, stating that Sandidge and his children were entitled to a homestead, which should be set apart and the balance sold to pay the debts. Brandenburg appeared at the same time, and filed exceptions to the report of sale, making the point that the whole proceeding by which the land was sold was void; that the confinement of Sandidge in the asylum was without legal authority because he had not been lawfully adjudged to be a lunatic. Both parties agree that these contentions are true, and the court so stated in its judgment, but compelled Brandenburg to take the land at his bid for the following reasons: After it was discovered that all the proceedings leading up to the sale of the land by an order of the court were void, a deed was prepared from James Matt Sandidge to appellant, Brandenburg, the purchase price being fixed at appellant's bid, which contained a clause of general warranty, and was sent or carried to Jefferson county, where the asylum is situated, and was signed and acknowledged by J. Matt Sandidge before Victor Swope, a notary public for that county, who certified that Sandidge freely ratified and confirmed the sale to Brandenburg. On the same day one W. E. Gardner made an affidavit stating, in effect, that he was the first assistant physician at the Central Kentucky Asylum for the Insane in Lakeland, Ky.; that as such physician J. Matt Sandidge was placed under his care when sent to the asylum; that he had been restored to his right mind, was then, and had been for several months, of sound mind, and thoroughly capable of attending to his own business, although somewhat physically disabled; that he had mind and capacity to understand a contract to sell and convey his real estate and other property. This affidavit was filed in court, and the court directed its commissioner who made the sale of the land to join Sandidge in the deed to appellant, and from this order the appeal was prosecuted.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The only question to be considered is whether the court erred in compelling appellant to accept the deed so made and tendered and pay the purchase price. Appellees' counsel concedes in his argument that the lower court had no jurisdiction to make the sale of the land, but as Sandidge, when in his right mind, as shown by the affidavit of the assistant physician, ratified and confirmed the attempted sale of the land by the court and executed a deed of general warranty, appellant should be required to take the land and pay the purchase price. In support of this contention, counsel refer to some authorities to the effect that, when an agent makes a sale of land without disclosing his agency, the purchaser was compelled to take the land when the principal made a good title. The case at bar is not like those cases. We have found no case where the purchaser of land who believed that he was getting a good title from the person who sold it to him was compelled to take the land when he discovered that the seller did not own it and his principal was an infant, idiot, or lunatic, or there were reasonable grounds to believe that the principal was laboring under any one of these difficulties. Brandenburg knew the owner of the land was in the asylum, and believed that the court had jurisdiction to make a sale and pass a good and perfect title to the land, and he should not have been made to accept the deed from Sandidge made while he was in the asylum; the only evidence of his having been restored to his right mind being an ex parte affidavit of the assistant physician of the asylum. While it is agreed that all the proceedings which led up to the placing of Sandidge in the asylum were void, yet the record shows that a jury was impaneled, the proper oath administered, and a verdict returned to the effect that Sandidge was of unsound mind and a lunatic, and that he was immediately sent to the asylum, where he remained until after the court ordered appellant to accept the deed. Appellant traded with the court and expected a good title from it, and the court had no power to compel him to accept a deed from another vendor, especially when that vendor's sanity was in doubt, and appellant might be put to the expense and trouble in maintaining his title against the claim of Sandidge's heirs. If the creditors of Sandidge had made their answers to the petition a cross-petition against Sandidge and had him served with process before the sale of the land, it would have been valid, but they did not do that. Sandidge was before the court only upon the petition of Gardner, his alleged committee, whose appointment was void, wherefore Gardner had no right to institute the action.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is reversed and remanded, with directions to set aside the sale and to dismiss the petition.

BORNSTEIN v. LOUISVILLE SCHOOL BOARD et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 26, 1909.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 111*)—CONTRACTS—ILLEGAL CONTRACTS—REMEDIES OF TAXPAYER.

A taxpayer could maintain an action as such to prevent the waste of the public school fund, or to prevent the school board from making a construction contract with one of its own members in violation of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. §§ 265-268; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

2. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 79*)—CONTRACTS—INDIVIDUAL INTEREST OF OFFICER—VALIDITY.

Ky. St. § 2975 (Russell's St. § 854), provides that no person shall be eligible to the office of trustee of the public schools, who at the time of his election is directly or indirectly interested in any contract with the school board, or is in any way benefited by the appropriations of the board, and section 2976 (Russell's St. § 855) vacates the office of any member of the school board who after election does or incurs anything which would have rendered him ineligible for election. Held, that the statute was simply declaratory of the common law, and made void contracts with the school board in which members thereof were interested, either directly or indirectly, so that a contract with a school board for the erection of a building, in which a member of the board was the real party interested, though it was made in the name of his cousin, was void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. § 191; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

3. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 111*)—CONTRACTS—INDIVIDUAL INTEREST OF OFFICER—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action to enjoin the construction of a school building, on the ground that the contract was in fact made with a member of the school board, though nominally made with another, evidence held to show that such member was interested in the contract, and that the bid was really made by him in another's name.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

4. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 111*)—CONTRACTS—INVALIDITY—EFFECT.

Though a school building, constructed under a contract with a member of the school board, which was void for that reason, as in violation of Ky. St. §§ 2975, 2976 (Russell's St. §§ 854, 855), was completed with money furnished by the board and was accepted by it, the parties to the transaction will not be permitted to profit from it, and the school board will be enjoined, in a suit by a taxpayer, from paying the amount not actually put into the building, and the costs of the suit adjudged against the nominal and the real contractor, and, if the whole contract price has been paid by the board, the nominal and the real contractor will be required to repay the amount not actually spent by them on the building to the board, with interest from the time of the last payment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Chancery Branch, First Division.

"To be officially reported."

Suit by Jacob Bornstein against the Louisville School Board and others. From a decree dismissing the petition, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed and remanded for judgment as directed, and for further proceedings.

M. A., D. A. & J. G. Sachs, for appellant.
Wallace A. McKay and W. P. Hillsman, for appellees.

HOBSON, J. The Louisville school board advertised for bids for the brickwork of the Duker Avenue school building, and it was specified in the advertisement that the bidders should state what they would charge if Louisville brick were used, and what they would charge additional if Akron brick were used. A number of bids were made for the work, among others one by Jacob Bornstein, in which he offered to do the work for $9,600, and there was added to the foot of his bid a statement that, if Akron brick were used, he would charge $40 per 1,000 additional. George Hoertz also made a bid in which he offered to do the work for $11,923 with Louisville brick, and a certain higher sum if Akron brick were used. John Hoertz was a member of the school board and also chairman of the building committee. When the bids were opened, at the suggestion of the architect, Bornstein's bid was thrown out as irregular because he did not specify what he would charge if Akron brick were used in a lump sum, but only stated that he would charge $40 per 1,000 extra. The committee thereupon decided to use Louisville brick, and the bid of George Hoertz was accepted, which was lower than any other bid except the Bornstein bid, and this had been thrown out. The committee reported its action to the school board, who approved the action of the committee, and made a contract with George Hoertz for the brickwork of the building. Bornstein then brought this suit to enjoin the school board from having the building constructed by Hoertz upon the ground that the committee had capriciously rejected his bid, although he was the lowest and best bidder, and that the bid made in the name of George Hoertz was in fact the bid of John Hoertz, the chairman of the committee, and that the school board was making a contract with one of its own members for the building of the schoolhouse at a higher price than the lowest and best bid, and was thus wasting $2,323 of the school money. The application for a preliminary injunction was refused; answers were filed. On final hearing his petition was dismissed, and he appeals.

Bornstein sued as a taxpayer, and as such he might maintain an action to prevent the waste of the school fund in which he was interested, or to prevent the school board from making a contract with one of its own members for the work. He made the school board, John Hoertz, and George Hoertz parties to the petition. The house was built pending the action, and was about completed when the last depositions were taken. It is not easy to see on what ground the bid of Bornstein was rejected as irregular when it was decided to build the house of Louisville brick, for it was clearly stated in his bid that he would do the work for $9,600, and, after throwing out his bid, the board accepted the bid of George Hoertz for $11,923. Bornstein was a contractor in good standing. He was then just finishing another schoolhouse for the board, and it is hard to believe that, if these persons had been accepting bids to build a house for themselves, they would have thrown out a bid that was the lowest by $2,323, and then accepted the next higher bid, after they had determined not to use Akron brick; for, whatever defect there might have been in Bornstein's bid as to Akron brick, it was perfectly definite as to what he would charge if Louisville brick were used.

But, passing by this question, we come to the main question in the case: Was the bid made in the name of George Hoertz really made by John Hoertz, a member of the school board, and chairman of the building committee? Sections 2975, 2976, Ky. St. (Russell's St. §§ 854, 855), among other things provide as follows:

"No person shall be eligible to this office who, at the time of his election, is directly or indirectly interested in any contract with the board, or who holds any office of trust, agency or salary with any corporation which holds any contract with the board, or who is in any way benefited by the appropriations of the board; or whose father, son, brother, wife, daughter or sister is employed as teacher or as professor, or in any other capacity by said board, or in any of the public schools, or who is, directly or indirectly, interested in the sale to the board of books, stationery, or other property."

"If, after election, any member of the board should become a candidate for nomination or for any office or agency, the holding and discharging of which would have rendered him ineligible before his election, or should he remove out of the district for which he was chosen, or should he do or incur anything which would have rendered him ineligible for election, or should any of the relatives above specified be employed by the board, his office shall become vacant and be filled as herein directed."

It will thus be seen that the statute makes any person who is directly or indirectly interested in any contract with the board ineligible for election, and declares that if after election he shall become directly or indirectly interested in any such contract his office shall become vacant. By section 2768, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 556), members of the general council are forbidden to be directly or indirectly interested in any contract with the city, and under this provision it has been held that, if a member of the council is interested in any contract made with the city, the contract is void. Nunemacher v.

Louisville, 98 Ky. 334, 32 S. W. 1001, 19 Ky. Law Rep. 933; Jacques v. Louisville, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 574; Bradley Gilbert Co. v. Jacques, 110 S. W. 836, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 618. Section 2768, Ky. St., provides no penalty for its violation, while section 2976 provides that the violation of its provisions shall vacate the office. The providing of this severe penalty shows that the Legislature intended to forbid the members of the school board from being interested directly or indirectly in the contracts made by it; and such contracts are no less void in the case of a trustee than in the case of a councilman. How then stands this case? John Hoertz had been for 20 years a member of the school board. During this whole time he had been making contracts with the school board for the erection of buildings. He was a contractor by business. For a while he made his contracts in the name of one Neumeyer, who was his partner. After Neumeyer's death, he made contracts in the name of others. About two years before this he had built for the school board in the name of this same George Hoertz the Sylvia Avenue Schoolhouse. He had a son, whom we shall call for distinction George, Jr.; the other George Hoertz, whom we shall call George, Sr., being a cousin of his, 66 years old, living at Beechmont, not known among the contractors of Louisville as a contractor of brickwork, and who had done no contracting of brickwork for himself in four or five years except to remodel a house for his daughter-in-law. When the advertisement appeared for the brickwork for the Duker Avenue Schoolhouse, George, Jr., went to his father and asked him if he was going to bid on the job; the father and son being then partners in contracting. He and his son say he told his son, "No," that since the new board had come in they had agreed that no members of the board should do any contracting, and George, Jr., then went to see George, Sr., without, as he says, any suggestion from his father. A bid was prepared, and the name of George Hoertz, Sr., was signed to it by John Hoertz. The proof as to the signature to this bid leaves no doubt in our mind that this is the writing of John Hoertz. When this bid was accepted by the committee, Bornstein began this proceeding, and George Hoertz in person signed the contract which was made with the school board, but he gave as his surety on his bond the father-in-law of John Hoertz, and George Hoertz, Jr., took entire charge of the matter of building the schoolhouse. He bought the material, he employed the hands; George, Sr., paying practically no attention to what was going on, and giving the matter no supervision. When estimates were made upon the work, George, Sr., would go to the school board and get the check, turn the check over to John Hoertz, and John Hoertz cashed the check. George, Sr., put not a dollar in the building and received not a dollar from it up to the time the depositions in this case closed, and at that time the school board had paid out upon it $9,000. George, Jr., testifies that he was by agreement with George, Sr., the foreman of the building, and was to receive $5.50 a day. He also testifies that his father, when he collected the checks, turned all the money over to him and that he kept it in a drawer in his desk at home until he paid it out on material or to the hands as the work progressed. When the depositions closed, there was something over $2,000 still payable by the school board, and there were some bills outstanding. But, although $9,000 had been collected, no account had been asked by George Hoertz, Sr., of George Hoertz, Jr., and none had been rendered him. Before this work was begun, John Hoertz and son had built some cottages on Brook street with certain bricklayers. They had taken their force from there to C. T. Dearings, and added a story to his printing establishment, and these hands were taken from there to the Duker Avenue school building. John Hoertz says that he was doing nothing while George, Jr., was building the schoolhouse, and that he merely cashed the checks for convenience of George, not retaining a dollar of the money or having any interest in the contract. While George Hoertz, Sr., was rarely about the building, John Hoertz was frequently there, often going as often as twice a day. After this schoolhouse was built, he did work for the school board in six small jobs amounting to $147, and put the voucher in the name of Joseph Kipp, having Kipp to recopy it so that it would appear in his handwriting; and, when the account was allowed, he had Kipp to sign the check and paid Kipp $5 for his trouble. This was after the agreement between the trustees not to be interested in any contracts made with the board, and after John Hoertz says he had determined not to be interested in any such contracts, and for that reason did not bid on the Duker Avenue School. While he and his son, George, and George Hoertz, Sr., all state that he had no interest in the Duker Avenue School contract, their testimony is very unsatisfactory taken as a whole.

George Hoertz, Sr., does not know who wrote the bid to the Louisville school board, does not remember if he signed it himself, does not know the dimensions of the building, did not have any bills for the material presented to him, does not know whether the bills were paid by cash or check, or how much material was used, or how many men worked on the building, or the names of any of the men, or the average pay roll, or when or where or how the men were paid off, or how much was paid for labor or material, or how much the time of his foreman came to. To say that a man who had undertaken a contract involving over $11,000 could be so ignorant about it as George Hoertz was, is to say either that he was lacking in ordinary prudence or that he had for some reason no substantial interest in it; and that George Hoertz is a man of good sense is shown by his deposition. John Hoertz's testimony is inconsistent with the declarations made by him to disinterested parties whom he contradicts; and, in addition to this, his testimony lacks frankness, and has not the ring of a sincere desire to hold back nothing material to the controversy. To uphold such a transaction simply because interested parties say that John Hoertz was not interested in the contract would be in effect to hold the statute inoperative except where the parties confess to its violation. The statute is simply declaratory of a common-law rule, which lies at the basis of the proper administration of municipal affairs, and the court cannot countenance evasions of it. To permit it to be evaded in such a way, as is shown by this record, would be to destroy it.

What, then, are the rights of the parties? The house was built with money furnished by the school board. It has been accepted by the board, and, though the contract was void, the money of the board went into the house, and the board has the house. But the court will not allow either of the parties who were parties to the transaction with the school board to make a profit out of it. And we are satisfied from the record that the money paid by the board did not go into the house at least to the amount of $2,300. Under the evidence, the circuit court should have entered a judgment enjoining the school board from paying to George Hoertz, Sr., $2,300 of the contract price, and adjudging John Hoertz and George Hoertz, Sr., to pay the cost of the action. If, on the return of the case to the circuit court, it shall appear that the whole contract price for the schoolhouse has been paid, the circuit court will enter a judgment adjudging John Hoertz and George Hoertz, Sr., to pay to the school board $2,300 with interest from the time the last payment was made.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a judgment, and further proceedings consistent herewith.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

"Not to be officially reported."

Actions by Henry Koehler and others against Emelia Louise Bierbaum and others, and against Anthony Osterholt and others. Judgment for defendants in each case, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Wehle & Wehle, for appellants. Boldrick & Gocke, for appellees.

CLAY, C. The suit by Henry Koehler, etc., lumbermen, against Emelia Louise Bierbaum, etc., was brought to enforce a mechanic's lien for $303, with interest from April 18, 1906, on a house and lot in Louisville, Ky., for lumber furnished to the building contractors, F. W. Ballman & Son, and used by the latter in constructing the house. The suit by Henry Koehler, etc., against Anthony Osterholt, etc., was brought to enforce a mechanic's lien for $472.04, with interest from April 18, 1906, on a house and lot situated on Jacob avenue in Louisville, Ky., for lumber furnished to the same contractors, F. W. Ballman & Son, and used by the latter in building a house on Osterholt's lot. The two cases were consolidated and heard together, because the lien in each case depends upon the state of accounts between plaintiffs, Henry Koehler, etc., and F. W. Ballman & Son, the contractors, and upon the application of certain payments made by the contractors. Judgment was rendered in each case for the defendants below, and the plaintiffs appeal.

It appears that the contractors, F. W. Ballman & Son, had been dealing with appellants for a number of years, and had purchased from them lumber for the construction of numerous houses. Appellants did not keep a separate account for each house, but kept a general account with the contractors. While the point is made that appellants failed to show that the lumber sold the contractors, and for which they seek a lien on the houses in question, was actually used in the construction of the two houses, we are of the opinion that the evidence of Henry Koehler and his bookkeeper, when considered in connection with the dray tickets accompanying the lumber, and the admissions of the contractors themselves, clearly shows that the lumber for which the lien is sought, in each instance was furnished the contractors and used by them in the construction of the houses. That being the case, the only question remaining to be considered is one of application of payments.

The evidence for appellants upon this point is to the effect that they kept only one account with the contractors. This account had been kept for years, and they had never had occasion to file any mechanic's lien. Whenever a payment was made, they simply credited it, as they had a right to do, upon the oldest item of the account. No directions were ever given by the contractors to apply any payments made by them upon either the house belonging to Mrs. Bierbaum or the house belonging to Anthony Osterholt. The proof shows that each of the appellees paid the contractors for the construction of the respective houses. Immediately thereafter the contractors made payments to appellants. There appear in the record two checks. One is dated October 31, 1905, drawn on the German Security Bank, payable to the order of Henry Koehler & Co., for $250, and signed by W. Ballman. In the middle of the check, under the words "Henry Koehler & Co." and above the words "Two hundred and fifty dollars" are the words "For Bierbaum house." The other check is dated December 30, 1905, drawn on the German Security Bank, payable to the order of Henry Koehler & Co., and signed by Wm. Ballman, for the sum of $400. Under the words "Henry Koehler & Co." and over the words "Four hundred dollars," and in the middle of the check, is written "For Osterholt house." It is contended that the words "For Bierbaum house" and "For Osterholt house" were not in the checks at the time they were delivered to the appellants. The testimony upon this point is not convincing either way. Neither William Ballman nor his son testified that the apparent interlineations were in the checks when they were delivered. Neither Henry Koehler nor his bookkeeper had any definite recollection of the particular checks. They state only circumstances going to show why they believed the words in question were not in the checks. The words interlined in each check were apparently written by some person other than the signer of the checks or the party who wrote the body of the checks. This is not conclusive, however, that the words were interlined after the checks were delivered. It is possible that the signer of the checks may have gotten some one to write the words in the checks before they were presented to Henry Koehler & Co. The presumption in such a case is that the words were there, and it may be doubted if the evidence for appellants is sufficient to overcome this presumption. However this may be, we are of the opinion that, aside from the checks, there is sufficient evidence of application of the payments by the contractors to each house in question. Ernest Ballman, a son of William Ballman, testified that he was at work on the Bierbaum house; that appellants sent their collector, Mr. Thornton, out to the house. He came there on Thursday or Friday, and requested the son to tell his father that he would like to have some money on the job. His father paid him on the following Saturday. He also testified that Thornton called at the Osterholt house, and asked for a payment on that job. He thereafter went down and paid the $400 check on that house. Maj. Thornton, who was collecting for Henry Koehler & Co. at the time, testified that he had called on the contractors, but that he did not ask them for payment on any particular house. He had with him just a general account, and he asked payment on the account. He did testify, however, that he used the following language: "You have got two houses going up, here one and there another one, and I think it is time for you to make a payment." Further along the witness testified: "He said he would be down on Saturday and pay and settle with Mr. Brown."

A careful reading of the whole record convinces us that there was considerable evidence tending to show that appellants, through their collector, asked for payment on each job—that is, on the Bierbaum house and the Osterholt house—that thereafter the contractors, in response to the demands made upon them, did make the payments as demanded. If appellants did ask for payments on a particular job, and the contractors thereafter made a payment in response to that demand, they had a right to expect that the money so paid should be credited upon the job upon which it was paid. Of course, the debtor has a right to direct to which of two or more demands payments made by him shall be applied. It is not necessary that this direction should be expressed in terms. It may be inferred from all the circumstances. Foote v. Miller's Adm'r, 15 Ky. Law Rep. 302; 30 Cyc. p. 1230. The evidence shows payments sufficient to cover the indebtedness on each house. The circumstances under which the payments were made are sufficient to show an intention on the part of the contractors that they be applied as the chancellor held they should be applied. Even if the evidence were such as to leave the mind in doubt, we would not disturb his finding.

The judgment in each case is affirmed.

PERKINS & MANNING CO. v. DREW & LANDRUM'S ASSIGNEE.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 23, 1909.)

1. MORTGAGES (§ 16*)—FUTURE ADVANCES—VALIDITY.

A mortgage given in fact to secure future advances, not to exceed a certain amount, is valid, and is a lien upon the mortgaged property for advances not exceeding the amount specified in the mortgage, though by mistake the consideration for the mortgage is therein stated as an indebtedness already accrued.

2. EVIDENCE (§ 419*)—FUTURE ADVANCES—CONSIDERATION—PAROL TESTIMONY.

Where a mortgage given to secure future advances indicates that it was given to secure an indebtedness for goods, wares, and merchandise, it was immaterial that the account was reduced to the form of notes, as the true consideration could be shown by parol.

3. ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS (§ 390*)—DEMURRER—ALLEGATIONS TO BE TAKEN AS TRUE.

Where the effect of the lower court's holding was to sustain a demurrer to exceptions to the assignee's report denying appellant a lien on the mortgaged property, on appeal, the allegations of the exceptions must be taken to be true.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Hopkins County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by C. M. Lisanby, as assignee of Drew & Landrum, for the benefit of their creditors, against the Perkins & Manning Company and others. From an order overruling the Perkins & Manning Company's exceptions to the assignee's report, it appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Jonson & Jennings, for appellant. Letcher R. Fox, for appellee.

CLAY, C. C. M. Drew and H. S. Landrum were engaged in the saloon business at Dawson, Ky., and on September 21, 1908, made a deed of assignment to appellee, C. M. Lisanby, by which they conveyed to him, in trust for their creditors, the property in controversy in this action and other property. The deed of assignment was lodged for record on September 21, 1908, and recorded that day. The assignee qualified, and undertook to carry out the trust. Prior to the beginning of the partnership between C. M. Drew and H. S. Landrum, the former owned the partnership property. On November 8, 1905, he executed, acknowledged, and delivered to appellant, Perkins & Manning Company, a mortgage upon the property in controversy. This mortgage was accepted by appellant and lodged for record in the office of the clerk of the Hopkins county court. The property was in Hopkins county at the time, and remained there until sold by the assignee. This action was instituted by the assignee against the creditors of the assigned estate to settle the same. Appellant duly verified its claim against said estate, and filed it with the assignee. The latter allowed appellant's claim as a general claim against the estate, but refused to allow appellant a lien on the property covered by the mortgage. Appellant then filed exceptions to the assignee's report. These exceptions were overruled by the court. To review the propriety of this ruling, this appeal is prosecuted.

The consideration expressed in the mort gage is as follows: "That whereas the party of the first part is indebted to parties of the second part for wares and merchandise delivered them as shown by the books of the party of the second part, now, therefore, to secure payment of the account, said account not to exceed $500.00, the party of the first part has this day mortgaged and sold to the party of the second part and to their assigns and successors the following property: [Here follows a description of the property in controversy.]" In its answer and counterclaim appellant set forth six notes for $25 each, all executed prior to the execution of the mortgage. It also set forth a claim for $225.35 for goods, wares, and merchandise furnished to Drew and Landrum during the year 1907, and also a note for $75, dated June 25, 1908, and due 30 days thereafter. It is charged in the answer and counterclaim, and also in the exceptions to the assignee's report, that the notes in question were executed for goods, wares, and merchandise furnished to Drew, and, after the formation of the partnership, to Drew and Landrum. It is further alleged that the mortgage was executed, not only to cover an indebtedness then due, but to secure future advances, but by mistake no provision as to future advances was stated in the mortgage.

The question whether or not a mortgage to secure future advances is valid was before this court in the case of Louisville Banking Co. v. Leonard, 90 Ky. 106, 13 S. W. 521, 11 Ky. Law Rep. 917. There the question was fully discussed and many authorities cited. The court reached the conclusion that a mortgage to secure future advances is valid to the extent of the amount named in the mortgage, although it purports on its face to be given to secure an amount advanced at the time, and that parol testimony is admissible to show the true consideration. There the consideration expressed in the mortgage was $5,000. There was nothing in the mortgage to indicate that it was to secure future indebtedness. The court held that subsequent creditors could not be prejudiced by showing by parol evidence that the mortgage was intended to cover future advances, for the reason that the mortgage gave notice that the property was in lien to the extent of $5,000. In the case at bar the mortgage gave notice that the property was in lien to the extent of $500. This is the limit of appellant's lien.

There is no merit in appellee's contention that appellant is not entitled to a lien because it proved an indebtedness in the form of notes instead of an account. The language of the mortgage itself indicates that it was given to secure an indebtedness for goods, wares, and merchandise. It is immaterial that the account was reduced to the form of notes. The mortgage was given for the purpose for which it was executed, whether the indebtedness was represented by a mere statement of account, or the account itself, or a portion of it had been merged into, and was thereafter represented by notes. Parol testimony is admissible to show the true consideration. The effect of the lower court's holding was to sustain a demurrer to the exceptions to the assignee's report denying appellant a lien on the mortgaged property. If the allegations of the exceptions are true, however—and we must take them to be true for the purposes of this discussion—appellant is entitled to a preference by reason of its mortgage. We therefore conclude that the court erred in overruling appellant's exceptions to the assignee's report.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

CLEAR SPRING DISTILLING CO. v. BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF BARDSTOWN GRADED COMMON SCHOOL DIST. et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 23, 1909.)

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 30*) — GRADED COMMON SCHOOL DISTRICT—BOUNDARIES.

Ky. St. 1909, § 4464 (Russell's St. § 5736), providing that no point on the boundary of a proposed graded common school district shall be more than $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the site of its proposed schoolhouse, etc., when considered in connection with section 4481 (section 5758), authorizing the trustees to order an election to submit the question of the issuance of bonds to provide grounds and buildings, etc., and section 4439 (section 5715) authorizing proceedings to condemn a site for a schoolhouse not exceeding one acre, requires that the $2\frac{1}{2}$ -mile boundary for a graded common school district shall be measured from the outer boundary of the site of the school building, provided the site does not exceed one acre.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. § 50; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Nelson County.
"To be officially reported."

Action by the Clear Spring Distilling Company against the Board of Trustees of Bardstown Graded Common School District and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

John D. Wickliffe, for appellant. Redford C. Cherry and John S. Kelley, for appellees.

NUNN, C. J. The county court of Nelson county recently established a graded common school district in the city of Bardstown, the boundary of which included several warehouses containing 15,000 barrels of whisky, upon both of which the trustees claim the school district is entitled to taxes. The trustees obtained 8 or 9 acres of land and erected a schoolhouse upon it, and the county court, in establishing the outside boundary line of the district $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the outer boundary of the eight or nine acres survey, included the warehouses and whisky. We copy an excerpt from the facts as agreed by the parties, which is as follows: "If a straight line is run from the northwestern portion of said school site in a northwesterly direction towards plaintiff's distillery warehouses, the line inscribed by this radius will include the whisky and warehouses in controversy; while, if such line is run from the main school building, said whisky and warehouses will be excluded from the $2\frac{1}{2}$ -mile boundary line of said district."

The only question to be determined is: From what point should the measurement begin to arrive at the outer boundary $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the school site? It is provided in section 4464, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 5736), under title of "Graded Common Schools," as follows: "No point on the boundary of any proposed graded common school district be more than two and one-half miles from the site of its proposed schoolhouse, and that the location and site of said schoolhouse in said district are set out with exactness in said petition to the county judge." Section 4481 of the Statutes (Russell's St. § 5758) provides that the trustees of graded common school districts may order an election, and submit to the voters of the district the question whether or not the trustees thereof shall issue bonds for the purpose of providing suitable grounds, school buildings, furniture, and apparatus for the proposed graded common school district. It is further provided in this section that: "Said board of trustees shall provide funds for purchasing suitable grounds and buildings, or for erecting or repairing suitable buildings, and for other expenses needful in conducting a good graded common school in their graded common school district." There is no direct and positive authority given the trustees in graded common school districts to purchase suitable grounds, etc., for the erection of school buildings, but this must necessarily be inferred from the language quoted from section 4481, and it would be unreasonable to construe the statute as confining the trustees to a site only sufficient to erect a building upon. It is our conclusion that the General Assembly never contemplated that the measurement of the $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles should begin at the building. We are also of the opinion that it did not contemplate that such measurement should begin at the outer boundary of any survey of land that the trustees might procure by purchase or gift for school purposes, for the trustees might procure 100 acres or more, and thereby enable their district to obtain an advantage for educational purposes over the surrounding districts, and it would enable them to tax persons in that district who would be unable to derive any benefit from the school by reason of the great distance therefrom. As stated, under the title of "Graded Common Schools," article 10 of the General Statutes, the General Assembly, by inference only, authorized the trustees to purchase a site for a school building, but did not authorize them to take steps in the county court to condemn land for such purposes, in case they could not agree with the owner of the land for its purchase. The General Assembly, when it enacted the sections of the statute included in article 10, and which have special reference to graded common schools, knew that it had enacted section 4439 (section 5715) under the head of "Common Schools," applying to all common schools, which includes graded common schools. By that section the trustees are authorized to condemn a site for a schoolhouse when they cannot agree with the owner on the price. It is also provided by that section that "the quantity of land thus condemned shall not in any case exceed one acre."

Our conclusion is that the General Assembly, in enacting section 4464 of the Statutes, intended that the $2\frac{1}{2}$ -mile boundary of graded common school districts should be measured from the outer boundary of the site of the school building, provided the site does not exceed one acre. It was not intended to confine the trustees of a graded common school to one acre of land if they saw proper to procure more, but meant to confine the taxing district within the above limits. This, in our opinion, is the only reasonable construction that can be given the statutes upon this subject. The following authorities, while not exactly in point, throw some light upon the subject: Trustees Paintsville School District v. Davis, 64 S. W. 438, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 838, Jackson v. Brewer, etc., 112 Ky. 554, 66 S. W. 396, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 1871, and Hundley, etc., v. Singleton, Supt., etc., 66 S. W. 279, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 2006. The agreed state of facts is insufficient to enable us to settle this case. We cannot tell whether the warehouses and whisky will be included when the measurement is made to begin at the outer boundary of an acre, considering the school building as in the center of the acre.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is reversed and remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

Error to Court of Civil Appeals of Fifth Supreme Judicial District.

Action by J. E. Jones against W. B. Honaker and others. From a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals, reforming and affirming a judgment for plaintiff (115 S. W. 649), defendants bring error. Reformed and affirmed.

Smith & Wilcox and Garnett & Hughston, for plaintiffs in error. Wm. M. Jones, for defendant in error.

GAINES, C. J. This suit was brought by defendant in error, J. E. Jones, against plaintiffs in error, J. N. Shelton, W. B. Honaker, and W. P. Herron, to recover of Shelton on three promissory notes and to enforce a lien for their payment. The first and second of the notes are each for $1,000, and are payable on the 14th day of December, 1895, and the 14th day of December, 1896, respectively, and each of which expresses that it is given for a part of the purchase money "for a livery stable and outfit with two lots of land situated in Farmersville, Collin county, * * * upon which a vendor's lien is expressly retained to secure the payment hereof." The third of the notes is dated June 10, 1903, and is for $260.75, due July 1, 1903, but contains no expression as to any lien. All the notes provide that, in case they are put in the hands of an attorney for collection, 10 per cent. attorney's fees shall be due. We have examined the opinion of the Court of Civil Appeals in connection with the application for the writ of error, and are satisfied that no error is pointed out save in one particular, which we shall now proceed to discuss.

The trial court decreed that a lien existed upon the lots of land which were originally sold by Jones to Shelton and Hill to secure the payment of the note for $260.75, for which judgment was given. The note as we have seen expresses no lien. To make it a lien, it must have been given for a part of the purchase money for which the property was originally sold. Is such the fact? We think not. Shelton himself testified that a part of the note was for rent of the shed to the barn at $45 per annum, but for how many years he does not say. Jones in his testimony is just as indefinite. There were many transactions between Shelton and Jones, and it is hardly probable that after this long lapse of time any one could tell how this $260.75 was involved, and how much, if any, was a part of the original purchase money for the livery stable outfit. Accordingly the judgment upon the two promissory notes for $1,000 each and with a decree enforcing a lien for their payment upon the property mentioned in the judgment will be permitted to stand, and a personal judgment on the $260.75 note will be rendered, but without any lien for its payment.

The judgment will be accordingly reformed and affirmed. The plaintiffs in error will recover the costs of the Court of Civil Appeals and of the Supreme Court.

CLEVINGER v. BLOUNT.

(Supreme Court of Texas. Nov. 24, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1068*)—HARMLESS ERROR—REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in trespass for cutting timber, the jury found that defendant intentionally and knowingly cut the timber, and he did not exercise the care of a prudent man to ascertain that the timber was not on plaintiff's land, the refusal to charge that plaintiff was estopped, if his agent pointed out the land from which the timber was taken as land purchased from plaintiff by defendant, was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4225-4228, 4230; Dec. Dig. § 1068.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 256*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS—NECESSITY—"PRUDENT PERSON."

A charge in trespass for cutting timber that if defendant cut the timber intentionally and willfully, and did not exercise the care a "prudent person" would have exercised, he was liable, was sufficient as against the objection that the phrase "a prudent person" in the instruction should have been qualified by the word "ordinarily," in the absence of a request for a more specific charge; for the phrase "a prudent person" in the charge meant an ordinarily prudent person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 628-641; Dec. Dig. § 256.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, p. 5770.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1082*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—QUESTIONS NOT RAISED IN APPLICATION FOR WRIT OF ERROR.

The Supreme Court will not notice objections to the instructions unless made in the application for a writ of error to review the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals affirming the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1133, 4231; Dec. Dig. § 1082.*]

4. ESTOPPEL (§ 54*)—ACTS CONSTITUTING ESTOPPEL.

Under the rule that, where a party has the means of readily ascertaining the true facts, the adverse party is not estopped when a party failed to procure a surveyor to run the lines of his lands and ascertain that the agent of the adverse party, pointing out the lines, was mistaken, the adverse party was not estopped from claiming damages for the timber cut on his land, though within the lines pointed out by his agent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 128-135; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1052*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS RULINGS ON EVIDENCE.

The error in taking interrogatories propounded to a party, and not answered by him, as confessed, is cured where the party is permitted to testify as to the matters inquired about.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4171-4177; Dec. Dig. § 1052.*]

Error to Court of Civil Appeals of Fourth Supreme Judicial District.

Action by E. A. Blount against Joe P. Clevenger. There was a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals (114 S. W. 868) affirming a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Hunt, Myer & Townes, King & Strong, and D. M. Short & Sons, for plaintiff in error. Blount & Garrison, for defendant in error.

GAINES, C. J. This action was brought by E. A. Blount against Joe P. Clevenger to recover damages for the cutting and appropriating of timber upon the land of plaintiff. The plaintiff recovered a judgment for $7,000—the value of the lumber into which the timber was manufactured. Clevenger was a sawmill owner, and bought of Blount 829 acres of land. The defense to the action was that if defendant had cut the timber upon plaintiff's land, which was denied, it was cut under a mistake of fact evidenced by the representation of John S. Doughtie, who acted as agent of the plaintiff in the sale of the land, and who, as alleged, pointed out the land upon which the timber was cut as the land that was to be sold.

The first assignment of error in the application for the writ of error was that the court erred in not instructing the jury that if Doughtie pointed out the land purchased or to be purchased, and showed the land from which the timber was taken as a part of that purchased or to be purchased, Blount would be estopped to claim any damage for the timber so cut. The court charged the jury that if they should find that defendant, Clevenger, cut the timber intentionally and wrongfully, and could have known by the use of the care which a prudent person would have exercised, in order to ascertain the fact, whether the timber belonged to him or to plaintiff, then they should return a verdict for the plaintiff for the value of the timber as manufactured into lumber by the defendant; but that, if they should find that defendant cut and appropriated the timber on the land of plaintiff, after having exercised the care of a prudent person to ascertain that the timber was not on the land of the plaintiff, then they should find for the plaintiff the value of the timber as it stood on the land. The jury found expressly for $7,000, the value of the timber as manufactured into lumber. Thus, it is seen, that the jury found that the defendant intentionally and knowingly cut the timber, and that he did not exercise the care a prudent man would have exercised, in order to ascertain that the timber cut by him was not upon the land of the plaintiff. So it appears that, if the issue of estoppel had been submitted to the jury, the verdict would necessarily have been the same.

These charges are also objected to for the reason that they say "a prudent person" without annexing the qualifying adverb "ordinarily." But we think that "a prudent person" means an "ordinarily" prudent person, and that, if defendant wanted a more specific charge, he should have asked for it. We do not notice any objection to the charges except those made in the application for the writ.

There is much complaint in the application for the writ of error that the jury were not told that, if the agent of the plaintiff pointed out the timber upon the land and made a mistake in so doing and the defendant cut the timber so pointed out, plaintiff would be estopped to claim damages for the timber so cut. But the authorities hold that, if a party has the means of readily ascertaining the true facts and fails to exercise such means, the other party will not be estopped. 16 Cyc. 738, and cases there cited; Hale v. Skinner, 117 Mass. 474; Park Ass'n v. Shartzer, 83 Md. 10, 34 Atl. 536; Perkin's Lumber Co. v. Thomas, 117 Ga. 441, 43 S. E. 692; Western Land Ass'n v. Banks, 80 Minn. 317, 83 N. W. 192; Murphy v. Clayton, 113 Cal. 153, 45 Pac. 267. The defendant, by getting a surveyor and running the lines, could easily have ascertained that the agent was mistaken in his statements, and could have ascertained the true facts, and this he failed to do. Besides, it seems that the rules of estoppel do not apply to representations as to the boundaries between estates. Liverpool Wharf v. Prescott, 7 Allen (Mass.) 494; Thayer v. Bacon, 3 Allen (Mass.) 163, 80 Am. Dec. 59; Brewer v. Boston & W. R. Co., 5 Metc. (Mass.) 478, 39 Am. Dec. 694. It is to be observed that the witness Doughtie did not admit that he had misrepresented the boundaries of the land. He testified that he showed the defendant the line about which he is claimed to have been mistaken.

It is also assigned that the court erred in permitting the interrogatories to defendant, which had been propounded to him by plaintiff and which he had not answered, to be read and taken as confessed. The interrogatories were propounded by the plaintiff, and the notary to whom they were committed issued a notice to the defendant to appear at 2 o'clock on a certain day, at his office, to take the deposition. The defendant told the notary that he would not answer the interrogatories. As to the question of answering the interrogatories, the de-defendant Clevenger and the notary both testified. The court held that the interrogatories should be taken as confessed. But counsel for the plaintiff withdrew all objection to Clevenger testifying in his own behalf, and he subsequently testified in the case upon all the points inquired about in the interrogatories. We think that, if the court erred in taking the interrogatories as confessed, the error was cured when the defendant was permitted to testify fully as to the matters inquired about, and that no prejudice was done by the court to the defendant in its ruling.

Finding no error in the proceedings which led to the judgment, it is affirmed.

MISSOURI, K. & T. RY. CO. OF TEXAS v. REYNOLDS.

(Supreme Court of Texas. Nov. 24, 1909.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 401*)—DISCOVERY OF PERSON ON TRACK—DUTY TO AVOID INJURY—INSTRUCTION.

Where those in charge of a locomotive discover a person on the track, and it becomes reasonably apparent that he will not leave the track before the engine reaches him, the law requires of them the exercise of such care to avoid injury as persons of ordinary prudence would use in such emergency proportionate to the danger, but what acts and expedients are required in a given situation is for the jury, and not for the court, except when the facts leave no room for difference of opinion; and hence in an action for injuries to a person struck by a locomotive, where it appeared that the railroad employes on the foot board of the engine gave warning cries, tried to turn the angle cock to set the brakes, and tried with partial success to push the injured person from the track, and there was a question what was the best course of conduct, and whether what was done was all that ought reasonably to have been expected of persons of ordinary prudence called upon to act in such surroundings, a charge that it was the duty of an employé operating an engine upon discovering a person on the track when it became reasonably apparent that he would not leave it before the engine reached him to use every means within his power in the exercise of ordinary care "to stop the engine" and avoid striking a person was error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 401.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 401*)—INJURY TO PERSONS ON TRACK—INSTRUCTIONS—"KNOWING."

The fact that the charge did not require that employes on the engine should have "realized" the danger, but made it suffice to raise the duty defined if they had "reasonable ground to believe and it was apparent to them" that the person was in danger, would not render it objectionable, since for practical purposes a person must be treated as knowing a fact when he has reason to believe it and when it is apparent to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 401.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, p. 3937.]

3. RAILROADS (§ 401*)—INJURY TO PERSON ON TRACK—INSTRUCTIONS.

A requested charge that if the employes on the engine did all they could to avoid injuring the person on the track, and that the means they used were such as a person of ordinary care would have used under the same or similar circumstances, defendant should recover, though the employes did not apply air on the engine nor attempt to stop it, was erroneous as unduly restricting the inquiry, since it might be true that a person of ordinary care would have used the means adopted and at the same time would also have attempted to stop the engine.

Error to Court of Civil Appeals of Fifth Supreme Judicial District.

Action by C. T. Reynolds against the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas. From a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals affirming a judgment for plaintiff (115 S. W. 340), defendant brings error. Reversed and remanded.

Coke, Miller & Coke, Jno. C. Wall, and Head, Dillard, Smith & Head, for plaintiff in error. Wolfe, Hore & Maxey, for defendant in error.

WILLIAMS, J. This writ of error is from a judgment affirmed by the Court of Civil Appeals in favor of defendant in error (plaintiff below) against plaintiff in error for damages sustained by the former from being struck by an engine of the railroad company under the following circumstances: Reynolds walked east along a street in Denison to its intersection with another street running north and south along which run several tracks of the defendant. He stopped upon one of these tracks to await the passing of a train upon another track in front of him. Just at this time, about 15 or 20 feet from plaintiff, a switch engine was backing north along the track upon which he stood, moving two to four miles an hour. Three employes rode upon a foot board at the end of the tender, and saw plaintiff as he stopped in the perilous position, and knew that he was in danger of being struck. Their testimony is to the effect that each of them at once gave warning cries to plaintiff, one of them directed another to turn the angle cock, near which the latter stood, so as to set the air brakes, which the latter at once tried to do, while the third, seeing that plaintiff did not heed their shouts, leaned forward to shove him out of the path of the engine, in which the employé so far succeeded that only one of plaintiff's legs was caught and crushed. According to this testimony the man who attempted to set the brakes could not do so sooner than they were set by the engineer—too late to prevent the injury. The plaintiff was not seen from the cab, but the engineer says he heard the halloo of one of the men on the foot board, and made a service application, and that then the fireman hallooed and he made an emergency application. The plaintiff had then been knocked down.

The plaintiff introduced testimony of experts tending to show that the engine, moving at the rate of speed stated by some of the witnesses, could have been stopped by the proper use of the air brakes in a shorter distance than that traversed by it before it struck plaintiff, and inferentially that the servants did not make proper effort to stop. This will serve to show the state of the evidence sufficiently for the purposes of the decision.

The error for which this writ was granted will appear in the following instruction given to the jury; the objectionable feature appearing also in other parts of the charge: " * * * But, on the other hand, if such employé, while so operating an engine, sees a person standing on such track and it reasonably appears that such person is not aware of the approach of the engine, and it becomes reasonably apparent that he will not leave the track before the engine reaches him, it is the duty of such employé to use every means then reasonably within his power in the exercise of ordinary care to stop such engine and avoid striking such person." In this the court determines for the jury as a matter of law that the effort of the defendant's employes must have been directed to the stopping of the engine. There is no rule of law that requires that specific thing. What the law requires is the exercise of the care to avoid injury which persons of ordinary prudence would use in such emergencies. This care must, of course, be proportioned to the danger, but what acts and expedients constitute it in a given situation is a question to be determined by the jury, and not by the court. S. A. & A. P. Ry. Co. v. Hodges, 120 S. W. 848; 2 Thompson on Neg. §§ 1734, 1738. The evidence shows that several things suggested themselves as proper to be done and that some of these were done, or attempted, by the employes to avert the collision. Was it best for the employes to do as the jury might find they did, or that they should have directed their attention more to the stopping of the engine? Was what they did in the emergency in which they thus suddenly found themselves the exercise of that kind and degree of care that men of ordinary prudence would have used in their situation? We think it quite clear that these are questions to be determined by the jury, and to be determined from the facts and circumstances as they existed and appeared at the time, and not by looking backward and inquiring merely whether or not the event proved that some other course than that pursued would have been more effectual in preventing the injury. Of course, if it be true that all was not done that could have been done to stop the engine, that fact is to be considered, but it is to be made the reason for liability only in case the jury shall find that what was done fell short of the measure of care required by the law. It is true that such a charge as that in question, applied to some states of fact, would not be subject to the objection made to this, for the reason that those facts might show that there was no other course open to those in charge of an engine but to try to stop it. Such charges have been presented in cases coming before this court and have not been regarded as objectionable, for the reason that the court always may assume that about which there is no dispute. This cannot be said in cases like this, where the question is raised by the evidence as to what was best among several courses of conduct and whether or not that which was done was all that ought reasonably to have been expected of persons of ordinary prudence called upon to act in such surroundings. Under the facts of this case, the charge not only determined a question which belonged to the jury when it assumed that the engine must have been stopped if that could have been done by the means at hand, but in thus confining the jury to that one question improperly narrowed the issue. The most complete diligence to stop an engine while under some conditions constituting all that could be expected might under others be less than the full performance of the duty to exercise the care of an ordinarily prudent person. In some situations warnings and other expedients are more effectual than any effort to stop would be. Sanches v. Railway, 88 Tex. 120, 30 S. W. 431. While we are far from any purpose to relax the requirement which the law for the preservation of life makes of those controlling agencies in the operation of which life is put in peril, we must hold that such requirement is that they exercise the care which persons of ordinary prudence would employ in situations involving such immediate danger, and that the jury are the judges as to what measures of diligence are necessary to constitute that care under given circumstances. It is only when the facts leave no question open for controversy or difference of opinion that the court may assume that a particular course of action is required.

Further objection is made to the charge because it did not require that the employes should have "realized" the danger, but made it suffice to raise the duty defined if they had "reasonable ground to believe, and it was apparent to them," that plaintiff was in danger. For practical purposes, we think a person must be treated as knowing such a fact when he has reason to believe it and when it is apparent to him. When facts are seen by those operating an engine which ought to produce the conclusion in the ordinary mind, they must act upon them. No other rule could be practically applied.

The seventh special charge requested by defendant is as follows: "If you believe from the evidence in this case that defendant's servants on its engine did all they could to make the plaintiff leave the track and to place the plaintiff into a place of safety and avoid injuring him, and that the means they used in doing this were such means as a person of ordinary care would have used under the same or similar circumstances, you will find for the defendant, although you may believe they did not apply air on the engine or attempt to stop the engine." This is open to one of the criticisms passed upon the charge of the court. It unduly restricts the inquiry in that it makes sufficient that which defendant's servants did, although they did not attempt to stop the engine, if the means they used "were such means as a person of ordinary care would have used under similar circumstances." It might be true that such a person would have used such means and at the same time be true that he would also have attempted to stop the engine. To the completeness of a charge constructed as this is, it is essential that it require that the means used by the servants constituted all that a prudent person would have done. We do not sustain the contention of plaintiff in error that the court should have directed a verdict for it.

We find nothing else needing discussion.

Reversed and remanded.

HOUSTON OIL CO. OF TEXAS et al. v. KIMBALL et al.

(Supreme Court of Texas: Dec. 1, 1900.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 242*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

One claiming under a junior deed taken while Act Dec. 20, 1836 (1 Laws 1836, p. 156, § 40; Hart. Dig. art. 2757), providing that no deed shall take effect as to the rights of third parties until it has been presented to the court as required by the act for the recording of land titles was in force, held title until those claiming under a prior unrecorded deed proved notice to the subsequent grantee, or want of a valuable consideration; the burden not being on the claimant under the junior deed to prove that the junior grantee was an innocent purchaser for value without notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 603-605; Dec. Dig. § 242.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 84*)—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE—SECONDARY EVIDENCE—FAILURE TO OBJECT.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 2312, provides that every writing which has been duly recorded after being proven or acknowledged as provided shall be admitted as evidence without proving its execution; provided the party offering it files it at least three days before the commencement of trial and with notice to the opposite party, unless the latter files an affidavit of forgery. The act also provides that whenever any party shall file an affidavit stating that a recorded instrument has been lost, or that the original cannot be procured, a certified copy thereof may be admitted in evidence. When a certified copy of a deed was offered in evidence in trespass to try title, defendant objected to its admission on the ground that it did not sufficiently identify the land conveyed, and offered in evidence an original grant to another in the same colony in which the land conveyed was situated, and of the same date of the survey of the parties' remote grantor and issued by the same commissioner, but did not call the court's attention to an affidavit of forgery of the deed to plaintiff's grantor, or object to the admission of the copy for want of proof of execution, or of the loss of the original deed, or object that the copy had not been filed for three days before trial with notice to them. Held, that the certified copy was properly admitted, and was prima facie evidence of the execution of the deed by the grantor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 211-222; Dec. Dig. § 84.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 105*)—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE—FAILURE TO OBJECT TO COPY—EFFECT.

Defendant could disprove the execution of the deed under which plaintiffs claimed in trespass to try title, so as to overcome the prima facie case made by the introduction of a certified copy, though he did not object to the copy for want of proof of the execution of the original.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 265; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

4. DEEDS (§ 207*)—EVIDENCE—FORGERY—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

Forgery of a deed may be proved by circumstantial evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 615; Dec. Dig. § 207.*]

5. DEEDS (§ 53*)—FORGERY—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Evidence held not to justify a finding that a deed, through which plaintiff claimed in trespass to try title, was a forgery, so that a requested charge submitting the issue of forgery was properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

6. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 230*)—DEEDS—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—NOTICE—RECITALS—EFFECT.

A provision in a deed binding the grantor, his heirs, executors, etc., to return the purchase money if it should appear of record in Texas that the described land was incumbered, was not evidence that the grantee had knowledge of a conveyance of the land by his grantor to a third person prior to the deed to himself; such senior conveyance being then on record, much less to show that he suspected that the deed to him was a forgery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 508; Dec. Dig. § 230.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 672*)—REVIEW—ERROR "APPARENT" ON FACE OF RECORD.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 1014, providing that in all cases of appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals the trial shall be on an error in law, either assigned or apparent on the face of the record, means by "apparent on the face of the record," fundamental error which can be readily seen to go to the foundation of the action without looking into the record and considering the evidence, etc., to determine whether there is error; "apparent" meaning clear or manifest to the understanding, plain, evident, obvious.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2867; Dec. Dig. § 672.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 719*)—ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS—EFFECT OF FAILURE TO ASSIGN.

Errors not apparent on the face of the record and not assigned in the trial court for presentation to the Court of Civil Appeals, as required, cannot be considered by the Supreme Court.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1068*)—HARMLESS ERROR—FAILURE TO INSTRUCT.

Where the court assumed that defendants' title was sufficient to sustain the three-year limitations and charged the statute, and the jury found that they had not held possession for three years, defendants were not injured by failure to charge the five and ten year limitations, since the character of possession necessary was the same under either statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4223-4227; Dec. Dig. § 1068.*]

10. TRIAL (§ 252*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in trespass to try title, there was no evidence to show that the tenants of defendants' grantor held possession of the land for three years, there was no error in not submitting the question of possession of such tenants in a charge upon the three-year limitations as to such grantor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 600; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

11. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 44*)—SUFFICIENCY OF POSSESSION—CONTINUITY.

Even if a tenant agreed to hold possession of a league of land for one claiming title thereto, there was no title by limitations through such tenant, where the evidence did not show continued possession of the tenant or of persons claiming under him, acknowledging the title of the claimant, and exercising the right of possession of the entire league.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 226-231; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

12. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 96*)—EXTENT OF POSSESSION—PROPERTY IN ACTUAL POSSESSION.

In order to establish title by limitations to a league of land by the possession of tenants, there must be possession by the tenant or those claiming under him of the entire league in the name of the claimant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 533-536; Dec. Dig. § 96.*]

13. DEEDS (§ 40*) — DESCRIPTION — SUFFICIENCY.

A deed conveyed all of a tract, containing 4,428 acres, commencing at a post on the west bank of the Neches, thence west, 10,000 yards, thence north, 2,500 yards, thence east, 10,500 yards, thence down said river, to commencement, 11 labors arable and 14 labors pasture land, it being the league granted by the commissioner named of a certain colony on a certain date, and referred to the original plat and field notes on file in the General Land Office for a more particular description. The field notes in the grant corresponded with the description in the deed, except the word "varas" was used instead of "yards," and the grant particularly described the northeast corner of the survey by calling for bearing trees marked so that they could be identified, and a certified copy of the original English field notes corresponded with the description given in the grant and deed, except that it described the corners with more particularity. Held, that the original grant and English field notes, to which reference was made in the deed, sufficiently described the land conveyed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 81-83; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

14. DEEDS (§ 40*)—DESCRIPTION—SUFFICIENCY—REFERENCE TO OTHER INSTRUMENT.

The description of the land conveyed by a deed which referred to the grant and field notes for a more particular description was sufficient, if the description in the instruments referred to sufficiently described the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 81-83; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

15. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 104*)—PRESUMPTION OF GRANT—REBUTTAL OF PRESUMPTION.

In trespass to try title, where defendants claimed that another by long silence and non-action as to his title to the land in controversy had abandoned claim thereto, and relied on that fact to raise a presumption of a transfer of his right to one under whom defendants claimed, testimony of such other's children as to declarations by him as to his ownership of the land was admissible to show that he had not abandoned his claim thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. § 602; Dec. Dig. § 104.*]

16. NEW TRIAL (§ 102*)—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—DILIGENCE.

There was not sufficient diligence to entitle defendants to a new trial where the judgment was entered September 24th and the court adjourned October 25th, and on October 24th defendants filed their motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence consisting of an affidavit, which was made by the witness on October 8th, as plaintiffs did not have sufficient time after the filing of the affidavit to contest it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 210, 212; Dec. Dig. § 102.*]

17. DEEDS (§ 199*)—EXECUTION—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In trespass to try title, in which defendants claimed that the deed to plaintiff's remote grantor was forged, but the evidence did not justify a finding of forgery, evidence that such grantor was reputed to be a forger of land titles was not admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 595, 596; Dec. Dig. § 199.*]

18. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 233*)—INNOCENT PURCHASERS—APPLICATION OF DOCTRINE—UNRECORDED DEED.

Under the law of 1837, a conveyance of the same land made after a prior conveyance to another by an unrecorded deed vested in the subsequent grantee the legal title with an equity in the prior grantee to show a superior title by proving notice to the subsequent grantee, or want of a valuable consideration and, since the latter need not record his deed to give notice to the prior grantee, and the prior grantee or his vendees were not bound to examine the record for subsequent conveyances, the doctrine of innocent purchasers would not apply.

19. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 231*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—SEARCHING RECORD.

A purchaser need only examine the record for conveyances made prior to his purchase by his immediate or remote vendor.

20. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 220*)—INNOCENT PURCHASERS—PROTECTION OF PERSON CLAIMING UNDER INVALID DEED.

Under the law of 1837, a deed which passed no title had no effect so that, if a description in a subsequent deed to the same land was insufficient to pass title, title would remain in the prior grantee under an unrecorded deed.

21. TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE (§ 40*)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—DEEDS—RECITALS.

In trespass to try title, in which both parties claimed through deeds from N., a certified copy of the deed from N.'s grantee, through whom plaintiffs claimed, to another, was not inadmissible because it referred to a prior grant for a fuller description and recited that it was acquired by the grantor by deed from N., which deed was also therewith delivered duly recorded; the recital being merely descriptive of the land sold.

22. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 843*)—QUESTIONS CONSIDERED—QUESTIONS UNNECESSARY TO DECISION—EFFECT OF CURATIVE ACT.

Whether a foreign acknowledgment of a deed was defective need not be determined on appeal, where any defect in the acknowledgment was cured by a subsequent statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3331; Dec. Dig. § 843.*]

23. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 47*)—DEFECTS—CURATIVE ACTS.

The act of 1871 (Laws 1871, p. 77, c. 76), permitting acknowledgment of every instrument for record, when acknowledged within the United States, to be taken before some judge or clerk of a court of record having a seal, was in force when Act April 27, 1874 (Laws 1874, p. 152, c. 105), was enacted, which provided that every deed required to be registered, which shall have been heretofore acknowledged in the manner required by law, within the United States, before any officer now authorized by law to take such acknowledgments, and which shall have been duly certified by such officer, shall be held to be acknowledged with the full consequences of existing laws. Held, that since a judge of the Supreme Court of Louisiana could have legally taken an acknowledgment of a deed when the act of 1874 was passed, any defect in the acknowledgment of a deed, acknowledged before a judge of such court a number of years before that date, because the statute of the republic of Texas then in force required foreign acknowledgments to be taken before consular agents, etc., was cured by the act of 1874, and hence a copy of such deed was admissible in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 235-240; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

24. EVIDENCE (§ 84*)—FOREIGN COURTS—PRESUMPTIONS.

From the known powers of appellate courts and pursuant to statute, the Supreme Court will presume that the Supreme Court of Louisiana is a court of record, and hence has a seal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 106; Dec. Dig. § 84.*]

25. COURTS (§ 48*)—COURTS OF RECORD—SEAL.

While a seal is not necessary to a court of record, the term "court of record" implies that it has a seal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 173; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

26. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 47*)—CURATIVE ACTS—RETROACTIVE EFFECT—AFFECTING RULES OF EVIDENCE.

Act April 27, 1874 (Laws 1874, p. 152, c. 105), provides that every deed required to be registered, which shall have been heretofore acknowledged in the manner required by law, within the United States, before any officers now authorized to take such acknowledgments, and which shall have been duly certified by such officers, shall be held to be duly acknowledged with the full consequences of existing laws, provided that the act shall not affect any right acquired prior to its passage. Held, that the act only affected rules of evidence, and gave no greater effect to a deed, the defective acknowledgment of which it cured, than it had under the law existing when it was executed.

Error to Court of Civil Appeals of Fourth Supreme Judicial District.

Action by Walter E. Kimball and others against the Houston Oil Company of Texas and others. A judgment in favor of plaintiffs was affirmed by the Court of Civil Appeals (114 S. W. 662), and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Lanier & Martin, Talliaferro & Nalle, and Denman, Franklin & McGown, for plaintiffs in error. Pressley K. Ewing, J. D. Martin, E. E. Easterling, S. M. Johnson, and W. D. Gordon, for defendants in error.

BROWN, J. Walter E. Kimball and others instituted this suit in the district court of Hardin county against the Houston Oil Company of Texas and others to recover a league of land granted by the government of Coahuila and Texas to O. C. Nelson, and located in said county. The plaintiffs' petition contained the usual allegations of trespass to try title, which was answered by the defendants by a plea of not guilty, and the statutes of limitation of three, five, and ten years, to which plaintiffs replied by a general denial and disability of some of the plaintiffs.

Briefly stated, the following are the principal facts of this case: O. C. Nelson, from whom both parties claimed, owned the land in controversy, and by a deed duly executed on the 28th day of November, 1837, conveyed the entire tract to David Brown, which deed was not recorded until the 16th day of March, 1842. On the 13th day of March, 1838, O. C. Nelson executed and delivered to Isom Farmer a deed conveying to him the same tract of land. This deed was recorded in the proper county on the 23d day of February, 1842. Payment of the consideration was acknowledged in each of said deeds. Plaintiffs in the court below had a consecutive chain of transfers from Isom Farmer to their father, and defendants had such transfers from David Brown down to the Houston Oil Company of Texas. The foregoing statement presents the case in its general outline; and such other facts as may be relevant to questions raised by assignments of error will be discussed and stated in connection therewith.

Plaintiffs in error request that this court again consider the point decided on certified question, now contending, as before, that the burden was upon the plaintiffs to prove that Farmer paid a valuable consideration to Nelson, and did not have notice of the deed from Nelson to Brown. We are of opinion that the decision of this court in Kimball v.

Houston Oil Company, 100 Tex. 336, 99 S. W. 852, is a correct interpretation of article 2757 (Hartley's Digest), being an act of 1836 (Laws 1836, p. 156, § 40) which was in force when the deeds from Nelson to Brown and from Nelson to Parmer were made. The first deed being unrecorded when the second was executed, the deed to Parmer conveyed the title unless those who claimed under the deed to Brown should prove that Parmer had notice of the deed to Brown when he bought, or that he did not pay a valuable consideration for the land.

The first assignment of error presented by the application reads as follows: "The court erred in refusing to give to the jury special charge No. 1 requested by the defendants, which is as follows: 'Should you believe from the evidence herein that the deed from O. C. Nelson to Isom Parmer introduced in evidence herein was not executed and delivered by said O. C. Nelson, but that the said deed was a forgery, then you will find for the defendants herein.'" Under that assignment, the plaintiffs in error present this proposition: "Whether the deed referred to in the above-requested charge was a forgery, was an issue made by the pleadings in the case, and there was evidence tending to establish said issue, and it was error to refuse the requested instruction." There appears in the record an affidavit by Alvan Jones, in which he makes the statutory oath of a belief that the deed from O. C. Nelson to Isom Parmer was a forgery. When the certified copy of that deed was offered in evidence, defendants below made these objections to its admissibility: "We object to this instrument because it does not describe the land sued for in this suit, nor any other land; that the deed is ambiguous, and has no calls in it by which the land can be identified on the ground; that it conveys no land in any manner on account of its uncertainty of description, and does not mention this league of land, nor does it say in what county or state the land is located, nor does it refer to any other data by which it can be identified; that there are no allegations in the petition by which the patent and latent ambiguities can be explained." Defendants also offered to prove by expert surveyors that they could not from the field notes in the deed identify the land on the ground, and, in connection with their objection, they offered an original grant to James Rafferty for 4,428 acres as a colonist in the same colony on the Neches river, and bearing date the same as the O. C. Nelson survey, and issued by the same commissioner. The defendants did not call the affidavit of forgery to the attention of the court, nor did they object to the admissibility of the copy of the deed for want of proof of the execution of the original. Neither did they object to the admissibility of the certified copy because the loss of the original had not been proved nor its absence accounted for. Neither did they make the objection that the certified copy had not been filed among the papers for three days prior to the commencement of the trial and notice thereof given to the opposite party. Under this condition of the record, we hold that the certified copy was properly admitted, and was prima facie evidence before the jury of the execution by O. C. Nelson of the deed to Parmer. Article 2312, Rev. St. 1895; Hancock v. Tram Lumber Co., 65 Tex. 225. It is true that, notwithstanding the failure to make the objections stated, the defendants had the right to disprove the fact of execution of the deed, and thus overthrow the prima facie case of the plaintiffs.

If there was before the jury evidence sufficient to justify a finding that the deed from Nelson to Parmer for the land in controversy was a forgery, the refusal of the court to give the charge was error, and the judgment should be reversed. The plaintiffs in error do not point out any specific evidence which tends to prove the forgery of the deed, but rely upon circumstances as tending to establish that fact. It is undoubtedly true that forgery might be proved by circumstances, if sufficient to satisfy the mind of the jury of that fact, but the only circumstances called to the attention of the court on the subject are that Parmer and those who claim under him have not claimed the land openly for a great number of years, and that Parmer had in making his sale to Barnes introduced a warranty which the plaintiffs claimed furnishes sufficient ground of suspicion to justify a finding by the jury that the deed was not executed by Nelson. The facts shown by the record are that Parmer's deed was made in 1838, and was placed upon the records of Menard county in 1842, before the deed from Nelson to Brown was recorded. In 1845 Parmer sold the land to one Barnes in the city of New Orleans, La., and conveyed it to him by deed which contained the usual clause of general warranty, and, in addition thereto, the following: "And I do moreover bind myself, my heirs, executors, and administrators to return the purchase money if it shall of record in the said republic of Texas appear that the above-described land is in any way incumbered to the prejudice of this sale." It cannot be urged with any consistency that the length of time which transpired between the conveyance to Parmer and the time of his selling the land constituted such nonclaim as would justify any presumption against the validity of his title. It is, however, pressed upon the court that the clause above copied, which was inserted in the deed, manifests a distrust of his title on the part of Parmer, and therefore is a circumstance which would justify a jury in concluding that the instrument was probably a forgery. At the time that Parmer made the deed to Barnes, the deed from O. C. Nelson to Brown had been put upon the record, and, if he knew that fact and desired to sell the land because the title was bad, he would not probably have given the additional warranty that the record did not show any adverse claim, whereby his vendee would have the right to an immediate return of the purchase money without waiting for an eviction. He gave a general warranty such as a vendor selling in good faith would have given, and, in addition, that copied above which tends to show that he did not know of the prior conveyance to Brown. We are not able to see in this clause any evidence of a distrust on the part of Parmer of the title that he was conveying, much less does it tend to prove that Parmer knew that the deed to him was a forgery, and was therefore endeavoring to part with his title.

The long continued nonclaim on the part of Barnes and Kimball is urged, also, as circumstances from which the fact of forgery might be presumed, but we deem it unnecessary to argue that proposition, for surely counsel would not contend that the action or nonaction of persons who had no part in the execution of the instrument could be taken as evidence of the fact that Parmer had committed a forgery in securing the deed from Nelson. We are of opinion that there was no evidence before the jury which would justify the court in giving the charge requested.

The plaintiffs in error filed in the Court of Civil Appeals an additional assignment of error, as follows: "The trial court erred in its charge to the jury in instructing them to find for the plaintiffs for the land described in their petition, unless they should find for the defendants upon the defense of three years' limitation, which said error of the trial court is hereby charged and assigned as being an error in law apparent on the face of the record, for which they respectfully ask a reversal of the judgment below and the remanding of the cause for a new trial." Under this assignment of error is also presented a number of propositions which are denominated "assignments," but which depend upon the assignment, and are used to point out the supposed error of the court in giving the charge complained of. Article 1014, Rev. St. 1895, contains this provision: "In all cases of appeal or writ of error to the Court of Civil Appeals the trial shall be on statements of facts, * * * or on an error in law, either assigned or apparent on the face of the record." Does the assignment here presented come within the terms of the statute; that is, is it apparent upon the face of the record? Webster defines the word "apparent" thus: "Clear or manifest to the understanding; plain; evident; obvious; appearing to the eye or mind." This does not mean that an error which can be ascertained by looking into the record and considering the evidence may be considered without an assignment, for that would include every error which can be considered at all. Nothing can be considered as an error which cannot be made apparent by an examination of the record. Therefore the language of the statute must be given that construction which will make it consistent with its requirements in other respects. The language, "apparent upon the face of the record," indicates that it is to be seen upon looking at the face of the record (that is, the assignment itself), the fact pointed out by it must show a good and sufficient ground for the court to interfere to prevent injustice being done to one of the parties. Perhaps the best expression is that it must be a fundamental error, such error as being readily seen lies at the base and foundation of the proceeding and affects the judgment necessarily. Wilson v. Johnson, 94 Tex. 272, 60 S. W. 242; Searcy v. Grant, 90 Tex. 97, 37 S. W. 320; Fuqua v. Brewing Co., 90 Tex. 298, 38 S. W. 29, 750, 35 L. R. A. 241; Harris v. Petty, 68 Tex. 514, 1 S. W. 525. This view of this assignment is supported by the course of the plaintiffs in error. If we take the first assignment in its terms, there is not apparent upon the face of that record any one of the things pointed out in the propositions under it. By an examination of the record it might be found that the facts existed as claimed in the propositions, but they are not manifest and not evident, not obvious, without an examination and weighing of the evidence to determine whether or not the assignment is well taken. We are of opinion that the assignments which were made in the Court of Civil Appeals and presented here in the application cannot be considered, because they do not come within the meaning of the statute that we have quoted above, and were not assigned in the district court for presentation to the Court of Civil Appeals as required by law.

Defendants in the court below pleaded the statutes of limitation of three, five, and ten years. The trial judge gave to the jury the following instruction: "If you believe from the evidence that the trustees of the Texas Pine Land Association, by their agents or employees, had peaceable and adverse possession of the league in question for three years before the institution of this suit (which was on the 19th day of October, 1901), then find for the defendants." The effect of that charge was to withdraw from the consideration of the jury the issues of five and ten years' limitation; and it confined the issue to the possession by the Texas Pine Land Association, its agents, etc., and excluded the claim that tenants had so occupied the land. The charges also excluded from the consideration of the jury the issue made by the pleading that persons under whom the Pine Land Association claimed had held the land in peaceable possession sufficient time to give title under the statutes of limitation. The charge assumed that the title of the association was sufficient to sustain the plea of three years' limitation; therefore, the plea of five and ten years' limitation became immaterial in the trial because the character of the possession which would bar the recovery was the same under either plea, the difference in that respect being in the length of time for which the possession must be held. If, therefore, the defendants had not held the possession for three years, as was found by the jury, they could not have maintained limitation under either the five or the ten years' statute, and no injury resulted from the failure to submit those issues.

It is contended that the court erred in restricting the possession of the Pine Land Association to its agents or employes, which excluded the possession of tenants who might have held under it. We find no evidence that any tenant who held directly under the Pine Land Association, and who claimed to have possession of the entire league, was in possession for three years before the institution of this suit. There was neither pleadings nor evidence upon which a finding for the particular tracts occupied by the tenants could have been sustained; therefore, there was no error in that respect as to the tenants holding directly under the Pine Land Association. If there was evidence before the jury upon which they could have found that any one or more of the vendors, immediate or remote, of the land association had held possession by one or more tenants of the league of land in such manner as to comply with the statutes of limitation, then the charge would be erroneous, and would require a reversal of this judgment. The evidence shows that Copley, who represented J. P. and E. A. Irvin, who severally and at different times owned the title to the league under which the defendants claim, went upon the land in about 1883, and found on the league three squatters, each of whom had a portion of the land in cultivation with improvements thereon. Two of them, Lewis and Hester, each entered into a written contract of lease, whereby each agreed to hold possession of the entire league of land for one of the Irvins, who was then claiming title, in consideration of the use of the land that each had under cultivation, the houses, etc. It appears from the evidence that Lewis had acquired possession of the portion that he was on from a man named Bush, and that afterwards, by some arrangements, the premises were restored to Bush. This is not explained by the evidence, but the proof does not establish that Bush undertook to take the place of Lewis as the tenant of the Irvins. But, if we grant that such was the fact, the evidence fails to show the continued possession of persons claiming under the said Lewis and Bush, acknowledging the title of the Irvins, and claiming and exercising the right of possession of the entire league in the name of the owner of the Brown title. Failing in this particular, the evidence was not sufficient to sustain limitation by the possession and tenancy of Lewis.

Hester was occupying a small portion of the land and the improvements thereon when the lease was executed and continued to do so up to his death, which was within a year of the date of the lease. A short time after his death, his wife and son sold the improvements to S. A. J. Haire, who did not in any way assume the tenancy contract of Hester. The proof shows that Haire and his son together did occupy the part of the land and improvements which had been in cultivation and which had been occupied by Hester, but there was no evidence that they asserted any right of possession either for themselves or for the owner of the land to any other portion of the league. No doubt it is true that Haire could not have disputed the title in the Irvins to the portion of the land which he received possession of from Hester, but this does not establish the possession by Haire, nor by his son, or those who were claiming under them, of the entire league of land in the name of the owners thereof, which is a necessary element in order to sustain the plea of limitation to the whole league. The court did not err in the charge complained of.

The plaintiffs in error present in different forms the proposition that the deed from O. C. Nelson to Isom Farmer is void because it does not sufficiently describe the land sought to be conveyed. This objection was urged when the copy of the deed was offered in evidence, and is raised also by a number of assignments of error based upon charges asked by the plaintiffs in error, which were refused by the court. The description contained in the deed reads as follows: "I, O. C. Nelson, of the county of Jasper and Republic aforesaid, * * * have granted, bargained, sold, aliened, and conveyed, and by these presents do grant, bargain, sell, alien and confirm in bona fide sale all that of land containing four thousand, four hundred and twenty-eight acres of land, commencing at post on the W. bank of Neches. Thence W. 10,000 yds. Thence N. 2,500 yds. Thence E. 10,500 yds. Thence down said river to commencement, 11 labors arable, and 14 labors pasture land, it being the league of land granted by George A. Nixon, Commissioner of Zavalla Colony on the 18th day of August, 1835, and for a more particular description reference is here made to the original plat and field notes on file and of record in the General Land Office of this Republic." Both parties introduced the original grant, dated August 18, 1835, made by George Antonio Nixon, commissioner of the colony of Enterprise, of Lorenzo D. Zavalla to O. C. Nelson. The field notes in this grant correspond with the field notes in the deed as above given, except that in the grant the word "varas" is used to express the measurement instead of "yards," as it is in the deed, which is an evident mistake, and in the grant, "at the S. E. corner of a survey on the west side of the Neches river, which is the N. E. of this survey, from which an ash 18 inches in diameter is to the north seventy degrees west at the distance of 18 varas, and a white oak of ten inches in diameter is to the north forty-five degrees at the distance of seven and four-tenths varas." It will be seen that the only difference in the description of the deed and of the original grant is that the grant to which reference is made by the deed makes it more definite by describing particularly the northeast corner of the survey by calling for bearing trees that are marked so that they can be identified. A certified copy of the original English field notes in the General Land Office was also introduced by both parties, and correspond with the description in the deed and in the grant, except that the field notes describe the corners with more accuracy and detail than was done either in the deed or the grant. The field notes and the grant, being referred to in the deed for a more particular description of the land, render the description in the deed valid, if the description in the papers referred to is sufficient to describe the land. The sufficiency of the original grant and the English field notes has not been questioned by the plaintiffs in error, nor, indeed, could it be. They are sufficiently certain; that is, they furnish the data from which the land could be identified upon the ground. This question has been presented, as before stated, in a number of forms and by objections and special charges asked, etc., but this will be a sufficient answer to all of those objections upon every point, except the question as to whether the record of that deed was sufficient to put a subsequent purchaser upon notice. We reserve this for examination and discussion hereafter.

The plaintiffs in error complain of the action of the court in admitting the testimony of Alice Puig and Timothy Kimball, each of whom testified to having heard their father speak of owning lands in Texas, and each testified to the finding of a certain memorandum in a trunk of the father after his death which related to the lands in Texas and to the O. C. Nelson Mexican grant, which memorandum was forwarded to their brother in Denison, Tex., and introduced in evidence on the trial of this cause. The defendants in the trial court were claiming that Kimball by his long silence and nonaction with regard to his title had abandoned all claim to the land, and sought to use the fact as the basis upon which to rest a presumption of a transfer of his right to persons under whom the defendants claim. Upon this issue, the evidence of Kimball's declarations with regard to his ownership of land in Texas was admissible to show that he had not abandoned his claim thereto. The judgment of the trial court was entered on the 24th day of September, 1907, and the court adjourned on October 25, 1907. On the 24th day of that month (October) the defendants filed an amended motion for a new trial, in which, as a ground for granting the motion, they set up as newly discovered the evidence of a witness A. J. D. Sapp, whose affidavit was filed, in which he stated, in substance, that he was 87 years old; that he was acquainted with Isom Parmer in 1839, 1840, and for a number of years afterwards, and that Isom Parmer had the reputation of being a forger of land titles and dealer in fraudulent land titles, and stated that at the date of the affidavit the witness resided in Jasper county some distance from the place of trial; that he was requested to attend the trial at Koonz, but, on account of the distance he lived from the post office, the letter did not reach him in time for him to attend the trial.

The affidavit of W. G. Tallaferra was attached to the motion, who swore that the defendants did not know of the testimony of Sapp as to the reputation of Isom Parmer as a forger of land titles, nor as to his financial condition in 1839 until after the trial of the case. He also stated that the records of Menard county show that on the same day the deed from Nelson to Isom Parmer was recorded there were also recorded about a dozen other deeds from original grantees of land to the said Parmer for large tracts of land in Menard county, reciting cash consideration from $800 to $2,000. The application for a new trial does not show sufficient diligence to entitle the parties to a rehearing. The affidavit of Sapp was made on the 8th day of October, 1907, but the amended motion was not filed until the 24th day of that month. The affidavit was filed so late that it did not afford time for the plaintiffs in the case to contest the truth of the same or to meet it in any way. Railway Co. v. Scarbrough (Sup.) 108 S. W. 805. In the case cited this court said: "Now, let us suppose that the amended motion for a new trial had been filed but a short time before the court adjourned, and before it would have adjourned by operation of law; would not the court have been justified in overruling it, because it afforded the counsel for the other side no opportunity to meet it? We think that an affirmative answer should be given to the question. There is nothing in the order overruling the motion to show upon what ground the court acted. Now, all presumptions must be indulged in favor of the court's ruling. We think, therefore, we should presume that the court overruled the motion because it was filed too late. We think a party should not only be diligent in discovering testimony, but also diligent in making use of it when discovered." Besides, we are of opinion that the evidence as to the reputation of Parmer would have been inadmissible if the witness had been present at the trial.

Defendants offered evidence to prove the reputation of George F. Moore, but, whether it was good or bad, the evidence was irrelevant to any issue before the jury, and was properly excluded.

Plaintiffs in error sought, by special charges, to have the court submit to the jury the issue that the Houston Oil Company was a purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice of the title derived through the Parmer deed, which charges were refused. To test the correctness of the ruling, we will assume that the Houston Oil Company had no actual notice of the deed made by Nelson to Parmer, and that it paid a valuable consideration for the land. Let us suppose that the Parmer deed had not been placed upon record at any time. Under the law of 1837, the fact that the deed to Brown was not on record when the deed to Parmer was executed gave to the latter deed the effect of vesting the legal title in the land in Parmer, with the equity in Brown to show a superior right by proving that Parmer had notice of the prior conveyance or that he did not pay a valuable consideration for it. If Parmer had failed entirely to record his deed, it would not have affected the title of Brown or of any one holding under him. No duty rested upon Parmer to record his deed as notice to the prior purchaser, Brown, nor to his vendees. Neither was it the duty of Brown nor any person purchasing from him to examine the records to see whether Nelson had conveyed the land subsequently to his deed to Brown. A purchaser is required to look only for conveyances made prior to his purchase by his immediate vendor, or by any remote vendor through whom he derives his title. White v. McGregor, 92 Tex. 558, 50 S. W. 564, 71 Am. St. Rep. 875. In that case the court said: "Do the words mean all persons who purchase the land after the deed is recorded, or only those who are subsequent in the chain of title? If a grantor conveys the same property twice and the second grantee puts his deed upon record, is it notice to one who subsequently purchases from the first grantee? We think not. The record is not notice to the first grantee, for he is a prior purchaser. Nor do we think it was intended to be notice to any one who should purchase from him. In other words, we think the subsequent purchasers who are meant are only those the origin of whose title is subsequent to the title of the grantee in the recorded deed. * * * The object of all the registry acts, however expressed, is the same. They were intended to affect with notice such persons only as have reason to apprehend some transfer or incumbrance prior to their own, because none arising afterwards can, in its own nature, affect them. And, after they have once, on a search instituted upon this principle, secured themselves against the imputation of notice, it follows that every one coming into their place by title derived from them may insist on the same principle in respect to himself. It is a general rule that, when once a man has granted away his right, anything which he can do or say shall never be received to affect another claiming under him." "There being no duty resting upon Parmer to record his deed to give notice to Brown, or his vendees, nor upon Brown, or his vendees, to examine the record for the subsequent conveyance by Nelson to Parmer or his vendees, the doctrine of innocent purchaser has no application in this case. If the description of the land in the deed to Parmer were insufficient to pass the title to him, then the superior title would have remained in Brown, because a deed which passed no title could not have any effect under the law of 1837. We conclude that it is not a question of notice, but a question of title that is involved, and, as we have said before, the description in the deed from Nelson to Parmer was sufficient to convey the title, because it gave data from which the land could be identified, and the superior title having passed out of Nelson to Parmer, those persons who claim under the deed made by Nelson to Brown "stand in the shoes of the latter." The facts of this case did not call for nor justify the submission to the jury of the issue of innocent purchaser, and the court did not err in refusing to give the special charges requested by the plaintiffs in error.

The defendants in the court below objected to the introduction of a certified copy from the records of Hardin county of the deed from Isom Parmer to Jose Barnes, whereby the land in controversy was conveyed to the latter: (1) Because "the law in force at the time of the execution of this deed provided that all foreign acknowledgments, when taken before a judge of a court of record, should be certified to by one of two officers, either a resident minister, or a consul of the Republic of Texas." It was objected that the consular agent was not authorized by the statute to make the certificate of the official character of a judge who took the acknowledgment. (2) The defendants objected to this recital contained in the said copy: "And in which grant said land is more fully described and was acquired by me by deed from O. C. Nelson March 13, 1838, which is also herewith delivered duly recorded." The last objection could not be sustained, for the recital was merely descriptive of the land sold, furnishing data by which it could be identified. It is not necessary for us to determine whether the consular agent had authority to make the certificate of official character or not, because, if it should be held that he had no such authority, the defect was cured by subsequent legislation. We do not intimate that the consular agent had no such authority, but simply decline to discuss the question because it is immaterial in the present case. In 1871 the Legislature enacted a statute (Laws 1871, p. 77, c. 76) upon the subject of registration of instruments of this character, designating the officers before whom the acknowledgment or proof of the execution of such instruments might be made, from which we copy as follows: "Proof or acknowledgment of every instrument of writing for record may be taken before some one of the following officers: * * * When acknowledged or proven without the state, and within the United States or their territories, before some notary public, commissioner of deeds for this state, or before some judge or clerk of a court of record having a seal." 2 Paschal's Dig. art. 7418. On the 27th day of April, 1874, the law as above quoted was in effect in this state, when the Legislature enacted another statute from which we quote as follows: "Every grant, deed, mortgage, power of attorney, or other instrument of writing for the conveyance of real or personal estate, required or permitted by law to be registered, that shall have been heretofore acknowledged or proven in the manner prescribed by law, without the state and within the United States and their territories, before any one of the officers in such cases now authorized by law to take such acknowledgments or proofs, and which shall have been duly certified by such officer, shall be held to be duly acknowledged or proven with the full effects and consequences of existing laws; and any such instrument, which shall have been so acknowledged or proven before either of such officers, and which shall have been heretofore registered, shall be held to be duly registered with like full effects and consequences of existing laws: Provided, however, that this act shall not be so construed as to give it any retroactive operation, or to affect any right acquired prior to its passage." From the known jurisdiction and powers of courts of last resort and in conformity to the laws of this state, we presume that the Supreme Court of the state of Louisiana is a court of record, and, being a court of record, that it has a seal, because it is so uniformly the case that courts of record have seals as to raise a presumption to that effect. A seal is not necessary to a court of record, but to use the term "court of record" implies that it has a seal. Ingoldsbey v. Juan, 12 Cal. 580; 11 Cyc. 658; Blethen v. Bonner, 98 Tex. 141, 53 S. W. 1016. In the first case above cited the Supreme Court of California said: "It is next objected that Tracy, the clerk of Santa Clara, had no power to take the acknowledgment, because he had no seal of office. But this construction of the statute is too narrow. The court of which he was clerk was entitled to a seal. This general phrase 'having a seal' was only intended to denote a court of record, which is defined to be a court having a seal. The power of the clerk was never intended to be made to depend upon the fact of his having procured this article, or the care with which he preserved it."

On the 27th day of April, 1874, a judge of the Supreme Court of Louisiana could have taken such an acknowledgment as that which was taken by Judge Morphy, certified on the deed from Farmer to Barnes. The conclusion follows without argument that the last-quoted statute cured the defect, if any existed, in the acknowledgment of the deed above named, that the record of that deed was validated by the statute of 1874 (Laws 1874, p. 152, c. 105), and the copy was admissible the same as if it had been regularly acknowledged according to law in existence at the time it was taken. The act of 1874 affected alone rules of evidence, and gave no greater effect to the deed than it had under the law in existence at the time of its execution, simply making it admissible in evidence when it might not have been. It affected no right of the defendants acquired prior to the passage of the act. The assignment is overruled.

We have carefully examined the many assignments of error, and have discussed the material questions presented. The assignments not mentioned are overruled. We find no error in the proceedings of the courts. Therefore the judgments of the Court of Civil Appeals and district court are affirmed.

WARREN v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. PERJURY (§ 1*)—WHAT CONSTITUTES "PERJURY."

"Perjury" is a false statement, written or verbal, deliberately and falsely made under the sanction of an oath or affirmation legally administered, under circumstances where an oath or affirmation is required by law, or is necessary for the prosecution or defense of any private right, or for the ends of public justice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5305-5310; vol. 8, p. 7751.]

2. PERJURY (§ 6*)—FALSE JUSTIFICATION BY SURETY—FALSE SWEARING.

The false statement as to the property owned by him, made by one justifying as cognizor in a criminal prosecution, is in a judicial proceeding, within White's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 205, which includes, as a basis of the offense of perjury, all oaths or affirmations legally taken in such proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Cent. Dig. § 11; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

3. PERJURY (§ 6*)—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

A false statement as to the property owned by him, made by one justifying as cognizor in a criminal prosecution, is perjury, rather than false swearing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Cent. Dig. § 11; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

Appeal from District Court, Delta County; R. L. Porter, Judge.

Whig Warren was convicted of false swearing, and appeals. Reversed.

D. Thornton, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of false swearing; his punishment being assessed at two years' confinement in the penitentiary.

The indictment alleges the false swearing to have occurred in a judicial proceeding in substance as follows: There was a felony case pending in the district court of Delta county. The accused in the case desired to enter into a recognizance. Appellant was called as one of the cognizors. The court, not being satisfied, placed the cognizors under oath; and it is alleged that appellant swore falsely to the effect that he had bought land in Wood county, for which he had paid $600, and that this statement was false. The point is made in an attack on the indictment, as well as in regard to the sufficiency of the evidence, that this is not false swearing, but perjury.

We are of opinion that this contention is correct, and the motion to quash ought to have been sustained, and, further, that the facts do not justify the conviction for false swearing. The definition of perjury is that it is a false statement, written or verbal, deliberately and falsely made, relating to something past or present, under the sanction of an oath, or such affirmation as is by law equivalent to an oath, when such oath or affirmation is legally administered under circumstances in which an oath or affirmation is required by law, or is necessary for the prosecution or defense of any private right, or for the ends of public justice. Article 205, White's Ann. Pen. Code, is as follows: "All oaths or affirmations legally taken in any stage of a judicial proceeding, civil or criminal, in or out of court, or before a grand jury, are included in the description of this offense." There can be no question of the fact that this order was taken in a judicial proceeding, a pending felony case; and any steps that may be taken during the pendency of that case, in any way connected with it, would constitute a judicial proceeding.

It is true that appellant need not have offered himself as a cognizor; but he did, and it was in a pending felony case. This was a matter incident to the judicial proceeding by which the accused in that case sought to obtain his liberty, and was authorized by the law. This oath was taken by appellant under order of the court. Article 315, White's Ann. Code Cr. Proc., reads as follows: "In order to test the sufficiency of the security offered to any recognizance or bail bond, unless the court or officer taking the same is fully satisfied as to the sufficiency of the security, the following oath shall be made in writing and subscribed by the surety: * * * which affidavit shall be filed with the papers of the cause, or criminal proceedings." This affidavit is not conclusive as to the sufficiency of the security, and if the court or officer taking the recognizance or bail bond is not fully satisfied as to the sufficiency of the security offered, further evidence shall be required before approving the same. Article 316, White's Ann. Code Cr. Proc.

It is not necessary here to set out the form of the oath. A recognizance can only be taken, under the Code of Criminal Procedure, in court. A bail bond answers the same office, when taken by an officer; the court not being in session. Under the terms of the statutes cited, therefore, we think it a legal conclusion, and cannot be otherwise than that this oath was taken in a judicial proceeding, and was, therefore, perjury, if false, and not false swearing.

The judgment is reversed, and the prosecution ordered dismissed.

BENJAMIN v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 17, 1900.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 673*)—PROSECUTION—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for unlawfully carrying a weapon, the defense was that what was claimed to be a pistol was so wholly lacking in the essentials of a firearm as not to bring it within the statute. On cross-examination, a witness denied that, shortly after a difficulty between accused and another whom accused had attempted to shoot, witness had stated that the pistol in question was his, and that it was the first time that it had ever failed to fire, and other witnesses were introduced, who attributed to him in substance the language which he had denied. Held, that it was error to refuse a requested charge that the evidence was admitted solely for the purpose of impeaching the witness, and that it could not be considered as tending to prove that the pistol was in a shooting condition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1875; Dec. Dig. § 673.*]

Appeal from Navarro County Court; J. M. Blanding, Judge.

Pleas Benjamin was convicted of unlawfully carrying a pistol, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Callicutt & Call, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the state.

RAMSEY, J. This appeal is prosecuted from a conviction had in the county court of Navarro county on the 26th day of April of this year, wherein the appellant is charged with unlawfully carrying on or about his person a pistol.

The fact that appellant had what was claimed to be a pistol in the city of Corsicana about the time charged in not denied. His defense was that what was claimed to be a pistol was so wholly lacking in the essentials of a firearm as not to bring it within the definition of a pistol, as that term is used in the statute, and on this issue much testimony was offered by him. On cross-examination the witness Johnson was asked if it was not a fact that, some two days after the difficulty between appellant and Charlie Bowen, whom he is charged with attempting to shoot, he did not tell Charlie Bowen, Mary Bowen, and Effie Johnson that this was his pistol, and that it was the first time it had ever failed to fire, and that the Lord must have been on the side of Bowen on the occasion when the pistol was snapped at him. This was denied by Johnson, and thereafter the state introduced the witnesses named, who, on examination, attributed to him in substance the language which he had denied. In this state of the record, appellant requested a special charge to the effect that this impeaching evidence was admitted solely for the purpose of impeaching the witness Johnson, and for no other purpose, and that same will not be considered by the jury as proving or tending to prove that the pistol was in a shooting condition. This charge was refused by the court, and for this refusal exception was properly taken.

This charge should have been given. This was testimony that might, and ordinarily, in the absence of an instruction, would, have been applied by the jury, and doubtless appropriated by them, as affirmative evidence of the condition of the pistol, and therefore of appellant's guilt. Maples v. State, 119 S. W. 105; Harris v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 494, 31 S. W. 388; Winfrey v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. R. 538, 56 S. W. 920; Wilson v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 373, 35 S. W. 390, 38 S. W. 624, 39 S. W. 373.

There are other questions in the record, some of which will not arise on another trial. We are not prepared to agree with counsel for appellant that there was no evidence in the record from which the jury might have found appellant guilty.

For the error pointed out, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

COOTS v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 17, 1906.)

GAMING (§ 98*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Where the state proved that accused bet on a game of cards, and he introduced no evidence, a conviction of gaming was supported by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gaming, Cent. Dig. §§ 291-298; Dec. Dig. § 98.*]

Appeal from Howard County Court; L. A. Dale, Judge.

Bill Coots was convicted of gaming, and he appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of gaming.

The only ground of the motion for new trial is based upon the statement that the evidence is not sufficient and the conviction is against the law. The evidence fully justifies this conviction, showing that appellant bet in a game of cards. We deem it unnecessary to collate the facts. Appellant introduced no evidence, and the state proved that he bet while they were playing cards.

The judgment is affirmed.

BRYANT v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 17, 1906.)

1. EMBEZZLEMENT (§ 10*)—WHAT CONSTITUTES. Where no fiduciary relation of principal and agent existed between prosecuting witness and defendant, the latter was not guilty of embezzlement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Embezzlement, Cent. Dig. § 8; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

2. BAILMENT (§ 16*)—CONVERSION BY BAILEE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held insufficient to show conversion by a bailee of a horse.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bailment, Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

Appeal from District Court, Jackson County; James C. Wilson, Judge.

Doc Bryant was convicted of embezzlement of a horse, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was charged with the embezzlement of a horse. The indictment charges that the horse was bailed to appellant by J. N. Whitely; that the horse was the property of Whitely, and came into appellant's possession and was under his care by virtue of his said agency and employment as bailee aforesaid; and that he subsequently fraudulently appropriated the property. The evidence shows, in substance, that Whitely had a horse that was old and poor, and desired to sell it to appellant.

Whitely's account of the transaction is about as follows: That appellant came to his house, and, after some conversation in regard to other matters, finally led up to the horse trade; that appellant bought the horse from him on condition that the horse would work; that he (Whitely) told appellant that he did not know whether the horse would work or not, but gave appellant permission to take the horse off and try him, and that he was either to return the horse the evening of the same day or pay him $10, the price agreed upon, that appellant took the horse away, and did not return him that evening; that Whitely subsequently went to see him about it, and appellant told him he was below the town of Edna in a pasture; that appellant refused to tell him in what pasture he placed the horse. Appellant's version of the matter is that he and Whitely discussed the matter of the purchase of the horse; that the horse was very poor; that he was to take him off and fatten him up, so he could be fit for work; that he would buy him if he could work him; that he would take him to the pasture, so that he might recuperate in flesh and strength. His statement is at variance with the statement of Whitely as to the conversation between them in regard to the pasture in which he (appellant) had placed the horse. Appellant testifies he informed Whitely where the horse was.

There was other testimony in regard to the time of returning the horse, and in which appellant should bring him to town, and when Whitely was to come after him. Whitely's statement was that, appellant was to carry the horse to his house, while appellant's was he was to bring him to town. Appellant introduced evidence showing that he had the horse brought to town, and Whitely did not come for him, and he turned the horse loose one night, thinking he would stay about the place, but the horse returned to the pasture where he had been keeping him; that the horse stayed in that pasture until Whitely recovered him some year or so afterwards; that appellant had no further connection with the horse, but after a month or so appellant went to Palacios and worked as a hotel waiter, and then went to Runge, in Karnes county, where he had been raised, and which he claimed as his home; and that a year or so afterwards, the grand jury indicted him, and the officers arrested and brought him to Edna for the trial. This is about the substance of the testimony without going into all the details.

It is contended by appellant that this is not a case of embezzlement. We are of opinion the contention is correct. If he had violated any law, it was the statute which punishes for conversion of property under bailment. The fiduciary relation of agent and principal is not suggested by the testimony from either or both sides; but we are further of opinion that the evidence does not show a conversion. Appellant never claimed the horse, further than is stated that he had placed him in the pasture, where the horse remained, except on one occasion, when he brought him to the town of Edna for Whitely to receive, and his testimony to the effect that the horse was placed in the pasture and remained there all the time is not controverted. Appellant's evidence is corroborated by the man who was in charge of the pasture, and the same party who says he brought the horse to town at the request of appellant to be delivered to Whitely.

We are of opinion that the judgment should be reversed, and cause remanded; and it is accordingly so ordered.

MATTHEWS v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas, Nov. 10, 1909. On Rehearing, Dec. 1, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 157*)—MISDEMEANOR—LIMITATIONS.

One charged with a misdemeanor may, as a general rule, be convicted for any violation occurring within two years prior to the return of the indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 282; Dec. Dig. § 157.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 772*)—INSTRUCTIONS—TIME OF COMMISSION OF OFFENSE.

Where the indictment charging a violation of the local option law was returned on December 11, 1908, and the state was not required to elect on which transaction a conviction would be sought, an instruction that if, at any time during 1908, and before December 11, accused sold intoxicating liquors, they should render a verdict of guilty, was not objectionable, in that it did not correctly state the law as to the time within which accused might or might not be convicted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1814; Dec. Dig. § 772.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 787*)—INSTRUCTIONS—FAILURE OF ACCUSED TO TESTIFY.

An instruction, in a misdemeanor case, that the jury could not use as a fact against accused that he failed to testify in his own behalf, was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1902, 1903; Dec. Dig. § 787.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 575*)—TRIAL—TERMS OF COURT.

One convicted at a term of the county court fixed by the commissioners' court, as authorized by Const. art. 5, § 29, cannot complain of the failure of the county court to hold a term every month for criminal business, as required by section 17.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1294; Dec. Dig. § 575.*]

6. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 239*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ADOPTION OF LOCAL OPTION LAW.

A charge, on a trial for violating the local option law, that it was agreed between the state and accused that during the year within which accused could be found guilty of selling intoxicating liquors the local option law was in effect and the sale of intoxicating liquors prohibited, sufficiently charged that the local option law was in force.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 331-347; Dec. Dig. § 239.*]

Appeal from Grayson County Court; J. W. Hassell, Judge.

Jack Matthews was convicted of violating the local option law, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Cox & Cox, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of violating the local option law; his punishment being assessed at a fine of $25 and 20 days' imprisonment in the county jail.

The facts are sufficient to sustain the verdict. The evidence covered several transactions. There was no objection to the introduction of these various matters, and no election asked by appellant as to which transaction should form the basis of conviction. These matters occurred principally during the summer and fall of 1908.

1. The court charged the jury, in substance, that if they believed from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that at any time during the year 1908, and before the 11th day of December of that year, the appellant sold intoxicating liquor to the alleged purchaser, T. E. Bailey, they would find a verdict for the state. Exception was reserved to this charge, because it did not correctly state the law as to the time within which appellant might or might not be convicted, because the same is an incorrect expression as to the time appellant could be convicted under the evidence. We are of opinion there is no merit in this contention. So far as this particular question is concerned, it seems to bear principally upon the question of limitation. The usual rule is a party can be convicted in misdemeanor cases for violation of the law, if it occurred within two years prior to the return of the indictment. The indictment in this case was returned on the 11th of December. Inasmuch as the state was not required to elect upon which transaction the conviction would be sought, there was no reversible error in the court giving the charge criticised. If the state had been required to elect upon which transaction a conviction would be sought, then the charge would have to be confined to the particular transaction relied upon by the state.

2. There was also an exception reserved to that portion of the court's charge which instructed the jury that they could not use as a fact against appellant that he failed to testify in his own behalf. This question has been decided so often, adversely to appellant's contention, we deem it unnecessary to cite authorities in support of the correctness of the court's charge.

3. Another bill of exceptions recites that appellant pleaded specially to the jurisdiction of the county court to try this cause, because under article 5, § 17, of the state Constitution, the court is required to hold one term every month for criminal business, as may be provided by law; second, it is shown that there are no regular monthly terms of said county court, either provided by law or the commissioners' court; and, third, because the present term of the court began on the first Monday in March and continued for eight weeks, which is in violation of said article 5, § 17, of the Constitution. Said article 5, § 17, does provide that the county court shall hold a session every month for the disposition of criminal cases, as may be provided by law. Section 29 of the same article of the Constitution provides that the county court shall hold at least four terms for both civil and criminal business annually, as may be provided by the Legislature, or by the commissioners' court of the county under authority of law, and such other terms each year as may be fixed by the commissioners' court, etc. The evidence in the bill of exceptions shows that the commissioners' court had provided certain terms of the court, at one of which appellant was convicted. We deem it unnecessary to go into a discussion as to whether or not there is a conflict between these two provisions of the Constitution. The commissioners' court, under authority vested in them by the Constitution and laws, did provide for terms of the county court as shown in the bill of exceptions. At one of these terms appellant was tried. We are of opinion that appellant has no ground of complaint. The Constitution authorized the commissioners' court to provide for terms at which civil and criminal causes could be tried. Appellant was tried at a term of court authorized by law. In Hughes v. Doyle, 91 Tex. 421, 44 S. W. 64, the court said: "We are of opinion that the section of the Constitution referred to in the statement conferred power upon the commissioners' court of the several counties in this state to regulate the times of holding the terms of the county courts in their respective counties, within the limitations therein prescribed." This language of the court was construing section 29 of article 5 of the state Constitution. The commissioners' court having authority to provide terms of court under section 29, supra, there would be no legal reason why a conviction should be set aside, had at one of said terms, because of the failure of the county court to hold a session for the disposition of criminal business exclusively once every month. The term at which appellant was convicted was authorized by law, and he cannot interpose the objection urged—that there was not a term held once every month. See, also, Ex parte Cole, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 163, 101 S. W. 249, and Wilson v. State, 15 Tex. App. 150.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes 122 S.W.—35

There being no error in the record requiring a reversal, it is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

On Motion for Rehearing.

On a former day of this term the judgment was affirmed. Appellant files motion for rehearing, alleging, first, the insufficiency of the evidence; second, that the trial court, in defining the law applicable in local option cases, failed to charge the jury that local option law was in full force and effect in Grayson county; and, third, the evidence fails to show the offense was committed in Grayson county, and, further, that there is no evidence of venue proven; fourth, that the witness T. E. Bailey never identified the defendant as having at any time within the last two years, before the filing of the complaint or indictment, sold intoxicating liquors to him.

In regard to the evidence, we would say that the witness Bailey testified that he bought intoxicating liquors in a certain building situated on an alley just west of North Travis street, in Sherman; that he went into this place at various times during the summer of 1908 and purchased intoxicating liquors; that he called for tea, and they gave him what, in his judgment, was whisky; and that he had been accustomed to drinking more or less for a number of years, and in his judgment the liquor that he bought was whisky, and that he paid for it. He says, "My best recollection is that the defendant, Jack Matthews, has served me with whisky in this place during the summer of 1908," and that he paid him for the whisky. The witness testified, further as follows: "This building is situated in Grayson county, Tex., and these purchases occurred in Grayson county, Tex." Again he says: "My recollection is that on different dates during the summer of 1908 the defendant served me with whisky, and that I paid him for the whisky. I told Mr. Cox and Mr. Adamson, about one hour ago, in a conversation that I had with them, that I had bought whisky at this place, but that I had no definite recollection of ever buying any whisky from this defendant, and this statement I made to Mr. Cox and Mr. Adamson is the truth. I know positively that some time during the summer and fall of 1908 I bought from the defendant, Jack Matthews, liquor which was in my opinion whisky." We are of opinion this sufficiently covers those questions suggested in the motion for rehearing in regard to the sufficiency of the evidence, the venue, and the identification of appellant by the witness Bailey.

In regard to the criticism of the charge, we find this in the instruction given the jury by the court: "In this case it is agreed between the state and the defendant, and you are charged, that during the year 1908 local option was in effect in Grayson county, and the sale of intoxicating liquor was prohibited in said county by law." This fully meets the statement, in motion for rehearing, that the jury were not charged that local option was in full force and effect in Grayson county.

There being no sufficient merit in the motion for rehearing, requiring that it be granted, it is in all things overruled.

BUCKLEY v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 17, 1909.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1159*)—APPEAL—VERDICT—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—CONCLUSIVE-NESS.

Where, in a prosecution for disturbing religious worship, there was some evidence justifying a finding of guilty, the judgment of conviction will be affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3074-3083; Dec. Dig. § 1159.*]

Appeal from Sabine County Court; J. H. McGown, Judge.

William Hayson Buckley was convicted of disturbing religious worship, and he appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant was convicted in the county court of Sabine county on February 17, 1909, of disturbing religious worship, and his fine assessed at the sum of $25.

The motion for a new trial is based solely on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict. The court gave a satisfactory charge, in which the issues were fairly submitted to the jury, and gave, in substance at least, the only special charges requested by counsel for appellant, except the one instructing them to return a verdict of not guilty. That the congregation was disturbed is undoubted. That appellant used profane language, calculated to disturb the congregation, is undoubted. It seems, from the evidence, that he engaged in a serious affray near where the religious services were being conducted, with one Marcellus Kyle, in which he was very seriously cut in the neck with a razor. While not wholly satisfactory, we think there was some evidence from which the jury was justified in finding the substance of the charge laid against appellant.

It follows, therefore, that the case, on the issues made, should be affirmed; and it is so done.

CRAFT v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 295*)—MANSLAUGHTER—EVIDENCE OF PROVOCATION—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where decedent seized the bridle and gave the horse, on which accused was riding, a jerk, which threw accused against the pommel of the saddle, injuring him, and decedent held onto the bridle over accused's protest, and accused shot decedent, the failure to charge, in submitting the issue of manslaughter, that, if decedent's assault created pain and engendered sudden passion, accused would be guilty of no higher offense than manslaughter, was erroneous, notwithstanding a charge that the provocation causing sudden passion must arise at the time of the killing, and that the jury, in determining adequacy of the provocation, must consider all the facts, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 606-609; Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 214*)—EVIDENCE—DYING DECLARATIONS.

The state may show, as a part of decedent's dying declarations, that he stated that accused killed him for nothing, and that he could not run out of it, or beg out of it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 448-450; Dec. Dig. § 214.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 780*)—IMPROPER ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—INSTRUCTIONS.

The misconduct of the prosecuting attorney in stating to the jury that accused, who had objected to evidence, did not want the truth brought out, and that there was no better proof of his guilt than his objection to the evidence, was obviated by the charge of the court that the evidence was not admissible, and that accused could object to its introduction without being criticised therefor, and that the remarks of the prosecuting attorney should not be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1693; Dec. Dig. § 730.*]

Appeal from District Court, Ft. Bend County; Wells Thompson, Judge.

West Craft was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Russell & Pearson, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. This conviction was for murder in the second degree; the punishment being assessed at 14 years in the penitentiary.

The court gave a charge with reference to manslaughter, in which he informed the jury that it is not enough that the mind is merely agitated by the passion arising from some other provocation, nor the provocation given by some person other than the party killed. Exception was reserved to this portion of the charge, especially that which refers to the provocation given by some other person than the deceased. Applying the law to the case, the court gave the following charge: "Although the law provides that the provocation causing the sudden passion must arise at the time of the killing, it is your duty, in determining the adequacy of the provocation (if any), to consider in connection therewith all the facts and circumstances in evidence in the case; and if you find that, by reason thereof, the defendant's mind at the time of the killing was incapable of cool reflection, and that said facts and circumstances were sufficient to produce such state of mind in a person of ordinary temper, then the proof as to the sufficiency of the provocation satisfies the requirements of the law, and so in this case you will consider all the facts and circumstances in evidence in determining the condition of the defendant's mind at the time of the alleged killing, and the adequacy of the cause (if any) producing such condition." Appellant requested the following instruction, which was refused: "If the deceased caught the bridle of defendant's horse and jerked it, and thereby caused the horse to rear or plunge, and thereby caused defendant to be thrown against the pommel of the saddle with such force as to cause defendant pain, and because of such conduct, if any, on the part of deceased, and such pain, if any, the defendant, in a sudden passion caused by such conduct and pain, if any, shot and killed deceased, you will not find the defendant guilty of any higher offense than manslaughter." The court refused this charge, he says, because it was covered by other charges.

We are of opinion that under the facts of the case this charge should have been given. The charge of the court was very general, and virtually left the jury to decide whether or not the facts and circumstances were sufficient to produce such state of mind in a person of ordinary temper, and, if they should so find, then the evidence as to the sufficiency of the provocation would satisfy the requirements of the law. The facts, briefly stated, are about as follows: The deceased had made an assault upon appellant some months prior to this killing with a knife, growing out of appellant's refusal to join him in taking a drink of whisky, and also another trouble growing out of the fact that appellant had made a statement to the effect that the deceased had cut his saddle at a party, which enraged the deceased. The deceased denied, in conversation with appellant, that he had cut the saddle, and appellant apologized for the statement he made. Upon the particular evening of the difficulty they met at a store, and the deceased began to talk to appellant in such a manner that appellant concluded that it was the part of wisdom to leave, and mounted his horse and rode away. Subsequently, and on the same evening, they met, and the conversation and threats were renewed on the part of deceased toward appellant. Deceased ordered appellant to dismount from his horse, which he did. Appellant had a knife, which, on account of some threats made by deceased, he handed to deceased. Deceased then said, "You've got a pistol," and appellant handed deceased the pistol. Through others his knife and pistol were handed back to appellant, and appellant turned and went to his horse, with a view of mounting it and leaving; and he was unaware, he says, of the fact that deceased was following him, and was getting on his horse when deceased seized his bridle rein and gave a jerk which threw appellant against the pommel of the saddle and hurt his stomach right badly, which caused him pain and a bruise which remained for several days. The deceased held onto the bridle rein over appellant's protest, and would not let him go. Whereupon appellant drew his pistol and fired three shots, which brought about the death of deceased. There was also evidence introduced to the effect that appellant believed that deceased was going to kill him, and that he thought deceased was armed; but it is not necessary here to collate the facts with reference to the issue of self-defense. Under these conditions we are of opinion that the court should have charged the statutory definition of provocation, or adequate cause, as contained in his requested instructions. Where the statute names the adequate cause, the charge, in submitting the issue of manslaughter, should inform the jury directly that, as in this case, if this assault created pain, and thereby was engendered sudden passion which rendered the mind incapable of cool reflection, appellant would be guilty of no higher offense than manslaughter. We think, therefore, there was error on the part of the court in not giving this special instruction as requested, as well as not giving it in a general charge. This question should have been directly brought to the attention of the jury. Upon another trial the court, if the facts are the same as embodied in this record, should not charge with reference to provocation by some other person. That issue was not raised by the testimony, and, therefore, not called for in the charge.

There are quite a number of errors assigned with reference to the charge of the court, some of which will not arise upon another trial, and the others were sufficiently charged upon by the court. This much with reference to the charge.

Bills Nos. 1 and 2 were reserved to the introduction of the dying declarations, and recite that the witnesses were permitted to repeat the following language as the statement of dying declarations of the deceased: "Son killed me for nothing. I could not run out of it, and I couldn't beg out of it." See the opinion in Lockhart's Case, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 589, 111 S. W. 1024, and Clark v. State, 120 S. W. 179. The Clark Case reviews the authorities upon which appellant relies for a reversal on this question, and overrules them. For a discussion of the matter, see Clark's Case, supra. In this ruling of the court, therefore, there was no error.

There was a question raised in regard to the forming of a special venire in the case, and incidental questions which will not occur upon another trial.

Bill of exceptions shows that Maggie Hayes testified, stating that she was an eyewitness to the killing, and her testimony was materially adverse to appellant. Appellant denied all of her statements while upon the witness stand, and his and other testimony made it impossible, if true, that she could have seen the difficulty. Ed. Robertson testified at the examining trial. His testimony was reduced to writing under the terms of the statute. He did not, however, appear at the trial, and there was nothing to show that he was either dead or out of the state. In fact, there was no predicate laid for the introduction of his testimony. The state offered it before the jury. Appellant objected on two grounds, which objections were sustained by the court. In regard to these matters, private prosecuting counsel in the case stated that there was no better evidence that defendant was guilty than that he had objected to the testimony of Ed. Robertson, that the state only wanted what was right and true, and for that reason wanted the jury to know what Ed. Robertson said about the killing, but the defendant did not want the truth to come out, and therefore objected to said testimony being introduced, and made other remarks, and finally said: "Why, if defendant wanted the truth, did he object to the introduction of the testimony?" Appellant requested an instruction withdrawing these remarks from the jury, and instructing them not to consider the same, or other remarks of similar import. This was refused, as requested; but the court modified it to some extent, and gave the charge in the following form: "Mr. Williamson, of counsel for the state, saw fit in his opening argument to say that the state had offered in evidence the alleged testimony of one Ed. Robertson, alleged to have been given on the examining trial in this case, and that defendant had objected to it being introduced, and that, if defendant wanted the truth, why did he object to the admission of such testimony, and other remarks of similar import. You are instructed that the alleged testimony of Robertson, which was offered by the state and excluded by the court, had absolutely no standing as legal evidence in this case, and was not admissible for any purpose, and the defendant had the perfect right to object to its introduction without in any wise being criticised for making such objection, and the said remarks on the part of Mr. Williamson—you will not consider said remarks in any degree." Appellant objected to the court giving the instruction as modified. We are of opinion that this charge was sufficient, and pertinently instructed the jury to disregard the remarks of the attorney. The evidence did not get before the jury, except as implied in the fact that it was offered. Exceptions were sustained as to its introduction as evidence, and we are of opinion, as presented, the charge of the court sufficiently protected appellant from any injury before the jury.

For the error discussed in this opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

LEONARD v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. BURGLARY (§ 46*)—INSTRUCTIONS—POSSESSION OF STOLEN PROPERTY.

In a prosecution for burglary, where the court charges as to possession of recently stolen property, it must charge that possession, to be evidence of guilt, must be recent, personal, and exclusive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Cent. Dig. § 118; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 761*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

In the absence of evidence in regard to possession of recently stolen property, a charge thereon is erroneous as assuming a fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731, 1761; Dec. Dig. § 761.*]

Appeal from District Court, Fayette County; L. W. Moore, Judge.

Anderson Leonard was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

E. H. Moss, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. The indictment charges in separate counts a night and day burglary. The alleged owners were Ferd. Kneip, Jr., and William Kneip. The court charged the jury with reference to possession of stolen property recently after it was taken and a reasonable explanation of such possession. As far as the charge went, it followed the form set out in Wheeler v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 350, 30 S. W. 913.

There were two serious objections urged to the conviction: First, there was no evidence in the case authorizing a charge on possession of recently stolen property accompanied by an explanation; and, second, under the facts of the case, and where the state is relying upon possession of property recently stolen as the main fact to prove burglary, then it was fatal to the conviction that the court failed to charge the jury that, to warrant an inference of guilt of burglary from the circumstances of possession of recently stolen property, such possession must be personal, exclusive, unexplained, and involve a distinct and conscious assertion of possession of the property by the accused. We have read the statement of facts carefully, and have failed to find any evidence in the case that puts appellant in personal possession of the property, if in fact the property was taken. The owners testify that they had been missing some cotton from their gin, and, as they were buying up small remnants of cotton, they decided to place some slips of paper in among 400 pounds of cotton on the upper floor of their gin. This was on the 24th of December. They were not back at the gin until the 30th. On the 31st appellant's little son, about nine or ten years of age, proposed to sell to the owners of the gin a small lot of seed cotton. They testified that this little boy was named Dykes Leonard. They took the cotton upstairs, the little boy remaining downstairs, and emptied it on the floor from the sacks, and some of their slips of paper were found in the cotton, and from this the inference is to be deduced or reached that the ginhouse was burglarized.

At this point it may be well enough to state that there was no evidence in the case that the house was broken, nor did the owners of the ginhouse undertake to swear that the house was broken, at any point. So it will be seen that the main fact relied upon to show the burglary was that the slips of paper were found in the cotton that they bought from the little boy, Dykes Leonard, or Johnnie Leonard, or at least the cotton that they emptied from the sacks that he brought there. Neither of these witnesses undertook to swear that appellant ever had possession of the cotton, and expressly so state. There was one door by which a party could enter the ginhouse without breaking; that door having been blown down. That door was upstairs. This would have to be reached by climbing a ladder, or getting up in some way to it; but there was no evidence introduced showing or tending to show that, if this cotton was taken from the gin, it was taken in that manner. So, as before stated, the state relied upon the fact that the pieces of marked paper were in the sacks of cotton brought to their gin and sold to them by the boy, Dykes Leonard. The state introduced a son of appellant, whose name was Johnnie, but commonly called "Coon," Leonard. His testimony was, in substance, that about the last of the year he went to the gin in question to sell some cotton, which his father instructed him to take there and sell. He says that his father gave him no instructions as to what to do with the money, but simply told him to take the cotton down to the gin and sell it. He said that one sack of the cotton belonged to himself, and the other the boys could have. This witness said he never saw any tags in the cotton, either at that time or since that time. He further testified, speaking of himself and younger brother, that they picked some cotton during the holidays, and this was the cotton that was carried to the gin; that his father had nothing to do with the picking of the cotton; that he took this cotton down to Kneip's gin, but his father was not with him, and had nothing to do with the taking of the cotton to the gin; that before taking the cotton to the gin he saw Mr. Knelp, and asked him if he wanted to buy some cotton that he had, and, being answered in the affirmative, he took it to the gin. This conversation was the day before he sold the cotton. He says: "We picked the cotton we sold him down in the field." He says: "After we got to the gin, Mr. Knelp told us to go and tell father to come." This cotton was emptied upstairs, and this witness did not go up there to see where they put the cotton, as he never got off of the horse; that the people at the gin did not show him the tags they said they found in the cotton at that time, or at any time, nor did they say anything about seeing the tags in the cotton; that the cotton was kept in the smokehouse at home, and he did not know whether his father knew that or not.

Appellant testified in his own behalf that he had some cotton left in his field, and told his boys they could have it if they would pick it; that some of this cotton was unpicked at the time he was arrested and placed in jail; that his little boys asked him, if they would pick the cotton in the field, would he give it to them? and he answered them in the affirmative, and they picked some of the cotton before he was arrested, and what became of the other he did not know; that he told his little boys to sell the cotton and they could have the money; that on the day in question, when he got home from Roundtop, his little son came to him and told him that Mr. Knelp wanted him up at the gin. He says he did not claim the cotton at that time, nor did he tell the boys to take the cotton to the gin for him, but told them to take it to the gin, and that they could have the money that they got for it; that he didn't know whether he told them to take it to the gin and sell it or not, but just told them they could have the cotton. He says: "When Mr. Knelp showed me the cotton with the tags in it, I told him I didn't see how they got in there, as I couldn't understand how they would get in there;" that he was sure his cotton would have no tags in it. He denies going into the gin, or getting the cotton out of the gin. The Knelps testified that when they sent for appellant, and he reached the gin, they asked him, "How came those slips of paper in the cotton?" and he claimed that he did not know; that one of the sacks of cotton belonged to his boys, and one to his mother. This the appellant denies. This is practically the case on the facts.

We are of opinion that the charge in regard to possession of recently stolen property, if called for by the facts, was deficient in not charging that possession must be recent, personal, and exclusive. Having given the charge on this subject, under the circumstances detailed above, it was clearly incumbent upon the court to have charged further that, in order to constitute possession under this character of case as an evidence of guilt, possession must be recent, personal, and exclusive. As a prerequisite to a charge applicable to the possession and explanation of such possession of recently stolen property, the fact of possession must be shown, and, where this has not been done, it is an assumption of a fact by the court against the record, and a charge upon the weight of the evidence, to give such charge, because it is the assumption of a fact in the case not proved, and turns the guilt upon such assumed unproved fact.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

WESLEY v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 36*)—VIOLATION OF LOCAL OPTION LAW — QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE.

The court, on a trial for violating the local option law, must assume that the election putting the law in force was valid, where there was no contest as provided by Acts 30th Leg. 1907, p. 447, c. 8; and it cannot consider questions as to the sufficiency of the orders and judgments of the commissioners' court putting local option into effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 235*)—VIOLATION OF LOCAL OPTION LAW—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, on a trial for violating the local option law, prosecutor testified that he got whisky by, or from, or through accused, that accused told him that he would get whisky from C., that accused, in company with another, went to C.'s house, and that after they had returned from the house the whisky was delivered to prosecutor, the court properly permitted the state to show that C. had recently purchased whisky, which he had either drank or given away, but none of which he had sold.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 235.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1120*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

A bill of exceptions complaining of the sustaining of an objection to the question, asked prosecutor on cross-examination, as to whether he had ever been indicted for murder, theft, or rape, which does not show what the answer of the witness would have been, is insufficient, for an affirmative answer alone would affect the witness' credibility.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2932; Dec. Dig. § 1120.*]

4. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 205*) — VIOLATION OF LOCAL OPTION LAW—INFORMATION—SUFFICIENCY.

An information charging a violation of the local option law, which alleges that the commissioners' court of the county had duly made, passed, and entered an order declaring the result of the local option election and prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor within the county, as required by law, and had caused the order to be published in the manner and form and for the length of time required by law, is sufficient, without alleging in terms that the county judge published the order declaring the result of the election.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 225; Dec. Dig. § 205.*]

Appeal from Howard County Court; L. A. Dale, Judge.

Jim Wesley was convicted of violating the local option law, and he appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant appeals to this court, and seeks reversal of the judgment had in the county court of Howard county on April 5, 1909, where he was convicted of selling intoxicating liquors in violation of the local option law.

Many of the questions raised on the appeal relate to the sufficiency of the orders, judgments, and decrees of the commissioners' court of Howard county putting local option into effect. Since there was no contest, as provided by acts 30th Leg. 1907, p. 447, c. 8, these matters cannot be considered by us; but we must assume and hold, as the court below did, that the law was in all respects regular and valid.

The testimony of the prosecuting witness, Walker, was to the effect, in substance, that he got the whisky by, or from, or through one Jim Wesley; that he met Wesley in Big Springs, and asked him if he knew where he could get some whisky, and Wesley replied that he might be able to get some for him from a man named Coots, Wesley claiming that Coots was afraid to let him have the whisky; that they went to town and met Coots; that Wesley gave the money to a man named Henry. He went off, and was gone a short time, and brought back a quart of whisky.

1. On the trial the state sought to show, and was permitted to show, by the witness Coots, that he had recently purchased and had shipped to him 12 quart bottles of whisky, which he said he had drank and given away, but none of which he had sold. This was objected to, because there was no evidence shown to connect the witness with the defendant in the sale with which he is charged. The bill of exceptions evidencing this matter was approved, with the qualification that the prosecuting witness, Walker, stated on the witness stand that the defendant told him he would get the whisky from Coots, and that the defendant, in company with Jet Henry, went to Coots' house, and after they had returned together from said house the whisky was delivered to him. We think, in view of the court's explanation, considered in connection with the entire statement of facts, that there was no error in this ruling of the court.

2. On the trial the prosecuting witness, Walker, was asked on cross-examination if he had ever been indicted for murder, theft, or rape. This was objected to by counsel for the state, and the court sustained the objection, and witness did not answer. The bill of exceptions is defective, in not stating what the answer of the witness would be. It is not shown that he would have answered affirmatively, and such an answer alone would have affected his credibility.

3. It is further claimed that the information is insufficient, in that it does not in terms alleged that the county judge published the order declaring the result of the local option election. In the case of Watson v. State, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 551, 107 S. W. 544, on a review of all the authorities, an information very much like this was held sufficient, and it was there decided that, in a prosecution for violation of the local option law, an information which charged that the commissioners' court of said county had duly made, passed, and entered the order declaring the result of such election, and prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor within said county, as required by law, and had caused said order to be published in the manner and form and for the length of time required by law, was sufficient.

The other exceptions relate to the supposed invalidity of the local option election, which we have disposed of in the first paragraph of this opinion.

4. It is urged, further, that the verdict of the jury is not supported by the evidence. There was the usual conflict to be found in such cases. We are not prepared to say, in view of the entire record, that the testimony is insufficient.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment of conviction be and the same is hereby in all things affirmed.

FERGUSON v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909. Rehearing Denied Dec. 1, 1909.)

1. WITNESSES (§ 53*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—SCOPE—WIFE OF ACCUSED.

The wife of accused, on cross-examination, cannot be made to testify to any matter that is not germane to her testimony in chief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 140; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1091*)—APPEAL—BILLS OF EXCEPTION—SUFFICIENCY.

Bills of exception setting out objections to testimony of accused's wife on cross-examination as not limited to a cross-examination of her direct testimony, but stating nothing to show that it was not so limited, cannot be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2831; Dec. Dig. § 1091.*]

3. WITNESSES (§ 53*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

In a prosecution for assault, where accused's wife had testified on direct examination that accused was not at home at the time of the alleged offense, it was proper to ask her on cross-examination if he had been in her room that night before he came in at 4 o'clock the next morning.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 140; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 390*)—EVIDENCE—EXPLANATION OF CONDUCT.

Where a person for any reason has failed to explain his silence when the circumstances would suggest a candid statement, he may give his reason for such silence, where the transaction is the subject of judicial inquiry; and where a prosecuting witness in a prosecution for aggravated assault had not told accused's wife who the assailant was, witness could explain on direct examination that she had not informed the wife because she and accused had been good to her and had treated her as their own child.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 858; Dec. Dig. § 390.*]

Appeal from Wood County Court; W. W. Campbell, Judge.

T. M. Ferguson was convicted of aggravated assault, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Jones, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of aggravated assault, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $100.

1. Bill of exceptions No. 1 complains of the following: That while Mrs. T. M. Ferguson, wife of appellant, was on the stand testifying in behalf of appellant, the county attorney asked her upon cross-examination the following question: "What time did the defendant come home on the night of the alleged assault?" to which question appellant then and there in open court objected, because the same was immaterial and irrelevant, and the same was an attempt to cross-examine witness about matters not brought out in her direct examination, and because the same was requiring the wife of the defendant to give testimony against him, and the same was about matters not asked about on the direct examination of said witness, which said objections were in all things by the court overruled, and the witness was required to testify, and did testify, that it was about 4 o'clock in the morning when the defendant came home. Bill of exceptions No. 2 complains that, while appellant's wife was on the stand, the state asked her the following question: "What effort did the defendant make to notify the officers that Miss Bishop had been assaulted, after he came home on the morning after the alleged assault?" Appellant, through his counsel, made exactly the same objections, and the witness testified that appellant made no effort to notify the officers of Winnsboro that a man had been in Miss Bishop's room.

It is a well-known and established rule of this court, and under the law of this state, that a wife on cross-examination cannot be made to testify to any matter that is not germane to a cross-examination of her testimony in chief; in other words, that the cross-examination must be limited to a cross-examination of the wife's direct testimony. These bills, however, are defective, in that we will not treat objections to testimony as certificates of fact that the cross-examination was not limited to a legitimate cross-examination of the wife. It is true appellant objected to the testimony on the ground that it was not; but there is nothing in the bills to show that it is not. This being true, there is no error on the part of the court shown. The same may be said of bill of exceptions No. 3. Bill No. 3 complains that the county attorney was permitted to ask this question: "Had the defendant been in your room that night, before he came in at 4 o'clock on that night?" The court approves the bill, with this statement: "The wife had testified on direct examination that her husband was not at home at the time of the alleged occurrence." Certainly this would render the cross-examination legitimate.

2. Bill of exceptions No. 3a shows that, while the witness Mrs. Marie Rash was testifying upon direct examination in behalf of the state, she testified as follows: "I just could not tell her that it was Mr. Ferguson, the defendant, as they had been so good to me, and had treated me like their own child." Appellant objected to this testimony, on the ground that same was immaterial and irrelevant, and because the witness was trying to explain her conduct about why she had denied the identity of the assailant, before she had been cross-examined about it, and because it was an attempt by the state to bolster up the witness before her credibility had been attacked, and because it called for a conclusion of the witness, and because the witness could only testify to facts, and let the jury reach their conclusion, and because the same was proving by the witness her reasons for not doing certain things, and her reasons could not bind the defendant; that same was prejudicial and inadmissible. The court appends to this bill the following statement: "This testimony was admitted as an explanation of why she did not tell Mrs. Ferguson who it was in the room; and it was admitted as part of the res gestæ, it occurring immediately after the offense was claimed to have been committed. She was fully crossed upon this testimony."

We see no error in the ruling of the court. Where a party for any reason fails to make a statement that is explanatory, it is proper for the witness to give a reason for silence when the circumstances often would suggest a candid statement.

3. Bill of exceptions No. 3b shows that while Marie Rash, who had been re-called to testify in behalf of the state, was on the stand, she stated: "I knew who it was in my room that night, and I knew who it was when Mrs. Ferguson asked me; but I could not tell her. I did not tell her, and I could not so do." Appellant objects to this testimony for the same reasons stated above. This testimony was admissible.

Various objections are urged to the charge of the court, all of which we have carefully reviewed; and in the light of this record we must say there is no error in same authorizing a reversal of this case.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is in all things affirmed.

DURHAM v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1092*)—APPEAL—BILLS OF EXCEPTIONS AND STATEMENT OF FACTS.

The bills of exceptions and statement of facts, filed after adjournment of court, cannot be considered; the record showing no order authorizing such filing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1092.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1038*) — REVIEW OF CHARGE—NECESSITY OF EXCEPTION AND REQUEST.

To authorize review of a charge in a misdemeanor case for omissions therein, defendant must have excepted to the charge, and asked special instructions covering the matter complained of.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2646; Dec. Dig. § 1038.*]

Appeal from Scurry County Court; C. R. Buchanan, Judge.

B. Durham appeals from a conviction. Affirmed.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. This conviction was for aggravated assault; the fine being assessed at $100.

There are several bills of exceptions incorporated in the record, as well as a statement of the facts. The court adjourned on the 24th day of April, 1909. The statement of facts was filed April 28, 1909, four days after adjournment of the court. The bills of exceptions were filed on the 4th day of May, 1909. There was no order entered in the court below, so far as this record shows, authorizing the filing of the bills of exceptions and statement of facts after the adjournment of the term. In the absence of such order these matters cannot be considered. With the record in this condition—that is, in the absence of the statement of facts and the bills of exceptions—we are of opinion that the grounds of the motion for new trial do not present such matters as can be reviewed.

Some of the criticisms of the charge cannot be intelligently reviewed in the absence of the evidence. There were no special charges asked by appellant, and, if the supposed defects in the charge could be considered at all, it must be done in the light of the facts. The rule is that in misdemeanors, where a party desires to take advantage of omissions in the charge, he must except to the charge of the court, and ask special instructions covering the matters of which he complains; otherwise, this court will not review the charges of the court, except where the charge is radically wrong, and this, it would seem, would apply not to omissions, but to the charges as given.

However, as this record is presented, we do not believe there are any such matters as can be reviewed; and, there being no error authorizing a reversal as the case is presented, the judgment is affirmed.

GRIFFIN v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 300*)—SELF-DEFENSE—NECESSITY FOR INSTRUCTION.

In a prosecution for murder, it appeared that there had been a difficulty between accused and his brother and decedent. There was testimony for the state that, at the time of the homicide accused met decedent and told him that he (decedent) had acted as a rascal. At that moment accused's brother came up behind and said, "Uncle, you are not game," and decedent turned around and said, "What have I done to you, Cal?" when accused struck decedent with an ax handle; that decedent had a pocketknife in his hand, but it did not appear what he was doing with it when he turned to accused's brother. Accused testified that he did not hear his brother's remark to decedent, and that, when decedent turned towards his brother, decedent caught his knife in both hands and accused struck him, because he thought he was going to cut his brother. Held, that a charge on self-defense should have been given, to the effect that if accused reasonably believed that decedent was assaulting, or was about to attack, his brother with the knife, he would be justified in defending his brother.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 614-632; Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 122*) — SELF-DEFENSE — DEFENSE OF BROTHER.

If decedent undertook to assault accused's brother with a knife, or accused believed that he was going to do so, accused would have the same right to defend his brother as the brother would have had to defend himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 177-181; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 112*)—JUSTIFICATION.

The brother's remark to decedent, "You are not game," would not justify or excuse decedent in making an assault, but could only be used in mitigation of any offense decedent might commit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 145-150; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

Appeal from District Court, Nacogdoches County; James I. Perkins, Judge.

Mart Griffin was convicted of aggravated assault, on a charge of murder, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

King & King and Blount & Garrison, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. This record presents but one question for revision, to wit: Did the court err in not charging the law applicable to self-defense? The evidence is quite voluminous. Appellant was charged with murder, and convicted of aggravated assault. In order to present appellant's question it may be necessary to make this statement:

The record discloses that about May 1, 1907, there was a difficulty in which appellant, his brother, and an uncle, I. M. Shepherd, were engaged. During the difficulty, appellant struck the deceased on the head with an ax handle, which knocked him down, and rendered him unconscious for a few seconds. After the trouble, deceased remained at home a few days, got up and went about his business for about three months, when he was taken sick, became paralyzed, and died. The result of the autopsy revealed a blood clot upon the brain immediately under that portion of the skull where the blow was inflicted. Physicians who testified in the case varied as to the cause of the death. Some state that it was the result of the stroke; others, that the lick had nothing to do with the death. Appellant and his uncle, the deceased, had disagreed about a settlement for a certain amount of lumber that appellant had purchased from the deceased. There had been an attempted settlement between them, and there was some contention that deceased had made appellant pay for more lumber than was right.

On the morning of the trouble the parties were all in town. The witness Manning testified that he and deceased were standing on the sidewalk at the post office, from which Mr. Shepherd had just a few moments before emerged; that the witness walked over and spoke to him, and that deceased had a circular or letter in his hand, which he doubled up, tore into pieces, and threw on the ground. Witness and deceased were talking about some mill matters; that is, in regard to the condition of the market, and lumber, and so on, and while thus engaged appellant "came up quartering from in front of the west side of town from the direction of Toplitz's store." When he walked up in front he said: "Uncle, you acted the damn rascal." The witness testified appellant "didn't seem to be mad, seemed to be in perfect good humor. 'Why,' Mr. Shepherd says, 'maybe you think so,' or 'probably so,' or something, and I think maybe Mart repeated the same thing, leaving off the 'damn.' I think he repeated the last part, 'You have acted the rascal,' and Mr. Shepherd says, 'Go on,' and at that instant Cal Griffin (brother of appellant) walked up from behind. I don't know where he came from. He just walked up behind, and says, 'Uncle, you are not game,' and Mr. Shepherd just turned around and says, 'What have I done to you, Cal?' and Cal walked up then in front, and he looked like he struck at him with his left hand, just made a pass that way (witness indicates by a movement of the left hand), and at that instant Mart struck him over the head with an ax handle, kinder on the side of the head, and Mr. Shepherd fell forward. * * * Mr. Shepherd had the knife between his fingers, knocking it around, when Mart Griffin came up. The knife was closed. I saw the knife after Mart Griffin knocked Mr. Shepherd down. I saw it on the ground, when it was picked up, and it was closed. When Mr. Shepherd spoke back to Mart before the licks were struck, he spoke just like I would speak to you or anybody else. He just said, 'Go on,' or something like that. He didn't speak angrily to Mart. When he spoke to Cal, he didn't seem to be mad. Cal walked up and said, 'Uncle, you are not game,' and he turned around and says, 'What have I done to you, Cal?' Cal struck at Mr. Shepherd with his left hand. I couldn't see his right hand at that time. I was directly behind Mr. Shepherd, right at his back, about 12 or 15 inches directly behind him, and Cal was right in front of him. I didn't see Mart doing anything when he came up and spoke to Mr. Shepherd. He didn't seem to be mad. When Mart spoke to him, he was smiling. He seemed to be in perfect good humor. When Mr. Shepherd spoke, it didn't seem like he was mad. I was not thinking of any trouble until the lick was passed. Mart struck him with an ax handle, an ordinary club ax handle."

This witness testified for the state, and places the state's case as strongly as, perhaps, it was stated anywhere in the testimony. This witness further testified that he could not see what Mr. Shepherd was doing with the knife at the time he turned around, facing Cal Griffin. Ramblin testified that he was sitting in the post office window when the trouble began. When he first noticed the parties, appellant was standing opposite the witness in front of Shepherd, kind of leaning on an ax handle, talking to him (Shepherd), when Cal Griffin approached from on the side and spoke something to Shepherd. Shepherd turned to him to know what it was to him, and Mart struck him. When Mr. Shepherd turned towards Cal Griffin, he had a pocketknife in his hand, and as he turned he had his back to witness, from where witness was sitting in the window. "As he turned to where I could see, his hands seemed— From the appearance of his hands, they seemed to be thrown together, like his hands come together. He had his knife in one hand, and they come together right in front of him. Just as he did that, just as he turned to Cal, Mart struck him. Cal was about six feet from Mr. Shepherd at that time, and Mr. Shepherd fell towards Cal."

Appellant testified in his own behalf. After going into some of the details in reference to the lumber transaction and the attempted arbitration, he stated he had not seen Mr. Shepherd that morning before he went into Garrison & Langston's store, where he bought him an ax handle. When he walked out of Garrison & Langston's store, Shepherd and Manning were talking, and he walked down to where they were and commenced talking to Mr. Shepherd. "I says, 'Uncle, you are not treating me right; you are not doing right.' He says 'Why?' and I says, 'You are acting the rascal with me.' As I said, 'You are acting the rascal with me,' about that time Cal walked up, and Uncle Ike wheeled around to the right towards Cal, and caught his knife with both hands, and I struck him. He had his knife in one hand, and he just caught it together like that (throws both hands together). I struck him because I thought he was going to cut Cal with that knife. I thought he was going to use the knife on Cal, and I struck him. I did not strike him, or make any effort to strike him, until after he did that. There had been no further conversation between us, besides what I have stated. I struck him one time. I struck him with an ax handle. I struck him somewhere about the face. I never hit him on the side of the head, or on the head, either. I struck him in the face. When I struck him, he fell over. After I struck him, I raised the ax handle; but I didn't strike him any more."

Joe Garrison testified, after deceased got up from where he had been knocked down, he went into a drug store, and at the point where he fell he (witness) picked up an ordinary size pocketknife, and it was admitted by the state that this was the knife deceased had in his hand when he was struck. Some of the witnesses testified that appellant struck at deceased another blow as he was falling. This was also denied.

We are of opinion that a charge on self-defense should have been given, to the effect that, if appellant reasonably believed deceased was assaulting or was about to attack his brother with a knife, he would be justified in what he did. This question is properly presented and raised on the record. It will be noted that under our statute, if deceased had attacked appellant when he called him a rascal or charged him with treating him badly, he could not have pleaded justification. It will be noted, further, that the witnesses for the state and appellant both testify that there was no anger on the part of appellant and deceased towards each other during the colloquy. When Cal Griffin came up and made the remark he did, which appellant says he did not hear, and deceased undertook to assault him with a knife, and was opening it for that purpose, or appellant believed he was opening it for that purpose, then he would have the right to defend his brother, and the same right that his brother would have to defend. The remark that Cal Griffin made to deceased, to wit, "You are not game," would not justify or excuse deceased in making an assault. It could only be used in mitigation of any offense of which deceased might commit on Cal Griffin. Then, if Cal Griffin had the right to have resisted any threatened attack on the part of deceased with a knife, Mart Griffin would have equal right to do so. We are discussing this only from the appellant's standpoint. The state had another view of it under the testimony. The appellant was entitled to have his side of the issue presented to the jury in an appropriate charge.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the court should have charged the jury with reference to self-defense; and, because this was not done, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

BADER v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 678*)—DIFFERENT ACTS—ELECTION.

In a prosecution for rape, the state may be required to elect on which of several instances of intercourse it will rely.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1580; Dec. Dig. § 678.*]

2. RAPE (§ 40*)—EVIDENCE—LEWDNESS WITH OTHERS.

In a prosecution for rape, circumstances of lewdness, familiarity, etc., indicating that prosecutrix might have been guilty of intercourse with others than accused, was admissible to rebut her testimony that she had never had intercourse with any other person than accused and to account for her general condition, the condition of her vagina, and the destruction of her hymen, as testified to by physicians, and to prove that others than accused had in fact had intercourse with her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 55-57; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

3. RAPE (§ 48*)—EVIDENCE—COMPLAINT BY PROSECUTRIX.

In a prosecution for rape, evidence of the details of the statement made by prosecutrix to her mother, to the effect that accused had done her very wrong, and the circumstances and reasons for the disclosure, which had been for some time withheld, was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 67-69; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

4. WITNESSES (§ 389*)—IMPEACHMENT—PRIOR TESTIMONY OF PROSECUTRIX.

In a prosecution for rape, a written sworn statement, made by prosecutrix to the assistant county attorney of a different county, was admissible to impeach her testimony, though she admitted making practically all the statements in the statement, and stated that they were either incorrect or untruthful.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1243; Dec. Dig. § 389.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

5. WITNESSES (§ 373*)—BIAS—MOTIVE OF PROSECUTRIX—LAYING FOUNDATION.

In a prosecution for rape, evidence that defendant told the witness that M. had frequently been seen at prosecutrix's house, and had told defendant that he (M.) was sleeping with prosecutrix, and referred to her as his wife, that accused requested witness to go to prosecutrix's father and explain to him the statements of M., and that he did so, was inadmissible, in the absence of any evidence that such disclosures had been brought to the knowledge of prosecutrix, or that they procured or induced the prosecution, notwithstanding other evidence that M. was a repeated visitor and companion of prosecutrix, and that the offered testimony indicated motive of the prosecutrix and her parents for the prosecution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1200; Dec. Dig. § 373.*]

Appeal from District Court, Navarro County; H. B. Daviss, Judge.

Ben F. Bader was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Callicutt & Call and El J. Gibson, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. The appellant prosecutes this appeal from a conviction for rape, had in the district court of Navarro county on May 7th of this year.

Appellant was charged with the offense of rape upon one May Belle White, a girl under the age of 15 years. The evidence, indeed, shows her to have been at the time of the alleged rape, and at the time of the trial, less than 13 years of age. That she had had intercourse with some one, in view of the testimony of the physicians introduced, is unquestioned. Her testimony asserts that appellant had, with her consent, intercourse with her on three different occasions, once the latter part of February or 1st of March of this year, a second time on the first Sunday in March, and another time about the 20th or 25th day of March, this year. We deem it unnecessary to set out the details, which are, as usual, of the most disgusting character.

1. At the conclusion of the evidence, and before the argument of counsel, appellant filed a motion to require the state to elect upon which one of the occurrences or instances of intercourse it would rely for a conviction in the case. Under all the authorities, which are both numerous and uniform, this motion should have been granted. Batchelor v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. R. 501, 55 S. W. 491, 96 Am. St. Rep. 791; Powell v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 155, 82 S. W. 516, 122 Am. St. Rep. 683; Stone v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 91, 73 S. W. 956.

2. Appellant tendered certain evidence going to show circumstances of lewdness, familiarity, and tending to show that prosecutrix might have been, and raising the issue and tending to prove that she had been, guilty of acts of intercourse with other persons than appellant. This was designed to meet the testimony of the prosecutrix that she had intercourse with no other person than appellant, and to account for her condition and the condition of the vagina and the destruction of her hymen, as testified to by the physicians, and to prove that other persons than himself had in fact had sexual intercourse with prosecutrix. This was offered for the purpose, also, of impeaching the prosecutrix, wherein she testified that no other person than appellant had had carnal knowledge of her, and to explain the facts and circumstances testified to by the physicians, tending to show that prosecutrix had submitted to repeated acts of intercourse. This testimony is quite voluminous, and consisted of a great many circumstances and facts which we deem unnecessary to set out. The effect of all the evidence tendered, if believed, was well calculated to induce the jury to believe that the little girl had been intimate with several persons near her own age. The court, in explaining the bill, says that he ruled that such proof of other acts of intercourse would be admitted for such purpose, and that no proof of other acts of intercourse was in fact offered.

It was not contended by counsel for appellant that the mere fact that prosecutrix had allowed other persons to have intercourse with her would be any defense, but that this evidence was offered, as stated, for the purpose of explaining, consistent with appellant's innocence, the condition of the prosecutrix. That this testimony is admissible is well settled in this state. Bice v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 43, 33 S. W. 803; Knowles v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 322, 72 S. W. 398. The rule is thus laid down in 23 American & English Encyclopedia of Law, p. 872: "Where the condition of the private parts of a female is relied upon to show the fact of sexual intercourse, evidence to show other acts of intercourse between the prosecutrix and other persons is admissible to show the cause of such condition and to rebut the contention that it was caused by defendant." People v. Flaherty, 79 Hun, 52, 29 N. Y. Supp. 641; People v. Craig, 116 Mich. 388, 74 N. W. 528; Benstine v. State, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 169, 31 Am. Rep. 593; Shirwin v. State, 69 Ill. 60; Nugent v. State, 18 Ala. 526; People v. Knight (Cal.) 43 Pac. 7; People v. Betsinger, 58 Hun, 606, 11 N. Y. Supp. 916. Judge BROOKS agrees to the rule here announced, notwithstanding the expression, apparently, of a contrary view, in the Knowles Case, supra. The trial court seems to have recognized the rule, but to have thought that, because the evidence was not positive and direct, that the testimony ought not to be admitted. If evidence of such intercourse is admissible, then it may be shown, either by direct and positive testimony, or by circumstances of such cogency and force as to warrant the belief that there had been intercourse with other persons. We think the nature of the testimony tendered was such as to render it admissible. If believed, we think it was sufficient to justify a fair, if not an inevitable, inference that the little girl had been criminally intimate with other persons.

3. Objection was made to portions of the testimony of Mrs. White touching the details of the statement of her daughter, and that at the time she was crying, despondent, and unhappy. We do not believe that, as presented, there was anything objectionable in the testimony admitted by the court. The details of the statement made by the child to the mother are not given, further than that appellant had done her very wrong; and the circumstances and reasons for the disclosure, which had been some time withheld, under the circumstances, were not objectionable or improper.

4. Objection is also made that the court erred in not permitting appellant to introduce in evidence a certain written statement, signed and sworn to by the prosecuting witness before the assistant county attorney of Limestone county, which is set out in the record. This testimony was admissible as a basis for impeaching the prosecuting witness. Since, however, she admitted making practically all the statements contained in it, and stated that they were either inaccurate or untruthful, it is not believed that this matter, if the case stood alone on this question, would be important. However, if offered on another trial, we think it should be admitted, if offered for the purpose of impeachment, and restricted to that use.

5. On the trial appellant offered one Roscoe, by whom he proposed to prove that he was principal of the public schools at Thornton, and that along in the latter part of February of this year appellant told said Roscoe, in substance, that McClellan, a 18 year old boy, had frequently been seen by him at the home of prosecutrix; that McClellan had told him (appellant) that he was sleeping with prosecutrix, and referred to her as his wife; that Roscoe was an intimate friend of appellant, and that appellant requested him to go to the father of prosecutrix and explain to him the statements of said McClellan, and that he (Roscoe) did explain to the father of prosecutrix these statements of McClellan. This testimony was offered in view of other evidence tendered that McClellan was a repeated visitor and companion of prosecutrix, and that said testimony was pertinent as tending to show a motive of prosecutrix and her parents for the prosecution. It will be noted it is not claimed that these facts, if, indeed, they were facts, were ever communicated to the prosecuting witness or to her mother; nor is it shown that in any way the fact contributed to the institution of the prosecution, or related in any way to the charge against appellant. We think, before this testimony should be admitted, that some showing should be made that these disclosures had been brought to the knowledge of the prosecuting witness, or that they procured or induced the prosecution.

The record shows that W. W. White was offered as a witness by appellant. He is not shown by any evidence to have instituted or to have been concerned in the prosecution. We gather from the record that he was in bad health and probably a very infirm man. On his cross-examination he says: "I had a long spell of sickness, and have never been right since." We do not think, in view of the entire record, this testimony should have been admitted.

Many of the other questions raised on the appeal relate to matters that will not likely occur on another trial and need not now be discussed.

6. Finally, it is urged that the testimony is insufficient to sustain a conviction. We do not feel, in view of the fact that the case is to be reversed, that we should undertake at this time to pass on this question.

For the errors pointed out, it is ordered that the judgment of conviction be, and the same is hereby, set aside, and the cause reversed, and remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

GIPSON v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 763, 764*)—INSTRUCTION ON WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—EFFECT.

In a prosecution for theft of cotton in the open boll by a lessee from his lessor, a charge that, in determining whether the cotton was the exclusive property of the lessor, the jury should consider how much cotton the lessor had received on his rental contract previous to the alleged theft and how much defendant had received, and if all the cotton the lessor had received, together with the cotton picked up to that time, was less in value than the cotton defendant had received, including a bale used to pay defendant's store account, then the jury should find that the cotton was the exclusive property of the lessor, otherwise not, was a charge on the weight of evidence; and as the ownership of the cotton was an issue in the case, not being dependent alone on how equitably the cotton theretofore raised had been divided, the charge grouping the facts and instructing the jury to determine the question by calculation was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731-1748; Dec. Dig. §§ 763, 764.*]

2. LARCENY (§ 7*)—JOINT OWNERSHIP—LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Where cotton in the open boll, alleged to have been stolen, was the joint property of defendant and his lessor under a contract to share the crops, and defendant, after having moved off the place, later returned to finish gathering the crop, a conviction of the defendant for theft could not be sustained, since the lessor could not divest defendant of his ownership and possession by having the cotton picked, and there was no such severance of defendant's relation to the cotton as would make his possession of it unlawful or his sale of it theft.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. § 19; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

Appeal from Wilbarger County Court; J. A. Nabers, Judge.

D. L. Gipson was convicted of theft of property under the value of $50, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Cook & Cook, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. This was a conviction for theft of property under the value of $50. Appellant was, or had been, the tenant of one Allison, and was charged with the theft of 400 pounds of cotton in the open boll, of the value of $5.

On the trial, among other things, the court instructed the jury to this effect: "In determining whether or not the cotton bolls which defendant is charged with stealing were the exclusive personal property of A. Allison, you will take into consideration how much cotton Allison had received on his rental contract previous to the alleged taking, and how much defendant had received, and if you find that all the cotton Allison had received up to that time, together with the amount of bolls picked up to that time, was less in value than the cotton defendant had received, including the bale used to pay defendant's store account with Hall & Gilbert, then if you so find you are instructed that the said bolls were the exclusive personal property of said A. Allison; otherwise, not." This was clearly a charge on the weight of evidence. The question of ownership of the cotton being an issue in the case, and such ownership not being dependent alone as to how equitably the cotton theretofore raised had been divided, a charge such as this, grouping the facts and instructing that the jury would determine the question by calculation, was manifest error.

Again, we feel like saying, though the case is to be reversed, that we do not believe, in any event, as the matter is here presented, that a conviction for theft could be sustained. The evidence shows that these cotton bolls were raised on land owned by Allison, which had been rented to appellant on shares; the contract being that the proceeds of the cotton were to be divided equally between them. There had not been, as we gather from the record, a settlement between the parties. These particular bolls, it is claimed, were picked and piled on the ground by an employé of Allison, without defendant's consent or knowledge. Allison states that in the summer appellant came to him and said they would divide the crop by his taking the first bale and Allison the second, and so on, which was agreed to. Appellant claims he had never abandoned the bolls or his crop. The testimony does show that he had moved off the place, but had later returned to finish gathering his crop. The cotton, with the theft of which he is charged, was the joint property of appellant and Allison, and under the contract Allison could not divest him of his ownership and possession by having the same picked. It is true, these matters were to some extent the subject of dispute; but we think there was no such severance of appellant's relation to the cotton as tenant as would have made his possession of same unlawful, or would have made his sale of same theft.

We deem it unnecessary to discuss the other matters, as what we have said disposes of the case.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

MARTIN v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 770*)—INSTRUCTIONS—THEORIES OF CASE.

In a prosecution for assault to murder a child, accused's sister-in-law, who gave birth to the child at accused's house, testified that accused was its father. The child was put in a sack a few hours after birth and placed some distance from the house. There was evidence that, after another person had found the child in the sack, accused insisted on taking it to his house, and actually took it there, though his wife protested against it. He had it cared for, and it was not injured by the exposure or otherwise, and was afterward cared for by its mother. Accused denied that he had ever seen the child before it was found, though he knew of its birth, and there was no substantial evidence to show that the tracks around where it was found were accused's. His wife did not testify at trial. Held error to refuse to charge accused's theory that he did not place the child where it was found, or know of its being placed there, but that it was placed there by his wife; and the error was accentuated by a charge that accused would be guilty if he acted alone or with another in placing the child there.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1806; Dec. Dig. § 770.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 310*)—INSTRUCTIONS—LESS DEGREE OF OFFENSE—ASSAULT TO MURDER.

The conduct and testimony of accused require the presentation of his theory, that if he put the child where it was found without any intent to kill it, but to prevent the exposure of his sister-in-law's shame and his connection with its paternity, he must be found guilty of a lesser degree of assault or acquitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 658, 659; Dec. Dig. § 310.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 519*)—EVIDENCE—CONFESSIONS—VOLUNTARY CHARACTER—CONVERSATIONS WHILE UNDER ARREST.

A conversation between accused and a justice of the peace and constable, while accused was not under arrest, and did not consider himself under arrest, was admissible, though he was afterwards arrested by order of the justice,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes and the officers testified that they would not have permitted him to depart at the time of the conversation.

4. HOMICIDE (§ 86*)—ASSAULT TO MURDER—INTENT.

If accused placed a child, to which his sister-in-law had just given birth, in an exposed position near his house, without any intent to kill it, but to hide his sister-in-law's shame and his own paternity of it until it could be carried away, he would not be guilty of assault to murder, but of some lesser degree of assault, if of anything.

In support of the presumption of innocence, every theory of the crime which the evidence suggests should be charged upon accused's request.

Appeal from District Court, Cherokee County; James I. Perkins, Judge.

Sherman Martin was convicted of assault to murder, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Bennett B. Perkins, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of an assault to murder under rather peculiar circumstances; his punishment being assessed at two years' confinement in the penitentiary. His sister-in-law gave birth to a child at his (appellant's) residence on Sunday morning about 11 o'clock. Appellant was not at home at the time, but returned about 2 o'clock that day. The mother of the child testified that appellant was the father of the infant. On Monday evening an infant was found in a sack a few hundred yards from appellant's residence, lying on some bushes or twigs. The twigs had been cut and piled, and the sack containing the infant had been placed on them, and other twigs placed on top of this bundle. The child was first discovered by Simon Monroe, who called his father to keep watch over the child while he (Simon) went to call other parties. Simon's father was named Alfred Monroe. Alfred testifies that, while keeping vigil, appellant came down and inquired what he was doing. Being informed of the discovery of the infant, appellant took it to his house. Appellant denied then and at all times that he carried the child to the point designated, and further denied ever seeing the child until after it had been discovered by Monroe. He was aware that his sister-in-law had given birth to a child, but denied any knowledge of the fact that it was carried away from the residence. His theory of the case was that the child was carried by his wife to the point where the child was found. His wife did not testify on the trial.

The evidence further shows that, when appellant carried the child to the house, his wife forbade his bringing it into the house. This is proved by the state's witness Alfred Monroe. Appellant insisted on carrying the child into the house and having it taken care of. Finally the child was carried into the house. The officers were summoned, went to the house, and talked with appellant about the matter, and in his conversation with the officers he denied any knowledge of the child being carried to the point where it was found. The state introduced some evidence to the effect that on the following Tuesday night appellant in a conversation admitted that he did carry the child to the point where it was found; but this was strenuously denied. The theory of the state was that the child was carried by appellant and hidden at the place where it was found, and that by reason of the fact of its being only a few hours or a day old, at most, his purpose in carrying it to the point and placing it there without nourishment was to bring about its death, and, this being true, that it was an assault with intent to commit murder. Appellant's theory of the case was, and which he introduced evidence to sustain, that he did not himself carry the child to the point where it was, and had no knowledge of the fact, but that his wife was the party who did so.

A serious question, and one which we think is fatal to the conviction, is raised on the failure of the court to charge appellant's theory, to wit, that he had no connection with placing the child where it was found. The court, after charging the definition of assault and battery and the theory upon which a conviction could be predicated, instructed the jury, if they believed the state's theory, they would be justified in finding him guilty. The charge on accomplice's testimony, as well as the law of circumstantial evidence, was given. Appellant insisted in his motion for new trial that the court committed error in failing to present his theory of the case to the jury, and that under his theory he would not be guilty; that if his wife took the baby in his absence, without his knowledge or guilty connection, and placed it where it was found, he would not be responsible legally, and under that state of case the jury should have been instructed to acquit. We think this contention is correct, and that the error is intensified wherein the court instructed the jury that appellant would be guilty if he acted alone, or with another or others, in placing the child where it was. His theory of the case was that he had no connection with it, either unaided by or in connection with others.

As to how the child reached the point where it was found is a matter of speculation. The main fact pointing to appellant is found in the statement of one of the witnesses that he saw a track in the field near where the child was found which appeared to be a man's track; but the track was not measured nor compared with the track made by the shoes appellant wore. However, this was not very significant, because it is shown and admitted that appellant had plowed in that part of the field not a great way from where the child was found. There is no evidence showing or tending to show the character of tracks, if any, made at the point where the child was found, and yet the bushes and twigs were cut in sufficient quantities to form a sort of bed on which to lay the child. Whoever did the work evidently made tracks around where it was found. We are of opinion that this criticism of the court's charge, or failure to charge, has real and substantial merit, and the charge should have been given. Appellant avails himself of this error in a proper way to have it considered.

There was exception reserved to a conversation that occurred between appellant and the justice of the peace and constable. As presented by the bill, we are of opinion that there was no error in admitting this. Appellant was not under arrest at the time; nor does the bill show that he considered himself under arrest. He was subsequently placed under arrest by order of the justice of the peace. These officers testify, in this connection, that if appellant had undertaken to leave they would not have permitted it; but there was nothing said or done, so far as the bill goes to show, that indicated to him (appellant) that these officers intended to hold him. We are of opinion, therefore, that as the bill presents the matter there was no error shown.

The court's charge is also criticised because it fails to submit what is contended is another theory of the case, to wit, if there was a want of specific intent to kill, then an inferior grade of assault should have been charged, or an acquittal. We are inclined to think this view is justified by the record. If the child was placed there by appellant, and not for the purpose of killing the child, but of hiding the shame of his sister-in-law and his connection with the paternity of the child until it could be carried away, and the purpose was not to kill, but to spirit it away, so as to avoid the shame attached to the matter, he would not be guilty of an assault to murder. The actions, conduct, and testimony of the appellant would suggest this theory to our minds. At least, if upon another trial the testimony should develop as it did upon the last trial, we think this theory of the case should be presented in the charge. The child, it may be stated, did not die, but lived, and was carried home by the appellant, and at his instance and insistence his wife took it, and subsequently the mother received it, and took proper care of it. It seems from the testimony, also, that it has never been sick or suffered any, and was in no way injured or hurt. The evidence showed no violence upon it of any character. It is sometimes a little difficult to fathom the reasons and purposes of parties connected with this sort of transaction under the circumstances contained in this record, and, in the submission of theories suggested by the evidence, all consideration looking to the presumption of innocence or the reasonable doubt of guilt should be given in charge. The law favors the accused to this extent upon all theories of law and fact.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

RICHARDSON v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 598*)—CONTINUANCE—ABSENT TESTIMONY—WANT OF DILIGENCE—EXCUSE.

It is sufficient excuse for want of diligence in obtaining testimony, for absence of which continuance is sought, that the prosecuting witness by false statements to defendant misled him, so that the different testimony given by the prosecuting witness, and but for which the absent testimony would not have been necessary, was a surprise to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1335-1341; Dec. Dig. § 598.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1086*)—APPEAL—RECORD—PRESENTMENT AND TRANSFER OF INDICTMENT.

It being impossible for a county court to obtain an indictment other than by transfer from the district court, the record on appeal from the county court must show the indictment was presented in the district court and transferred to the county court.

Appeal from Nacogdoches County Court; G. D. Mims, Judge.

Frank Richardson appeals from a conviction. Reversed and remanded, with instructions.

B. F. Amonette, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant filed an application for a continuance. The absent testimony was material. There was no diligence shown. The indictment was filed in the county court on March 20, 1908. The application for continuance was not made until the 20th of January, 1909. The reason for the want of diligence is accounted for by the following state of facts set out in the application: It is alleged that the absent witness, Mitchell, was present at the time and place money was made up for the purchase of the whisky, if it was purchased; that this occurring in front of G. H. King's grocery store in the town of Nacogdoches; that Mitchell furnished part or all of said money, and Mitchell will testify that defendant was not present at any time during the making up of said money in front of King's store, as prosecuting witness alleges he will testify; that Mitchell will also testify, if present, that he was with Gunning, the prosecuting witness, all the time until said Gunning went into the wagon yard and secured the whisky, and that appellant was not in front of King's store or along said street or sidewalk in said town; that prosecuting witness did not pay appellant any sum or sums of money there at that time, and that the evidence of Gunning to the effect that he (appellant) sold the whisky to him is untrue; and that appellant had no way of finding out what the testimony of prosecuting witness would be until he informed appellant, as above stated, and did not know that he would need the testimony of Mitchell, and that it was then too late to have process issued for Mitchell. He further alleges in the application that the testimony of the prosecuting witness, Gunning, was a surprise to him, for the reason that Gunning, prosecuting witness, misled him by deception and by false statements; that appellant had frequently asked Gunning what he was going to swear and what his testimony would be, and each and all the times Gunning informed appellant that he (Gunning) never bought or purchased any whisky from appellant; that the only whisky he ever got was the whisky left by the appellant for other parties; that the money paid appellant was money on witness' account due by witness to Seals & Brashers, and was not for any whisky purchased of defendant at that or any other time, and that appellant need not fret about it, and he (Gunning) would so testify. In this connection appellant's attorney made affidavit that he never had any knowledge of the facts that would be testified to by prosecuting witness, Gunning, as set forth in the application for continuance, until the 19th of January, 1909, when Gunning informed him and appellant of what his testimony would be, and that at said time appellant's case had been called, it then being too late to have process issued and returned, and that this was the first time he had ever heard what witness' testimony would be, and was the first opportunity he ever had to talk with him about the case. On the trial of the case the evidence was in sharp conflict as to the real transaction of the purchase and sale; Gunning swearing one way and appellant swearing the other.

It is contended by appellant that under circumstances of this sort he gave a sufficient legal excuse for not using more diligence, and that under the circumstances, being misled as he was by the state's witness, he was entitled to the continuance, and upon the refusal of a continuance to a new trial. We are of opinion that his contention is correct, and he should have been awarded another trial. See Adams v. State, 10 Tex. App. 677.

We call attention to a fatal defect in this record, which requires a reversal and dismissal of the case as the record is presented. The case was tried upon indictment, and there is nothing in this record to show that the indictment was presented by a grand jury into the district court, or transfer had from the district court into the county court. Under all of our authorities this omission is fatal. A county court cannot obtain an indictment otherwise than by a transfer from the district court, and there is nothing in the record, as before stated, to show that the indictment was presented in the district court and transferred to the county court.

There is another matter to which we desire to call attention. The caption shows that Hon. C. D. Mims was county judge and presided over the court, and that it met on the 8th of January, 1909, and adjourned on the 6th of February, with Hon. C. D. Mims as its presiding judge. The statement of facts is approved by F. P. Marshall as county judge. The bills of exceptions are signed by Marshall. There could not be two county judges in the same case, presiding over the same court, and if Hon. C. D. Mims was presiding judge, who tried the case, Hon. F. P. Marshall could not also be presiding judge of the same court at the same time. There may be a mistake on the part of the clerk in setting out Marshall's name, instead of Mims'. At least, there is a mistake somewhere.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with instructions to the county court, if there is not a transfer of the indictment from the district court to the county court, to dismiss the prosecution for want of jurisdiction.

BATTE v. STATE.

Davidson, P. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Criminal District Court, Dallas County; W. W. Nelms, Judge.

C. E. Batte was convicted of forgery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. L. Curtis, W. L. White, and Albert S. Phelps, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of forgery; his punishment being assessed at confinement in the penitentiary for three years.

His contention is: First, that the evidence is not sufficient, in that he was convicted upon the testimony of L. H. Tyler, whom he alleges in his motion for new trial did not qualify as an expert on handwriting. Tyler testified that the same person who wrote the name of appellant in blank on the check alleged to be forged was the same person who wrote the name of the payor, A. A. Koup; that is, the handwriting is by the same person. There was no exception reserved to the testimony of Tyler, and this matter is brought up only as a ground in the motion for new trial. The statement of facts discloses that Tyler was an expert on handwriting, and was the paying teller of the American Exchange National Bank. We are of opinion that Mr. Tyler was an expert, as tested by this record, and, inasmuch as appellant did not except to the admission of this testimony, this question cannot be raised on the motion for new trial in the manner sought. It is true that, if this was all the testimony the state relied upon, there might be a question as to its sufficiency to sustain the conviction.

This brings us to the second ground, which is, that the evidence is wholly insufficient to warrant a conviction; there being no positive proof that the defendant signed the name of A. A. Koup, except the testimony of Tyler. We are of opinion that the evidence is sufficient to show that appellant is guilty of the forgery. Tyler testified that on the morning of the 12th of May, 1908, appellant came to the bank where he was at work and exhibited to the witness a draft drawn on the Commonwealth Trust Company at St. Louis, showing him at the same time a passbook of said trust company, and claiming that he had money there. It was ascertained subsequently that appellant did not have any money on deposit with said Commonwealth Trust Company. The witness took appellant to the collection department and introduced him. In a short while, and without leaving the bank, appellant returned to witness Tyler and requested him to cash a check for $150 on the Cleveland National Bank at Cleveland, Okl., which was signed, "A. A. Koup." This is the check appellant is charged with having forged. Witness requested appellant to indorse the check. Appellant went to the desk in the center of the bank, and was gone about two minutes, and returned with the check indorsed. Witness did not see the appellant indorse the check; but, when he returned with the check indorsed, witness cashed it. Then follows the statement in the statement of facts that witness qualified as an expert on handwriting and stated, in his opinion, the handwriting on the check in which the name "A. A. Koup" was written was the same as that in which the indorsement on the back of the check was written.

A. A. Koup testified that he did not sign the check; that he had never seen appellant; that he lived in New Mexico, but had a hardware, implement, and vehicle business in Cleveland, Okl., and that his son was the only one authorized to sign his name, and he always signed, "A. A. Koup," with his own name. Witness was not in Cleveland, Okl., on the 12th of May, 1908; but his son managed the business there. Lawrence Koup testified that he was the son of A. A. Koup, who owned a hardware business in Cleveland, Okl., on the 12th of May, 1908; that he managed the business for his father; that he did not sign the check shown him, did not authorize the defendant, nor any one else, to sign it, and had never seen the check until it was sent to Cleveland for collection; that it was on one of their blanks; and that, after appellant left Cleveland, he discovered that some of their blank checks had been torn out of a checkbook. He further testified that appellant was in Cleveland on the 12th of May, 1908, and was there about a week; that he was there to see Raymond Meade, who was employed by witness to assist him in his father's business; that there is no A. A. Koup in Cleveland, Okl., and that the whereabouts of Raymond Meade was then unknown to the witness; that Meade had continued in his employment for some time after appellant was there.

Appellant himself testified that on the morning of the 12th of May, 1908, he went to Cleveland, Okl., to collect $35 from Raymond Meade, the young man who was working at A. A. Koups' place of business; that he collected the money and started to the hotel to get his grip, with the view of catching the train left; that he stayed in town that afternoon, and, seeing what he considered a bargain, he purchased a team of horses for $200, hired a buggy from the livery stable, and went driving with Raymond Meade; that Meade suggested that he (Meade) could sell the horses, if he (appellant) desired to sell them; that they then drove to a residence, which Meade said belonged to A. A. Koup, and called a man out and introduced him as Mr. Koup; that a sale was made for $300, and defendant then went to the hotel for supper, and Meade and the other man went to write out the checks; that defendant told them to make out two checks, for $150 each; that it was then about 6 o'clock p. m., and the banks were closed; that defendant and Meade went over town to cash the checks, but were unable to do so; that appellant caught the early morning train of May 13th, arriving at Dallas in the early afternoon of the same day, and had the transaction with Tyler, testified about by Tyler. Appellant left Dallas that night for San Antonio, cashed the other check for $150 there, and then went to West Texas, where he was arrested and brought to Austin for forgery; that he was also wanted in San Antonio for passing the other check on the Cleveland National Bank for the sum of $150, signed by A. A. Koup.

This is the statement of facts. We are of opinion, under this testimony, that the state has sufficiently made out a case to legally justify a conviction.

Appellant urges, also, that he was not subject to prosecution in Texas, because the forgery, if committed, was in the town of Cleveland, Okl. Under our statute it would make no difference if the forgery was committed in Oklahoma, inasmuch as he passed the check in Dallas. See article 225, Code Cr. Proc. 1895, which reads as follows: "The offense of forgery may be prosecuted in any county where the written instrument was forged, or where the same was used or passed, or attempted to be used or passed," etc.

Finding no such error in the record as requires a reversal of the judgment, it is ordered that the same be affirmed.

On Motion for Rehearing.

BROOKS, J. At the late Dallas term of this court this case was affirmed, and now comes before us on motion for rehearing.

The only insistence of appellant we deem necessary to review is the contention that the evidence is insufficient. The facts in the case are very fully stated in the original opinion. Appellant insists that the evidence is insufficient, because the same is circumstantial, and does not comply with the provisions of article 794 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1895, which article reads as follows: "It is competent in every case to give evidence of handwriting by comparison made by experts or by the jury; but proof by comparison only shall not be sufficient to establish the handwriting of a witness who denies his signature under oath." There are many facts in this case, in addition to those cited in the original opinion, that might be collated, going to show criminal connection of appellant with the execution of the instrument for which he was prosecuted, but we do not deem it necessary to do so; but suffice it to say that there is other evidence in the record that clearly establishes the guilt of appellant, in addition to the proof of handwriting. The statute last cited simply insists that no conviction shall be had against a defendant by comparison of handwriting alone; but where comparison of handwriting is supplemented by other evidence showing guilty knowledge, motive, and knowledge of the crime in question, this certainly ought to be and should be sufficient evidence. To hold otherwise would preclude any character of successful prosecution for forgery. It is not one case in a thousand where a party is seen by an eyewitness to forge an instrument, but it is merely established circumstantially that he did so. Then if the circumstances can be strengthened by expert testimony on handwriting, we then have a stereotyped case of forgery.

Appellant cites us to the case of Spicer v. State, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 177, 105 S. W. 813, and his contention was there very clearly sustained; but that case is not the law, and is hereby overruled. This court fell into error in construing the statute under consideration in said last-cited case, and practically held that before a conviction could be sustained there would have to be positive testimony, in addition to handwriting, before there could be a successful prosecution for forgery. This is not correct. But if there is no evidence at all for the state save and except proof by comparison of handwriting, then we would be forced to reverse the case by the sheer force and terms of the statute above cited; but in this case we have a very different condition. The proximity of appellant to the place and time when the forgery was committed, his motive for the forgery, the fact that he secured the money, the fact that he was cognizant of all the facts that would put him in a position to perpetrate the forgery, and all the other facts collated in the original opinion, clearly indicate and conclusively establish his guilty connection with the commission of this crime. In addition to the above, we have the proof by the expert witness of his handwriting by comparison. It follows, therefore, that the evidence is entirely sufficient.

We might extend this argument further if we deemed it necessary; but we do not. We have carefully reviewed all of appellant's contentions, and believe the original opinion was correct, and the motion for rehearing is overruled.

DAVIDSON, P. J. (dissenting). The writer hereof wrote the original opinion affirming the judgment. On motion for rehearing the position enunciated by the court in the original opinion was strongly assailed, and after a careful review of the questions involved I have reached the conclusion that the motion for rehearing should be granted, and that the court was in error in affirming the judgment. Therefore I respectfully dissent from the opinion of the majority on the motion for rehearing.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the original opinion, and all the salient facts are stated. It was a case of circumstantial evidence, there being no eyewitness to the forgery, if one was committed, and there is no positive evidence that appellant forged the check. I am of opinion, therefore, that the circumstances do not show with that degree of legal accuracy required by law that appellant has been shown to be guilty of the crime of forgery. It will be remembered, in this connection, that appellant was charged with and convicted of forgery, and not of passing a forged instrument. The evidence is amply sufficient to show that appellant presented the check to the witness Tyler, cashier of the bank in Dallas, and it is also sufficient to show that he indorsed the check in the bank at the time that he passed it upon the bank. Therefore the signature upon the back of the check written by appellant may be taken as his genuine signature. This indorsement was taken as a basis of comparison of handwriting by the witness Tyler. Tyler testified that, taking appellant's handwriting as shown by the indorsement, and comparing it with the handwriting in the body of the check, in his judgment the handwriting was the same, though he stated the letters were differently constructed or made and show dissimilarity. That is all the evidence in regard to the handwriting in the body of the check; that is, there is no evidence in regard to appellant having written or signed the check, except the supposed expert testimony of Tyler that the handwriting in the check was, under the circumstances stated, in his judgment the same as that shown in the indorsement.

Appellant denied under oath the execution of the instrument, and testified, further, that the check was not drawn in his presence, but was signed out of his presence in Oklahoma, and brought and delivered to him by Meade, with the statement that Koup executed the instrument, or, at least, the man who was with him, whom appellant thought to be Koup. This, therefore, is a denial under oath by appellant of the execution of the instrument and that he was a principal to the drawing of the check, and a denial, further, that he signed the name of Koup as drawer of the instrument. The statute provides that it is competent to give evidence of handwriting by comparison made by experts, etc. It was said in Jones v. State, 7 Tex. App. 457: "The fact, however, that our statute permits such evidence does not change the well-established rules as to the value of such testimony. Such evidence has always been considered feeble, and in some states unsafe to act upon. Boman v. Plunkett, 2 McCord (S. C.) 518, cited in Hanley v. Gandy, 28 Tex. 211, 91 Am. Dec. 315. In Adams v. Field, 21 Vt. 265, it was said: 'But those having much experience in the trials of questions depending upon the genuineness of handwriting will not require to be reminded that there is nothing in the whole range of the law of evidence more unreliable, or where courts and juries are more liable to be imposed upon.' 1 Greenl. on Ev. § 580, note 2." In Heacock v. State, 13 Tex. App. 97, the court said: "It is a well-established rule that the handwriting used as a standard of comparison must be either an admitted manuscript, or be established by clear and undoubted proof. The evidence establishing it as a standard must be either direct or equivalent to direct." This case cites several authorities in support of that proposition. See, also, Spicer v. State, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 177, 105 S. W. 813; Code Cr. Proc. art. 794, and collated authorities thereunder. The Spicer Case, supra, is directly in point, so far as the facts and law of this case are concerned, and my Brethren, on reaching the conclusion they arrived at in this case, found it necessary to overrule the Spicer Case. There is not a case decided in Texas, so far as I have been able to ascertain, that lays down a different rule, and in fact, if such case could be found, it would be directly in violation of the statute.

Omitting Tyler's expert testimony in regard to the handwriting, the facts that are relied upon to sustain the conviction may be stated as follows: Appellant's possession of the alleged forged draft in the city of Dallas, in Texas; that the draft or check was forged in Oklahoma; that Meade gave the check to appellant, signed as set out in the record; also that Koup testified he did not sign the check. There is not only no evidence that appellant was present when the check was signed, but such as was before the jury excluded the idea of his being present. All the evidence in the record in regard to this matter, outside of the mere fact of possession, came from appellant, who testified that through Meade he sold a pair of horses and received the check in question, and another check from Meade in payment of the horses; that he was not present at the time of the transaction, either as to the sale of the horses or the drawing of the check. Meade was not used as a witness in the case, and in fact his whereabouts was not known at the time of the trial, and neither side sought to have him present as a witness. The case is not as strong on the facts as was the case of Spicer v. State, supra. It may be true, as stated by my Brethren, that the act of forgery is not often witnessed by others than the man who commits the forgery. This is true in all cases of circumstantial evidence, but that would be no reason to hold the facts sufficient.

I therefore respectfully enter this as my dissent.

2. STATUTES (§ 105*)—SUBJECT AND TITLE OF ACT—CONSTRUCTION.

A liberal construction will be given an act, in determining whether or not it violates Const. art. 3, § 35, relating to the subject and title of acts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 117; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

3. STATUTES (§ 118*)—SUBJECT AND TITLE OF ACT.

The title of Gen. Laws Sp. Sess. 1897, p. 16, c. 9, "To fix the venue and regulate the proceedings in prosecutions for rape," is sufficiently broad to fix the venue, and provide for the trial of a case in such county as may be provided by law, within the requirement of Const. art. 3, § 35.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 118.*]

4. STATUTES (§ 138*)—RECITALS OR REFERENCE TO OTHER ACTS.

Gen. Laws Sp. Sess. 1897, p. 16, c. 9, relating to the venue in prosecutions for rape, is complete in itself, and is valid, without reciting or referring to any other act, as required by Const. art. 3, § 30, on revival or amendment of an act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1097*)—APPEAL—CONTENTS OF RECORD—ERROR.

The prosecuting attorney's reference, in violation of Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 770, to defendant's failure to testify in his own behalf on a former trial, is available on review, even in the absence of a statement of facts, where such reference appears from the bill of exceptions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1097.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1114*)—APPEAL—CONTENTS OF RECORD.

In the absence of a statement of facts, the bill of exceptions must show on its face that it contains all of the evidence as to the matter complained of.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1114.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 730*)—FAILURE OF ACCUSED TO TESTIFY.

Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 770, providing that the failure of defendant to testify shall not be considered against him, nor commented on, it is reversible error for the prosecuting attorney to ask defendant whether he testified in a former trial, though the court withdrew the matter and instructed the jury not to consider the same.

Appeal from District Court, Donley County; J. N. Browning, Judge.

Hood Brown was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Reversed.

A. T. Cole, J. S. Stallings, H. H. Cooper, and D. W. Odell, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., and Henry S. Bishop, Dist. Atty., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. This appeal is prosecuted from a conviction of rape, had in the district court of Donley county on the 12th day of January of this year, in which judgment the punishment of appellant was assessed at confinement in the penitentiary for a period of six years.

The Assistant Attorney General moves to strike out the statement of facts, for the reason that same is made up wholly of questions and answers, and is, in fact, a literal transcript of the stenographic notes taken on the trial of the case, and not in accordance with the law, which, in terms, prohibits a statement of facts from being so made up. We have heretofore held, in accordance with this motion, that such a statement of facts could not be considered. Essary v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 596, 111 S. W. 927; Hargrave v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 147, 109 S. W. 163. In the absence of statement of facts there are, as we believe, but few questions so presented that we are authorized to consider them. There are, however, some matters which are so presented that we are called on to decide them.

The original indictment was returned in the district court of Potter county, and was some time thereafter transferred on change of venue by the court of its own motion to Donley county, where the case was tried. This action of the court, we infer, was taken under the authority of the act of the special session of the Twenty-Fifth Legislature (Gen. Laws 1897, p. 16, c. 9). This action of the court was at the time properly excepted to, and is so presented that a review of the court's action is required. Appellant challenges the validity of this act of the Legislature, in so far as it can be held to apply to this case, because, as averred, same is void for two reasons: First, because it is violative of article 3, § 35, of the state Constitution, in that the caption of the act only states one subject, that of fixing the venue, while the body of the act attempts to fix the venue, and also provide for a change of venue; and for the further reason that said act is violative of article 3, § 36, of the Constitution, in that same does not refer to or re-enact any of the statutes with reference to the change of venue. The caption of the act is as follows: "An act to fix the venue and regulate the proceedings in prosecutions for rape." The validity of this statute, in general, has been sustained by this court, notably in the cases of Mischer v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. R. 212, 53 S. W. 627, 96 Am. St. Rep. 780, and Griffey v. State, 56 S. W. 52. These cases, and the validity of the act in general, were thoroughly reviewed in the recent case of Dies v. State, 117 S. W. 979, and were expressly approved. However, the particular questions raised here are not, in terms, presented in the cases above referred to. We do not believe, however, that the act in question is void for any of the reasons named.

Recurring to the first objection urged, it is well settled that a liberal construction will be applied to an act of the Legislature, in determining whether or not it violates this section of our Constitution. Joliff v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 61, 109 S. W. 176; Breen v. Ry. Co., 44 Tex. Cr. R. 302; Giddings v. San Antonio, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 548, 26 Am. Rep. 321; State v. Parker, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 265; Morris v. State, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 728; Ratigan v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 301, 26 S. W. 407; Tabor v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 631, 31 S. W. 662, 53 Am. St. Rep. 726. The doctrine is well expressed in the case of Fahey v. State, 27 Tex. App. 146, 11 S. W. 108, 11 Am. St. Rep. 182: "Suppose that there be more than one subject mentioned in the acts. If they be germane or subsidiary to the main subject, or if relative directly or indirectly to the main subject—have a mutual connection—and are not foreign to the main subject, or so long as the provisions are of the same nature and come legitimately under one general denomination or subject, we cannot hold the act unconstitutional." And so where the general purport or subject is named, and the exercise of power complained of is reasonably to be gathered and comprised within the general subject, we think the act should be upheld. And so here, where an act, in terms, is denominated an act to fix the venue and regulate the proceedings of prosecutions for rape, it is sufficiently broad, not only to fix the venue, in the first instance, but to provide for the trial of the case in such county or counties as may be provided by law. Nor do we think the act violative of the last article of the Constitution referred to. Section 36, art. 3, is as follows: "No law shall be revived or amended by reference to its title; but in such case the act revived or the section or sections amended shall be re-enacted and published at length." In construing this section of the Constitution our Supreme Court has held that same does not apply to a law which fully declares its provisions without direct reference to any other act, though its effect is to enlarge or restrict the operation of some other statute. Clark v. Finley, 93 Tex. 171, 54 S. W. 343. Nor does same apply to an act perfect in itself and covering the subject-matter of a former act. Johnson v. Martin, 75 Tex. 34, 12 S. W. 321.

2. There are contained in this record 55 bills of exception. In the absence of a statement of facts, there is only one matter which we feel we are authorized to pass on. That is raised by appellant's thirtieth bill of exception. With a view of assuring accuracy, and to present the matter so it will be readily understood, we copy entirely both the bill and the court's explanation of same, as follows:

"After the defendant, Hood Brown, had by his own counsel been placed on the witness stand, and after many and repeated references had been made to a previous trial of this case in Potter county at the county seat in Amarillo, as will be more fully shown by an inspection of the record in this case, the district attorney, H. S. Bishop, purposely and deliberately propounded to the defendant on his cross-examination, and without any effort to show the disappearance of any witness, or any material change in the testimony on the former trial and on this trial, the following question: 'This is the first time you have testified in this case, is it not?' The answer was: 'Yes, sir.' The question and answer being propounded in such a short time, and the answer elicited in such a short time, that the defendant's counsel had no opportunity to object thereto, except as heretofore shown, but instantly and immediately after the propounding of said question, and while said answer was being elicited, counsel for defendant arose in their seat and said to the court: 'If the court please, we object to the question and the answer, for the reasons that it is a comment on the failure of the defendant to testify in the case before.' Whereupon the court remarked: 'Gentlemen of the jury, you will not consider that remark, question, nor answer. I have ruled it out.' Counsel for defendant then stated that they wanted the bill to show that the question was asked in the presence of the jury and answered, to all of which proceedings, questions, answers, and observations, the defendant then and there in open court objected as hereinbefore shown, and he here and now says that the same was knowingly and willingly propounded to him in defiance of and in the face of article 770 of our Code of Criminal Procedure, and that without reference to the court's observations that under the facts in this case, as heretofore shown, it was an allusion on the part of the state's counsel to the failure of the defendant to testify to the great and irreparable prejudice in this case of the defendant, and he asks the court, after examining this bill, to allow the same and order it filed as a part of the record in this case, which is here now done.

"Approved and ordered filed as a part of the record in this cause, with this explanation: 'I have no recollection of any reference being made to a former trial of the case in Potter county, except that the counsel for defendant, on cross-examination of the witness, Annie Womack, asked her something about her testimony on the trial of this case in Amarillo, immediately after the objection was made as set out in the bill. The court in very forceful and emphatic language withdrew the matter from the jury, and directed them not to consider the question and answer of the defendant for any purpose. The remarks in the bill as to the purpose and deliberateness of the district attorney in asking the question, I think, is more the imagination of defendant's counsel in preparing the bill than the facts would admit. I do not think the question was asked for the purpose of prejudicing the jury against defendant, and I do not think that it had one particle of effect on them. It was merely a slip of the district attorney.'"

While the court's explanation modifies to some extent the statement contained in the bill itself, we think these facts undoubtedly appear, considering both the bill itself and the court's explanation: First, that there was and had been a reference or references made to a former trial of appellant on this same charge; second (pretermittting any discussion as to whether purposeful or deliberate), the question itself assumed and implies, of necessity and by obvious inference, that there had been another trial of the case, at which appellant would have been permitted, as he had the opportunity, to testify; third, that proof was made by the state that he had not testified, except upon the trial then in progress; fourth, that these proceedings were had over the protest of appellant's counsel; and, fifth, that the court, as stated, in forceful and emphatic language withdrew the matter from the jury, and directed them not to consider the question and answer of the defendant for any purpose. So that the question recurs whether, under these circumstances, in the absence of a statement of facts, we may and should consider this bill, and whether, so considered, the matters referred to are grounds for reversal.

Article 770 of our Code of Criminal Procedure of 1895 provides that: "Any defendant in a criminal action shall be permitted to testify in his own behalf therein, but the failure of any defendant to so testify shall not be taken as a circumstance against him, nor shall the same be alluded to or commented on by counsel in the cause." As stated in the recent case of Hare v. State, 118 S. W. 544: "It has been uniformly held by this court that this statute is broad enough to cover, and does cover, the proceedings on a former trial. From this ruling there has been no exception in the cases, and we have no doubt that this is a correct construction of the statute. See Richardson v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 519, 27 S. W. 189; Dorrs v. State, 40 S. W. 311; Bradburn v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. R. 300, 65 S. W. 519; Pryse v. State, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 523, 113 S. W. 938; Wilkins v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 320, 26 S. W. 409; Templeton v. People, 27 Mich. 501; Miller v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 517, 78 S. W. 511." In most of the cases where this matter has arisen there was a statement of facts in the record. However, in the case of Hare v. State, supra, there was no statement of facts. Notwithstanding this fact, we there said: "Nor can we accede to the suggestion that, because there is no statement of facts in the record, appellant may not avail himself of this invasion of his rights. The bill of exceptions contained in the record states, in general terms, the proof on the part of the state and the nature and character of appellant's defense, and is sufficient to illustrate the contention of the respective parties, and is, as we believe, rather to be commended than condemned. It is the rule of this court, settled beyond dispute, that the statute above quoted is mandatory. Such, also, is the rule in other tribunals. It is thus stated in 12 Cyc. p. 576: 'A statute which provides that the neglect or refusal of the accused to testify shall not be commented upon by the prosecuting attorney is usually mandatory.'"

We may, by analogy, be aided in the settlement of this question by the decisions of this tribunal in cases where charges of the court have been considered in the absence of statement of facts. It is usually a well-settled rule that in the absence of a statement of the facts, if the charge is applicable to any state of facts that might be made by testimony under the allegations of the indictment, this court will assume that the court below submitted to the jury the law of the case, and all the law required by the testimony on any portion of same. Wright v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 146, 38 S. W. 1004; Jones v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 642, 31 S. W. 644; Bell v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 163, 25 S. W. 769; Hall v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 537, 28 S. W. 200; Yawn v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 205, 38 S. W. 785, 39 S. W. 105; Thurman v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 646, 40 S. W. 795; Mootry & Rolly v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 450, 33 S. W. 877, 34 S. W. 126; Stinnett v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 526, 24 S. W. 908; Holland v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 345, 20 S. W. 750; Alstrop v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 467, 20 S. W. 989; Johnson v. State, 29 Tex. App. 210, 15 S. W. 205; Lynn v. State, 28 Tex. App. 515, 13 S. W. 867. This rule is based evidently on the proposition and principle that in aid of the judgment of the court, the facts not appearing, it will be assumed that the court charged the jury the law applicable to the facts which might under the charge have been admitted. There is, however, an exception to this rule, and it is thus expressed by Judge Hurt in the case of Bryant v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 394, 33 S. W. 978, 36 S. W. 79: "In passing upon the charge of the court, the rule is that, if the charge as given was applicable to any state of facts, we must hold it sufficient, in the absence of a statement of facts, unless it contains an expression of the court as to the credibility of the witness or the weight to be given to the testimony, or unless it sums up the testimony or contains something which is calculated to arouse the passions and prejudice of the jury against the accused." So it is held ordinarily that a bill of exceptions, in the absence of a statement of facts, must show upon its face that it contains all of the evidence introduced on the trial in regard to the matter complained of. This rule is well illustrated and stated in the case of Suit v. State, 30 Tex. App. 323, 17 S. W. 460, where Judge Davidson uses this language: "A bill of exceptions should be full and explicit in its allegations, that the matters presented for revision may be comprehensible without recourse to inference, and its statements must be so full and certain that in and of itself it will disclose all that is necessary to manifest the supposed error. Willson's Cr. St. art. 2368. In the absence of a statement of facts, the rule is, the appellate court will only consider errors of a fundamental nature, and it will be presumed that all the material allegations contained in the indictment were proved by competent and sufficient evidence, and only such bills of exception will be considered as can be determined without a full knowledge of all the evidence in the case."

Applying these well-settled principles to the case at bar, we have this condition: Here is a defendant being prosecuted on a charge of rape of a woman under the age of consent. There had been sometime a former trial of the case. On that trial appellant had not testified. On the trial from which this appeal results he did testify. While, in the absence of a statement of facts, we do not know judicially what his testimony was, we must assume that it related to the charge, and that it is of a character which went to either a denial of the charge or possibly of a character which might have mitigated the punishment; otherwise, no testimony from him would have been admissible at all—that is to say, that no court would permit testimony by a witness, unless same had some relation to and was material, either as a defense of the charge or in mitigation of the punishment. To sustain appellant's position, we must, of course, hold that the statute is mandatory, and, where proof is made that appellant did not testify on the former trial, that under any state of case made by the evidence this action was erroneous. This, we believe, to be a correct legal principle: That in no case, where a plea of not guilty is entered, it is ever competent at any time or under any circumstances to make proof that appellant did not testify, or that he had failed to testify, on a former trial of his case. This was permitted in this case in the face of the statute.

While it is true the court instructed the jury to disregard such proof and pay no attention to it, we do not think for such a grave invasion of appellant's rights we could or should under any circumstances affirm the judgment of conviction against him, when that had been permitted which the law says shall not be done. If we should hold that, because the court withdrew the matter from the jury, the error is cured, then in every case in which any party is tried in this state such proof could be made and the error cured by instruction of the court not to regard same. To hold this would be to nullify the statute and to deny litigants its benefit. It is unimportant, in our opinion, whether in this case the question was asked purposely by the district attorney, knowing same to be improper, with a view of embarrassing defendant, or whether inconsiderately propounded, without having in mind the fearful consequences and results to appellant in so doing. It is the proof and reference which the law condemns. We think, for this error, even in the absence of a statement of facts, the case should be reversed, because under any conceivable statement of facts, short of an admission of guilt, such proof and reference were inadmissible, and must under all the decisions be treated as harmful.

For this error the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

Coke, Miller & Coke and L. L. Wood, for appellant.

LEVY, J. The suit was for damages, for loss and damage to certain articles claimed to have occurred in transit. Appellant contends, for error, that the evidence fails to show that the appellant railway company ever received for transportation, and lost or damaged, the articles claimed to be lost or damaged. The statement of facts in the record fully supports, we think, the contention of appellant in this respect. In the absence of such proof, the judgment rendered is not supported by evidence, and must be reversed.

The case is ordered reversed and remanded.

INTERNATIONAL & G. N. R. CO. v. HOOD. (Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 13, 1909.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 384*)—ACTIONS FOR EJECTION OF PASSENGER—INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE TO SUSTAIN.

In a suit to recover for the ejection of a passenger, error was assigned as to the refusal of a portion of a charge that plaintiff had no right to demand that the train be run back to the station to enable her to get her ticket which she left without any fault of defendant. Held that, conceding that the assignment included a refused request by her, shown in evidence, to stop the train to enable her to go back and get her ticket, there was no material error in refusing such portion of the charge, there being no evidence showing she had the right to demand that the train be stopped for such purpose, nor that such contention was made at the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 384.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 260*)—INSTRUCTIONS—DENIAL OF REQUESTS.

In a suit for putting a passenger off a train at a distance, at an improper place, after the conductor had been requested to let her and her mother, who accompanied her, off near the station, on discovering that they did not have tickets, there was no error in refusing defendant's request to charge that if at or about the place where she disembarked she or her mother requested to be let off, and that in putting them off the conductor used ordinary care, plaintiff could not recover, as it was sufficiently covered by the court's main charge that if she requested him to stop the train so that she might get off, and he caused it to stop as promptly as he reasonably could, she could not recover, though it stopped in an inconvenient place, but, if he disregarded her request after going a considerable distance beyond where it could have been safely stopped in the exercise of ordinary care, after receiving her request, and of his own accord, in a manifestly improper place for her to alight, he could not attribute the stopping to her request, and further that, if he stopped the train on her request, she could not recover, and that, if he did not stop it at her request, defendant was not liable if he was not wanting in ordinary care in choosing the place to stop.

Appeal from District Court, Navarro County; L. B. Cobb, Judge.

Action by T. J. Hood, as next friend of Alma Hood, against the International & Great Northern Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed on condition that a remittitur be entered in a certain sum.

King & Morris and Baker & Baker, for appellant. Richard Mays, for appellee.

TALBOT, J. T. J. Hood, the father of Alma Hood, a minor, brought this suit, as her next friend, against the International & Great Northern Railroad Company to recover damages sustained by Alma in an ejection by the railroad company's servants from one of its passenger trains. It is alleged, in substance, that appellee purchased from appellant's agent at Mertens on or about the 7th day of March, 1907, two round-trip tickets to Leroy; that one of said tickets was purchased for the said Alma Hood and the other for her mother; that Alma and her mother, upon the purchase of said tickets, took passage on appellant's south-bound passenger train, and that, when they arrived at Leroy, they left the train and visited relatives living several miles in the country; that on or about March 10, 1907, they returned to Leroy, and there boarded one of appellant's passenger trains to return to Mertens; that, after getting aboard of the train, they discovered they had left their return trip tickets in the wagon in which they had ridden to Leroy; that after the train left Leroy, and when only a very short distance therefrom, the conductor came into the coach in which Alma Hood and her mother were seated, taking up tickets, and that he was then informed by them that they had accidentally left their tickets on the seat of the wagon at Leroy, and, having no money with which to pay their fare, they requested the conductor to stop the train in order that Alma might run back and get the tickets, which he declined to do; that, after said request was declined, the said Alma and her mother stated to the conductor that they were without tickets and had no money, and asked him what he was going to do about it, to which he replied in a gruff manner that he was going to put them off the train; that the conductor did not stop the train at this time, but went to the other end of the car, taking up tickets, and then passed out of the car and remained for some little time, during which time the train had gotten faster and faster and under full headway; that, after the train had run about a mile and a half, the conductor returned into the car in which Alma and her mother were riding, and stopped the train and put them off in a deep cut; that the only assistance rendered plaintiff in alighting from the train was the action of the negro porter in placing a footstool on the ground, which was so negligently done that it turned over and was not straightened; that at the point where plaintiff was put off there was a deep ditch; that in getting off the train she had to hold on to the handle bar and swing off until she could lower herself to a point where she could stand upon the ground, and that so great was the distance from the steps of the platform of the car to the ground her lower limbs were necessarily and unavoidably exposed to the view of the porter and conductor, in consequence of which she suffered shame and humiliation. The defendant plead the general issue, contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff in entering appellant's car without a ticket, and that she got off the train voluntarily; that appellant did not know that plaintiff had entered its car without a ticket until its conductor approached her to take up her ticket, and, upon ascertaining that she did not have one, asked her her desire, whereupon she requested that she be allowed to get off, which request was complied with as soon as the train could be stopped. A jury trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $1,250, and the appellant appealed.

Appellant requested the trial court to charge the jury as follows: "You are instructed that, if you believe from the evidence that plaintiff got on this train without a valid ticket entitling her to travel on said train, then and in that event the company would be authorized to eject the plaintiff in such manner as not to endanger her safety and with the force that a person of ordinary prudence and care would exercise under like or similar circumstances. You are further instructed that the plaintiff would have no right to demand of the defendant to put her off at any other place than a regular station or stopping place, nor to demand that the train be run back to the station to enable her to get her ticket, which she had left without any fault of the railway company." This charge was refused, and its refusal is assigned as error. The only proposition accompanying the assignment is that "the plaintiff had no right to demand of the defendant that the train be run back to the station to enable her to get her ticket, which she had left, without any fault of the railway company, because Alma Hood's evidence shows that she asked the conductor to stop the train and let her go back and get her ticket, and the appellant had the right to have the law applied to this evidence so that the jury could not blame the appellant or be prejudiced against it for not stopping the train and allowing her to get off and get her ticket." As will be noted, the only error charged and complained of is the court's refusal to give the latter portion of the charge quoted to the effect that "the plaintiff had no right to demand of the defendant that the train be run back to the station to enable her to get her ticket, which she had left without any fault of the railway company." Whether the failure to give that particular portion of the charge was error is therefore the only question raised by the assignment. No evidence is pointed out by appellant calling for or authorizing the giving of such an instruction. The evidence cited in support of this assignment, under the statement required by the rules to be made, is that Alma Hood testified: "I simply asked him [the conductor] to stop the train, and let me go back and get my tickets and money, and he wouldn't do that." Under the head of "remarks" counsel say: "The undisputed evidence in this case shows that the plaintiff, accompanied by her mother, entered the appellant's coach without a ticket, having left the same on the seat of a wagon at the depot, and that they requested that the conductor stop the train and allow them to get off and get their tickets." A demand that the train be run back to the station to enable plaintiff to get her ticket is a materially different proposition to a simple request that the conductor stop the train and let plaintiff go back and get her ticket. But, if it should be conceded that the assignment or proposition was broad enough to include the request that the train be stopped to enable her to go back to Leroy and get her ticket, still we think there was no material error in refusing the instruction asked. There was no evidence offered with the view of showing that plaintiff had the right to demand that the train be stopped, and she allowed to go back to the station and get her ticket; nor do we find anything in the record indicating that any such contention was made by plaintiff during the trial of the case. It is not at all likely, we think, that the jury may have concluded from the simple request of plaintiff that the train be stopped to enable her to go back and get her ticket, that it was appellant's duty to grant the request, and that they were influenced thereby in rendering the verdict they did.

Complaint is made of the court's refusal to give the following charge requested by appellant, to wit: "If you believe from the evidence in this case that at or about the place where plaintiff's daughter disembarked from said train; that plaintiff's daughter or her mother, who accompanied her, requested the conductor to let them off at said place, and that in putting them off of said train the conductor used ordinary care (that is, such care as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under such or similar circumstances), you are instructed that the plaintiff cannot recover in this case." There was no error in refusing this charge because it was sufficiently covered by the court's main charge. Touching this issue, the court instructed the jury: "That if plaintiff requested the conductor to stop the train, so that she might get off, and he complied with her request, and caused the train to be stopped as promptly as he reasonably and properly could, then she could not recover, though the train did stop in an inconvenient place for alighting. But if the conductor disregarded her request to stop the train, and after going a very considerable distance beyond where the train could have been properly and safely stopped, in the exercise of ordinary care, after receiving her request, and of his own motion stopped the train in a manifestly improper place for her to alight, he could not properly attribute the stopping to her request." He further charged that, if the conductor stopped the train on plaintiff's request, she could not recover; that, if he did not stop the train at her request, yet, if he was not wanting in ordinary care (ordinary care being defined) in choosing the place to stop the train, the defendant was not liable. In Railway Co. v. Hood, 118 S. W. 1119, a companion case to the one at bar, it was held that the refusal of a charge identical with the one under consideration and practically under the same state of facts was not error.

It is assigned that the verdict of the jury is excessive, and we think the assignment well taken. The only element of damage submitted by the court's charge was the alleged shame and anguish of mind suffered by Alma Hood by reason of the exposure of her lower limbs while getting off of appellant's train. The testimony of Alma Hood, who will hereafter be referred to as plaintiff, and that of her mother, is the principal and material testimony upon the question. She testified, so far as we deem it necessary to state, as follows: "When the train stopped and he told us to come on and get off, neither the conductor nor the porter rendered us any assistance whatever. Neither the porter nor the conductor took my suit case or valise to take it off for me. We took them ourselves. When we walked out of the car and got down on the steps to get off, the conductor was standing on the platform of the train, and the porter was standing out on a little knoll against the embankment. In getting off, neither the porter nor conductor assisted us. We had a suit case and a little box. I was carrying the suit case and mamma was carrying the box. It was a little pasteboard box. Neither the porter nor the conductor offered to take the suit case from my hands as I was getting off. I held it in my hand and swung down with the other hand. They put a footstool for us to step on in getting off the train, but it had fallen down and was down on one side. They did not stand it up when they saw it had fallen down. There was a ditch on the side of the track where we got off, a deep ditch. The stool had fallen over, and, in order to strike the bottom in swinging off the steps, I had to hold my suit case in one hand and hold the handle bar with the other and swing off, and I just could reach the stool with my toes while hanging to the handle bar. This negro porter was standing over on a sort of knoll on the side of the embankment opposite to where I got off, and the conductor was standing up on the platform. In my effort to get off there, I think I exposed some of my person. I do not remember whether the wind was blowing through that cut or not. I was embarrassed by having to stretch down there that far, and I felt ashamed because I thought my lower limbs were exposed to the porter standing on the knoll. The reason I thought my lower limbs were exposed to the gaze of that negro porter was because I had to stretch down so far. I felt like they were any way. They felt to me as if they were exposed. While we were getting off, and while the train was moving off and leaving us there, I saw the passengers on the train looking out to see what was going on. This place where they put us off was not in sight of the depot. When we got back to the depot, we found our purse and tickets. We staid at the depot a little while, and then went to the boarding house, which was about 500 yards from the depot. 'I don't know exactly what time we got away from Leroy. It was late that evening. We used the same tickets. My father met us at Mertens. * * * I did not request him to stop the train in that deep cut and voluntarily get off. I got off the train because he told us to get off. The conductor's manner towards us was very crabbed." Mrs. T. J. Hood testified substantially as did the plaintiff, her daughter, and that the conductor in telling them that he would not stop the train for Alma to go back to the station to get their tickets spoke in a gruff sort of way; that all he spoke was in a very gruff way; that, when her daughter was getting off the train, she exposed her lower limbs. This evidence does not show any injury whatever to the plaintiff, Alma Hood, in consequence of her ejection from appellant's train, except the shame, humiliation, and mental distress resulting from the exposure of her lower limbs to view in alighting from said train. The shame and humiliation experienced was due according to her own testimony to the fact that her lower limbs were exposed to the gaze of the negro porter of the train. She says: "I was embarrassed by having to stretch down there that far, and felt ashamed because I thought my lower limbs were exposed to the porter standing on the knoll." We regard the evidence clearly insufficient to authorize the verdict of $1,250 returned by the jury and upon which judgment was entered. Therefore, unless the ap-pellee shall enter a remittitur in the sum of $750, the judgment of the court below will be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial. The evidence was sufficient to show negligence and liability on the part of the appellant, and that a judgment for $500 is not excessive. If, therefore, the remittitur above suggested is entered within 15 days, the judgment for $500 will be affirmed.

ALEXANDER v. ST. LOUIS SOUTHWESTERN RY. CO. OF TEXAS.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 6, 1900.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 27, 1900.)

1. TRESPASS (§ 67*) — INJURIES CAUSED BY FREIGHT—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action against a railroad company for injury to plaintiff's wife caused by the company's agents going upon his premises in the nighttime, while plaintiff was absent, in discharge of their duty, and causing her fright and humiliation, where the evidence tended to show that plaintiff had been accused of taking defendant's property, and that the visit of defendant's agents was made to secure evidence against plaintiff, and that the wife was so frightened that she fainted and remained unconscious for a considerable time, had suffered from "drawing" of the nerves, and had since been unable to perform her household duties, it was error to direct a verdict for defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespas, Cent. Dig. § 150; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 433*) — TORTS — ACTS OF CORPORATE AGENTS—SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where the evidence showed a trespass on the part of defendant corporation's agents in seeking evidence against plaintiff accused by defendant of having stolen its property, whether the agents were acting within the line of their duty should have been left to the jury, though there was no direct evidence that defendant had authorized the trespass.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1706, 1719, 1738, 1744; Dec. Dig. § 433.*]

3. DAMAGES (§ 208*)—INJURIES FROM FREIGHT—CAUSE OF INJURY—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where plaintiff claims that bodily injury resulted to his wife from fright caused by a willful trespass by defendant, it should be left to the jury to determine whether the shock and results were proximately caused by defendant's acts, and whether the injury should have been foreseen as a natural and probable consequence of such acts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 54; Dec. Dig. § 208.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 139*)—PROVINCE OF COURT AND JURY—DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

Unless the evidence is so conclusively one way that there is no room for reasonable minds to differ as to the conclusion to be reached, the trial judge should not direct a verdict.

Appeal from District Court, Hill County; W. C. Wear, Judge.

Action by W. J. Alexander against the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Company of Texas. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Morrow & Smithdeal, for appellant. E. B. Perkins, D. Upthegrove, and Scott, Sanford & Ross, for appellee.

RAINEY, C. J. This is a suit instituted by W. J. Alexander, appellant, against the railway company, appellee, to recover damages for injury to his wife caused by the railway company's agents in going upon his premises in the nighttime, while he was absent, and in the discharge of their duty, and causing her fright and humiliation. Defendant answered by general denial, and specially that the acts of its servants in going upon plaintiff's premises were not in performance of any duty they owed defendant, but were beyond the scope of their authority. A trial was had before a jury, and upon the conclusion of the evidence the court gave a peremptory instruction for the defendant, and thereupon verdict and judgment were rendered accordingly, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

The evidence tends to show: That Alexander had been accused of taking property from the railway company; that O. K. Wheeler, the company's special agent and detective, whose duty it was to investigate and look up the evidence relative to said charge, procured C. G. Denman, the company's station agent at Hillsboro, and Roy Scarbrough, an employe under Denman, to assist him, and the three went to the residence of said Alexander in the city of Hillsboro, at night, about 11 or 12 o'clock, to secure a piece of lumber it was charged Alexander had appropriated, as evidence to sustain said charge. Alexander was not at home at the time, which was known to said parties; but they knew Mrs. Alexander was at home. Said parties went into the yard and near the window of the room in which plaintiff's wife was at the time, and there was a street light shining across the yard which rendered it easy for plaintiff's wife to see the said parties.

Plaintiff's wife testified as follows: "I am acquainted with O. K. Wheeler. I understand that he is detective with the railway company of the defendant. I remember the occasion when some men about the 1st day of May this year at night came into my yard one night. I remember the circumstances of their coming there. O. K. Wheeler called at my house a few days prior to that time, and then I gave him a statement, and in the conversation he drifted into chickens and was telling much about Mr. McDonald's chickens, and he went out and called me, and asked me if I would mind to show him the chickens. I told him I did not mind it. I did not think at the time he wanted me to show him chickens. He seemed apparently to be looking at lumber piled in the yard. That was in the daytime. He saw all of the piles of lumber that were there. He did not at that time mention the lumber at all. I told him that day that my husband was not at home. I did not say anything to him as to how long I expected my husband to be away from home. That was about a week before the men came there at night. I guess Mr. Wheeler was out in the yard about 5 or 10 minutes when he came there around through my premises. He was in the house I guess 30 minutes or more. He did not say anything to me about the lumber on that occasion. About a week after that somebody came to my house about midnight. It was Mr. Wheeler, C. G. Denman, and Scarbrough. I mean O. K. Wheeler, the detective of the company, and Denman, the local agent of the defendant, and Mr. Scarbrough, who was in the employ of the defendant at that time. That was about 12 o'clock at night that they came there. When I first saw them on my premises, they were crossing to the south side. I did not recognize them when I first saw them. I was lying on the bed. I got up to the window thinking I would get my pistol, and when I got to the window I recognized Mr. Wheeler first and Mr. Scarbrough and Mr. Denman. The light shone across the yard, and just as they passed I recognized them, and that is when I got so frightened. I fainted. I don't know how long I was in that condition. Nobody was with me but Mr. Gibson and my little son, who was in the next room. No one at all was in the room with me. I don't know how long I remained in that condition; but it was day before I could remember anything, and as soon as I could I got up and went out to see. All three of them were in my yard. I became so frightened. I did not know what they were up to. I heard Mr. Alexander speak that they were trying to get some evidence against him, and the thoughts of it frightened me. It seems like my heart gave down on me, and I fell and fainted away, and I remained in that condition I don't know how long. I have never seen a well day since that time. At times I have been able and have tried to get out, and walked out several times. Dr. Buile advised me to walk up to his office several times. I went to Waco and stayed a while and rode out several times while there, and I walked out every chance that I felt like going. I have been to Hubbard City and to Sulphur, Okl.; but the spells continued to come on me, and I grow weaker all the time. My nerves draw very badly. It seems like every nerve in my body draws, and finally my heart becomes weak, and I feel it falling out, and I become perfectly unconscious. I have since that time suffered with the drawing of my nerves. They just draw; every nerve in my body seems to draw at times. The fact that I saw these men there at that particular hour of the night, and the fact that I heard what they had charged my husband with, had the effect on me mentally to produce a very disagreeable feeling of mind. No one would know what it was unless they would pass through it. Since that time I have not been able to perform my household duties. I did all my work except my washing up to that time."

Said parties went upon said premises without the consent of plaintiff or his wife, nor were they possessed of any legal process authorizing such invasion.

Such being the evidence, was it error in the court to instruct a verdict? We think so. On the proposition of appellee that said parties were not acting within the scope of their authority, we think the issue was raised, and should have been submitted to the jury. The evidence shows a trespass on the part of said parties, and there is no evidence showing the company authorized the commission of a trespass; but corporations are responsible for damages resulting from torts committed by agents while in the performance of a duty for which they have been employed. It should have been left to the jury to determine whether or not the said parties were acting within the line of their duty in hunting up evidence to sustain the charge against Alexander.

The other proposition made by appellee is, in effect, that the injury, if any, was not the result of fright from fear of bodily injury, but from humiliation at the fact that the parties were in the premises searching for evidence to sustain the charge of theft against her husband. Our courts have held that an action will lie for bodily injury resulting from fright caused by the wrongful act of another. Hill v. Kimball, 76 Tex. 210, 13 S. W. 59, 7 L. R. A. 618; Railway v. Hayter, 93 Tex. 239, 54 S. W. 944, 47 L. R. A. 325, 77 Am. St. Rep. 856, and authorities there cited. In the case last cited, Judge Gaines, speaking for the court, says: "We conclude when a physical injury results from a fright or other mental shock, caused by the wrongful act or omission of another, the injured party is entitled to recover his damages, provided the act or omission is the proximate cause of the injury, and the injury ought, in the light of all the circumstances, to have been foreseen as a natural and probable consequence thereof. In our opinion, as a general rule, these questions should be left to the determination of the jury." So in this case, under all the circumstances shown by the evidence, it should have been left to the jury to determine whether or not the shock and results, as claimed by appellant's wife, were proximately caused by the acts of the parties, and whether or not the injury ought to have been foreseen as a natural and probable consequence of such acts.

It is the province of the jury to determine all questions of fact, and, unless the evidence is so conclusively one way that there is no room for reasonable minds to differ as to the conclusion to be reached, the trial judge should not direct a verdict.

For the error in directing a verdict, the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

MISSOURI, K. & T. RY. CO. OF TEXAS v. DUNBAR.[†]

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 6, 1909.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 27, 1909.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 303*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—CARE REQUIRED.

A carrier is charged with a high degree of care in guarding against possible dangers to passengers and in providing the safest means for alighting which are known and have been tested.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1224; Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 321*)—INJURIES TO PASSENGER—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICATION TO CASE.

A charge, that a carrier was liable to a passenger injured in alighting if its failure to provide a safe step box was the proximate cause of the injury, was not erroneous, though the use of the box on a rough pavement was alleged as the proximate cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1247, 1404; Dec. Dig. § 321.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 260*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS.

Where the jury were correctly instructed in the general charge and in a special charge as to defendant's duty to provide means for use by passengers in alighting, it was not error to refuse another special charge to the same effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 651-659; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 260*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS.

Where a clause in the general charge correctly submitted the issue as to defendant's liability for neglect to provide means for use by passengers in alighting, a special charge submitting the same issue was properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 651-659; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 317*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—ACTION FOR INJURIES—EVIDENCE.

A passenger injured by the upsetting of a step box placed on a rough pavement as the means for alighting may show that step boxes used at the station had upset on other occasions when passengers stepped on them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1297; Dec. Dig. § 317.*]

6. DAMAGES (§ 134*)—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES—PERSONAL INJURIES.

Where a stout, healthy man, able to do any kind of work on his farm, fell in alighting from a train, and his injuries made him unable to do farmwork, $10,000 damages was not excessive.

Appeal from District Court, Hunt County; R. L. Porter, Judge.

Action by W. O. Dunbar against the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 108 S. W. 500.

Coke, Miller & Coke and Templeton, Craddock, Crosby & Dinsmore, for appellant. Pienon & Starnes and S. W. Tenley, for appellee.

BOOKHOUT, J. This was an action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by the appellee in alighting from one of the passenger trains of the appellant at Greenville, on the 14th day of November, 1905. It was alleged: That, when said train arrived at the station of Greenville, it was dark; that said train was backed up to the defendant's station on the second track from defendant's passenger station; that the passenger coach in which plaintiff was riding was backed some distance up said track to and near its said station house; that defendant and its agents had negligently failed to provide a platform or other safe means by which its passengers could alight in safety from its trains; that the defendant had negligently and carelessly provided a brick pavement to be used by its passengers in alighting from its passenger trains, and the said brick pavement was negligently constructed and was rough and uneven, in this, that the brick was not placed on a level, some projecting above, and others below one another, making it rough and uneven; that the said pavement had not been flushed with cement mortar so as to fill up the cracks and crevices between the bricks, some places being lower than others, and would hold water, and in the course and use of time had become in such condition as above described; that the defendant and its agents had negligently and carelessly provided a small box or footstool, which was badly worn and wholly unfit and unsafe for the purpose for which it was used, which it placed on said rough and uneven pavement for plaintiff and other passengers to use and step upon when alighting from its trains; that said box was too small to be safe for the purpose for which it was used; that the plaintiff, while exercising due care for his own safety, stepped from the bottom step of said car onto the box or footstool placed there by defendant, its agents and servants; and that by reason of the defective box and rough and uneven pavement the box or footstool slipped and turned over, causing him to fall backward with great force and violence against the steps and railings of the said car and into the said box, causing the injuries alleged.

Defendant answered by a general demurrer, a number of special exceptions not necessary to be here noted, a general denial, and a special plea of contributory negligence, to the effect that, if the plaintiff sustained any injuries at all, they were proximately caused and contributed to by his own negligence and want of ordinary care, that he was negligent in the manner in which he stepped from the platform of the coach, or in the manner in which he stepped upon the footstool, or in placing his foot on the said footstool or near the edge or the end thereof.

† Writ of error denied by Supreme Court.

or that he failed to look or heed how or where he was stepping upon the footstool, knowing all the time that the footstool was being used as a step box between the coach and the pavement upon which it was placed. There was also a plea of assumed risk. A trial before the court with the aid of a jury October 8, 1908, resulted in a verdict in favor of the appellee for $10,000, upon which judgment was duly entered. Appellant's motion for a new trial having been overruled, it duly perfected its appeal to this court.

Conclusions of Fact.

The appellee, W. O. Dunbar, while a passenger on the appellant's railroad, was injured in alighting from one of its cars at Greenville, Tex., on or about the 14th day of November, 1905, by the upsetting of the step box or footstool furnished by appellant to assist its passengers in alighting from its cars at Greenville. The appellant was guilty of negligence in failing to provide a platform at Greenville upon which its passengers could alight and in providing a footstool or step box which was defective and unsafe, and in furnishing a pavement, upon which its passengers were to alight, which was rough and uneven, and plaintiff's injuries were the direct and proximate result of appellant's negligence in some one or all of these respects, and by reason of said negligence he sustained injury and was damaged in the amount of the verdict and judgment.

The appellee was not guilty of negligence, and he did not assume the risk.

Conclusions of Law.

The first assignment of error challenges the correctness of the first clause of the court's charge, as follows: "That the defendant railroad company was not an insurer of the safety of the plaintiff on the occasion complained of by him; but it was required to exercise such a high degree of foresight as to possible dangers, and such a high degree of prudence in guarding against them, as would be used by very cautious, prudent, and competent persons under similar circumstances in providing the safest appliances that had been known and tested, to enable him to alight, and a failure to exercise such care is negligence." The propositions presented are: (1) That this charge is erroneous, in that it imposes upon the defendant with respect to the means and appliances provided for the use of passengers in alighting from its trains a higher degree of care than is required of it by law. The defendant was required to exercise ordinary and reasonable care only in providing such means and appliances, and not the "highest degree of care," as defined in the charge. And (2) that the charge in requiring of defendant such a high degree of foresight as to possible dangers to the plaintiff in alighting from the train and the like degree of prudence in guarding against such possible dangers to him in so alighting is erroneous and more onerous than is imposed by the law, because the defendant was required to do no more than provide against such dangers as could reasonably have been foreseen or anticipated by the use of that high degree of care, which very cautious and prudent and competent men would use, and not against every possible danger that might arise in the course of its business as a public carrier of passengers. Neither of these propositions is sustained. The charge is in accordance with the rule laid down by the decisions of the courts of this state and is correct. Railway v. Halloren, 53 Tex. 53, 37 Am. Rep. 744; Railway v. Wortham, 73 Tex. 25, 10 S. W. 741, 3 L. R. A. 368; Railway v. Welch, 86 Tex. 204, 24 S. W. 390, 40 Am. St. Rep. 829. A charge in all respects similar to the above was approved and held correct on a former appeal of this case. 108 S. W. 500.

Error is assigned to the third paragraph of the court's charge, as follows: "Therefore, if you believe from the evidence on the occasion complained of by plaintiff that the ground or pavement provided by defendant, where plaintiff was required to alight, was rough and uneven, and at said place that defendant had provided no platform on which its passengers were to alight from its train, but a box to step from its train, placed upon said pavement, and if you further believe from the evidence that by reason of said uneven pavement, if it was uneven, said box placed upon the same was caused to tilt over when plaintiff stepped thereon to alight, and he was injured as alleged by him, if he was injured, or if you believe from the evidence that said box was unfit or unsafe for the purpose for which it was used, and by reason thereof it tilted or turned over when plaintiff stepped thereon to alight, and he received injury, if any, as alleged, and if you further believe from the evidence that the defendant failed to exercise that high degree of foresight as to possible dangers to its passengers and that high degree of prudence in guarding against them as would be used by very cautious, prudent, and competent persons in providing said uneven pavement, if it was uneven, and placing said box thereon on which its passengers were to alight, or providing said box for said purpose, and if you further believe from the evidence that such failure, if any, was the proximate cause of the injury, if any, to plaintiff, as alleged by him, then and in either event you will find for the plaintiff. If you do not so find, you will find for defendant." It is contended that this charge, in so far as it directs the jury that if the defendant had provided no platform for passengers to alight from the train, but a box to step from the train placed upon the pavement, and that in so providing said box for such purpose the defendant failed to exercise that high degree of foresight as to possible dangers to its passengers and that high degree of care in guarding against them as would be used by very cautious, competent, and prudent persons, and such failure was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, to find a verdict in his favor, is erroneous, because the proximate cause of the accident, as alleged in the petition, was not the providing of said step box alone for use by passengers in alighting from the trains, but was the use of an alleged improperly constructed, defective, and worn step box upon an alleged rough and uneven pavement, and that the two combined made the box slip, move, and turn over, and caused the accident and injuries. This paragraph of the charge announced a correct proposition of law. It is clear that a public carrier is not only required to provide reasonably safe means whereby its passengers may alight from its cars, but the safest which are known and have been tested. See authorities above cited.

Error is assigned to the court's refusal to read to the jury appellant's requested charge No. 2, reading: "You are instructed that an accident which cannot be reasonably anticipated by the exercise of that high degree of care that a very careful, prudent, and cautious person under similar circumstances would have used is not actionable; and so, if you believe from the evidence in this case that the defendant, in the means that it had provided for passengers to alight from its train at the time and place of the accident, used the degree of care above defined, you will find for the defendant." The court had given a correct charge on contributory negligence. He further instructed the jury that the burden of proof was on plaintiff to make out his case by a preponderance of evidence. At the instance of defendant they were further instructed, in special charge No. 1, as follows: "In its provisions made for the alighting of its passengers from its trains, the defendant was not required to provide such means as to insure their safety. The measure of its duty in that respect was to use that high degree of care that very prudent and cautious persons under like or similar circumstances would have used, and a failure on its part to exercise such a degree of care in its provisions made for the use of its passengers in alighting from trains would be negligence. Unless therefore you believe from the evidence that the defendant was guilty of negligence in the provisions it had made for the alighting of its passengers from its trains at the time and place of the accident—that is, that it failed to use the degree of care above defined—and unless you further believe that such negligence of the defendant, if any, was the proximate cause of the injuries of the plaintiff, if any, your verdict should be for the defendant." And in special charge No. 6, as follows: "It was the duty of the plaintiff, in the manner in which he alighted from the train, to use that degree of care for his own safety, which a man of ordinary care and prudence under like circumstances and surroundings would have used. If therefore you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff, in the manner in which he stepped from the car to the footstool or step box, failed to use such care as a man of ordinary care and prudence would, under like circumstances, have used, and that such failure, if any, caused or contributed to cause the accident, you will find for the defendant, and this, even though you may believe that the defendant was guilty of negligence."

In view of the court's charge and the above special charges, there was no error in refusing special charge No. 2.

For the same reason there was no error in the court's action in refusing special charges Nos. 3 and 4, requested by appellant, the refusal of which is made the basis of its fourth and fifth assignments of error, and the same are overruled.

In the sixth assignment it is contended by appellant that the trial court erred in refusing special charge No. 5, as follows: "If you believe from the evidence that the stool or step box used by the defendant for its passengers to alight from its trains at the time and place of the accident was such a stool or step box as would have been used by persons of a very high degree of care and prudence under similar circumstances, and if you further believe that the pavement or platform upon which the step box was used was smooth so that the step box would not turn or tip over with a passenger in alighting from the train who himself was using ordinary care in stepping thereon from the steps of the coach, your verdict should be for the defendant." The third paragraph of the court's charge, previously quoted herein, groups the facts which the jury are instructed, if they find exist, they should then find for plaintiff, and they were further instructed, at the close of the same paragraph, "if you do not so find, you will find for defendant." This clause submitted to the jury the same issue sought to have been submitted by requested charge No. 5, and its refusal does not constitute error.

It is contended that the trial court erred in admitting the testimony of the witnesses Hall and Melton, to the effect that they had on different occasions seen footstools or step boxes turn over or slip about when passengers stepped upon them in alighting from the east line trains at Greenville. These witnesses had been meeting passengers on the arrival of the trains for the purpose of carrying them to their homes or to hotels and had occasion to notice these step boxes. Their evidence was admissible. Railway v. Dunbar, 108 S. W. 500. The testimony of the witnesses, the refusal to admit which is made the ground of the ninth assignment of error, was held inadmissible on the former appeal, and we concur in that holding. 108 S. W. 500.

The remaining assignments of error, that the verdict of the jury is contrary to the evidence and is excessive, are disposed of adversely to appellant in our conclusions of fact.

There is evidence tending to show that plaintiff was seriously and permanently injured by the fall, that he has suffered greatly, mentally and physically, and will continue to so suffer by reason of said injuries, that there is a chronic case of inflammation in one of his kidneys, and he is seriously injured in the lumbar region, and he suffers from irritability of the spine. Appellee was a farmer, and previous to being injured he was a stout, robust man able to perform any kind of work on his farm. He was in good health. Since being injured, he has not been able to do farmwork. There is nothing in the record to indicate that the verdict of the jury was the result of passion or prejudice. In view of these facts, we cannot say that a verdict for $10,000 is excessive.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from District Court, Johnson County; O. L. Lockett, Judge.

Suit by I. B. Wilson against Ella Moore and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. D. Green, for appellant. Ramsey & Odell, A. S. Bledsoe, H. P. Brown, and W. H. Bledsoe, for appellees.

BOOKHOUT, J. On the 5th day of December, 1907, the appellant brought this suit against appellee Ella Moore for damages in the sum of $1,000. It was alleged that said defendant on November 7, 1907, through one W. W. Barr, constable, wrongfully ejected plaintiff from a certain house and the contents thereof in which plaintiff was then carrying on the business of a photographer, of which contents plaintiff was the owner, and appropriated the same to her own use. On September 8, 1908, the plaintiff filed his first amended original petition, in which he made the remaining appellees defendants; the new defendant W. W. Barr being the constable of precinct No. 1 of Johnson county, Tex., and the others sureties on his bond as constable. He avers, in substance, that he was the owner and in possession of a leasehold interest in a certain picture gallery in Cleburne, Tex., and the contents thereof, in which he was carrying on the business of photographer; that on November 7, 1907, W. W. Barr, as constable, at the request of his codefendant, Ella Moore, with a void writ of restitution placed in his hands by Ella Moore, ejected the plaintiff from said premises and from the property situated therein and turned the same over to Ella Moore, who converted the same to her own use to the damage of the plaintiff in the sum of $1,200, for which plaintiff prayed judgment. The defendant Ella Moore answered by a general denial, and specially denied that plaintiff had any leasehold interest on the house in question, but alleged that plaintiff occupied said house as her tenant from month to month, and that upon plaintiff's failure to pay the rent monthly in advance she had the right to declare the lease forfeited, and that, the plaintiff having failed to pay his rent, she declared said rental contract forfeited and demanded of plaintiff the possession of the premises. She obtained the possession of said premises by the execution of a writ of restitution by said constable issued on a judgment in which she was plaintiff and Wilson was defendant, and she further answered that plaintiff's property was taken under a mortgage executed thereon by plaintiff to the Traders' State Bank, and sold, and therefore she was not liable for same. The remaining defendants pleaded general denial, and, in substance, the same issue as these defendants. On the 16th day of March, 1906, the case was tried by the court and a jury, and judgment rendered in favor of all the defendants that plaintiff take nothing. Plaintiff's motion for new trial having been overruled, he perfected an appeal to this court.

The first assignment of error presented in the brief of appellant complains of the court's action in refusing a requested charge instructing a verdict in his favor. The evidence shows that the defendant Mrs. Ella Moore was the owner of a two-story business house in the city of Cleburne, the second or upper story of which she rented to one T. M. Mills for the term of three years in consideration of $10 per month, payable monthly in advance, with the right to transfer the lease subject to the consent of the lessor. Mills entered into possession of said premises and conducted a photographic business therein until the month of August, 1907, when he sold the business to I. B. Wilson, to whom Mrs. Moore consented the lease could be sold on condition that he pay the rent of $10 per month monthly in advance. Wilson entered into possession and conducted the photographic business therein, but, having failed to pay the rent monthly in advance, an unlawful detainer suit was filed on October 17, 1907, against him in the justice's court of precinct No. 1 of Johnson county. On November 22, 1907, a writ of restitution was issued out of the justice's court of precinct No. 1 of Johnson county directed to the sheriff or any constable of Johnson county, commanding him to deliver to said Ella Moore the possession of the premises, describing same, and being the same premises occupied by I. B. Wilson. This writ was regular on its face. It was placed in the hands of the constable of said precinct, who executed the same on the 30th day of November, 1907. At the time of the execution of said writ, there was contained in said photographic establishment certain instruments and material belonging to I. B. Wilson, consisting of a portrait camera, a portrait lens, a portrait stand, a set of furniture, and a few other articles of the alleged value of several hundred dollars. As to how the writ was executed, and what took place at the time and how the property of Wilson came to be locked up therein, is best stated in the language of the constable, Barr. He testified: "When I went over there to see the plaintiff in November, 1907, I had a writ for him. I had a writ of restitution which I served on him. I told him as an officer of the law I would have to put him out of the house. He says, 'You won't have to put me out, I'll get out'; and he went downstairs and I locked up the doors, and nailed up the windows. There was a photograph gallery outfit in the house, and I locked it up in there under the directions of this writ, which was issued by the justice of the peace of precinct No. 1, Johnson county, Tex. The lawyers for Mrs. Moore instructed me to do this. I don't know how many, but I told different ones that I had locked up this place of the plaintiff. I told Albert Bledsoe, one of the attorneys for the defendants in this case, that I had locked up the house and nailed it up, etc. I don't know that I told him about the things being in there, but I suppose he knew it. I don't know that he asked me about that. I think I turned the key over to Mrs. Moore or Mr. A. S. Bledsoe, one; I don't remember which." Upon cross-examination he testified: "Yes, sir; this is a writ I had. This is the one I had when I locked up the premises referred to. This writ came into my possession the 22d day of November, 1907, at 1:30 o'clock p. m., and I executed it on the 30th day of November, 1907. I went to Mr. Wilson, the plaintiff, between the time I got this writ and the time I executed it several times and talked to him with reference to his giving possession of the premises. I think I went some three or four times anyway. I was trying to get him out of the premises and to take his stuff out of the building. I don't think he ever told me he would take his stuff out of the building at any of these times I talked to him. I think it was the evening before I closed up the place I had a conversation with Mr. Wilson, and he told me that he had some work in his place of business, and that it would be a loss to him to close it up just then; that some parties had work there and he wanted until the next day to get it out or finish it for them. I never did take possession of plaintiff's property only in the manner I have indicated; that is, by nailing it up. I tried to get him to take his goods and stuff out of the building two or three different times. I think I put another lock than the one already on the door on there. Mr. Wilson did not turn over the keys to the building to me, and I got another lock and put on the door. It was after I went up there and told him I had a right under the law to put him out if he resisted. Then he got out the next morning I believe it was. He consented to get out the next morning. Mrs. Moore nor no one for her directed me to take possession of Mr. Wilson's property. She wanted the building I understood, wanted possession of the building. I was directed to get possession of the building, and was not directed to take possession of the goods. I executed this process on the 30th of November, 1907. This is my handwriting on the back of this writ handed me. I did that at the time I executed the writ."

Wilson testified: "Mr. Barr came up and said he had a writ to close my business, and I said all right, if you have got authority to close it, go ahead and close it, and he closed it up and I went out. He nailed up my back windows and front windows and partition doors, and asked me if I would get out, and I said, 'No; you are an officer, and you can put me out'; and he says, 'I'll have to do it,' and he put me out and asked me if I would give him the key and I told him no, and he got another lock and locked it up. I went out of the house. This outfit was in there as I stated when he locked it up. I went out on the street and have never been back there since that time. I think the place remained locked up there about four months. I was in town when it was opened up. I think it was about four months before it was opened after it was locked."

The evidence further shows that the Traders' State Bank of Cleburne had a mortgage on all the property, which not being paid, the property was taken possession of by the bank, and, after notice to Wilson, the bank sold the same to satisfy said mortgage. This property was never claimed by Mrs. Moore or any one for her, nor did she authorize any one to take the same. Under these facts, the court did not err in refusing to instruct a verdict for appellant. The plaintiff based his right of recovery against appellee Mrs. Moore on the allegation that he had a contract with her entitling him to the possession of the rented premises from the 1st day of January, 1907, to the 1st day of January, 1909, which allegation she denied, she alleging that the only contract between herself and appellant was a rental contract for one month and from month to month at the agreed rental of $10 per month, payable monthly in advance, and that appellant was only to have possession of said premises so long as he paid said rental in advance, and that, if the rent was not paid in advance, the contract should terminate, and the court having submitted in his charge this issue to the jury, and the jury having found in favor of appellee, appellant would not be entitled to recover any damages from said appellee by reason of being evicted from said premises. The jury found that the plaintiff Wilson did not have a lease on the premises as alleged by him, but that the same had terminated by his failure to pay the rent monthly in advance as he had contracted to do and that he was not entitled to the possession of the same, and could not recover damages on the ground that he had been evicted from the premises. Again, this being a suit by a tenant against his landlord for wrongful eviction from the rented premises, and the undisputed testimony showing that the value of the use of the rented premises did not exceed the amount of the rent to be paid by him under his contract, he failed to show that he was damaged by reason of such eviction.

The trial court, after hearing the evidence, instructed a verdict in favor of the constable and sureties on his official bond. The writ of restitution under which the constable acted in ousting appellant from the premises was fair and regular on its face, and issued out of a court of competent jurisdiction and was a valid writ. It was the duty of the constable to execute the writ. Rice v. Miller, 70 Tex. 615, 8 S. W. 317, 8 Am. St. Rep. 630; Randall v. Rosenthal, 31 S. W. 822. If it be true that the writ issued on an irregular or even a void judgment, it would be sufficient to protect the officer where the writ is valid on its face and issued from a court of competent jurisdiction.

Again, the evidence fails to show that any of the defendants wrongfully converted any of the personal property of plaintiff. On the contrary, it shows that plaintiff was requested to remove his property from the rented premises, but refused to do so, and voluntarily left it therein; that none of the defendants made any claim to the same or assumed any ownership over the same, and no conversion is shown by the evidence. In order to charge one with a wrongful conversion of property, there must be an illegal assumption of ownership. Arwine v. Arwine, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. 196, § 155; Walker v. Simkins, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. 58, § 69; Johnson v. Barker, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. 115, § 283.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

FISHER, C. J. This is an action of trespass to try title, brought by appellant against Charles L. Pickett, P. B. Penny, and E. B. Penny, to recover lots 11 and 13, in block 118, of the town of Lubbock. Defendants filed a general demurrer, general denial, and a plea of not guilty, and specially pleaded that plaintiff claims title through a deed from W. E. Rayner and his wife, Alice Rayner, and that he took the title with notice of the claim of the estate of A. J. Shaw, and that subsequently he complained to Rayner of the defect in his title by reason of a prior conveyance under which Shaw claimed the land, and that Rayner refunded to appellant $65, which appellant accepted in payment for the lots in controversy. To this special plea appellant replied, in substance, that he had acquired the title to the lots sued for by warranty deed and paid the full value without actual or constructive notice of any prior conveyance made by his vendor, and believed at the time that he was acquiring good title; that, after the payment and purchase of the lots appellees informed him that one Shaw or his estate claimed the lots in controversy under a deed executed by W. E. Rayner, appellant's vendor, prior to the conveyance to the appellant, and that it had been duly registered prior to appellant's purchase, and the appellant, not knowing the truth, and believing these statements to be true, he wrote and demanded from Rayner a conveyance of other lots of equal value in lieu of the lots in controversy, and that Rayner remitted to him $65 and made no demand for a reconveyance, and appellant did not agree to make a reconveyance, and at no time reconveyed or relinquished his title to the lots, and did not accept the money so sent him by Rayner as a return of the purchase money, but as an indemnity on his warranty; that the appellant subsequently learned that the deed under which the estate of Shaw then claimed said lots and under which appellees now claim the lots was not duly acknowledged, and therefore was not duly recorded, so as to affect him with constructive notice of its existence, and he thereupon repudiated his acceptance of said money for any purpose. The said Rayner then being dead, he has since and now holds the money as the property of the estate of Rayner, intending to return it to the estate when a representative is qualified.

The case was tried before the court below and judgment rendered against the appellant and in favor of appellees for the lots on their cross-action. The appellant relies upon the following facts:

(1) A patent from the state of Texas to Hiram G. Ferris, assignee of the T. W. & N. G. Railway Company, dated June 14, 1878, and recorded in book 6, p. 154, of the Deed Records of Lubbock county.

(2) Deed from Hiram G. Ferris and wife, Julia E. Ferris, to Frank E. Wheelock and

W. E. Rayner, dated January 12, 1891, and recorded in book 5, p. 412, of the Deed Records of Lubbock county.

(3) Deed of dedication of streets and alleys, with map, from W. E. Rayner and F. E. Wheelock to the public for public use, dated January 15, 1891, and filed January 16, 1891, and duly recorded in the Deed Records of Lubbock county, platting and mapping the lands described in the above patent and deed in the town of Lubbock, Lubbock county, which shows lots 1 to 20, inclusive, in block 118, as well as other lots and blocks.

(4) A general warranty deed from F. E. Wheelock to W. E. Rayner, dated January 21, 1891, and filed February 26, 1891, and duly recorded, conveying to W. E. Rayner lots 11, 13, and 15 in block 118 of the town of Lubbock.

(5) A general warranty deed from W. E. Rayner and wife, Alice Rayner, to the appellant M. G. Abernathy, dated April 18, 1903, conveying lots 11, 13, and 15, in block 118, of the town of Lubbock, filed and recorded May 4, 1903.

The first four instruments above mentioned were also introduced in evidence by appellees, and, in addition, the appellees introduced in evidence a deed of date March 9, 1891, from W. E. Rayner to F. E. Wheelock, conveying the lots in controversy. This deed was filed March 16, 1891, and recorded in the Deed Records of Lubbock county. This deed was not properly acknowledged, but its execution by Rayner was sufficiently established. Appellees also introduced in evidence a deed from F. E. Wheelock to A. J. Shaw, dated August 2, 1904, and filed for record February 25, 1905, which deed was duly recorded in the Deed Records of Lubbock county, and conveys lots 11 and 13, in block 118. They also introduced a certified copy of the will and order of the probate court from the records of Knox county, Ill., of A. J. Shaw to M. A. Shaw, dated June 18, 1891, and probated in July, 1901, and recorded in book 16 of the records of Lubbock county, devising and bequeathing to M. A. Shaw, his wife, all property of every kind and description which the testator may possess at the time of his death. This will was duly probated, and shows that Shaw died at Galesburg, Ill., the 26th of July, 1901. They also introduced deed from M. A. Shaw to Charles L. Pickett, dated February 15, 1907, filed for record February 21, 1907, and recorded in the Deed Records of Lubbock county. This deed conveyed all of lots 11 and 13, in block 118, of the town of Lubbock. They introduced warranty deed from Charles L. Pickett to P. B. and E. B. Penny, conveying to them an undivided two-thirds interest in the lots in controversy. Defendants also introduced a general warranty deed from W. E. Rayner to W. R. Yates, of date April 23, 1891, and filed for record April 27, 1891, and duly recorded in the Deed Records of Lubbock county, containing the following description of the property conveyed: "All the lots now owned by me in the town of Lubbock, Lubbock county, Texas, in the following blocks, to wit: Block 118, and other blocks in the town of Lubbock, Lubbock county, Texas, as the same appears upon the map of said town recorded in book 5, pp. 384-5 of the Deed Records of said county," reciting a consideration of $7,000 paid. They also introduced a quitclaim deed from W. R. Yates and wife to Alice Rayner, dated November 23, 1894, filed November 30, 1894, recorded in book 8, p. 70, of the Lubbock county Deed Records, conveying among other lots 11, 13, and 15, in block 118, of the town of Lubbock. The deed from W. E. Rayner and wife, Alice Rayner, introduced by the plaintiff, is a general warranty deed dated April 18, 1903, and filed for record May 4, 1903, and conveys lots 11, 13, and 15, block 118, in the town of Lubbock; this being the same deed introduced by the plaintiff as above set out. The deed from Rayner to Yates and from Yates and wife to Alice Rayner were offered in evidence by the appellees as links in the chain of appellant's title for the purpose of charging the appellant with notice that Rayner had conveyed to Yates only such lots as he at that time owned in block 118, and other lots in the town of Lubbock, and that he had nothing left to convey out of that block when he and wife executed the deed to appellant.

On the other issue of fact in the case there is evidence which justifies the conclusion reached by the trial court that the appellees were not estopped by reason of the facts pleaded by appellant, and that the appellant, when he discovered that Rayner had previously sold the lots, called his attention to that fact and requested a conveyance of other lots in lieu of those in controversy. He was informed by Rayner that he owned no other lots in Lubbock, and he thereupon remitted to appellant the sum of $65, represented by a check which was in Rayner's handwriting, with the following notation in the left-hand corner: "In full payment for lots 11 and 13, in block 118 of the town of Lubbock." This check was received by the appellant and was cashed. The evidence shows that the appellant purchased the lots in controversy for a valuable consideration, and at the time had no actual notice of the conveyance from Rayner to Wheelock, which deed was recorded, but not properly acknowledged.

From the facts, as stated, only two questions arise: First. Could the appellant in deraigning title omit the deeds from Rayner to Yates and from Yates and wife to Alice Rayner? Are they instruments in the line of his title which would put him upon notice that Yates only acquired such lots in block 118 as were then owned by Rayner on April 23, 1891, the date of the execution of the deed? As before said, subsequent to this, on November 23, 1894, Yates and wife conveyed the lots in controversy to Alice Rayner. These two deeds were properly recorded prior to the time that W. E. Rayner and wife executed their conveyance to the appellant of date April 18, 1903. We are of the opinion that the existence of these deeds is sufficient to impart notice to the appellant of the state of Rayner and wife's supposed title at the time that they attempted to convey to him in 1903.

The other question in the case is, in effect, disposed of by the findings of fact. The draft from Rayner to the appellant, which he accepted and cashed, states upon its face that it was in full payment for the lots in controversy. These facts are sufficient to conclude appellant, and he cannot relieve himself of the effect of this transaction by now offering to return the money and reasserting a claim to the lots in controversy.

Judgment affirmed.

WILLIAM CARLISLE & CO. v. KING et al.
(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 21, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 18, 1909.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 39*)—MISTAKE—REFORMATION OF DEED.

An equitable action to correct mistakes in field notes in deeds to a party's predecessors in title would be barred by four years' limitations under Rev. St. 1895, art. 3358, providing that every action other than for recovery of real estate, for which no limitation is otherwise prescribed, shall be brought within four years after the right of action accrues.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 195; Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

2. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 32*)—"STALE" DEMANDS—ACTION TO CORRECT DEED 40 YEARS OLD.

A suit to correct a mistake in a deed, brought more than 40 years after its date, with no excuse pleaded or proved for the delay, will be deemed a "stale" demand.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reformation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 119-121; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, p. 6622.]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 231*)—NOTICE—FILING DEED FOR RECORD—EFFECT.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 4607, provides that instruments required to be recorded shall be considered as recorded from the time they are deposited for record. Article 4642 provides that such instruments shall take effect, as to subsequent purchasers for value without notice, from the time they are acknowledged, proved, or certified, and delivered to such clerk to be recorded, and from that time only. Held, that a deed properly acknowledged or proved and certified is as effectual as notice, as if it had been duly and properly recorded, from the date it is properly deposited for record, and the person depositing it owes no duty to make inquiry as to whether it has been, in fact, recorded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 520; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 231*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—RECORD AS NOTICE—CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE.

A recorded deed, by virtue alone of the record, is constructive notice only of what appears on its face.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 515; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 230*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE—RECITALS IN CHAIN OF TITLE.

A purchaser of land is bound to take notice of the recitals in a patent forming a link in his chain of title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 502; Dec. Dig. § 230.*]

6. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 230*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—RECORDS—NOTICE.

Where from the recitals of a recorded deed, taken in connection with the field notes of the patent to the land and the lines of abutting surveys, an error in the field notes clearly appeared, and the only way in which the calls could harmonize and the survey be made to close was to take the call "east to the east line" as intended for "west to the west line," which would make clear the grantor's intention to convey certain land, the deed was constructive notice of the conveyance of that land, to a subsequent purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 502; Dec. Dig. § 230.*]

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 230*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—EVIDENCE OF PAYMENT—RECITALS IN DEED.

A recital in a deed of payment by the grantee is not evidence of such payment to make him a bona fide purchaser, as against others claiming under another deed.

Appeal from District Court, Trinity County; Gordon Boone, Judge.

Action by E. C. King and others against William Carlisle & Co. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hill & Hill and J. P. Stevenson, for appellant. Stevenson & Stevenson and John S. Arnold, for appellees.

REESE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs in a suit instituted by E. C. King et al. against William Carlisle & Co. The land sued for is 160 acres, the south half of the J. S. A. Chessher 320-acre survey in Trinity county. As originally instituted the action was one simply in trespass to try title; but by amended petition plaintiffs alleged a mistake in the description of the land in the deed by J. S. A. Chessher and wife to one Burns, and in deed to their ancestor under which they claim title, and sought to have the mistake in the field notes corrected so as properly to describe the land which is alleged to have been intended to be conveyed. As set out in the petition, the land is described in the deed from Chessher to Burns as follows: "Beginning at the S. E. corner of a 320-acre tract of land, granted to James S. A. Chessher by virtue of his pre-emption certificate on the 25th day of July, 1860, Sam Houston, Governor of said state, and Francis M. White, Commissioner of General Land Office. The patent to said 320 acres is marked No. 65, vol. 31. Thence N. 75 deg. E. with the N. B. line of Spencer Adams survey, 1,175 varas, to a stake for the S. E. corner, a black oak bears S. 14 varas, a pine bears N. 5 deg. W. 2½ varas. Thence N. 536 varas the S. line of S. Whitmire's survey, a post oak bears S. 68 deg. W., 10 varas. Thence W. with said Whitmire's survey, 353 varas, the S. W. corner of said survey, a stake from which a pine bears N. 9 deg. E., 86 varas, another bears N. 55 deg. W., 72 varas. Thence N. a sufficient distance so by running E. to E. boundary of said survey of 320 acres, and thence south 15 deg. E. to the place of beginning, so as to include 160 acres of land." It is alleged that by mistake the beginning corner is described as the S. E. corner of the Chessher survey, when it should have been the S. W. corner, and that the call next to the last, instead of being "thence E. to the E. boundary of said 320-acre survey," should be "thence W. to the W. boundary," as intended by the grantors and grantees. Plaintiffs pray that the description be so corrected, and that they have judgment for the land as described by such corrected field notes. It is alleged that the deed from Chessher to Burns was executed March 19, 1861. Defendants answered by general demurrer and general denial, and specially excepted as follows: (1) That Chessher and wife are not made parties. (2) That suit to reform and correct the deed after the lapse of 40 years is a stale demand and barred by the statute of limitation of 10 years. Article 3360, Rev. St. 1895. (3) Reiterates the plea of 10 years' limitation since the date of the deed. (4) Amended petition sets up new cause of action, and plaintiff should be taxed with costs up to date of filing the same. (5) Plaintiffs fail to show knowledge on the part of defendants of the alleged intention of Chessher and wife. (6) That it is not alleged that such alleged intention of Chessher and wife is shown to have been expressed in writing. The general demurrer and special exceptions were overruled, and upon trial without a jury judgment was rendered for plaintiffs for the land sued for.

Conclusions of law and fact of the trial court are in the record, as well as a statement of facts. The material facts are as follows: The 160 acres sued for is a part of a tract of 320 acres patented to J. S. A. Chessher July 25, 1860. The patent field notes are as follows: "Beginning at the N. E. corner of the J. Hickman survey a stake, a pine bears N. 40 deg. E., 10 varas, another S. 53 deg. W., 5 varas. Thence S. 15 deg. E., 1,120 varas, to Hickman's S. E. corner. Thence S. 75 deg. W. with S. boundary line of said survey, 80 varas, to the N. W. corner of Sarah Fry survey a stake, a pine bears N. 36 deg. W., 6.2 varas, another N. 67 deg. E., 10 varas. Thence S. 15 deg. E. with Fry E. line, 1,200 varas, N. W. corner of a survey for Spencer Adams. Thence N. 75 deg. E. with the N. boundary line of said Adams survey, 1,175 varas, a stake for S. E. corner, a black oak bears S. 14 varas, a pine bears N. 5 W. 2½ varas. Thence N. 536 varas, the S. line of S. Whitmire survey, a post oak bears S. 68 deg. W. 10½ varas. Thence W. with said Whitmire's survey 353 varas the S. W. corner of said survey a stake from which a pine bears N. 9 deg. E. 8.6 varas, another N. 55 W. 72 varas. Thence N., 1,344 varas, to J. Y. Curry's S. line. * * * Thence W. on Curry's line, 300 varas, to his S. W. corner. Thence N. with same 264 varas. * * * Thence W., 310 varas, to beginning."

The following plat shows the location of the Chessher and surrounding surveys, upon which is shown the location of the 160 acres sued for according to the field notes as sought to be corrected, and east of the survey is shown the lines of the tract as literally described in the deed from Chessher to Burns:

By deed dated March 19, 1861, and recorded in deed records of Trinity county March 21, 1861, J. S. A. Chessher and wife conveyed to George Burns 160 acres of land, describing the same by the field notes herebefore set out as beginning at the S. E. corner of the Chessher survey. The records of Trinity county were destroyed by fire in the fall of 1872. This deed was afterwards, on August 20, 1892, deposited for record with the county clerk and was filed for record by him, and the date and time of filing indorsed on the deed; but it was not recorded and was not entered on the file register, but remained in the clerk's office until 1906, when, upon search made for appellee, it was found in the vault and was then refiled and recorded on March 7, 1906. The evidence authorizes the conclusion that it was not recorded at the time of filing because the fee was not then paid; but there is no evidence that any demand for the fee was made by the clerk. By the same description Burns conveyed the land to M. Nall by deed dated in 1868 or 1869. Plaintiffs are sole heirs of Nall, who died in 1875. There is no administration on his estate.

Appellants claim title under the following conveyances: (1) Deed from J. S. A. Chessher and wife to Nancy Williams, dated March 29, 1862, duly recorded in 1862 and re-recorded in 1881, conveying 158 acres off of the east end of Chessher survey. (2) Deed from Nancy Williams to H. F. Craddock, January 19, 1872, recorded 1881, conveying the same land. (3) Deed from heirs of Craddock to appellants, March 9, 1900, duly recorded, conveying the same land. (4) Deed from heirs of J. S. A. Chessher to John W. Chessher, December 27, 1902, recorded January 21, 1903, conveying 160 acres, west end of the Chessher survey. (5) Deed from John W. Chessher and wife to appellants for same land, dated December 29, 1902, recorded January 21, 1903; consideration $640. The consideration paid by appellants for the land in each of the deeds was the fair market value of the tract conveyed, and at the time of said conveyance appellants had no actual notice or knowledge of the existence of the outstanding deeds under which appellees claim title.

We will consider the questions presented without reference in detail to the several assignments of error in the brief. We may say, in limine, that, if it were necessary to invoke the jurisdiction of equity to correct the field notes in the deeds to Burns and to Nall before appellees would be entitled to recover the land, appellees were barred of such relief by the statute of limitations of four years. Rev. St. 1895, art. 3358; McCampbell v. Durst, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 522, 40 S. W. 318; Wright v. Issacks, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 223, 95 S. W. 57; Isaacs v. Wright (Tex. Civ. App.) 110 S. W. 971. If not barred by the statute referred to, such proceeding to correct the mistake in the deed, more than 40 years after the date of the deed, with no excuse either pleaded or proven for such delay, should be regarded as a stale demand; such proceeding being purely equitable in its nature. But we have concluded that the mistakes in the deed can properly be corrected and shown to be mere clerical errors, by the deed itself, in connection with the lines and boundaries of the Chess-her and abutting surveys referred to in the deed, and also the field notes of the patent of the Chessher, and that it was not necessary to invoke the aid of a court of equity to correct the deed in order to entitle appellees to recover the land sued for.

Disregarding the count in the petition upon which appellees seek to have the deed corrected, they showed title by the face of the deed to the land sued for, unless defeated by appellants' defenses. This question is also intimately connected with appellants' defense that they are innocent purchasers without notice, which rests upon two grounds: First, that the deed to Burns was not in fact recorded, and the mere filing for record in 1892, without any record until 1906, was not constructive notice to appellants, who bought in 1900 and 1902, in good faith for value from those having the apparent title, and without actual notice of the deeds under which appellees claim; and second, that, even if the deed had been regularly recorded, it would not have operated as constructive notice to appellants that it covered any land on the Chessher survey which they proposed to buy.

The statute provides that every instrument of writing required to be recorded "shall be considered as recorded from the time it is deposited for record." Article 4607, Rev. St. 1895. Also, that such instrument, when delivered to the clerk of the proper court, to be recorded, "shall take effect and be valid as to all subsequent purchasers for valuable consideration without notice * * * from the time when such instrument shall have been so acknowledged, proved or certified and delivered to such clerk to be recorded and from that time only." Rev. St. 1895, art. 4642. Construing these statutory provisions, the Supreme Court, in Throckmorton v. Price, 28 Tex. 606, 91 Am. Dec. 334, held, in substance, that a deed properly acknowledged or proven, and certified and deposited with the clerk for record, was as effectual as notice as if it had been duly and properly recorded, from the date of such depositing. There has been no departure from the doctrine thus stated, so far as we can learn; but it has been consistently followed by later decisions of our Supreme Court. Land Co. v. Chisholm, 71 Tex. 527, 9 S. W. 479; Kennard v. Mabry, 78 Tex. 156, 14 S. W. 272; Lignoski v. Crooker, 86 Tex. 327, 24 S. W. 278, 788; Dean v. Gibson (Tex. Civ. App.) 48 S. W. 58. And similar statutes of other states have received the same construction. Wade on Notice, §§ 154-156, and cases cited; Hoffman v. Mackall, 5 Ohio St. 124, 65 Am. Dec. 649, and cases in note. There is no conflict between Throckmorton v. Price and Taylor v. Harrison, 47 Tex. 453, 26 Am. Rep. 304. Dean v. Gibson, supra; Wade on Notice, § 149.

Nor do we think that the effect of this rule is weakened in its application to the present case by the fact that, having left the deed with the clerk to be recorded in 1892, the grantees thereunder made no inquiry as to whether it had been recorded until 1906. The statute imposes no such duty upon them; but, as interpreted, goes upon the principle that, as the law imposes the duty upon the clerk to first and at once enter the instrument on the file register and then enter it upon the records, the person depositing the instrument for record has no further duty in the premises, but may rely upon the clerk doing his duty. The damage and injury to the subsequent purchaser without actual notice are as palpable in case of an instrument which is not entered on the file register nor recorded within a few days, if he purchases in the interim, as where the act of recording is delayed for years. The grantee is told by the statute, in substance and effect, that in order to give notice he need only deposit his deed with the clerk for record, and there is nothing in the letter or spirit of the statute, or any decision we have found, that would require of him at any time thereafter to make inquiry in order to determine that the instrument had been recorded, under penalty of losing the benefit of the statute. Of course, great hardship may result from the application of this rule, as unquestionably has resulted to appellants in the present case, who neither knew, nor could have reasonably suspected, the existence of the outstanding deed; but it cannot be said that either appellees or those under whom they claim are at fault. As said by the court in Throckmorton v. Price, supra: "In whatever manner the question is decided it must operate to the injury of innocent parties. There is therefore no equitable considerations favoring a preference of the parties on the one side over those of the other."

It may be that the provisions of the statute referred to were not intended to reach and cover such a case as the present, and protect the holder of an unrecorded deed against the claims of an innocent purchaser for so many years, when such holder could so easily have discovered that his deed had not been recorded; but we do not feel at liberty to give the statute such construction in the present status of the authorities on the subject. Treating the deed, then, as though duly entered upon the record at the time appellants purchased, did it operate as constructive notice of a conveyance by Chessher of land out of the Chessher survey which they were about to buy? We understand it to be the well-settled rule that a recorded deed, by virtue alone of the record, is constructive notice only of what appears on the face of the deed. McLouth v. Hurt, 51 Tex. 115; Carter v. Hawkins, 62 Tex. 395. In our judgment, however, it sufficiently appears upon the face of the deed, when read in the light of such facts as appellants were bound to know—that is, the recitals in the patent to the land they were buying and the lines of the abutting surveys called for in the deed—not only that there was error in the field notes, but what land, in fact, was intended to be conveyed. The recitals in the patent, in his chain of title, appellants were bound to know. Peters v. Clements, 46 Tex. 123; Russell v. Kirkbride, 62 Tex. 455. A decision of this question necessarily rests upon the same ground as that first referred to, that is, that the errors in the description can be corrected from the deed itself, and appellees could recover without a correction of the deed by an equitable proceeding for that purpose, and what is said here may also be considered as our reasons for our holding upon that question.

Any one examining the deed from Chessher to Burns would be struck with the ambiguous, contradictory, and inconsistent calls as they appear on the face of the deed. The first call is to begin at the southeast corner of the Chessher 320-acre survey, giving particularly the full history of Chessher's title to said survey in what would be considered a most unusual way, unless the land to be conveyed were a part of said survey, which was then in fact owned by Chessher, as shown by deed in appellants' chain of title. The line runs thence N. 75° E., which is the exact course of the south line of the Chessher, as shown by the patent, and calls to run with the north line of the Spencer Adams, which line is coterminous with the south line of the Chessher, begins at its southwest corner, and ends at its southeast corner. Further, this first call is for a line N. 75° E., 1,175 varas, which is the exact length, as well as direction, of the south line of the Chessher. Beginning at the southwest corner of the Chessher, and running thence N. 75° E., 1,175 varas, along the north line of the Spencer Adams, brings us to the southeast corner of the Chessher, as the end of this line. In no other possible way can the call for a line N. 75° E. along the north line of the Spencer Adams be met. Obviously, then, either the call to begin at the southeast corner of the Chessher must be discarded, or the call for the Spencer Adams line; but this is not all. At the terminus of this line running N. 75° E., 1,175 varas, from the southeast corner of the Chessher, this point is marked and identified in the deed by the same bearing trees, at the same distance as those which mark the southeast corner according to the field notes of the patent. The patent calls for the line running north from the southeast corner of the Chessher to strike the S. Whitmire south line at 536 varas. As this line, N. 75° E., is not parallel to the north line of the Whitmire, but converges towards it, running east, clearly at no point east of the southeast corner of the Chessher would a line running north to the south line of the Whitmire strike it at this distance; but we are not even driven to any conjecture about this, for the field notes of the Burns deed call for the third line to run with Whitmire's south line 353 varas to its southwest corner, and according to the field notes in the patent this is the exact distance to the Whitmire southwest corner from the point where a line running north from the southeast corner of the Chessher strikes the Whitmire's south line.

Taking the field notes as they read in the deed and running north from the end of the first line N. 75° E., 1,175 varas, from the southeast corner of the Chessher, it clearly appears, from the field notes of the patent that such line would strike the south line of the Whitmire 1,175 varas further from its southwest corner than the distance called for in the deed; but, to remove all doubt about this line, the field notes of the deed, at the point where this line running north strikes the south line of the Whitmire, identify this point by exactly the same bearing trees, etc., as are called for in the patent to mark a point at which such line would reach the Whitmire south line, if run north from the Chessher southeast corner, harmonizing with the call for the third line in the deed—W. 353 varas, to the southwest corner of the Whitmire. Now if we take this call for the southeast corner of the Chessher as the beginning, as intended for the southwest corner it harmonizes exactly with the calls for the Spencer Adams north line, with the bearing trees at the southeast corner of the Chessher and with the calls for south line and southwest corner of the Whitmire as shown by the field notes of the patent. We think that there could be no hesitation or doubt in the mind of any one from these facts and circumstances that the call for the southeast corner as the beginning corner was a clerical error and was intended for the southwest corner. What follows only strengthens this conclusion.

Having reached the southwest corner of the Whitmire, the field notes in the deed call to run north a sufficient distance so that a line run east to the east line of the Chessher survey and then S. 15° E. to the beginning would include 160 acres of land. Taking the beginning call as the southwest instead of the southeast corner of the survey, reversing the calls in the deed, we have the last line running N. 15° W. from this point, to meet the line running east from the Whitmire's west and the Chessher's east line. The mistake is perfectly obvious, and the only way in which the calls can harmonize and the survey made to close is to take the call to run "east to the east line" of the Chessher (from a point clearly on the east line) as intended for "west to the west line." This harmonizes all the calls and describes exactly the 160 acres in controversy. Without this correction the survey cannot be made to close, and the deed does not convey any land at all. Again, if we begin at the southwest corner of the S. Whitmire, called for in the deed, and run back reversing the calls, we arrive, not at a point N. 75° E., 1,175 varas, from the southeast corner, but at the southeast corner of the Chessher, not as the beginning corner, but as the end of a line running N. 75° E., 1,175 varas, from the beginning, and tracing 'this line back we arrive at the southwest corner of the Chessher as the beginning. Thus from the face of the deed, taken in connection with the field notes of the patent and the lines of the abutting surveys, the error in the field notes and the intention of the grantors are so clearly shown that there could be no hesitation or doubt as to the conclusion that the deed was intended to convey, and did convey, the land sued for. Sanger v Roberts, 92 Tex. 317, 48 S. W. 1; Mansel v Castles, 93 Tex. 415, 55 S. W. 559; Gallup v Flood, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 644, 103 S. W. 427; Tompkins v Thomas (Tex. Civ. App.) 118 S. W. 581.

We must be understood as clearly holding that unless the errors in the deed are of such a character that they can be corrected from the face of the deed, and a suit would not be necessary for this purpose (2 Pom. Eq. §§ 866, 867, p. 1533, note), the record or filing for record of the deed would not be constructive notice to a subsequent purchaser; but the converse of the proposition is equally true, and we hold that for this reason the defense of innocent purchaser cannot be sustained.

Nancy Williams conveyed to Craddock by deed dated January 10, 1872. The consideration recited in the deed is $300. At this date the Burns deed was on record in Trinity county; the records not having been destroyed until the fall of 1872. Further, there was no evidence of payment of value by Craddock, nor of want of actual notice. The recital of payment in the deed was not evidence of payment. So there is no basis for appellants' claim that they are entitled to hold this 158 acres by virtue of Craddock's being an innocent purchaser.

The questions discussed and decided are presented by proper assignments of error. What we have said disposes of the several assignments, and the propositions thereunder, which are severally overruled.

Finding no reversible error, the judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

Appeal from District Court, Reeves County; James R. Harper, Judge.

Action by Charlie Watson against Henry Avant. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James F. Ross and McKenzie & Brady, for appellant. T. J. Hefner and J. W. Parker, for appellee.

RICE, J. Appellee brought this suit against appellant for the recovery of $1,000 and interest, alleging: That theretofore, on the 15th of August, 1906, he and appellant had entered into a written contract, whereby appellant agreed to sell to him, for delivery on the 1st of October, 1906, 100 head of cows and 100 head of calves, out of certain specified brands, for the sum of $20.25 for each cow and calf so delivered; said cattle to be good, smooth, merchantable cattle. That appellee paid to appellant, in part payment thereof, the sum of $1,000. The balance of the purchase money was to be paid on the delivery of said cattle. That, though often requested, appellant failed to deliver said cattle in accordance with the contract, and that in consequence thereof plaintiff prayed for the recovery of the $1,000 he had paid on said contract. Appellant answered by general and special demurrers, general denial, and specially pleaded that he had tendered for delivery to appellee the cattle called for in said contract at the place where the same were to be delivered, but that appellee refused to receive said cattle, or any part thereof, or to make payment to him for the balance of the purchase money, as required by said contract, that on account of said refusal he had been damaged in the sum of $5 per head, the cost of gathering the same, and the further sum of $3 per head, injuries suffered to said cattle in gathering the same, and $345 for the loss of 20 head thereof with their calves, which sums, aggregating $1,145, he prayed might be set off as against appellee's demand, and that he have judgment over and against him for the difference. There was a jury trial, in which the court, after the conclusion of the wife of Branch T. Masterson, died in 1900. Rebecca died, single and intestate, in 1900. Lillie married Walter Fisher in July, 1887, and with her husband died in 1900, leaving a minor son, Frederick Kenner Fisher. The daughter Cora became Mrs. Wharton Davenport in January, 1889. The widow, Annie P. Harris, died in October, 1906. The two papers propounded as wills of Jno. W. Harris purport to have been executed by him on the same day, July 10, 1890. The existence of these instruments appears to have become known to the widow and children of Mr. Harris immediately after his death; but no step was ever taken to probate them, or either of them, until this proceeding was brought in the county court for that purpose by the orphan asylum in January, 1908, about 21 years afterwards.

The circumstances which led to the application to probate the will are, substantially, as follows: At that time, and until April 26, 1906, it was unknown to any one that Jno. W. Harris had in 1852, in Matagorda county, duly adopted Annie W. Dallam, and thereby made her one of his heirs in case of his intestacy. With this fact unknown and undiscovered, the widow and children of Judge Harris being, so far as known or imagined, his only legal heirs, and being the only persons mentioned in said instruments as his devisees, concluded for family reasons and considerations not to have the will or wills probated. This is reflected by the following finding of the district judge: "It was unanimously agreed by Mrs. Harris and Rebecca P., John W., Jr., Lillie B., and Cora L. Harris that the probate of the papers would seriously reflect on Judge Harris' memory, and they determined they should not be offered for probate, but should be withheld and ignored, and that Mrs. Harris' half interest in all the property should be recognized and the other half divided into four equal shares among themselves. It was not known to any of the parties, or probably to any living person, that Judge Harris had in fact executed the adoption and caused it to be recorded until Mr. Branch T. Masterson, being in the town of Matagorda about the 26th of April, 1906, discovered it in an examination of the deed records; and on the filing of suit by Mrs. Masterson's children and devisees and by the widow of her deceased son, claiming her interest as an adopted child, these proceedings to probate either or both instruments as Judge Harris' will were begun." Acting further upon the belief that they were the only persons interested in the property, Mrs. Harris and Jno. W. Harris, Jr., and his sisters dealt with the property as their own, as in case of Judge Harris' intestacy, and have made many sales of lands, warranting the title. The many purchasers from and under them proceeded also in good faith, upon that theory. Among these purchasers are the St. Mary's Orphan Asylum of land in Galveston, and W. T. Hesley (who intervened, also asking for the probate of one or both of the wills), a purchaser of certain land in Milam county. The wills have all along remained in the possession of John W. Harris, Jr., who has exclusive charge of the estate, which remains undivided.

The court found as to Cora Davenport (who was 19 years of age at the time of her father's death and not 21 when she married, and who became a widow November 24, 1902), and also to the minor, Frederick Fenner Fisher (whose mother, Lillie Harris, was of age when her father died, and who lived until September 8, 1900), on the subject of "default," as follows: "The two wills now offered for probate were willfully withheld from probate or offer therefor by John W. Harris, Jr., and Cora L. Davenport for 21 years, and by Lillie W. Harris, afterwards Fisher by marriage, through whom Frederick Fenner Fisher claims, from the time of her father's death, until she, herself, died." The original application to probate was filed in the county court by the orphan asylum on January 25, 1908. It alleged the death of John W. Harris in April, 1887, that he left a written will of date July 10, 1890, a copy of which, the original not being in applicant's possession but believed to be in the possession of the persons named as executors therein, being annexed; and alleged, among other matters, the conveyance to applicant of certain land of the estate, by and under the devisees named in said copy of will, and the necessity of the probate of this paper to complete, protect, and make good of record and in fact applicant's title. As excuse, and to show itself not in default in asking the probate, the application alleged that at the time of its purchase it was informed and believed that Jno. W. Harris had died intestate, and that until about two weeks prior to this application it was ignorant of the fact that he had made a will.

John W. Harris, Jr., brought in and tendered for probate the two instruments, and asked that the will of John W. Harris, whether it be found to consist of one or both instruments, be admitted to probate. His pleading alleged that the reason there had been no tender for probate of such instrument or instruments was, in effect, the family understanding or arrangement, and for the reasons above stated, not to do so. Further, he alleged: That about 80 persons were occupying the same attitude as the orphan asylum as purchasers of property from the widow and children of John W. Harris through warranty deeds and representations of heirship from them, all relying on the intestacy of Jno. W. Harris and apparent heirship of said grantors, and about 250 person occupy the position of lessees under them, said lessees also so relying; that on January, 1908, a suit for partition was brought by the children of Annie P. Masterson claiming a one-fifth of the estate involving a claim by the former based in part on said act of adoption and the intestacy of Jno. W. Harris; and that it has now become peculiarly important, in view of the recently discovered adoption, that his will be probated, though 21 years have elapsed since the testator's death. Hefley intervened, alleging his interest in the probate of the will as purchaser under Mrs. Harris and the children of certain land, asking for probate. Answers were also filed in the county court by Cora Davenport asking for the probate and alleging that she had not been in default and the circumstances. The guardian of Lillie Fisher's minor filed a like pleading. Branch T. Masterson and the devisees of his wife, Annie W. Masterson, opposed the probate.

The county court probated one of the instruments, as the will, it being the one hereinafter referred to as will "Y." On appeal the district judge denied the right to probate either, stating in his conclusions his reasons substantially as follows: (1) That it does not appear that Jno. W. Harris, Jr., Cora L. Davenport, and the minor Fisher, who was chargeable with the laches of his mother, Lillie Fisher, were not in default in failing to present the will for probate within four years from Judge Harris' death. (2) That the orphan asylum and Hefley, as to the question of default, stood in no better position than their grantors, the latter having been barred of the right to ask probate when they conveyed the lands to these applicants, and that they were subject to the disability of their grantors. As an additional reason for denying probate at the instance of the orphan asylum and Hefley, it appears, as found by the court, that the devisees of Mrs. Masterson had executed or tendered to each of them a special warranty deed to the land respectively claimed by them, which had the effect of perfecting their titles, if it was before defective by reason of the act of adoption, thereby removing any interest they had in the probate of the will. (3) A further reason of the trial judge for denying the probate is that even if the applicants, Jno. W. Harris, Jr., Cora Davenport, and the minor Fisher had not been in default, each instrument is a complete will in itself independent of the other, and they are inconsistent with each other and not intended to be read together, and because they purport to have been made on the same day, and each contains a clause of revocation revoking all former wills, and there is no evidence of probative force to show which was the last will.

Under our statute (Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1881) a will may be admitted to probate as a muniment of title in favor of a devisee or a purchaser under him, provided the applicant has not been in default in failing to present it for probate within four years after the testator's death. Ochoa v. Miller, 59 Tex. 460; Ryan v. Railway, 64 Tex. 241; Elwell v. Universalist Gen. Convention, 76

Tex. 519, 13 S. W. 552. Whatever laches or "default" may be ascribed to the devisees, in reference to probating the will in question, is in our opinion not chargeable to the orphan asylum and Hefley, under the evidence here. We start out with the principle established in the above cases that a purchaser from a devisee is a person entitled to have a will probated when the same constitutes an essential link in his title. The applicants, the orphan asylum and Hefley, occupy that position. Their right to have it probated is not dependent on the existence of the same right in their grantors, the devisees. The latter may have lost their right by reason of knowledge possessed by them concerning the will, and their vendee may at the same time have the right because of his want of such knowledge. It is to be borne in mind that it is the applicant's "default" that the statute has reference to.

Under the exceptional circumstances of this case, the applicants, the orphan asylum and Hefley, have been guilty of no conduct that can be characterized as "default." They became interested in their respective tracts by purchase from the same persons as those named in the will, and who by the laws of descent of the state were to all appearances the very persons who would have taken without a will. When they purchased, Judge Harris had been dead many years, and so far as the public knew, or had reason to know, he had died intestate. His wife and children were the apparent and recognized owners of the property in the capacity of heirs. This condition of things is emphasized by the extensive and uniform transactions by the public with them as heirs. These particular purchasers knew no better when they bought, nor until near the date of this proceeding, when there was unearthed a fact which no one had known or suspected, not even those nearest in life to the testator, viz., the fact that he had at a remote time adopted his stepdaughter. These applicants are not in the same attitude as the other applicants, for they knew nothing of the existence of the will when they became purchasers. They lawfully, and in regular course of dealing, came into a position that gave them an interest in the will and its probate if it was, as it has turned out to be, an essential part of their title. The discovery of the necessity of a will to assure their title, and even the discovery that there was a will, came to them just prior to the commencement of proceedings for probate. As applicants, no act or knowledge of theirs, nothing with which they were connected, and no situation they assumed, can, viewing the matter from the standpoint of a prudent person, be said to place them in default.

As we understand, the trial judge was of this opinion; but he refused the application of these purchasers, because they stood in no better position than their grantors, whom he expressly found to be in default. We do not concur in this. We think an applicant for the probate of the will must be judged by his own conduct and circumstances in determining whether or not he is in default. The other reason given by the trial judge for denying the probate on their applications was that Mrs. Masterson's devisees had given or tendered deeds to them for the lands they were interested in, and thereby their titles were perfected. His finding of fact on this subject is: "The devisees of Mrs. Masterson tender both deeds of confirmation, renounce all claim to the lands so sold them, and elect to look exclusively to the parties receiving the purchase money, as they do with respect to all the sales made previous to the discovery of the act of adoption." The court added: "Out of deference to the supposed wish of the parties, not because deemed material, the court also finds the facts as stated in the written agreement of counsel." The written agreement states: "On or about the 30th day of January, 1908, Evelyn P. Masterson, Thos. W. Masterson, May Masterson Fisher, joined by her husband, Lewis Fisher, Reba B. Masterson, and Wilmer D. Masterson executed a special warranty deed to St. Mary's Orphan Asylum of Galveston, Tex., conveying all their right, title, and interest in all the property described in the application of said asylum herein and said deed was by said asylum. Later on, to wit, the 4th day of April, 1908, said deed was by the grantors, without authority of grantee, filed for record in the office of the county clerk of Galveston county, Tex., and is now again tendered by the grantors to the grantee the said orphan asylum, and again by the grantee declined." Also: "It is further agreed that May M. Fisher, joined by her husband, Lewis Fisher, Thos. W. Masterson, Reba B. Masterson, Wilmer D. Masterson, and Evelyn P. Masterson, have executed and tendered to W. T. Hefley, intervener, since the filing of his intervention herein, a deed confirming the deed described in his intervention as executed by Jno. W. Harris and others, and expressly disclaiming any right to contest the title of W. T. Hefley to said realty, and looking only to their interest in the proceeds of said sale paid over to John W. Harris, Jr., for the estate of John W. Harris, which deed so tendered the said Hefley has been refused."

Our opinion upon this subject is that these applicants had the right to probate the will and supply the missing link in their title by those means, and could not be deprived of that right, especially after they instituted proceedings to probate the will to that end; nor to accept what was offered to them as a substitute, or what might be a substitute, therefore. It is evident that a judgment of probate supplying the link is more comprehensive and unimpeachable than a deed with restricted warranty, or even one with general warranty, for that matter.

If the above conclusion is sound, the will is to be admitted to probate on said applications regardless of the right of the other applicants to ask it, and it really becomes an immaterial question whether or not these other applicants are in default. The court held them to be in default. They (the devisees), according to the court's finding, and according to the evidence, were aware of the existence of the wills all the time, knew where they were, had the custody of them, and voluntarily refrained from tendering them for probate. It is true they perceived no necessity for probating them, they being the devisees therein, and as they believed, and as they apparently were, all of the legal heirs, and that this, a mistake of fact, was the underlying cause of their withholding the wills. It is true, also, that this is what other prudent persons might have done under the same circumstances. The policy of the law, however, is to enforce the timely probate of wills, and we think no one who has custody of a will, and refrains for the statutory period from presenting it for probate, for mere personal considerations, or under the assumption that his title to property is safe without it, can be said to be not in default in the meaning of the statute. The statute makes it necessary to probate a will within four years, and a person having custody of such an instrument is charged with knowledge that it must be filed for probate within that time in order to rely on it, whether the necessity for doing so is apparent to him or not. He knows that unexpected events often happen, and that his present conclusions may be wrong, and he knows, also, that by complying with the requirements of the statute he is afforded a way, and the only way, to foreclose all contingencies, and, if he chooses not to resort to it, it amounts to willful neglect.

There remains the other question, whether or not it can be determined which of these instruments is the last will. We pass over the question of both being capable of constituting and being declared one will. We think they contain intrinsic evidence of the one designated in this record as will "Y" being the last will. They bear the same date. Extrinsic evidence is not to be consulted, where there is intrinsic evidence in such a case, and we therefore need not discuss the extrinsic evidence, which, according to the briefs of counsel, would seem to tend to opposite results. In both these documents the general form is the same. The one marked will "X" and the one marked will "Y" begin with a revoking clause, the former says, "Hereby revoking all others which I may have heretofore made," and the latter says, "Hereby revoking all other wills that I have heretofore made." This is significant. It indicates that X was made first, because of the probability that, if he on the same day had already made Y, it was made so recently that he would not have used an expression that retired it as one he may have theretofore made. On the other hand, the language in will Y revokes all wills theretofore made, an expression he was likely to use to refer to all previous wills, whether recently made or not.

Again, it is evident from will X, in clause 4, that it was incomplete and needed correction in this: That it appointed as executors his wife, his son, Jno. W. Harris, and his daughter, Rebecca P. Harris. But in another clause it provides that his wife and any two of his other executors shall have power to make sales of property. It is apparent from this that he had intended to name at least four executors. In clause 4 of the will Y four are named, and this mistake corrected, indicating that this was the result of reflection after writing will X. The same can be said of the fact that in will X the clause giving the wife and any two of the executors power to make sales is not detached from clause 4 and follows it in such a way as to show that it was an afterthought, after finishing clause 4, while clause 4 of will Y embodies the whole matter connectedly, which indicates a revision of will X.

Other intrinsic circumstances are referred to by appellants as indicating that will Y was a rewriting and reforming of will X; but we think enough has been shown to enforce the conclusion that of these two papers the will Y expressed the final wishes of the testator.

There are assignments of error in the briefs of appellants, including Hefley, which complain of certain statements in the court's conclusions of fact as not warranted by the evidence. These statements are not of any material importance in view of the general facts which control the case. What has been stated in the course of this opinion disposes practically of all the assignments of error. The result we have reached is that the will Y should have been admitted to probate as the last will and testament of John W. Harris.

The judgment is reversed, and judgment rendered accordingly, upon the applications of the orphan asylum and the intervener, Hefley.

On Appellees' Motion for Rehearing.

In this motion it is claimed that we have overruled Guffey v. Hooks, 106 S. W. 690. The principle announced in that case is that the record of an act of adoption is constructive notice to all persons. Our opinion does not hold to the contrary. We simply hold that upon the issue of default, in reference to the probating of a will, the want of actual knowledge is a factor entitled to be considered. In Henry v. Roe, 83 Tex. 450, 18 S. W. 806, the Supreme Court indicates very clearly that all that is necessary is an equitable explanation of the apparent laches. The facts and circumstances of this case may, notwithstanding what is said in the main opinion, constitute a reasonable and equitable excuse for the delay on the part of the children of John W. Harris; but our opinion is, as there expressed, that the persons having control and custody of the will are not excused, even by the apparent and peculiar conditions confronting said children, from its timely probate.

It is further contended in this motion that, as Mrs. Harris repudiated the will, the one-fifth which was conditionally devised to her was not disposed of by the will, and as to that Judge Harris died intestate. This seems to be a question not hitherto raised. However, we do not understand that she repudiated the provision the will made for her. The finding of the court was that upon his death the wills of Judge Harris were read at a family meeting, that all were surprised at their contents in regard to the recital that the great bulk of his property was his separate estate, when they knew it to be community, and at his devising only one-fifth of it to his wife, and Mrs. Harris was surprised that her daughter, Mrs. Master-son, was not treated on a parity with the others, and it was unanimously agreed by Mrs. Harris, Rebecca, Jno. W., Jr., Lillie B., and Ora L. Harris that the probate of the papers would seriously reflect on Judge Harris' memory, and they determined that they should not be offered for probate, but should be withheld and ignored, and that Mrs. Harris' half interest in all the property should be recognized and the other half divided into four equal shares among themselves. The above does not, we think, evidence a renunciation by Mrs. Harris of what the will devised to her. It shows that she accepted it, and, in addition, accepted what the others voluntarily and spontaneously yielded to her from what was devised to them. However, this would not seem a question that arises on an application to probate the will.

Another matter discussed in the motion is that the district court found "that the St. Mary's Orphan Asylum and Hefley's applications to probate were made at the instance of John W. Harris, Jr., owing to apprehensions that he and those claiming in like interest were barred by limitations." It was not found as a fact, nor could it be on the undisputed evidence here, that there was any collusion for said purpose between these parties when the orphan asylum and Hefley became interested parties. If they, in good faith, acquired the right to apply, the motives inducing them to assert that right are immaterial.

We are requested to modify the decree which we have entered, by having it read so that the probate will inure to the benefit of the orphan asylum and Hefley only and as a muniment to perfect their respective titles only, and without prejudice to the rights of other parties. There appear from this record to be numerous other vendees similarly interested. All we think it proper for us to do is to grant the probate. The effect of this at this late date could extend no further than its use as evidence of title; letters testamentary being expressly forbidden. The effect of such a probate and the extent of its operation are questions not before us, and we decline to make any adjudication that may be construed as being an expression on that subject.

The motion is overruled.

GULF, C. & S. F. RY. CO. et al. v. FOWLER.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 256*)—INJURIES BY CAR—CONTROL OF CAR.

A railroad company left on its side track a loaded car for delivery to the consignee. The car stood there at 7 o'clock in the morning, and there was evidence that it was not there the preceding evening. Held, that the company's liability in respect to the car had not terminated at 7 o'clock, and the car belonged to it and had not been received by the consignee, and for injuries to third persons caused by such car the railroad company was liable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 792; Dec. Dig. § 256.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 273½*)—GUARDING FREIGHT—INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS.

A railroad company in possession of freight as warehouseman for delivery to the consignee must exercise ordinary care in guarding the same so as to prevent the same injuring others.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 273½.*]

3. RAILROADS (§ 443*)—INJURIES TO ANIMALS—ESCAPE OF ACID FROM CAR—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show that a railroad company was guilty of negligence in leaving a car containing sulphuric acid on a side track for delivery to a consignee, while the car was leaking acid or that the carboys containing the acid were broken by its servants while placing the car on the side track, making the carrier liable to the owner for the loss of the acid, and hence liable to the owner of a horse for injuries to the horse caused by its stepping into a pool formed by the acid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 443.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 854*)—REVIEW—REASONS FOR JUDGMENT.

Where the court correctly found in favor of the successful party on either one of two grounds on which it based its judgment, the judgment will be sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3408, 3410; Dec. Dig. § 854.*]

5. RAILROADS (§ 273½*)—CARRIAGE OF DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES—LIABILITY.

The rule that a carrier need not acquaint itself with the character of its shipments, and cannot require the shipper to disclose the character of the articles offered for shipment, is subject to exceptions, and, when goods known to be dangerous to the person or property of others are offered to a railroad company for transportation, the shipper must disclose the dangerous qualities, and the railroad company, after receiving the same, must exercise ordinary care to the end that the same may be safely transported without injury to others, and such care must be proportionate to the danger incident to the handling of the goods.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 273½.*]

6. RAILROADS (§ 443*)—IN RAILROAD CARS—INJURY TO ANIMAL—EVIDENCE.

In such case, evidence held to justify a finding that the carrier at the time of the receipt of the acid had notice of its dangerous character, and that it failed to exercise reasonable care, whereby the carboys were broken and the acid allowed to escape into the street.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 443.*]

7. NEGLIGENCE (§ 130*)—EVIDENCE—OBJECTIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

An objection to the testimony of witnesses testifying to the result of an investigation made and facts ascertained several hours after an accident, on the ground that the testimony is immaterial and irrelevant, and because there is nothing to show that at the time the investigation was made the same conditions existed as when the accident occurred, goes only to the weight of the evidence, and not to its competency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 250-254; Dec. Dig. § 130.*]

Appeal from Tarrant County Court; John L. Terrell, Judge.

Action by M. W. Fowler against the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff against defendant the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, it appeals. Affirmed.

Terry, Cavin & Mills, Chas. K. Lee, and Brown & Lomax, for appellant. R. M. Rowland, for appellee.

RICE, J. Appellee brought this suit in the justice's court against the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, the Kindel-Clark Drug Company, and W. Y. Binyon, Jr., to recover damages to his mare alleged to have been caused by the negligence of said defendants in allowing sulphuric acid to escape from a car of appellant, forming a puddle in the public street, through which plaintiff's mare was driven by his son, and into which she stepped, severely burning and injuring her feet. Appellee recovered in the justice's court, from which an appeal was taken to the county court, where a trial was had before the court without a jury, and judgment rendered in favor of appellee against the railway company, who alone appeals in this case, the other two defendants being acquitted of negligence, and judgment was rendered in their favor.

The court filed its conclusions of fact and law, and the evidence, in our opinion, supports the same. From the evidence it appears that on the morning of the 16th of April, 1907, while appellee's son was driving the animal in question along one of the public streets of the city of Ft. Worth, it stepped into a puddle of sulphuric acid which had escaped into the middle of the street from a car load of drugs that had been left standing on the side track near the premises of said drug company for the purpose of delivery to it. It is not definitely shown how long the car had been standing upon this side track or switch; but the accident occurred about 7 o'clock in the morning, and there is evidence to the effect that the car was not there the preceding evening. It appears that the car, among its other contents, contained a number of carboys of sulphuric acid, two at least of which had been broken, from which the contents escaped, forming a puddle in the middle of the street. There was nothing to show any contributory negligence on the part of the driver of the animal.

The trial court found as a fact that the car was in the possession of the company at the time of the accident, and that one or more of said carboys containing said acid was broken and in a leaking condition at the time the car was placed by the railway company on the switch, or else that one of said carboys was broken by the servants of said company while in the act of placing said car at said point, and that no effort was made to guard said car nor to prevent the acid from leaking and escaping into the street, nor any efforts made, by signs or otherwise, to warn the public of the presence of said acid in said street, finding that the acts of said railway company in the premises constituted negligence. And the court further found as a fact that said leaking carboys of acid constituted a nuisance, threatening injury to persons and animals using said street, for which said company was responsible. The court further found that sulphuric acid is a dangerous substance, calling for care and diligence in handling—liable to do injury if allowed to escape—and that the nature of the receptacles, called "carboys," in which the acid was contained, indicated the character of its contents, and that appellant knew, or ought to have known, at the time it first received the same, that it contained sulphuric acid, or some other dangerous liquid, which would do harm if allowed to escape. The court further found that the negligence of the appellant was the proximate cause of the injury; that neither the drug company, nor Binyon, the drayman, who had gone there for the purpose of unloading the car, had anything to do with causing the escape of said acid.

The court as a conclusion of law found that a common carrier who knows, or has reason to suspect, the dangerous character of the goods intrusted to it for transportation, is bound to exercise that degree of care in carrying the same which is proportionate to the danger assumed, and that appellant failed, in handling this car, to discharge the duty so imposed upon it; wherefore it was guilty of negligence in law, and was responsible to the plaintiff for the consequences of such negligence. The court further found, as a conclusion of law, that the railway company did not use ordinary care for the protection of others in the handling of this shipment of acid, which was a dangerous agency, and that the injuries resulting to plaintiff's mare were directly caused by such want of ordinary care upon the part of said company; wherefore it was liable in damages to plaintiff. The court further found, as matter of law, that the appellant was guilty of maintaining a nuisance by allowing the leaking car thus to stand on its side track near the street, thereby rendering it liable for damages to any citizen whose property might receive special injury therefrom while in the lawful use of the street.

Appellant, by its first assignment of error, complains of the court's finding to the effect that the car containing the acid, after being left on the side track for the delivery of the goods to the drug company, was in possession of appellant. We think it is clearly shown by the evidence that the car in question belonged to appellant, and was upon its side track, and at the time of the accident had not been received by the drug company. In the event of loss or injury to its contents, we think the appellant would have been held liable to the owner therefor (see Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. Haynes, 72 Tex. 175, 10 S. W. 398); and, of course, therefore in its possession and control. But even if the evidence, as contended by appellant, was sufficient to show that its duty as carrier had ceased, and that of warehouseman had begun, still we do not believe that it would have made any material difference as to its liability to plaintiff for the injury sustained under the peculiar circumstances of this case, because even then it would have been compelled to exercise ordinary care in guarding said shipment, so as to prevent the escape of the acid into the street, from which injury might have resulted to others.

By its second assignment appellant urges that the court erred in its second and third conclusions of fact, in holding that the carboys containing sulphuric acid were broken and in a leaky condition at the time the car was placed by the railway company on the switch, or else that they were broken by the servants of the railway company in placing the car in said position; and, further, in making no effort to prevent the acid's leaking from the car, and in making no effort to warn the public of the presence of the same in the street, that said company was guilty of negligence. While there was no positive evidence that the carboys containing the acid were broken and the car in a leaking condition at the time it was placed on the switch, nor none going to show that it was broken by the acts of its servants while placing the car in said position, still we think that the evidence compelled this finding, because if the carboys containing the acid had been broken and leaking when the shipment started, or while in transit, it very likely would have emptied itself en route. There was no evidence showing, or tending to show, any trace of the acid on the ground before the car reached this point; nor was there any evidence going to show that anybody had interfered in any way with this car while standing at this point. Neither the drug company nor the drayman had opened the car at the time of the injury, and there was no evidence on the part of the railway company to explain this leakage of the acid from the car, nor anything showing, or tending to show, when it began to leak, or how the carboys containing the acid came to be broken, so that we must conclude from the circumstances, as did the court below, that either the car was leaking at the time it was placed there, or else that the carboys were broken by the servants of the company while placing the car at the point where it was left, and, in either event, the company would have been liable to the owners for the loss of the acid.

But the third and fourth assignments of error present, in our judgment, the most serious questions in this case, and are as follows: By its third assignment appellant insists that the court erred in its findings of fact and conclusions of law, finding, in effect, that, by reason of the fact that the acid leaked from the car and stood in the street, the defendant company was responsible for the creation and maintenance of a nuisance; and by its fourth assignment it is urged on the part of appellant that the court erred in its conclusions of fact and law, which found, in effect, that carboys, such as contained this sulphuric acid, were ordinarily employed for the handling and transportation of strong and dangerous acids, and that from the nature of the receptacles in which the acid was contained and carried the character of the contents was indicated, and that the railway company knew, or ought to have known, at the time it first received said carboys, that they contained acid or some other dangerous liquid, and that the railway company did not use ordinary care in the handling of this shipment, and that the injury to the plaintiff's mare was directly caused by the failure of the railway company to exercise such care.

If the court was correct in finding in favor of appellee against appellant, either on the ground of nuisance or on the ground of failing to exercise ordinary care in receipt and transportation of the car containing the acid, then, in either event, the judgment ought to be sustained. The evidence discloses that the carboys mentioned containing the acid were receptacles made of glass in the shape of large jugs or demijohns, and the court found that these were such as were ordinarily employed for the handling and transportation of strong and dangerous acids. It is possibly true that the evidence did not sus-tain the latter finding, to the effect that dangerous acids were commonly shipped in carboys of this kind; but it is insisted by appellee that courts will take judicial cognizance of such matters as are of common knowledge, citing Thompson on Negligence, vol. 6, §§ 7629, 7630, and Elliott on Evidence, § 64, and that it is a matter of common knowledge that acids are shipped in such receptacles as the ones described by the evidence. But, without resting our conclusion on this finding, and irrespective of whether the court would take judicial cognizance of what a carboy is, we are inclined to believe that the court's finding against the appellant on the question of negligence is well founded. While it is true that a railroad company, ordinarily, is not required to acquaint itself with the character of its shipments, nor ordinarily has it the right to know or demand from the shipper the character of the article proffered for shipment (see 5 Thompson on Neg. § 6593; 2 Hutch. on Car. § 759), still there are well-established exceptions to this general rule in respect to such goods as are known to be dangerous in transportation to the person or property of others; and, when such goods of this character are so offered to the carrier, it has been held to be the duty of the shipper to make known their dangerous qualities, and it would be an imposition on the carrier not to do so; and in such cases it would seem to be the right on the part of the carrier to refuse to carry goods when their dangerous character is either clearly apparent, or when the same excites the suspicion of the carrier. Hutch. on Car. vol. 2, § 796.

In Elliott on Railways, vol. 4, § 1466, it is said that railways have the right to refuse to carry dangerous goods, or such as they may believe to be so. In Moore on Carriers, § 5, p. 100, it is said: "It may lawfully refuse to receive or carry goods of an explosive or dangerous character, such as dynamite, nitroglycerin, vitriol, etc., or goods which the law prohibits it from carrying, such as intoxicating liquors. It has a right to demand an examination and to be made acquainted with the contents of packages where there is reasonable ground for believing they are of a dangerous character; but, in the absence of reasonable grounds for suspecting them to be of a dangerous character, it cannot compel the owner or person offering them for shipment to disclose their nature." Certainly, ordinary care at least should be taken after the receipt of such dangerous articles by a common carrier, to the end that the same may be safely transported without injury to its employes or others who may come in close proximity to the same, and such care must be proportionate to the danger incident to the handling of the article in question. On this subject it is said in volume 1, § 759, Thompson on Negligence: "One court has reasoned that the danger to be apprehended by the indiscriminate handling of highly explosive substances—in the particular case detonating caps—is so great and obvious that a high degree of care should be exercised to prevent them from falling into the hands of strangers; but this is only another mode of stating that the care and caution to be applied in guarding dangerous substances is a degree of care and caution proportionate to the danger to others from coming into contact with them. Another court has applied to the same subject the standard of ordinary care and skill, by holding that the owner of premises is liable for damages to the personal property of a bare licensee upon the premises, for an explosion of dynamite stored thereon, due to his want of ordinary care and skill in the management of the same. Another court has correctly expressed the rule by holding that one who handles or carries dangerous explosives, or keeps them on his premises, though not per se answerable for all injurious consequences which may proceed from them, regardless of the degree of care and vigilance he may exercise concerning them, must use such care and prudence in guarding them as prudent and careful persons whose business it is to deal in such articles ordinarily exercise, which is greater than that required with respect to articles not commonly considered dangerous"—citing Henry v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. (C. C.) 67 Fed. 426.

Justice Williams, in the case of Ft. Worth & D. C. R. R. Co. v. Beauchamp, 95 Tex. 496, 68 S. W. 502, 58 L. R. A. 716, 93 Am. St. Rep. 864, held, as shown by the syllabus, that: "Where a railroad company, by failing to use ordinary care, allows a car of explosives to be unnecessarily or unreasonably delayed at a station, or fails to use ordinary care in keeping or caring for such car, it creates a nuisance rendering the company liable for damages resulting to adjacent property from an explosion thereof; and further that, where there is evidence in an action against a railroad for damages resulting from explosion of a car of explosives that the company was negligent in allowing the car to be delayed or in failing to properly guard it, the question of the negligence of the company in such respects is for the jury." In the case of Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Oregon Railway & Navigation Company (C. C.) 73 Fed. 1003, where, after the plaintiff's goods were in the depot of the railway company, being held as warehouseman, a drayman brought a carboy of sulphuric acid to the depot for shipment, and unloaded it there, all the defendant's employes about the depot at the time it was left by the drayman, being engrossed in other duties, failed to take notice of the fact that the drayman had left said carboy of acid, notwithstanding the company had rules forbidding acids of such character to be placed inside of its depot, said acid being deposited upon a floor saturated with oil, in consequence of a leak in the carboy, and an explosion occurred setting fire to the depot and destroying plaintiff's goods, it was held that the company was negligent in failing to exercise a reasonable supervision over the articles in its depot and the care of its building where its patrons' property was stored, and was therefore liable to plaintiff for the value of the goods so destroyed.

We think the evidence in this case justified the court in finding that the appellant, at the time of the receipt of the carboys of acid, had notice of the dangerous character and quality of their contents, and, irrespective of whether it had or did not have the right, on account thereof, to refuse to receive said shipment, it certainly, after receiving the same, became charged with the duty of exercising reasonable care in transporting the same, and that the degree of care so exercised would necessarily increase in proportion to the dangerous character of the shipment, and that this duty did not cease until after its delivery to the consignee, and that the court was also justified in finding from the evidence that appellant was guilty of the want of such ordinary care in such transportation, by reason of which failure said carboys were broken and the acid allowed to escape from its cars and flow into the street, occasioning the damage complained of. We therefore overrule these assignments.

The fifth assignment of error questions the correctness of the ruling of the court in permitting plaintiff's witnesses Fowler, Erwin, and McKinney to testify over its objection as to the result of investigation made and facts ascertained several hours after the injuries are alleged to have occurred, on the ground that said evidence was immaterial and irrelevant, and because there was nothing to show that, at the time said investigation was made, the same conditions existed as when the injury occurred. We think this objection goes more to the weight of the evidence than to its competency, and hence the same is not well taken, and this assignment will be overruled.

Believing no reversible error is shown, the judgment of the court below is in all things affirmed.

Affirmed.

BUCKLEY et al. v. RUNGE et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 1, 1900.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 24, 1900.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§§ 252, 253*)— LIEN FOR PRICE—RESERVATION.

The recital in a note given by a purchaser for the lands "secured by S. E. and S. W. quarter of N. E. Block of out lot 70" is sufficient to constitute a reservation of an express lien on the property, and the superior title remains in the vendor until the note is paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 636, 638; Dec. Dig. §§ 252, 253.*]

2. PAYMENT (§ 66*)—PRESUMPTIONS—LAPSE OF TIME.

A purchase-money note reserving a lien on the property sold is presumptively paid after the lapse of over 30 years, unless the presumption is rebutted by evidence of nonpayment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. § 178; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

3. PAYMENT (§ 76*)—PRESUMPTIONS.

Whether the presumption of payment of a note arising from the lapse of time was overcome by the proof of nonpayment held, under the evidence, for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. § 247; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 253*)—LIEN FOR PURCHASE PRICE—CONTRACTS.

A lien created by the recital in a purchase-money note is a contract lien, and not a mere implied vendor's lien.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 638; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 265*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE.

A purchaser for value, and without notice of an express lien, evidenced by his grantor's purchase-money note reserving an express lien for the price, is a bona fide purchaser without notice, and his title is good as against the lien.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 702; Dec. Dig. § 265.*]

6. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 299*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE.

Whether a purchaser purchased for value and without notice of an express lien evidenced by his grantor's purchase-money note reserving an express lien held for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 842; Dec. Dig. § 299.*]

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 299*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE.

One asserting a title resulting from the reservation of an express lien on land for the purchase price as against a grantee of the purchaser has the burden of proving that the purchaser had notice of an express lien.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 841; Dec. Dig. § 299.*]

8. TRIAL (§ 194*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS.

A charge on the weight of the evidence is properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 439-466; Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

9. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 299*)—NONPAYMENT OF PRICE—RECOVERY OF LAND—LACHES.

Where the purchase-money notes reserving an express lien on the land were not paid for nearly 30 years, but there was evidence of continuous demands for payment by the vendor or his heirs and promises to pay on the part of the purchaser, the delay in the assertion of the superior title resulting from the lien was explained, and the heirs of the vendor were not barred of their right to recover the land on such superior title.

Appeal from District Court, Galveston County; Lewis Fisher, Judge.

Action by L. H. Runge and others against John Buckley and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Stewarts, Geo. T. Burgess, and J. Homer Jones, for appellants. Wm. B. Lockhart and James B. & Charles Stubbs, for appellees.

REESE, J. This suit was instituted in 1906 by appellees, heirs of Henry Runge, against appellants, John, Dan, and Thomas Buckley, Ed. McCarthy, administrator of D. G. Kelley, W. C. Morris, and the unknown heirs of Kelley. As presented by the second amended petition, upon which the case went to trial, the action was one in trespass to try title to recover certain lots in the city of Galveston. The case was tried with a jury, and, upon the conclusion of the evidence, the court instructed a verdict for plaintiffs. From the judgment, all the defendants appeal.

We are of the opinion that it was error to instruct the jury to find for plaintiffs. The recitals in the notes given by D. G. Kelley for the lands "secured by S. E. and S. W. quarter of N. E. Block of out lot 70" was sufficient to constitute a reservation of an express lien upon the property sold, with the consequence that superior title remained in the vendor until the notes were paid. To support the contrary view, appellants cite the case of Baker v. Compton, 52 Tex. 252, in which it was held that a recital in a purchase-money note "to secure the purchase money due" did not amount to an express lien, and Ransom v. Brown, 63 Tex. 188, holding that a recital that the notes were given for the purchase money of the land, was not sufficient. The cases are clearly distinguishable from the present case. It appeared, however, that 30 years or more had elapsed from the time the notes were due until this suit for the recovery of the land was filed. The execution of a deed by Henry Runge to D. G. Kelley in 1874 conveying the property was clearly established, though the deed had been lost, and had not been recorded. It did not appear whether or not a lien had been reserved in the deed. Kelley died in 1900. His estate was administered upon and the property in question partitioned in 1904 between his administrator and the children of Mrs. Kelley, also dead; the property belonging to the community. Kelley's house was destroyed in the storm of 1900, in which he perished, with whatever papers he may have had. After the lapse of so long a time, the notes would be presumed to have been paid, unless such presumption be rebutted by evidence of nonpayment. Weems v. Masterson, 80 Tex. 55, 15 S. W. 590; Morris v. Duncan, 25 S. W. 48. To rebut this presumption, it was shown that appellants were still in possession of the notes, that as late as 1882 they had been reported by the guardian of appellants as unpaid, and had been, in fact, partitioned between L. H. Runge and Henry Runge, two of the children. Henry Runge, who had conveyed his interest in the notes to L. H. Runge shortly before this suit was filed, testified as to repeated demands for payment made upon D. G. Kelley up to a year or two before his death, and promises of Kelley to pay. He also testified as to similar demands made upon John Buckley after the death of Kelley, which was denied by Buckley. The deed had been recorded by Kelley, and there was some reference in the testimony to an understanding that Kelley was not to have the deed recorded until he paid for the lots. While this evidence was sufficient to rebut the presumption of payment arising from the lapse of time, we do not think that it can be said that there was not an issue which should have been submitted to the jury. It must not be forgotten that Henry Runge, the only witness to the demand upon Kelley, was an interested party. His conveyance of his interest in the notes a month before the suit was filed did not render him in this suit in which his brother and sisters were plaintiffs, an entirely impartial and disinterested witness. Kelley, the only person who could have contradicted him, was dead. John Buckley did contradict him as to demands made upon him for payment. Looking to all the evidence, we think that the presumption of fact as to the payment of the notes, resting upon the great lapse of time before the assertion of the right to recover the land, presented an issue as to such payment, which should have been submitted to the jury. Washington v. Railway, 90 Tex. 320, 38 S. W. 764; Jesson v. Texas Loan Co., 3 Tex. Civ. App. 25, 21 S. W. 624; McGown v. Railway, 85 Tex. 293, 20 S. W. 80; I. & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 55 S. W. 491; Nowlin v. Hall, 66 S. W. 852.

The first assignment of error must be sustained for the reason stated.

The nineteenth assignment of error, which presents the question more specifically, must also be sustained. We do not sustain appellants' contention that by making demand for payment of the notes appellees elected to affirm the contract of sale, and to rely alone upon the lien. We have held that the lien was a contract lien and not a mere implied vendor's lien. As a proposition under this assignment, it is contended that Morris and John Buckley should have had judgment each for one-third interest purchased from Dan and Thomas Buckley, respectively. Upon this point, we think that the court should also have submitted to the jury the issue as to each of these parties, whether he at the time of his purchase had notice of the express lien upon the land, the sole basis of appellees' right to recover, and whether he paid value. The right to recover rests solely upon the recitals in the notes that they were secured by the lots in question. The execution of the deed is not disputed. There was no evidence that it contained any reservation of the lien, and, if there were, there is no evidence that John Buckley or Morris had actual or implied notice of such fact. If, in these circumstances, they bought the interest of the other parties for value and without notice of the express lien as shown by the notes, their titles should be protected, and this issue should have been submitted to the jury. If the notes were unpaid, appellants should recover against the administrator as to that part claimed by him, and as to John Buckley the part claimed by him under the partition, but were not entitled to recover of John Buckley and Morris the parts claimed by them by purchase, unless it should appear that they had notice of the express lien reserved in the notes, or of appellees' claim of title and ownership at the time of their respective purchases. Having the legal title and appellants having only an equitable title, although superior title until the notes were paid, the burden would be upon appellees to establish this notice. Weems v. Masterson, supra; Thomason v. Berwick, 113 S. W. 567, and cases cited. It was not error to refuse to give the charge referred to in the fourteenth assignment, which in the form requested was upon the weight of the evidence. Stooksbury v. Swan, 85 Tex. 563, 22 S. W. 963; Railway v. Johnson, 92 Tex. 593, 50 S. W. 563. If the notes were not, in fact, paid, continuous demands for payment by appellee, and promises to pay on the part of Kelley up to the time of his death, would explain and excuse the delay in the assertion of the superior title, and plaintiffs would not be thereby barred of their right to recover the land upon such superior title.

It is not necessary to discuss all of the assignments of error and propositions thereunder. Except as disposed of otherwise by what has been said, they are severally overruled.

For the errors indicated, the judgment should be reversed and the cause remanded, and it is so ordered.

Reversed and remanded.

SMITH & SHOLARS v. FOWLER et al.
(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 1, 1909.)

1. BROKERS (§ 55*)—COMMISSIONS—PROCURING CAUSE OF SALE.

Where appellants were the only agents authorized to sell a part of the whole of a tract, and did not know that others were authorized to sell the tract, and the purchasers, when they were induced by appellants to inspect the land and purchase the same, did not know that it was a part of the tract about which they had negotiated with other agents, who only attempted to sell the whole tract, and appellants induced the lessee of the owner to modify the lease as required by the purchasers as a condition to purchasing, appellants were the sole procuring cause of the sale and entitled to commissions.

2. BROKERS (§ 55*)—COMMISSIONS—EMPLOYMENT OF SEVERAL AGENTS—AGENTS ENTITLED.

The owner, in absence of contract to the contrary, may employ a number of agents to sell land, and the agent who is the procuring cause of the sale is entitled to the commissions, though none of the agents authorized to sell the land knew of the employment of others, and had no notice of the sale, and though the owner or other agents rendered some service, as by finding a purchaser who would not have otherwise been found, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 82-84; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

3. INTERPLEADER (§ 34*)—REVIEW—OBJECTIONS NOT RAISED BELOW.

Where defendant's right to interplead different claimants to a fund held by him was not raised in the trial court, it cannot be first raised on appeal.

Appeal from District Court, Nueces County; W. B. Hopkins, Judge.

Action by Smith & Sholars, interpleaded with others, against C. S. Fowler. From a judgment in part for plaintiffs named, they appeal. Reversed and rendered as stated.

Dougherty & Dougherty, for appellants. J. C. Scott, G. R. Scott, and Delmas Givens, for appellees.

FLY, J. This is a controversy by appellants and other land agents over a commission of $4,800 alleged to be due by C. S. Fowler, one of the appellees. The suit was instituted by appellants against Fowler, and he admitted an indebtedness of $4,800 for the sale of his land, but, being perplexed and bewildered by the number of land agents claiming the money, he deposited it with the clerk, and prayed the court to determine the ownership of the money, and protect him from the demands of the different claimants, who consisted of appellants, the Randle-Gibson Real Estate Company, Fred Roberts, and F. Z. Bishop, each one of whom claimed to be the procuring cause of the sale of 8,000 acres of Fowler's land to Simmons. The cause was heard by the court who gave Fowler $250 as an attorney's fee out of the money on deposit allotted to appellants, and all costs of suit, and divided the deposit so as to give appellants and the Randle-Gibson Real Estate Company each $1,098.85 and Fred Roberts $2,197.70, and it was ordered that F. Z. Bishop take nothing by his suit. Every one seems to have been satisfied with the award of the court, except appellants, who have perfected this appeal, and who will be contented if they are awarded the whole of the money or possibly one-half of it. Roberts and Bishop have not appeared by briefs in this court, but Fowler and the Randle-Gibson Realty Company have made their appearance.

Fowler owned the William Binton ranch in Nueces county, consisting of 19,231 acres of land, which he bought from J. C. Wood, and which was burdened with a lease to J. J. Welder for five years from April 15, 1903. On April 8, 1907, Fowler conveyed 8,000 acres of the land to H. H. Simmons, J. O. Moore, and O. A. Hearne for the sum of $12 an acre. The claims for commission arose out of that sale. On January 25, 1907, Fowler authorized the Randle-Gibson Real Estate Company to sell the entire tract of land at $12 an acre net to the owner. Afterwards, on January 31, 1907, Fowler authorized that company to sell in tracts of 5,000 acres and over for $12.50 an acre, the 50 cents to be retained as a commission for selling. On or about January 29, 1907, Roberts, at the solicitation of F. Z. Bishop, brought Simmons to Corpus Christi, and, after negotiating with Bishop without results, Roberts and Simmons went to the office of the Randle-Gibson Real Estate Company, where the land belonging to Fowler was described to them, and Simmons was urged to buy it. At the solicitation of the company, Roberts and Simmons agreed to look at the land; it being understood that a man named Riddle was to accompany them. He, however, failed to put in an appearance, and Roberts and Simmons went to Alice with the view of looking at another and different tract of land between that place and San Diego. At Alice they were met by appellants, who took them out and showed them the land belonging to Fowler.

Appellants were the agents of Fowler, and were authorized to sell the land for $12 an acre, out of which they were to receive 5 per cent. commission, and they were authorized to sell a tract of 7,000 or 8,000 acres of the land, which did not include the improvements. While appellants were showing Simmons the land, he offered to buy 8,000 acres, and it was understood that appellants were to get the matter in shape so that the trade could be closed. Appellants did not know that the Randle-Gibson Real Estate Company was the agent of Fowler, nor knew of the negotiations with that company. Appellants agreed to divide commissions with Roberts on any land listed with them for which he obtained a purchaser. On February 9, 1907, Sholars introduced Simmons to Fowler, but Simmons refused to take the land because of the lease held by Wood, unless there was a modification of that contract. Fowler about a week afterwards visited Simmons at Hillsboro, and sold 8,000 acres of his land to Simmons, Moore, and Hearne at $12 an acre, as contracted by appellants, on condition that the contract with Wood be modified to meet the views of the vendees. The clause was modified through the efforts of Fowler and appellants. Woods required a bonus, as an inducement to modify his contract, of which appellants agreed to pay $250. The sale could not have been effected had not the contract with Woods been modified as desired by the vendees. The Randle-Gibson Real Estate Company did not obtain a purchaser for the whole tract of land at $12 net to Fowler, nor did it sell any part of the land, as authorized to do, for $12.50 an acre or any other price. When the real estate company was negotiating with Simmons, it had no authority to sell less than the whole tract which Simmons declined to buy, and these were the only negotiations the real estate company had with Simmons and his associates. Roberts and the real estate company agreed to divide commissions on the sale of the whole tract. The Randle-Gibson Real Estate Company does not claim to have effected a sale of the property, except through the efforts of Roberts. But Randle and Gibson both swore that they had no authority to sell 8,000 acres of the land, and did not attempt to confer such authority on Roberts. Randle swore: "We did not at that time, or at any time, have the right to sell this land for $12 an acre." Fowler reserved the right to sell the land at any time. The evidence plainly shows that Simmons and Roberts did not go to Alice to look at the Fowler land, but went to see the Woodward ranch, and after they had seen that ranch, and did not like it, Sholars suggested that his firm had a tract of land they would like to show Simmons. The latter agreed to stay until the next day, and on that day Sholars took him out to the land and showed him over it, carefully describing its good points. Neither Simmons, Roberts, nor appellants knew at the time that it was the same land about which Simmons and Roberts had talked with Gibson in Corpus Christi. There is no testimony tending to show that the Randle-Gibson Real Estate Company procured, or in any manner assisted in procuring, a purchaser who was willing and able to purchase the land. When Roberts took Simmons to Corpus Christi, it was to meet Bishop, who wished to sell Simmons the Fowler land. Bishop failed to make the sale to Simmons, and the latter in company with Roberts then went to the Randle-Gibson Real Estate Company, which promised to send a man with Roberts and Simmons to see the Fowler land. The real estate company had no authority to sell any less than the whole tract, and sought to sell it at $14 an acre, and Roberts was told that, if he brought about the sale of the whole tract, he should have one-half the commission. He made no effort to effect that sale, but, when no one came to go with them to show the land, Roberts and Simmons abandoned all thoughts of the Fowler land and went to Alice without having it in view, and with the intention of looking at the Woodward ranch.

When they were induced by appellants to inspect the Fowler land, neither of them knew that it was the land about which they had negotiated with the Randle-Gibson Real Estate Company, and Roberts at no time made any effort to induce Simmons to buy the whole of the tract under his agreement with the Randle-Gibson Real Estate Company. No purchaser was procured under the terms of the agency of the real estate company, and the sale made of the land was one that the company was never empowered to make. The sole procuring cause of the sale was the efforts of appellants.

The owner of real estate, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, has the right and power to employ as many different agents to sell his land as he sees fit, and that one of the agents who first procures a purchaser under the terms of his agency is the one entitled to the commission. Duval v. Moody, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 627, 60 S. W. 269. Where the principal employs several agents as brokers, the sale of the land by one of the agents or the principal terminates the authority of them all, although notice of the sale may not have been given, and the principal will only be liable for a commission to the agent who was the procuring cause of the sale. If the brokers have no knowledge of the employment of others, the broker who was the procuring cause of the sale is entitled to his commissions, no matter if another broker or the principal takes up the matter and completes the sale. Clark & Skyles, Agency, § 779. A number of agents may have rendered service, such as finding a purchaser who otherwise would not have been found, and yet may fail to consummate a sale, and another may take it up and complete it, and the last one would be entitled to the commissions. Whitcomb v. Bacon, 170 Mass. 479, 49 N. E. 742, 64 Am. St. Rep. 317; Reynolds v. Tompkins, 23 W. Va. 235; Francis v. Eddy, 49 Minn. 447, 52 N. W. 43; Platt v. Johr, 9 Ind. App. 58, 36 N. E. 294; Scott v. Floyd, 19 Colo. 401, 35 Pac. 733; Ward v. Fletcher, 124 Mass. 224; Glascok v. Vanfleet, 100 Tenn. 603, 46 S. W. 449. In the Massachusetts case of Ward v. Fletcher, it was said: "There was no evidence of usage, or that the defendant agreed that the plaintiff should have the exclusive right to sell the land; and no evidence that would warrant the jury in finding that the purchaser either came to an agreement with the plaintiff to take the land at that price, or bought the land upon information received from him. One broker, who is unsuccessful in effecting a sale, does not become entitled to a commission upon the success of another." The cited case of Francis v. Eddy is similar in its facts to this. Francis showed the property to Collom and offered it to him for the price stipulated by Eddy, his principal, but no decision was reached, and an appointment was made for another meeting on the following day. The next day, while on his way to the office Francis, the prospective buyer met another agent, Tabour, and the land was bought for $9,500. The Supreme Court of Minnesota said: "To entitle a broker to compensation, he must have been the efficient agent or procuring cause of the sale. He must have found and produced a purchaser, and the sale must have proceeded from his efforts as broker; and the burden is on him to prove this affirmatively. In the present case the plaintiff was not even the one who first put Collom on the track of the property, for the latter already knew the property was for sale, and was listed for that purpose with Tabour, with whom he already had some negotiations regarding its purchase. Plaintiff had never made any offer to Collom which he had accepted, or, so far as appears, ever would have accepted." So in the Tennessee case of Glascok v. Vanfleet, herein cited, the court said: "It is true that when a broker is employed to sell real estate, and brings the property to the notice of a purchaser, and opens up negotiations with him, the owner cannot step in and complete the sale, and escape liability for commission. * * * But, when a principal employs more than one broker, and the several brokers act independently, and with knowledge of this fact, the one who first completes a sale is entitled to the commissions."

In this case the principal is not contesting the claim for commissions, but merely asks the court to bring before it the different agents who are claiming the money, and let them settle the issue as to who shall bear off the prize. No one attacked or denied his right to interplead the different claimants in the lower court, and, if there was any force or strength in the contention that an interpleader should not have been allowed, the matter cannot be raised for the first time in this court. So far as the testimony discloses, Roberts did nothing to procure the sale of the land after he left Corpus Christi, and he had abandoned any thought of the sale of Fowler's land before he left that place, and, if he had been acting for the Randle-Gibson Real Estate Company, they could not profit because he did nothing, and the only ground upon which he could possibly recover any of the commission is that appellants promised to give him one-half of it.

Appellants were the only agents authorized to sell 8,000 acres of the land, and were the only ones who ever offered the land to Simmons on the terms on which it was sold to him and his associates. Simmons swore positively that his negotiations with the real estate company did not influence his actions, for the good and sufficient reason that he did not know that the land he bought was the same land about which he had talked with the real estate company. The purchase was not made on the same terms offered by the company, and it earned no commission. Edwards v. Pike (Tex. Civ. App.) 107 S. W. 586. The case cited is a well-considered one and directly in point in this case.

The judgment is reversed and judgment here rendered that C. S. Fowler recover $250 of appellants and Roberts as an attorney's fee, and to recover of appellants and Roberts the sum of $250 which they agreed to pay towards obtaining a modification of the Woods contract, and all costs of this suit, to be paid out of the money deposited in the registry of the lower court, and that appellants and Fred Roberts recover of C. S. Fowler the sum of $4,800 less the sum of $500, aforementioned, and all costs, to be paid out of said sum on deposit, to be divided equally between them, each to receive one-half, that F. Z. Bishop and the Randle-Gibson Real Estate Company take nothing by this suit, and pay all costs in this behalf expended.

Reversed and rendered.

A corporation of Texas having with its assets conducted a business in another state in another name, a receivership of its assets there located was there had, in which only those creditors who had done business with it relative to the business there conducted by it under such other name were allowed to participate. Held, that such creditors by having merely succeeded in excluding other creditors of the corporation were not estopped to claim to be creditors of the corporation, with right to share in its assets in receivership proceedings in Texas, relative to its assets there located.

3. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 340*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—ACCEPTANCE OF DRAFTS BY CORPORATION—NOTICE OF WANT OF POWER.

Though a corporation of Texas, which conducted business in another state under the name of C., had no power to conduct its corporate business in such other state, it might have power to accept drafts drawn by C., so that banks which bought drafts drawn by C. and accepted by the corporation, knowing that they were given for logs purchased by C., were not charged with notice of the corporation's want of power to make the acceptances.

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; W. P. Hamblen, Judge.

Intervention by the Lake Charles National Bank and others, as creditors of the J. I. Campbell Company, for which one Norris had been appointed receiver. From the judgment, interveners appeal. Affirmed.

McKoy, Moss & Knox and S. R. Perryman, for appellants. Spotts & Matthews, for appellee.

JAMES, C. J. This suit arises upon the intervening of the Lake Charles National Bank, the Calcasieu National Bank, and George W. Ford, as creditors of the J. I. Campbell Company, for which the district court of Harris county had appointed appellee Norris the receiver. The decree appealed from is one denying these interveners the right to participate in the funds of this receivership, unless they should pay to the receiver, within a fixed time, what had been received by each of them through a receivership in Louisiana of the J. I. Campbell Company and the Lake Charles Lumber Company, an incorporated concern, and, interveners declining to accede to this, their suits were dismissed.

The report of the master in reference to these claims was as follows. After finding the amounts of the respective claims of these parties, the report proceeds:

"It is admitted that each and all of these drafts were given for the purchase price of logs purchased by the Lake Charles Lumber Company, and were used by this company in operating its sawmill at Lake Charles, and the drafts are what are commonly known as 'log paper.' Each of the drafts was given for logs sold to the Lake Charles Lumber Company in Louisiana, and were accepted by the J. I. Campbell Company, in Houston, Tex. I file herewith as a part of this report the testimony introduced before me as to the organization and ownership of the Lake Charles Lumber Company. Briefly stated, the facts are as follows: The J. I. Campbell Company was incorporated under the laws of the state of Texas, and a copy of its charter is filed as a part of this report. Its power is limited by its charter to the operation of sawmills and planing mills, and the manufacture of lumber and articles made of lumber in certain counties in the state of Texas. It was not authorized to do business in the state of Louisiana, nor authorized to do business under any other name than that of the J. I. Campbell Company. The property of the Lake Charles Lumber Company was formerly owned by L. B. Menefee & Co., located at Lake Charles, La., and early in the year

1904 I. L. Campbell, who is the vice president of the J. I. Campbell Company, leased the sawmill from Menefee & Co. at Lake Charles, and made an agreement with A. F. Sharp to pay him a salary of $250 a month to move to Lake Charles and take charge of the business as manager, and he was to have 40 per cent. and the J. I. Campbell Lumber Company 60 per cent. of the profits of the Lake Charles Lumber Company. The J. I. Campbell Company furnished all the money to buy this mill, and I find from the evidence that all the property of the Lake Charles Lumber Company was the property of the J. I. Campbell Company, purchased with its money, and that the running of the business in Louisiana under the name of the Lake Charles Lumber Company was done for the purpose of bookkeeping; in other words, that the amount of business at that point might be separately kept, so that it could be easily ascertained, whether that branch of the business was making or losing. I find from the evidence that all the drafts sued on by the said three interveners were acquired by them before maturity, but they all knew that the same were for purchase money of logs sold to the Lake Charles Lumber Company. Shortly after the institution of the receivership proceedings in this cause, I. L. Campbell and Mrs. Sarah Campbell filed receivership proceedings in the Fifteenth judicial district court of Louisiana, in which the J. I. Campbell Company and the Lake Charles Lumber Company were made defendants, and in that cause S. C. Tevis was appointed receiver, and, after hearing, the case was appealed to the Supreme Court of that state, and I file as a part of this report the opinion and judgment of the Supreme Court of the state of Louisiana, and also the judgment of distribution made in the Fifteenth district court of Louisiana. It was held in that case that the Lake Charles Lumber Company was a separate and distinct legal entity from the J. I. Campbell Company, and that the creditors of the J. I. Campbell Company were not entitled to participate in the distribution of the assets in Louisiana, and the court ordered the same paid to the creditors of the Lake Charles Lumber Company for debts which had been created by and for the benefit of the Lake Charles Lumber Company, and excluded all other creditors of the J. I. Campbell Company to intervene in that cause. All the assets of the Lake Charles Lumber Company were paid for with the funds of the J. I. Campbell Company, and it was therefore the equitable owner of the assets of the Lake Charles Lumber Company. The interveners, having each intervened in the Louisiana case, and received part of said assets, must account for the amount so received, and are only entitled to have their claims allowed herein for the amount thereof, less the amount they received from the receiver appointed in Louisiana. The proof before me is that each of the above-named interveners received 48.24 per cent. of their respective claims from the receiver in Louisiana, and this amount should be credited against their respective claims herein.

"(2) Should it be held by the court that the Lake Charles Lumber Company was a separate organization, in which the J. I. Campbell Company was not interested, then as its charter did not authorize it to do business in Louisiana, or to accept or guarantee payment of the drafts of the Lake Charles Lumber Company, it would seem to me that the interveners were not entitled to recover against it at all; for, as found, the drafts sued on were all given for logs purchased by the Lake Charles Lumber Company, which interveners knew, and that payment was sought to be made by drafts on the J. I. Campbell Company, and, it being a corporation with limited charter powers, they were on notice that it had no right to accept paper of another company. I find, however, that the Lake Charles Lumber Company was merely a name in which the J. I. Campbell Company was doing business, and that the drafts were given in their own business, and the interveners are entitled to judgment on the same less the amount of 48.24 per cent. of each claim, which was paid to them by the receivership in Louisiana."

The judgment recites that the three interventions had been consolidated, and, the court having considered the pleadings, the master's report and the exceptions of the receiver thereto, together with the evidence, finds that at the time of the institution of this suit and of the appointment of the receiver herein the defendant J. I. Campbell Company, a corporation, was indebted to interveners as alleged by them (stating the respective debts), and that afterwards said interveners received from the assets of the said J. I. Campbell Company found in the state of Louisiana 48.24 per cent. of the amount of their said claims (stating the amount received by each claimant), and thereupon found that interveners "were not entitled to participate in or receive any part of the funds now in or to come into the hands of said receiver until they have paid to said receiver within ten days from this date the said sums by them, respectively, received from and out of said assets found in the state of Louisiana as above stated," and, when the above determination was announced interveners declined to make such payments to the receiver, judgment was rendered against them as aforesaid. The report of the master was not excepted to by interveners, and the matters of fact, as they appear therein, were sustained by the evidence.

The court in its decree overruled the first exception of the receiver to the master's report, and one of the facts determined by the court for all purposes of this appeal was that the J. I. Campbell Company was in reality the interested party in the business at Lake Charles, using the name of the Lake Charles Lumber Company, and the assets of or in the name of the last-named company were paid for by its funds, and that it was the equitable owner of all the property of the Lake Charles Lumber Company. The use of the name of the Lake Charles Lumber Company by the J. I. Campbell Company was doubtless to facilitate the prosecution of its business in Louisiana; its own charter conferring upon it power to do business only in certain-named counties in Texas. As a matter of fact, its assets consisted in part of this property in Louisiana, although the courts of that state, upon a judicial investigation of its status, and the right of creditors of the J. I. Campbell Company to share therein, have held it to be property of and distributable only to creditors of the Lake Charles Lumber Company because the J. I. Campbell Company had no legal existence in Louisiana and was not to be recognized there, and hence denied the J. I. Campbell Company's existence for any purpose in that state, and denied to the creditors of the J. I. Campbell Company any right of participation in the assets in that jurisdiction. The receiver of the J. I. Campbell Company, the appellee here, was not a party to that proceeding.

These interveners, holding the drafts drawn in the name of the Lake Charles Lumber Company, were by virtue of that fact admitted to share in the assets in Louisiana. The trial court, however, found the same to have been the property of the J. I. Campbell Company. Intervenors realized from that source about one-half of their demands. The receivership in Louisiana was granted after the appointment of the receiver in Texas for the J. I. Campbell Company, and these interveners received in that proceeding payment of part of their claims from what the court below has determined was assets of the J. I. Campbell Company, and which in truth and in fact was the real debtor. They have, therefore, received a payment from assets belonging ratably to all creditors of the J. I. Campbell Company, a preference, which the creditors, for whose benefit the receivership in this case exists, were excluded from in that distribution and have no way of obtaining; and the only way in which their just right to an equal or pro rata distribution of the corporation's assets may be enforced, in view of such preference, is through the court at whose door the interveners are knocking, and, as the trial court had no jurisdiction over the property in the other state, it cannot interfere with the disposition made by the courts of Louisiana of property there; but, while it has no such power and no power to compel these interveners to turn over to its receiver what of the assets they have secured in Louisiana, it can say to them: "Unless you are willing to come in on the same footing as other creditors and submit to the extent of your ability to an equal sharing of the assets among all creditors, which is the purpose and soul of this receivership, you will not be recognized in the distribution of property under its control." The court in this state has the undoubted right, as it is its duty, to distribute the assets under its control to all creditors who appear pro rata. The question presented is: Can it deny admission to a claimant who has since the receivership received assets of the insolvent corporation the retention of which would, if he be admitted unconditionally, yield him more than an equal sharing of the assets. We think the court has the right to exclude him no matter where or how such part of the corporation's assets has been acquired since the receivership, if he is unwilling to do that which will have the effect of procuring that just equality for which the receivership exists. Ward v. Connecticut Pipe Manufacturing Co., 71 Conn. 345, 41 Atl. 1057, 42 L. R. A. 706, 71 Am. St. Rep. 207.

One of appellants' contentions is that the J. I. Campbell Company was the primary debtor and the Lake Charles Lumber Company the secondary one, and that, as it has made part of the debts out of the latter, it has a right to credit what it so received and be allowed as a creditor of the primary debtor in this receivership for the balance. This presupposes that the assets received by them belonged to the Lake Charles Lumber Company, which the findings below distinctively negative. Of course, they could not possibly be admitted for more than the balance, in any event, and this is all they are asking. They would have this right if the J. I. Campbell Company were the defendant. But the case is obviously different where other creditors are the real defendants. They have come to a court of equity, and, as creditors seeking to share with other creditors a fund, they must do what equity dictates under all the circumstances surrounding their coming. The credit, or rather the advantage, they have secured over the others, they may retain, but they cannot do so and at the same time require the court to vouchsafe to them a preference, which the court would have done had it granted their applications. So far as the findings and the evidence are concerned, the interveners appear as bona fide purchasers of the paper, and, as such, they could look to both the J. I. Campbell Company, the acceptor, and the Lake Charles Lumber Company, the drawer. But the question here is not concerned with their bona fides. Their right to resort to the J. I. Campbell Company and to this receivership is not questioned. It is simply a question of their being allowed to share in this receivership fund on terms of unfair inequality with other general creditors. The appellee's independent propositions are overruled. The first of these is that assuming that, as claimed by appellants, the J. I. Campbell Company and the Lake Charles Lumber Company were separate legal entities, the acceptances sued on having (upon that theory) been made for the benefit and accommodation of the Lake Charles Lumber Company, the acts of acceptance were ultra vires, and not binding on the J. I. Campbell Company. The assumption is not sustained by the facts.

The third is that appellants having intervened in the cause in the district court of Louisiana, and having there opposed the allowances by that court of the claims of the various creditors of the J. I. Campbell Company who intervened in that cause, alleging that these were only entitled to participate in the proceeds of the property in Louisiana remaining after the payment of all debts of the Lake Charles Lumber Company and having succeeded in such contentions, they are now estopped from claiming to be creditors of the J. I. Campbell Company.

The second is that the testimony shows that the organization known as the Lake Charles Lumber Company was formed for the purpose of enabling the J. I. Campbell Company to use its funds in prosecuting its business in Louisiana in violation of its charter, and the drafts sued on, having been executed and accepted to aid in the accomplishment of such purpose and the interveners being charged with notice of such fact, are not entitled to recover on said instruments.

There are no cross-assignments of error by appellee, and we doubt that they have the right to raise these questions. But, if they present questions of a fundamental nature, they are unsound. What interveners did and accomplished in the Louisiana proceeding was merely to exclude the creditors whose claims were only against the J. I. Campbell Company from participating in the particular assets under the control of that court. The adjudication had no reference to any right of the interveners to proceed against other assets in another jurisdiction for any unsatisfied balance of their claims. The Honorable Supreme Court of Louisiana in the opinion it delivered states that this subject was not involved in this language: "What may be the rights of the creditors of the Lake Charles Company quoad any balance that may be due them after the property of the Company had been exhausted, as against the J. I. Campbell Company (regarding the latter as an undisclosed principal), is a question that need not be here considered." The proposition is that the acceptances of the J. I. Campbell Company were void in the hands of interveners, because given in aid of an unauthorized exercise of its corporate or chartered powers, because the findings were in effect that all interveners knew, when they bought the paper, was that the drafts were given for logs purchased by the Lake Charles Lumber Company, and this fact alone was sufficient to charge them with knowledge that the J. I. Campbell Company was without power to make the acceptances. Notwithstanding the latter company had no power to conduct its corporate business in Louisiana, it does not follow that it had no power to make these acceptances. Conditions might exist in the proper exercise of its corporate functions which made it obligatory upon it to accept and pay the Lake Charles Lumber Company's drafts, and, this being so, these purchasers are not charged with notice of a want of power. Bird v. Daggett, 97 Mass. 494; Stoney v. Insurance Co., 11 Paige (N. Y.) 635; Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Sutton Mfg. Co., 52 Fed. 191, 3 C. C. A. 1, 17 L. R. A. 595.

The judgment is affirmed.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 18, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 262*)—DEATH OF SERVANT — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — PLEADING DEFENSE.

Where, in an action for the death of a servant, neither the pleading nor the evidence of plaintiff, except as shown on the cross-examination of his witness, develops decedent's contributory negligence, it must be pleaded, to be available as a defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 869; Dec. Dig. § 262.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 289*)—INJURY TO SERVANT — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — QUESTION FOR JURY.

The selection by a servant of the more dangerous of two or more ways of doing an act does not, as a matter of law, constitute contributory negligence, unless the facts show the selection of a method obviously more hazardous, justifying the court in concluding, as a matter of law, that no person of ordinary prudence would have adopted it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1089-1132; Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 265*)—DEATH OF SERVANT — ASSUMPTION OF RISK — BURDEN OF PROOF.

A master, sued for the negligent death of a servant, has the burden of proving the knowledge of the servant of the conditions on which to predicate assumption of risk.

Appeal from District Court, Harrison County; W. C. Buford, Judge.

Action by Georgia Ann Lewis against the Texas & Pacific Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

M. B. Parchman and C. E. Carter, for appellant. F. H. Prendergast, for appellee.

HODGES, J. The appellant is the widow of Charles Lewis, who is alleged to have been killed while in the employ of the appellee railway company by reason of the negligence of the company in not furnishing him a safe place in which to perform his labors. She sues for damages in the sum of $1,900. The testimony shows that Lewis was employed about the shops of the railway company in the city of Marshall; that it was a part of his duty to carry engine pilots from a place in the yard into the shops, where they were put upon engines. He was furnished for that purpose a two-wheeled vehicle, the wheels of which were about two or three feet high. The pilots were placed upon this vehicle, and were by the men carried into the shop, and were unloaded at places where they were to be used. On the occasion of the injury complained of, Lewis was working with two other employes, James Love and Will Jackson. According to the testimony of these witnesses, they had carried a pilot from the yard into the shop, and when they got to the place where it was to be unloaded the deceased got up on the vehicle and attempted to pull the pilot over. His first effort resulted in failure. The second, however, caused the pilot to come over toward him, and as he stepped back one of his feet landed upon an iron bolt about seven-eighths of an inch in diameter and about two feet long, which was lying on the floor near the trucks. This bolt, it seems, rolled or slipped, and caused Lewis to lose his balance and fall, and the pilot fell over on top of him, causing the injuries from which he died. Both witnesses testified that this was the usual method of unloading the pilots. On cross-examination they stated that they did at times unload by raising the tongue and permitting the pilot to fall off; but it seems that they regarded the method adopted on this occasion as being easier and preferable. They also on cross-examination testified that there was a crane provided by the railway company for such purposes, which was some little distance away—eight feet, as stated by one of them. Why they did not use this crane does not clearly appear in the record. The case was tried before a jury, and a verdict rendered in favor of the railway company.

Complaint is made at the giving of charges on contributory negligence. The first of these charges is as follows: "Again, if you believe from the evidence that there were several ways to remove the pilot from the wagon or trucks, some of which were safer or less hazardous than others, and that Lewis knew of these ways, and he voluntarily took the more dangerous or hazardous way in which to remove the pilot from the trucks, then you will find for the defendant." It is claimed that this submits an issue not raised by the pleadings, and is also on the weight of the evidence. We think the charge is subject to both objections. The defendant pleaded only a general demurrer and a general denial. Neither the pleadings nor the evidence of the plaintiff suggested any conduct that exposed the deceased to the charge of contributory negligence, so as to make this defense available to the defendant without having pleaded it. It is true there was some testimony tending to show that there were other ways by which the pilot might have been unloaded, and which were probably safer than the one adopted on this occasion; but this evidence was elicited on cross-examination, and did not appear from the testimony offered by the plaintiff in the case. The fact that it was given on cross-examination by witnesses who had testified for her did not make it her evidence. Where neither the pleadings nor the evidence of the plaintiff develops contributory negligence, it must be pleaded to become available as a defense. Mo. P. Ry. Co. v. Watson, 72 Tex. 633, 10 S. W. 731; Murray v. Railway Co., 73 Tex. 6, 11 S. W. 125; Perez v. S. A. & A. P. Ry. Co., 28 Tex. Civ. App. 255, 67 S. W. 137. We are also of the opinion that this charge invaded the province of the jury. The mere fact of selecting the more dangerous of two or more ways of doing a given act does not as a matter of law constitute contributory negligence. It is still a question for the jury, unless the facts proved show the selection of a method obviously more hazardous and under circumstances such as would justify the court in concluding as a matter of law that no person of ordinary prudence would have adopted it.

The court also gave the following charge which is complained of: "Again, a person cannot recover damages from another on account of injuries occasioned by his own negligence or want of care, to which his own negligence contributed, and it is the duty of every person to use his senses of sight, hearing, and other senses to protect himself from danger, and to exercise in doing this such a degree of care as an ordinary person would exercise under the same circumstances; and if you believe from the evidence in this case that the deceased knew of the bolt lying upon the floor, if you find it was on the floor, or could have known of the same by the exercise of ordinary care, and have avoided stepping upon same, and the injury which might result therefrom, and failed to do so, and that said failure, if any, caused or contributed to cause his injury and death, then you will find for the defendant, and this although you should believe the defendant was negligent in the first instance in permitting the bolt to remain upon the floor where it might cause injury." This presented the issue of assumed risk from a knowledge of the conditions which caused the injury. The burden of proving such knowledge rested upon the appellee. The appellee not having pleaded this defense, the court should not have given this charge. Railway Co. v. Harris, 95 Tex. 346, 67 S. W. 315; M. & T. Ry. Co. v. Jones, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 584, 80 S. W. 852.

For the errors discussed, the judgment of the district court is reversed, and the cause remanded.

Appeal from District Court, Grimes County; S. W. Dean, Judge.

Action by Fannie E. Lightfoot and others against A. Horst, who impleaded Margaret Meuly and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, and judgment rendered.

Hefley & Watson, W. W. Meachum, and L. C. McBride, for appellants. Buffington & Bowen and Geo. D. Neal, for appellees.

FLY, J. This is an action of trespass to try title to the Valentine Snider 1,280-acre survey, in Grimes county, instituted by appellants, Fannie E. Lightfoot, joined by her husband, J. W. Lightfoot, Horace Resley, Cora E. Marler, and her husband, W. J. Marler, Blanche Barton, and her husband, A. M. Barton, and G. E. Resley, against A. Horst, who pleaded not guilty, and set up a claim to 812 acres of the land, disclaiming as to the balance, and impleaded his warrantors, Margaret Meuly, Herman Meuly, Charly A. Meuly, A. H. Meuly, Maggie Meuly, Amelia Meuly, and Mary E. Blucher, and husband, C. F. H. von Blucher, and prayed for judgment over against them on their warranty in case of a recovery against him. They pleaded general denial, and not guilty. The cause was tried without a jury, and judgment was rendered in favor of Horst for the 812 acres of land claimed by him, and that appellants recover the 468 acres as to which the disclaimer had been entered by Horst. The warrantors were dismissed, with their costs. The 1,280-acre survey was granted by the state of Texas to Valentine Snider on October 1, 1841, and on September 7, 1842, he conveyed the same to Abraham McMillan, and the deed was duly recorded in Grimes county on July 11, 1853. On November 7, 1854, Abraham McMillan conveyed the 1,280 acres to George Resley, through whom appellants claim, as his heirs, and the deed was filed for record on December 18, 1854, in Grimes county. The above constituted appellants' chain of title, and appellees showed that on September 6, 1850, a judgment was rendered in Nueces county against V. Schneider, who it appears was the same as Valentine Snider, in favor of Conrad Meuly, for \$1,957.25, and that an execution was levied in Grimes county on the 1,280 acres patented to Valentine Snider and the same was sold by the sheriff of Grimes county on July 5, 1853, to Conrad Meuly as appeared from a deed which was filed for record in Grimes county on August 13, 1853. Conrad Meuly died in 1864, and left as his heirs appellees and Mrs. Ursula Daimwood, deceased. Appellees conveyed $1\frac{1}{4}$ of the 812 acres to Horst, and the executor of the will of Ursula Daimwood sold the remaining $1\frac{1}{4}$ to him; the deeds being dated, respectively, March 5, 1900, and July 6, 1900.

It was shown: That on August 4, 1855, George Resley executed two powers of attorney, one to Lemuel G. Clepper, authorizing him to sell the 1,280 acres of land for not less than $1 an acre, and the other to Samuel G. Clepper, authorizing him to sell the land at not less than $3 an acre. Both were acknowledged on the same day before the same officer. The first named was filed for record August 20, 1855, in Milam county, and the other in Grimes county on October 20, 1855. Lemuel G. Clepper and Samuel G. Clepper were described as being residents of Montgomery county. On September 28, 1855, Lem. G. Clepper, as agent for George Resley, conveyed the 1,280 acres to James Mitchell for $615 in cash and $615 "secured to be paid." That deed was filed for record in Grimes county on October 20, 1855, the same day and same hour on which the power of attorney to Samuel G. Clepper was filed for record. The power of attorney to Lem. G. Clepper was filed for record in Grimes county on July 25, 1904. On March 23, 1860, Conrad Meuly recovered judgment against James Mitchell, in Grimes county, for the 1,280 acres of land, and that judgment was affirmed on March 17, 1870, by the then Supreme Court of Texas. George Resley died on March 2, 1890. The judgment in favor of Meuly against Snider was for $1,957.25, and the land was sold by the sheriff of Grimes county to Conrad Meuly for $204.80, which it must be presumed was credited on the judgment owned by the vendee at the execution sale. Such being the case, Conrad Meuly did not occupy the position of an innocent purchaser towards Abraham McMillan, who bought the land from Valentine Snider in 1842, but whose deed was not filed for record until after the sale under execution in 1853. It is well-settled law that a bona fide purchaser is not constituted by the sale of land to the judgment creditor whose bid is applied on his judgment. Ayers v. Du- prey, 27 Tex. 594, 86 Am. Dec. 657; McKamey v. Thorp, 61 Tex. 648; Stoker v. Bailey, 62 Tex. 299; Overstreet v. Manning, 67 Tex. 657, 4 S. W. 248. In the cited case of Stoker v. Bailey, the court said: "The purchase of the property by the appellees was made under an execution in their own favor, and it is not shown that they paid for the property otherwise than by crediting the amount of their bid on their judgment"; and held that they were not innocent purchasers. It follows that appellees have no title to the land through the execution sale made by the sheriff of Grimes county to Conrad Meuly, and that the title remained in Abraham McMillan, who sold to George Resley, through whom appellants claim, as his heirs.

The only other question presented is as to whether the title of Resley was conveyed by the deed of his agent, Lemuel G. Clepper, to James Mitchell, either by virtue of the deed itself or by its ratification by Resley; for, unless that deed conveyed Resley's title, it becomes unnecessary to discuss the judgment of Conrad Meuly against James Mitchell, as Resley was not a party to that suit, and consequently was not affected by it. It is elementary that no one is bound by a judgment to which he is not a party or with which he is not in privity. In the discussion of the question, it may be assumed that Lemuel and Samuel Clepper were one and the same person, and it would be immaterial under which power of attorney the deed was executed, although it may be inferred that the lower court assumed that the deed to Mitchell was made by virtue of the power of attorney to Lemuel G. Clepper, which fixed the minimum price at $1 an acre. That assumption is most favorable to appellees; for, if the authority to execute the deed executed by Lemuel G. Clepper cannot be maintained under that power of attorney, it cannot be maintained under one given to Samuel G. Clepper and fixing the minimum price of the land at $3 an acre. Where an agent is authorized to sell land, it is incumbent on him to sell it in the manner, upon the terms, and for the price named in his power of attorney. If authorized to sell for cash, a sale on credit, either for the whole or a part of the purchase money, is not binding on his principal. Authority to sell for a minimum price does not give the power to sell for any amount less than that price. Powers of attorney must be strictly construed, and the authority delegated is limited by the terms in which it is expressed. Reese v. Medlock, 27 Tex. 120, 84 Am. Dec. 611; Gouldy v. Metcalf, 75 Tex. 455, 12 S. W. 830, 16 Am. St. Rep. 912; Fitzhugh v. Land Co., 81 Tex. 306, 16 S. W. 1078; Frost v. Cattle Co., 81 Tex. 505, 17 S. W. 52, 26 Am. St. Rep. 831; Clark & Skyles, Law of Agency, §§ 229, 232; Bush v. Cole, 28 N. Y. 261, 84 Am. Dec. 343; Mech. Agency, § 325. Both of the powers of attorney authorized Clepper "to sell and dispose of absolutely in fee simple, or otherwise, the above-described land at not less than" $1 in the one instance and $3 in the other, and these terms would import a sale for cash. The land was sold partly for cash and partly on time and for $50 less than the minimum price allowed in the one instrument and $1,610 less than was authorized in the other. The sale was not authorized by the powers of attorney. Morton v. Morris, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 262, 66 S. W. 94; Skirvin v. O'Brien, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 95 S. W. 696.

In the case of De Sollar v. Hanscome, 158 U. S. 216, 15 Sup. Ct. 816, 39 L. Ed. 956, the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking of a contract of sale made by an agent, said: "Obviously the agreement signed by Henry as agent was not within the scope of the authority given. Authority to sell for $5,000, one-half cash, is not satisfied by an agreement to sell for $5,000, $200 cash, $2,300 in three weeks, and the balance on time; further, the agreement was not in fact for $5,000, but only for $4,950, the agent calling it $5,000, and claiming only $100 as his commission instead of $150." So in this case the agent was authorized in one power of attorney to sell at a minimum cash price of $1,280, and in the other at a cash price of $2,840, and, instead, he sold for $1,230, one half cash and the other half on time. He exceeded his authority and his principal was not bound by it. Although Clepper acted without authority in making the sale to James Mitchell, still, if Resley had been shown to ratify the sale, he would be as firmly bound as though he had originally authorized it. Ratification by a principal is the acceptance by words or conduct of an act or contract previously done or made in his behalf by an agent, and, of course, must be premised upon full knowledge of all material facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction to be ratified. There may be an express or implied ratification; the latter being evidenced by acts and conduct of the principal after full knowledge of the material facts, such as receiving and retaining the benefits of the unauthorized acts of the agent. Mere silence, as a general rule, does not prove ratification, but it is merely a circumstance to be considered with others in arriving at a conclusion as to whether a transaction has been ratified or not. But, as a foundation and basis for the ratification, there must exist knowledge upon the part of the principal of the acts of the agent. Ratification is a voluntary act upon the part of the principal, and he is under no legal obligation to make inquiries about the unauthorized acts of his agent, and knowledge will not be presumed because of the opportunity to acquire it. The burden of proving the ratification of the acts of an agent rests on him who desires benefit from it, and, as a basis for his proof, he must first show knowledge upon the part of the principal. Of course, that may be done by direct or circumstantial evidence, but it must be done.

Sterling v. De Laune (Tex. Civ. App.) 105 S. W. 1169.

Speaking on this subject, it was held by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, in Combs v. Scott, 12 Allen, 493: "Ratification of a past and completed transaction, into which an agent has entered without authority, is a purely voluntary act on the part of a principal. No legal obligation rests upon him to sanction or adopt it. No duty requires him to make inquiries concerning it. Where there is no legal obligation or duty to do an act, there can be no negligence in an omission to perform it. * * * Whoever, therefore, seeks to procure and rely on a ratification, is bound to show that it was made under such circumstances as, in law, to be binding on the principal, especially to see to it that all material facts were made known to him. The burden of making inquiries and of ascertaining the truth is not cast on him who is under no legal obligation to assume a responsibility, but rests on the party who is endeavoring to obtain a benefit or advantage for himself." There might doubtless be circumstances under which a principal would not be permitted to shut his eyes to facts that would reveal the acts of his agent, for such conduct would amount to a fraud, and he would be estopped from claiming ignorance of the situation. The facts in this case, however, do not show any circumstances that would evidence a ratification of the act of Clepper, except silence for many years. It was not shown that the money ever came into the hands of Resley, or that he had any knowledge of the transaction. He lived in Milam county and the land was in Grimes county; the deed to James Mitchell having been filed in that county. The land was not in the possession of any one, and taxes were not paid on it until paid by Horst in 1900. It is true the trial judge found that there was evidence of the payment of taxes in 1892 and 1893, but the finding is not supported by the statement of facts. There is no evidence that Resley paid taxes on the land until the time it was conveyed by his agent and then that he ceased to pay taxes, or that he changed his position towards the land in any way whatever. Appellee Horst cannot claim to be an innocent purchaser, because, when he bought from the heirs of Meuly, the records of Grimes county placed him upon notice that the land had been sold to Mitchell under a power of attorney which authorized a sale for not less than $3 in cash an acre and the deed to Mitchell indicated a sale for less than $1, and that partly on credit. In the case of Reese v. Medlock, hereinbefore cited, the agent had full authority under a written power of attorney to sell land, and he sold it for $900 according to a recital in the deed, but the real consideration was a negro conveyed to the agent by the vendee. It was held that the power of attorney only authorized a sale for money, and not to exchange it for other property. A charge which made delay of the principal in disaffirming the sale for such a time as the jury might deem reasonably sufficient conclusive evidence of ratification, regardless of whether the principal had knowledge of the sale or not, was held to be erroneous. The court also said: "Nor is the fact of the record of the deed from the agent, as insisted by counsel, constructive notice to the principal of its contents." The decision in the case of Mitchell v. Meuley, 32 Tex. 460, which was introduced in evidence by appellees, adjudicated but one matter and that was that the judgment in the case of Meuly v. Snider was not void. It did not adjudicate anything in regard to the sale made under the judgment, nor as to the deed made by Clepper to Mitchell. It is not res adjudicata of any issue in this case, and Resley was not a party to it.

We conclude that the judgment of the trial court should be reversed, and judgment here rendered that appellants recover of appellee Horst the 1,280 acres of land sued for, together with all costs in this behalf expended, and that Horst recover of the other appellees on their warranties the sum of $2,639, with 6 per cent. interest thereon from July 5, 1900, and all costs of this suit.

On Motions to Find Additional Facts and for Rehearing.

The statement of facts does not support the contention that only 1,230 acres were conveyed by Clepper to Mitchell. In the copy of the deed the number of acres and description have not been copied, but it is stated in parenthesis that the land described in the deed is that described in the petition. In the first clause of the statement of facts we find that the patent to Valentine Snider conveyed the 1,280 acres of land described in plaintiff's petition. In both of the powers of attorney to Clepper the land is described as containing 1,280 acres of land. There is nothing in the statement of facts that sustains the finding of the trial judge that Clepper conveyed only 1,230 acres out of the tract to Mitchell. It would have made no difference if he had, because the land was not sold for cash as prescribed in the power of attorney authorizing the sale at $1 an acre. The other findings suggested by appellee are unnecessary to the proper decision of the cause.

Conrad Meuly had a personal judgment against Snider for $1,957.25, said judgment in no way involving, or having any connection with, the land in controversy. Execution was levied on the land at a time when it was no longer the property of Snider, and it was sold to Meuly for $204.80, and it would be flying in the very face of reason and common sense to suppose that Meuly paid cash for the land, instead of crediting the amount on his judgment. Sane men do not act in that way. The natural and reasonable inference would be that the amount of the bid was credited on the judgment. This matter is authoritatively settled by the case of Stoker v. Bailey, 62 Tex. 299, as stated in our former opinion. See, also, Evans v. Mellborn, 74 Tex. 530, 12 S. W. 230, 15 Am. St. Rep. 858, Hirsch v. Howell (Tex. Civ. App.) 60 S. W. 887, and Masterson v. Burnett, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 370, 66 S. W. 90, on the question of innocent purchaser.

There was no judgment lien held by Meuly against the land of Snider. Appellees seem to labor under the impression that because Meuly had obtained a personal judgment in Nueces county against Valentine Snider that judgment became a lien against the land of Snider in Grimes county. The case of Wallace v. Campbell, 54 Tex. 87, has no application whatever to this case.

The motions are overruled.

BEAUMONT TRACTION CO. v. HAPP.

2. CARRIERS (§ 244*)—WHO ARE PASSENGERS—PERSON RIDING ON BUMPER OF CROWDED STREET CAR.

One riding on the bumper of a crowded street car, according to the usual practice allowed by the company, whose conductor does not try to prevent it, but takes his fare and warns him to be careful, is a passenger.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1115, 1116; Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 295*)—PASSENGER ON BUMPER OF CROWDED STREET CAR—INJURY RESULTING FROM CARRIER'S NEGLIGENCE.

Where a passenger was allowed to ride with others on the bumper of a crowded street car as he had done before, and without knowing that it had been prohibited on the day in question, and he was injured by the negligence of the company in managing the car, and the passenger, aside from his occupying the dangerous position, was not negligent, the street railroad company was liable.

4. CARRIERS (§ 336*)—PASSENGER ON BUMPER OF CROWDED STREET CAR—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE AND ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

Where a passenger is permitted to ride on the bumper of a crowded street car, he is not guilty of contributory negligence in so riding which will relieve the carrier of liability for his injury resulting from the negligent management of the car, and in so riding he does not assume the risk of such injury.

6. TRIAL (§ 256*)—INSTRUCTIONS—SUBMISSION OF ISSUES—CHARGE CORRECT AS FAR AS IT GOES.

Where a charge is correct as far as it goes and submits an issue raised by the pleading and proof, defendant cannot complain thereof because it is based on one state of facts presented by the evidence, when there are other facts in evidence presenting another theory and making up a part of the defense, but, if not satisfied therewith, should request a charge covering the point.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 628—641; Dec. Dig. § 256.*]

7. TRIAL (§ 260*)—REQUEST FOR INSTRUCTIONS—INSTRUCTION ALREADY GIVEN.

An instruction, as to the burden of proof as to contributory negligence, that the jury, in determining whether defendant had "discharged such burden," should look to all the evidence, whether introduced by either party, or both, is not materially different from a charge requested by defendant, to the effect that the jury should look to all such evidence in determining, not whether defendant had "discharged the burden," but whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

Appeal from District Court, Jefferson County; L. B. Hightower, Jr., Judge.

Suit by J. L. Happ against the Beaumont Traction Company From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Crook, Lord & Lawhon and J. S. Wheless, for appellant. V. A. Collins and Smith, Crawford & Sonfield, for appellee.

McMEANS, J. Appellee, J. L. Happ, brought this suit against the appellant, Beaumont Traction Company, a corporation operating a system of electric street cars in the city of Beaumont, to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by him in a collision between cars of said company. The case was tried before a jury and resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $12,200. From an order overruling appellant's motion for a new trial, this appeal is prosecuted.

The evidence adduced at the trial justifies the following conclusions of fact: On November 7, 1906, about 7:30 o'clock in the evening, it being then dark, a car of appellant, operated by its servants, and on its way to the circus grounds, stopped at the post office in Beaumont, and several persons boarded the car. The car was overcrowded so that room could not be found for other passengers inside, and the platform and steps were full of people. Appellee, knowing that the car was crowded, and not being able to get on the steps or platform, and desiring to go to the circus grounds, took his position on the bumper or buffer of the car, which is a rim protruding around the rear platform of the car, and which is about six inches wide and four inches thick and is not designed for the accommodation of passengers, but placed on the car to meet the impact of collision, and, placing his feet on the rim, leaned his body through an open window in the rear vestibule of the car, so that, while a portion of his body was on the outside, his head and the upper portion of his body were on the inside. When appellee got upon the bumper, others were riding there, and others afterwards got upon it, crowding plaintiff to such a degree as to prevent his turning around or looking behind him. In this condition the car was started down Calder avenue toward the show grounds. Before the car reached Magnolia street, appellant's servant, the conductor, went through the car taking up fares and collected fare from appellee and the others riding on the bumper, but made no objection to appellee and others riding in that position, but told them "to be careful." There were other cars ahead of the one on which appellee was riding, and others following it, all headed for the circus grounds; but the evidence justifies the conclusion that appellee could see in neither direction and did not in fact know of the proximity of the other cars. When Magnolia street was reached, the cars were halted, and in order to let empty cars, returning from the circus, pass, it became necessary to move back the car upon which appellee was, as well as the one just in front of it and the one just behind it. Appellant's general manager, F. J. Duffy, was, at this point, personally supervising the movement of the cars, and gave orders to the motormen to back up their cars so that the empties could pass. There was testimony tending to show that he gave notice to the persons riding on the bumper that the cars were to be backed, and that he directed them to get off the bumper on that account; but the evidence justifies the conclusion that such notice and direction were not heard by appellee, and that he did not in fact know that the car was to be moved backward, or that another car was standing a short distance behind him, and, if the notice was in fact given it was not given in sufficient time to permit appellee to get off the bumper and to a place of safety before the car upon which he was riding backed against and collided with the one which had stopped a short distance behind it. There was a conflict in the evidence as to whether the car upon which plaintiff was riding was moved backward by its own power, applied by the motorman, or by the car just in front of it backing and coming in collision with it; but the evidence justifies the finding that the motorman set the car in motion in obedience to the orders of the general manager, Duffy, and, in support of the verdict, we so find. The testimony was also conflicting as to whether passengers were allowed to ride on the bumper of cars, and on this point the general manager testified that he had given orders to conductors to not permit passengers to ride there, and that on that day he had tried to prevent it, and in this he was corroborated by several conductors and an ex-employé, and perhaps by other persons; but, on the other hand, it was shown that if there was any such prohibition appellee had no knowledge of it, and that he had ridden there and had seen others ride there many times on the occasion of fairs, baseball games, and circuses, when large crowds were in town, such as on the day of the circus when he was injured. On this point it was shown that the appellant had issued a book of rules, copies of which it furnished to its conductors and motormen, and that one of the rules is as follows: "(10) Riding on Outside of Car. Passengers must not be permitted to ride on the steps or rear buffer of a car unless overcrowded so that room cannot be found for them inside; and under no circumstances will women or small children be permitted to ride there."

Again, it was shown that about a year before plaintiff was hurt, on the occasion of a visit of a circus to Beaumont, appellant's general manager, Duffy, issued a written order governing the running of cars on that day, in which he directed that "trainmen must not permit passengers to ride in the window or the roof or bumper of cars," and that, on the occasion of the circus on the day plaintiff was hurt, he also issued a written order governing the management of cars on that day, but omitted any mention of a prohibition against riding on the bumpers. It was shown by the conductor of the car that on the day of plaintiff's injury the cars going out to the circus grounds were usually crowded, and that when this was so passengers rode on the bumpers, and that he did not try to prevent it, but would take their fares and warn them to be careful. In deference to the verdict, we conclude that on the day in question appellee was permitted by appellant to ride on the bumper of the crowded car upon which he took passage, and that in riding there as he did he was a passenger, and entitled to the care and protection due by a common carrier to its passengers. When the car on which appellee was riding backed into the car behind it, his leg was caught between the bumpers and so badly injured as to require amputation. The car was backed suddenly, and appellee did not know that it was to be moved backward until it was in motion, and he did not know that a collision with another car was imminent until it was too late to avoid injury. While it was safer to ride on the inside of a car, or upon the platform or steps, the bumper was not an unsafe place to ride when the car was being operated with proper care in the usual and ordinary way; nor was riding there obviously dangerous. There was also a conflict in the testimony as to whether appellee, at the time of and just before the injury, was in an intoxicated condition; but, in support of the verdict, we find that he was not intoxicated. We conclude that appellee's injury was the result of negligence of appellant, and that he was not guilty of contributory negligence, and that his injury did not result from any risk assumed by him in riding on the bumper.

Plaintiff in his petition made the following allegations: "First. That on or about the 7th day of November, 1906, the plaintiff became a passenger on one of the defendant's cars some time about dark in the evening, for the purpose of going out on its Calder avenue line. That defendant's car was bound for the circus grounds, where a circus was giving, or going to give, a performance, and that said car was very crowded with people, and, notwithstanding the crowded condition of said car, the defendant and its agent and employes in charge of said car would stop at the usual places and permit and invite other passengers to board same. That, with the knowledge, consent, and at the invitation of the defendant, this plaintiff got on one of the cars of defendant, as above stated; but, on account of its crowded condition, the only place he found where he could ride was on the back end and on the outside of the back platform of said car, where he could stand on the rim around said platform, where a number of other passengers were standing. That while in this position the car passed up on Calder avenue en route to the circus grounds. That when said car had passed over, or was about to pass over and across, Magnolia avenue, said car was stopped by defendant's employes in charge of the same, and was caused by the said defendant's employes to be run backward so that it collided with one of defendant's cars, which was following along behind it. That plaintiff believed, and had reason to believe, that the cars would stop before they collided, he, as defendant knew, not being in a position to know of the collision, and the collision took place so suddenly that plaintiff was unable to get out of the way quick enough to avoid being caught between the cars, so that his leg and foot were caught between the two cars and mashed and crushed so that it was necessary, in order to save his life, that his leg be amputated. Second. That plaintiff's injury was caused by the negligence and carelessness of defendant and its agents and employes, in this, to wit: In causing the car which plaintiff was riding on to move backward so as to collide with the car following it, knowing, as defendant's employes did, that plaintiff and others were riding where he was, and in not allowing the plaintiff to get off the car before running it backward into the other car, and in not giving him warning in time to clear himself from the impact caused by the collision. Third. Plaintiff further shows that he did not know that the car following the one on which he was a passenger was approaching or was coming close enough for a collision until just before the cars collided, for, he says, there were other passengers crowded on the rim or railing around the platform where he was, and prevented him from seeing behind him, all of which was known to defendant's agents, or could have been known by the exercise of reasonable care, and he did not know or have warning of the coming together of the said cars until there begun a general scramble on the part of the other passengers crowding around and over him to get out of the way, and he did attempt to get out of the way as soon as he had any intimation that there was likelihood of a collision; but by the utmost effort he was not able to clear himself in time, so that he was hurt seriously on account of the negligence and carelessness, as aforesaid, of the defendant, while he himself was in the exercise of due care, and while occupying a place of safety, where he would have remained unharmed, except for the negligence of the defendant, as aforesaid."

A general demurrer was urged to the petition and overruled, and this ruling of the court is made the basis of appellant's first assignment of error. The assignment is without merit. There were no allegations in the petition which, in legal effect, showed prima facie negligence upon the part of appellee as a matter of law, nor from which it can be said that his injuries resulted from risks which he assumed in riding where he did. On the other hand, the petition expressly negatives such negligence and assumption of risk. The assignment is overruled.

The eighth assignment of error complains of the third paragraph of the court's general charge, which is as follows: "If you shall believe, from a preponderance of the evidence before you, that on or about the 7th day of November, 1906, the plaintiff, J. L.

Happ, was a passenger upon one of the defendant's street cars in the city of Beaumont, and you further believe from the evidence that, when such car approached the crossing of Calder and Magnolia streets in said city, the same was caused by the defendant's agents or employes in charge of such car to be stopped, and thereupon another car of defendant's said Calder line approached from the rear of the car on which plaintiff was riding, and came up in close proximity to plaintiff's said car, and that thereupon the defendant's manager, F. J. Duffy, was present and caused the car on which plaintiff was riding to be backed and come in contact with said car, which had approached from the rear, and at the time the said F. J. Duffy did so he knew that the plaintiff or other persons were standing on the bumper or the rear end of said car, which he (the said Duffy) caused to be backed, as aforesaid; and if you further believe from the evidence that said car was caused to be backed suddenly and to come in contact with said car from the rear before plaintiff had time to alight from said position after he knew, or ought to have known, that said car would be so backed; and if you further believe from the evidence that the said F. J. Duffy, in so causing said car on which plaintiff was riding to be so backed in the manner and under the circumstances which he did, failed to use that degree of care which a very prudent and cautious person would have used under the same or similar circumstances, and that plaintiff's leg was thereby caught between said cars so caused to come in contact, and was thereby injured, and if you further believe from the evidence that the act of the said F. J. Duffy in so causing said cars to be so backed and come in contact with said car from the rear was the proximate cause of said injury, as above defined—then you are instructed to return a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, unless you shall find in favor of the defendant under other instructions given you."

The first proposition under this assignment is that it was error for the court to base the charge alone upon one state of facts as presented by the evidence, when there are other facts in evidence presenting another theory and making up a part of the defense to this suit. Upon this proposition appellant contends that, inasmuch as there was evidence tending to prove that the backward movement of the car upon which plaintiff was riding was due to the acts of the appellant's foreman in causing the motorman to back the car, whereby the collision and injury occurred, and inasmuch as there was other evidence tending to prove that the backward movement of the car was due to another car in front of it backing up against it and knocking it back such a distance as to cause the collision and injury, the court should not have based his charge upon the cause first stated without also charging upon the second. The charge was correct as far as it went, and submitted an issue raised by the pleadings and proof. If not satisfied with it, appellant should have requested a charge covering the point.

By its second proposition under this assignment, appellant contends that, as the evidence shows that appellee at the time he was hurt was not a passenger, that part of the charge which imposed upon appellant the necessity of proving that it exercised the degree of care that a carrier owes to passengers was erroneous. Our conclusion of fact that the appellee was shown by the evidence to have been a passenger disposes of this contention adversely to appellant. The assignment cannot be sustained.

The tenth assignment complains of the following paragraph of the court's charge: "But the burden of proof to establish contributory negligence, as pleaded by defendant, rests upon the defendant; but, in determining whether defendant had discharged such burden, you will look to all the facts and circumstances introduced in evidence before you, regardless of whether the same was introduced by the plaintiff or the defendant or both." Appellant contends that the vice in this charge consists in the statement that the jury, in determining whether defendant had "discharged such burden," should look to all the evidence, whether introduced by either party, or both, instead of instructing them that they should look to all such evidence in determining not whether defendant had "discharged the burden," but whether plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence. We think the legal effect of the charge as given is not materially different from the charge which appellant contends should have been given. Certainly the jury understood from it that they had the right, in determining the issue of contributory negligence, to look to all the evidence adduced, and were not limited to a consideration of that only which was offered by appellant. The charge sufficiently met the requirements of the law.

But if we are mistaken in this, then we hold that the charge in question, when taken in connection with other portions of the main charge and special charges given at the request of defendant, was not calculated to mislead the jury. In the general charge the court instructed the jury: "Now, if you shall believe from the evidence that the plaintiff, in riding and being upon the 'bumper' of defendant's car, where he was at the time he was injured, was guilty of 'contributory negligence,' as above defined, in other words, if you believe from the evidence that an ordinarily prudent person would not have assumed the position on defendant's car that was assumed by the plaintiff, that is, on the 'bumper' of said car, under all the circumstances existing at the time he did so, then I instruct you that the plaintiff cannot recover, even though you shall believe that the defendant was guilty of negligence, as above submitted for your consideration; or if you shall believe from the evidence that at the time the plaintiff was injured he was under the influence of intoxicating liquor, as alleged by defendant, to the extent that he was thereby deprived of the capacity to use care for his own safety and protection as an ordinarily prudent person, if sober, would have used while situated as plaintiff was at the time, and that but for such intoxication the plaintiff would never have been injured, then you are instructed that the plaintiff cannot recover; or if you shall believe from the evidence that, before or at the time that the car on which he was riding was caused to be backed as aforesaid, the defendant's manager, F. J. Duffy, warned the plaintiff, and persons on the 'bumper' of said car at said time, to get off of said car, and that such warning was in time to have enabled the plaintiff to heed the same and comply therewith before being injured as he was, and that the plaintiff failed to heed such warning, after hearing same, then you are instructed that the plaintiff cannot recover—because, in either of such events, the plaintiff would be guilty of contributory negligence which would bar his recovery, even if you should believe that the defendant was guilty of negligence as above submitted for your consideration, and this would be so, although you may believe, from the evidence, that the plaintiff was riding upon the 'bumper' with the knowledge and consent of the defendant's conductor in charge of such car and had paid his fare as a passenger thereon. You are further instructed that if you shall believe from the evidence that the position in which plaintiff was riding at the time he was injured, that is to say, the 'bumper' of the car on which he was standing, was a place of obvious and apparent danger for a passenger on a street car to ride while such cars are being operated in the usual and natural and proper way, then you are instructed that the plaintiff cannot recover, even if you should believe from the evidence that the defendant's conductor in charge of said car knew that plaintiff had assumed such position, and even though the said conductor permitted plaintiff to remain in such position and collected his fare as a passenger on such car; and this would be so whether or not there was room inside of such car for plaintiff to ride at the time, and, in which event, if you so find the facts to be, your verdict must be for the defendant."

The court also gave defendant's special charges Nos. 7, 11, and 13, which are as follows:

"(7) You are charged that the evidence shows that plaintiff assumed and remained in a position on the rear bumper of the car between other persons standing on either side of him. Now, if you believe from the evidence that the presence of such persons on either side of plaintiff prevented him from seeing the approach of the other car, and prevented him from learning the danger of the collision in time to leave his place on the 'bumper,' or that the presence of such persons interfered with plaintiff's leaving the car in time, and that in assuming this position, and remaining there, he was guilty of contributory negligence which was the proximate cause of the injuries (as those terms have been defined in other instructions), then you will find for defendant, notwithstanding you may believe from the evidence that the defendant was guilty of negligence on its part."

"(11) At the request of the defendant, you are instructed that it was the duty of the plaintiff, Happ, to use ordinary care in keeping a lookout for danger and accidents, taking into consideration his position on the rear bumper or buffer of defendant's street car, and if you believe that the plaintiff could have, by the use of ordinary care, seen the car behind him in time to have removed to a place of safety and have averted the accident, you will find for the defendant."

"(13) It was plaintiff's duty to exercise ordinary care, as defined in the main charge, for his own safety, and the failure to use such care will bar a recovery where it is the proximate cause of the injury. You are further instructed that voluntary intoxication is not an excuse for the failure to use ordinary care. Therefore, if you believe from the evidence that plaintiff was under the influence of intoxicants at the time he was injured, so that he did not and could not heed the warning given him, if any, or did not and could not realize the danger to which he was exposed by the backing of the car, and that in either of these respects he was negligent, and that such negligence, if any, contributed to the injury as a proximate cause thereof, you will find for defendant, notwithstanding you may also believe that the defendant was guilty of negligence." Railway Co. v. Howard, 96 Tex. 582, 75 S. W. 805; Railway Co. v. Anglin, 99 Tex. 354, 89 S. W. 966, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 386; Railway Co. v. Groves, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 63, 97 S. W. 1085.

By its second proposition under this assignment, appellant contends that the petition and evidence established prima facie contributory negligence on the part of appellee, and, under the circumstances, it was error for the court to place the burden of proving contributory negligence upon appellant. Our conclusion of fact disposes of this proposition adversely to appellant's contention. At most, the evidence only raised the issue of contributory negligence, and, defendant having pleaded this issue as a defense, the burden was upon it to prove it, and the court properly so instructed the jury. Railway Co. v. Shieder, 88 Tex. 162, 30 S. W. 902, 28 L. R. A. 538; Railway Co. v. Anglin, 99 Tex. 355, 89 S. W. 966, 2 L. R. A.

(N. S.) 386. The assignment is overruled.

There is no merit in the contention that the special charge requested by the plaintiff and given by the court, on the issue of assumed risk, is contradictory and conflicting with the main charge, and misleading and confusing, as complained of in appellant's eleventh assignment. The special charge embodied the law as applicable to the facts, and the assignment and the several propositions thereunder are overruled.

Appellant's twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, nineteenth, twentieth, twenty-second, twenty-third, twenty-fourth, twenty-seventh, and twenty-eighth assignments, with their propositions, are not followed by any statements sufficient to explain and support the propositions, as required by rule 31 (67 S. W. xvi), and are not therefore entitled to consideration. However, we have examined the assignments, and have concluded that, were we required to pass upon them, we would hold that no reversible error is pointed out in any of them.

There was no error in refusing to instruct the jury as requested by appellant in its seventeenth special charge. By it appellant sought to have the jury instructed that the bumper of a car was a dangerous place for persons to attempt to ride, and that plaintiff assumed the risk of danger of such position when he attempted to ride upon the bumper of the car in question, although he was there by invitation of the defendant. The evidence did not disclose that the bumper was a place of obvious and certain danger in any event; but, on the contrary, was sufficient to authorize a finding that it was not a place of danger in the ordinary and proper operation of the car. The issue was properly submitted to the jury by the court in its charge. The assignment is overruled.

The twenty-sixth assignment, complaining that the verdict and judgment are contrary to the law and the evidence, in that plaintiff's own testimony showed that he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, is likewise without merit, and is overruled.

Our findings of fact dispose of appellant's thirtieth, thirty-first, thirty-second, and thirty-third assignments of error, which complain of the action of the trial court in overruling its motion for a new trial for the several reasons stated in the assignments and propositions, adversely to appellant's contention, and they are severally overruled.

The other assignments presented for a reversal, which have not been specifically alluded to, have been examined by us, and we are of the opinion that no reversible error has been shown in any of them.

We are of the opinion that the judgment of the court below should be affirmed, and it has been so ordered.

Affirmed.

BEAUMONT TRACTION CO. v. STATE.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 20, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 14*)—STATUTORY REGULATIONS—VESTIBULE ON CARS—CONSTRUCTION—PENAL STATUTE.

Acts 28th Leg. p. 178, c. 112, § 1, approved April 3, 1903, making it unlawful for any electric railway corporation to permit the operation of cars during certain months unless the forward end is screened for the protection of motormen, is a penal statute and will not be extended beyond the plain import of its terms.

Appeal from District Court, Jefferson County; W. H. Pope, Judge.

Action by the State of Texas against the Beaumont Traction Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, and judgment rendered for defendant.

Crook, Lord & Lawhon, for appellant.

REESE, J. This is a suit instituted by the county attorney of Jefferson county, in the name of the state of Texas, against the Beaumont Traction Company, a corporation engaged in operating a line of electric street railway in the city of Beaumont, to recover penalties in the sum of $2,000 for violation of the provisions of section 1, c. 112, p. 178, Acts 28th Leg., approved April 3, 1903, making it unlawful for any corporation or receiver operating a line of electric railway to require or permit (with certain exceptions named in the act) the operation upon its line of any electric car, during the period beginning November 15th and ending March 15th of each year, unless the forward end be provided with a screen or vestibule for the protection of the motorman from wind and storm. A trial without assistance of a jury resulted in a judgment against defendant for $100, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

By appropriate pleadings in the trial court, and assignments of error here, the question of the validity of the statute referred to is presented. Appellant's contention is that the provisions of the act are in violation of article 1, § 3, of the Constitution of this state and of section 1 of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, providing that the state shall not deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. The ground of the objection urged by appellant is that the statute in question imposes duties and restrictions upon corporations operating electric street cars that are not required of persons (not corporations), firms, or associations of such persons, engaged in the same business. The act in question is a penal statute, and, according to the well-settled rule of construction of such statutes, must be strictly construed according to the plain import of the terms thereof. It is well settled that a corporation is a "person" within the meaning of section 3, art. 1, of the Constitution of this state and of section 1 of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States. G., C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 154, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 660. Looking to the terms of the act in question, we think it clear that it must be limited in its application to "corporations"; that is, to associations of persons operating under a charter from the state, and that, according to the plain import of the terms used, natural persons, and partnerships, either of the ordinary kind or composed of persons associated together as joint-stock associations, do not come under the provisions of the act. The restrictions imposed by the act upon the business of operating a line of electric street railway do not apply to such business if carried on by natural persons, firms, or associations. Such would necessarily be the construction of the act without involving the doctrine of strict construction of penal statutes, but that, under such principle, it must be so construed, is beyond question.

We think it cannot reasonably be questioned that the restrictions upon the business of operating electric cars imposed by the act are entirely proper and well within the recognized police power of the state, and would not be subject to the constitutional objection that any person is thereby deprived of the equal protection of the law guaranteed by the federal Constitution or that equity of legal rights protected by the Constitution of this state, if the act operated equally upon all engaged in such business; but to single out corporations engaged in such business and impose upon them, as a class, restrictions from which all persons or associations of persons other than corporations, engaged in the same business, under the same conditions, are exempt, is a violation of the provisions of both the fourteenth amendment of the federal Constitution and of article 1, § 3, of the Constitution of this state. A classification of corporations engaged in this business, resting alone upon the amount of their capital stock, could be just as logically sustained, and would have quite as such relation to the subject-matter of the act in question as the classification which the Legislature has in fact made. The constitutional provisions referred to do not require that no burdens shall be imposed upon one class of persons that are not imposed upon all classes, but only that such burdens so imposed "shall be applied impartially to all constituents of a class, so that the law shall operate equally and uniformly upon all persons in similar circumstances." Kentucky R. R. Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321, 6 Sup. Ct. 57, 29 L. Ed. 414; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 5 Sup. Ct. 357, 28 L. Ed. 923; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 5 Sup. Ct. 730, 28 L. Ed. 1145; Railroad Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. 1161, 32 L. Ed. 107; G., C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666; Juniata Limestone Co. v. Fagley, 187 Pa. 193, 40 Atl. 977, 42 L. R. A. 442, 67 Am. St. Rep. 579. This claim of equality before the law protects not only natural persons, but also artificial persons called "corporations," who are regarded as persons under it. Railway Co. v. Ellis, supra.

It is not necessary to multiply authorities upon the general question here involved. Is it an answer to the objection here urged to the act in question that the Legislature acts upon existing or probable, and not upon conceivable, conditions, and that the operation of electric street railways by any person except a corporation is not an existing condition; no other person being in fact so engaged in this state? If under the operation of our law no person other than a corporation could engage in such business, passing by the question of the constitutionality of any law imposing such limitations upon the rights of persons generally, it might be said that the act in question applied equally, in fact, to all persons engaged in that business, and therefore did not operate to deprive such corporations of the equal protection of the law; but we know of nothing in the law, nor in the character of the business, that would prevent any person or association of persons, such as a firm or a joint-stock association, from engaging in the business. Such joint-stock association would not be a "corporation" within the meaning of that term as used in this act. Allen v. Long, 80 Tex. 265, 16 S. W. 43, 26 Am. St. Rep. 735. There is nothing either in the law or the character of the business to prevent other persons from engaging therein, and while it may possibly be a fact, of which we may take judicial notice, that the business of operating electric street railways is generally carried on by corporations, we cannot, we think, take judicial notice of the fact, if it be a fact, that no other persons than corporations are so engaged in this state, and, no matter what may be the present condition in this regard, it could not affect our judgment, if in fact there existed no reason, in the law nor in the character of the business, that would prevent other persons from engaging in the business whenever they should see fit to do so. We conclude our opinion upon this question by the following quotation from the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in G., C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Ellis, supra: "While good faith and a knowledge of existing conditions on the part of a Legislature are to be presumed, yet to carry that presumption to the extent of always holding that there must be some undisclosed and unknown reason for subjecting certain individuals or corporations to hostile and discriminating legislation is to make the protecting clauses of the fourteenth amendment a mere rope of sand, in no manner restraining state action." Our conclusion is that the act in question is unconstitutional, and that the penalties imposed thereon cannot be enforced.

If we consider only the language of the opinion of the Court of Civil Appeals of the Fourth District in Beaumont Traction Co. v. State, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 576, 103 S. W. 238, it would seem that this opinion is in conflict with the opinion of that court. It does not appear, however, from the opinion, that the question here decided was before the court in that case. Upon what grounds the constitutionality of the act was challenged does not appear from the very meager opinion. The court refers to the case of State v. Whitaker, 160 Mo. 59, 60 S. W. 1069, which the court says "involves the construction of a similar statute, and decides, as we have, the questions involved in this case after fully discussing them." If this be true, then neither of the questions here involved were decided in the case referred to. The statute under discussion in the Whitaker Case, supra, applied by its terms to "persons, associations and corporations owning or operating street cars," and, as to the penalty, imposed a fine of from $25 to $100 for every day that an electric street car is operated during the winter time without the screens for protection of the motorman. It will be seen that the objections here made to the act in question could not have been urged in the Missouri statute, and a reading of the opinion in that case shows that its constitutionality was attacked upon quite other grounds than those here urged. We must conclude therefore that the questions here presented were not decided by the Court of Civil Appeals of the Fourth District in the case referred to, and that our opinion in no way conflicts therewith.

The further objection is made to the act that in the matter of penalties imposed the act cannot be enforced on account of the doubt and uncertainty, arising from the language of the act, as to what constitutes an offense rendering appellant liable to such penalty. Section 1 of the act provides that "it shall be unlawful for any corporation or receiver operating a line of electric street railway in the state of Texas to require or permit the operation upon its lines of any electric cars," etc. Section 2 provides that "any corporation * * * who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall be liable to the state of Texas for a penalty of not less than $100.00 nor more than $1,000.00 for each offense." We must confess that we feel like we are groping in the dark when we endeavor to determine what shall constitute "each offense" for which a separate penalty is imposed. Shall it be each trip of each car, or each day's operation, or may the officers of the state make as many or few offenses as they may choose, to be determined by the frequency of suits filed for the recovery of such penalties? Courts ought not to be required to make a blind guess at the intention of the Legislature, which would be merely "to allow conjectural interpretation to usurp the place of judicial exposition." Suth. Stat. Cons. § 261: M., K. & T. Ry. Co. v. State, 100 Tex. 420. 100 S. W. 768; L. & N. Ry. Co. v. Com. (C. C.) 19 Fed. 679; Crow v. Westside St. Ry. Co., 146 Mo. 155, 47 S. W. 959. We are inclined to the opinion that this objection to the act ought also to be sustained.

The general demurrer to the petition should have been sustained. This disposes of the case.

The judgment of the trial court is reversed, and judgment here rendered for appellant.

Reversed and rendered.

BEAUMONT TRACTION CO. v. STATE.
(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 20, 1909.)

Appeal from District Court, Jefferson County; W. H. Pope, Judge.

Action by the State of Texas against the Beaumont Traction Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, and judgment rendered for defendant.

Crook, Lord & Lawhon, for appellant.

REESE, J. This case is identical, so far as concerns the questions involved, as cause No. 5,165, having the same style, this day decided, 122 S. W. 615. The facts are the same, except that a penalty of $100 was recovered for violation of the act of the Legislature, referred to in the opinion in that case, upon another occasion. For the reasons stated in the opinion in that case, the judgment of the district court is reversed, and judgment rendered for appellant. Reversed and rendered.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. v. McDONALD.†

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 12, 1909. Rehearing Denied Dec. 8, 1909.)

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 38*)—DELAY IN DELIVERY OF MESSAGES—LIABILITY.

Where, in an action against a telegraph company for negligently delaying the delivery of a message requesting a postponement of the funeral of the father of the sender, there was evidence that the funeral could and would have been postponed had the message been promptly delivered, the sender could recover damages as against the objection that those in charge of the funeral knew that it was impossible for him under the circumstances to arrive until several hours after the funeral.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 33; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

Appeal from District Court, Grimes County; S. W. Dean, Judge.

Action by W. L. McDonald against the Western Union Telegraph Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See 42 Tex. Civ. App. 229, 95 S. W. 691.

N. L. Lindsley, J. W. Lewis, and Dean, Humphrey & Powell, for appellant. Gordon Boone, John M. King, and Geo. D. Neal, for appellee.

JAMES, C. J. This action is based on this telegram: "Logansport, La., Mar. 13, 1903. Judge J. G. McDonald, via Navasota, Anderson, Texas. Missed connection; postpone funeral until to-morrow; will arrive to-night, midnight. Rush. W. L. McDonald." The petition alleged that, at the time the message was delivered to defendant's agent, plaintiff informed him that the funeral the telegram referred to was that of his father; that he paid the agent for transmitting it to Navasota, and for the telephone charges from there to Anderson where his father died; that defendant failed to transmit the message via Navasota to Anderson as aforesaid; that, if it had been promptly transmitted and delivered, the burial, which took place at 3 p. m. of March 13th, could and would have been postponed until March 14th, when he could and would have been present, etc., but by reason of said failure to transmit same plaintiff was deprived of being at the funeral and burial, and of seeing his father before he was buried, by reason of which he has suffered great mental distress, etc. The answer was a general denial, also: (1) That at the time the message was delivered at Logansport defendant's lines and appliances were disabled, blown down, and burnt out by violent winds, rains, and electrical disturbances; that part of the lines over which the message must have gone out of Logansport remained so, without fault of defendant, until after 6 o'clock p. m. of that day, which was as soon as defendant could restore same and transmit the message in the exercise of reasonable care and diligence. (2) That said agent advised plaintiff that the message could not be then sent for the above reason, and requested him to withhold it and send it from some point on his route, where it might be safely and expeditiously transmitted; and, when said agent received the message at Logansport, he did so with the distinct understanding that it was subject to such delay as might arise from said conditions. (3) That the message was by direction and agreement of plaintiff to be transmitted to defendant's office at Plantersville, Tex., and from thence by telephone to Anderson, and that the telephone line from said place to Anderson, which was not in defendant's control, was during the whole day of March 13th down, and communication over it was impossible, and that, if defendant had been able to transmit the message to Plantersville, its agent there could not have possibly communicated it to Anderson on that day. (4) That it was wholly impracticable for said funeral to have been postponed later than 3 p. m. of the 13th, at which time it was impossible for plaintiff to have been at Anderson. The verdict was for plaintiff.

The only proposition advanced by appellant in connection with its first and second assignments of error, which proposition is all we can consider, is as follows: "The fact that the funeral of plaintiff's father took place in his absence will not entitle the plaintiff to recover against the defendant for a delay in delivering a message to those in charge of the funeral requesting a postponement of the funeral, where those in charge knew that it was impossible for plaintiff under any circumstances to arrive until several hours after the time of the burial." As there was testimony showing that the funeral could and would have been postponed, we see no force in the proposition.

In reference to the third assignment, we conclude that when the entire charge is read and considered the error in a certain paragraph of which appellant complains does not exist.

The fourth and fifth assignments are overruled for the reason that we find testimony showing that defendant's wires were disabled by certain electric light wires having fallen across them. The proposition, asserting the contrary of this, is not well founded.

The sixth, seventh, and eighth assignments are overruled, for we find there was evidence which fairly and amply supports the verdict.

Affirmed.

JONES et al. v. WEAVER et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 30, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 24, 1909.)

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 13*)—SUFFICIENCY OF POSSESSION.

Possession to vest title must be actual, continuing, visible, notorious, distinct, hostile, full, and open.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 65-76; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 227-236; vol. 8, p. 7563.]

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 31*)—EXTENT OF TITLE—AMOUNT OF LAND.

A purchaser of 160 acres, forming a part of a survey, from one having no title, subsequently purchased land in an adjacent survey. He cultivated 10 or 12 acres of land in the adjacent survey, and about an acre on the 160 acres. He occupied a house on the land between the two surveys, the larger part of which was on the 160 acres. Other improvements, consisting of a smokehouse and crib, were on the 160 acres. Held, that the possession of the purchaser was not so visible and notorious that it could be notice to the owner, and could ripen into title to the 160 acres by adverse possession.

3. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 65*)—ELEMENTS.

One entering and holding land under the belief that it is vacant public land, with the intention of acquiring title from the state, is not holding adversely to the true owner, and such possession will not entitle the possessor to prescribe under the statute of limitations.

Appeal from District Court, Newton County; W. B. Powell, Judge.

Trespass to try title by Jesse H. Jones and others, as executors of M. T. Jones, deceased, against J. W. Weaver, W. H. Smith, and others. From judgment granting insufficient relief on a trial between plaintiffs and defendant W. H. Smith, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and rendered.

T. C. Ford and Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood, for appellants. W. W. Blake, for appellees.

PLEASANTS, C. J. This is an action of trespass to try title, brought by Jesse H. Jones and others as executors of the will of M. T. Jones, deceased, against J. W. Weaver and W. H. Smith and others to recover the title and possession of the Stephen Williams survey of 640 acres of land in Newton county. There was a severance in the court below on motion of the defendant W. H. Smith, and the trial and judgment from which this appeal is prosecuted was between the plaintiffs and said defendant alone. The defendant answered by general denial and plea of not guilty and a plea of limitation of 10 years as to 160 acres of land described in his answer by metes and bounds, and alleged to be a part of the Williams survey claimed by plaintiffs. The trial in the court below was without a jury, and resulted in a judgment in favor of plaintiffs for all of the land sued for, except that described in defendant's plea of limitation and in favor of the defendant for the 160 acres claimed by him in said plea.

The evidence shows that plaintiffs have a record title which entitled them to recover all of the land sued for, unless defendant's plea of limitation is sustained by the evidence. Upon this issue the defendant testified that he bought the 160 acres claimed by him from his brother in 1874, that his brother had the land surveyed and the lines and corners marked before the conveyance to him, and that the deed executed by his brother to him contained field notes describing the land as now claimed by him. The evidence shows that the land in controversy is in the northeast corner of the Stephen Williams survey and joins the Enoch Smith survey, which was patented to and owned by defendant's father at the time the 160-acre survey was made. Prior to the making of this survey defendant's brother, C. C. Smith, who had the survey made, was cultivating land in his father's survey adjoining the Williams, and was living in the house subsequently occupied by the defendant, and which was situated on the line between the two surveys; one corner of the house being on the Enoch Smith, but the larger portion being on the Williams. The field which was subsequently cultivated by the defendant contained 10 or 12 acres on the Smith and about an acre on the Williams. The other improvements, consisting of a smoke-house and crib, were on the Williams. Some time after defendant moved to the property purchased from his brother, he bought 60 acres on the Smith survey from his father, which included the field before mentioned. Prior to his purchase from his father, he cultivated this field as a tenant of his father.

The defendant testified as to his possession and occupancy of the 160 acres as follows: "I was married in 1875, January 6th, and I moved my wife and our effects there on the place on the 8th of January, 1875. I cultivated the land on my father's place in 1875. I did not cultivate the land on my father's place in 1874, as my brother was cultivating it then—my brother, C. C. Smith. When I bought this tract of land from him down on the Williams survey, he moved out, and I took possession both of that and what he had cultivated on my father's place. I know why my brother come to have that survey made. He wasn't intending to steal a tract of land out of the Stephen Williams. I don't think he had any such idea. His idea was he was going to hold the land under the homestead law, and he was having it surveyed out for that purpose, and he was supposing it was vacant land. The reason I know that was his idea was because that was the reason why he had it surveyed. I don't know as he told me that, but then I knew that was his object in view, was to hold the land by right of the law, or, in other words, to get it from the state. He thought it was vacant land. He purposed to have it surveyed out as a homestead on public vacant land, and get it from the state. There was no scheme on my part, when I bought the land from him, to make an appropriation of the land dishonestly or unlawfully. It was my idea to get it from the state when I bought it from him, and I took this deed from him with that idea—that I would live there and perfect my claim, and get it from the state. It was afterwards that I found out that I couldn't get the land from the state, and I moved off, and got a pre-emption somewhere else. The place I went to was down the creek about half a mile. I went on another survey there of vacant land, and pre-empted it, and got the patent to it. I could not say how long after I moved off of the Stephen Williams land before I got a patent to this tract up here, but it was somewhere inside of five years. I am still owning a part of that land there. I moved on this pre-emption survey about 1890. I built a house there and cleared up a field there. I expect that I opened up about 20 or 25 acres there. I took all that I had up there from the other place. I took my household goods and kitchen furniture and stock, but did not take my fencing. I took the buildings away, but I did not take the fence away. I took all the buildings I had on the place—the barn and smokehouse. I went in possession, down on the creek, by purchase from my brother, with the idea of getting, or perfecting, a pre-emption claim, and getting title from the state, and afterwards, when I found out that I couldn't do that, that it wasn't vacant land, I moved my house and improvements up there on this pre-emption claim, which I did afterwards patent, and I lived there from 1890 until I moved to Jasper, which was last January. I lived right there on that pre-emption claim until that time. I did not cultivate the land on the Stephen Williams land that I bought from my brother after that, not unless it was about one or two years after. I did not renew my improvements down there after that at all. I didn't keep on improving it after that, of course. I put all of my improvements up on my pre-emption claim, and I did not pay the taxes after that until here recently, just the last two or three years back. The deed that my brother made to me was not acknowledged, nor was it ever placed on record, and it was afterwards lost. I don't think that that house was there on the land at the time Mr. Nations made the survey for my brother. I am quite sure that it was not. I stated that my brother had been living on the place two or three years before he sold it to me, but I don't know just when the survey was made. I am not positive that there was no improvements there when the survey was made, but I don't think there was. I would not like to state right positive, but that is my best recollection. The survey was made for my brother before I bought it. I don't think that he had gone on the land at the time the survey was made. He was living up just off of the survey on the south side of it, and he built the house he then owned and was living there at the time that the survey was made, but I will not be real sure about that. I claimed that land during the 15 years I lived on it. I claimed it against everybody. I did not know that any one else claimed it. I cultivated the land during all those years I lived there on the place."

C. C. Smith, for the defendant, testified as follows: "I am a brother of W. H. Smith, the defendant in this suit. I have lived on the E. C. Smith survey in this county, was partly raised there. I remember having a survey made there 'long about the 1870's by Mr. Nations. When I had it surveyed, my purpose was to get a homestead. I had it made for pre-emption on the state land. I sold my homestead claim to my brother. I transferred the improvements I had on it at that time, but I could not tell you what kind of a transfer it was. To the best of my recollection, I told him that I was transferring to him my claim against the state as a homestead, and the improvements I had also. These improvements were there when I had the survey made, to the best that I remember about it now. I think that I had already put the house there. I was there on the land, and had a crop on it, and had made crop. I didn't know just how much of the improvements there was that developed afterwards was not on the land, but very little, I think. These improvements are not there now like they were when I turned it over to him. I suppose that my brother moved them off; that is what I have been told. I stated that I went on this land to establish a homestead, or pre-empt it as state land, and had the survey made, and I transferred my claim to my brother, and he was to carry my rights and acquire a pre-emption. My improvements consisted of a dwelling house and a corncrib, and I had some land cleared over on the Williams land, what afterwards proved to be the Williams land. I do not remember how much my brother paid me. I executed a deed to him; that is, I gave him a transfer to my claim. I do not remember who wrote the transfer, or I do not remember whether the deed had the field notes of the land in it or not. I do not recollect about that now. I think it described the land that I located on, but I will not say positive whether it did that, though."

This testimony as to the character and extent of defendant's possession and occupancy is not only uncontradicted, but is corroborated by all the testimony in the case.

Under appropriate assignments of error the appellants assail the judgment upon the grounds: First. That the actual possession of the defendant of the land in controversy was only a small encroachment over the line between the survey owned by appellants and the tract on the Enoch Smith survey upon which the greater portion of defendant's inclosure was situated and which was used and occupied by defendant, and therefore his possession of appellants' land was not of that visible, notorious, and distinct character necessary to support the plea of title by limitation. Second. That defendant's possession having been taken and held under the belief that the land was the property of the state and with the intention of acquiring title thereto from the state by pre-emption and his possession having been abandoned as soon as defendant ascertained that the land was not vacant state land subject to pre-emption, such possession was at no time adverse and hostile to the owners, and was therefore insufficient to support his plea of limitation. We do not think that the possession of the small portion of appellants' land by defendant, shown by the evidence, in connection with and as a part of his larger holdings on the Enoch Smith survey, was sufficient to put appellants upon notice that defendant was claiming 160 acres of their land. We see no reason for refusing to apply to the facts of this case the rule established by the case of Bracken v. Jones, 63 Tex. 184. In the case cited the encroachment was greater than that shown in the present case, and the Supreme Court held that it was not sufficient possession to entitle the trespasser to recover 640 acres of land (the amount the statute then allowed a trespasser to acquire by limitation), and that recovery should be restricted to the land actually inclosed and occupied by the defendant. In discussing the question, Judge Willie says: "Possession, to be of any value to vest a right or bar a remedy, must be actual, continued, visible, notorious, distinct, and hostile. It must be fair and open, as 'the statute was not made to serve the purpose of artifice and trick.' Sailor v. Hertzog, 2 Pa. 185, quoted in Word v. Drouthett, 44 Tex. 370; Satterwhite v. Rosser, 61 Tex. 166. It can scarcely be said that in such a case as the present the possession is notorious, visible, and distinct so as to fulfill the requirements of the 10 years' section of the statute of limitation. Whilst the true owner is chargeable with a knowledge of the boundaries of his land, he can hardly be affected with notice that a neighbor, who has encroached a few feet upon his tract, is doing so for the purpose of acquiring title to 640 acres of it. He would rather impute it to a mistake on the part of the apparent trespasser as to the division line between them. Whilst this might not excuse the party trespassed upon for not asserting his right to the land actually occupied by the trespasser, it would certainly save him from such consequences as the loss of a section of his land. The party encroaching would be entitled to no more than the land actually occupied by him."

In the case of Rice v. Goolsbee (decided by this court at the last term, second appeal) 124 S. W. —, ¹ we held that the extent of the encroachment, and not the character of use to which the land covered thereby is put, should determine its sufficiency as notice of adverse claim by constructive possession of land not actually occupied, and that the fact that the house in which the trespasser lived was partly on one tract and partly on the other, and that his other improvements were similarly situated, did not affect the question. The following quotation from the opinion in that case is directly applicable to the facts of the instant case: "It seems to us that the owner of land thus held by a trespasser would be more likely misled by the situation shown by the facts of the case than by an encroachment consisting only of inclosure and cultivation of his land. The fact that the dwelling house was partly on one survey and partly on the other, and that the outhouses used in connection with the home were similarly situated, would, we think, naturally lead such owner to suppose that the trespasser was on his land by mistake, because it would be unreasonable to presume that one claiming land and intending to acquire title thereto by limitation should designedly so place his improvements as to render such intention doubtful. If the complainant's improvements are designedly placed in this way, it should be regarded as an attempt to acquire the land of another by trick or artifice, and the statute should not subserve such purpose. * * * Tucker v. Smith, 68 Tex. 473, 3 S. W. 671; Titel v. Garland, 99 Tex. 201, 87 S. W. 1152; Downs v. Powell, 116 S. W. 873." The fact that defendant did not purchase the land on the Enoch Smith survey occupied by him until some time after he purchased the land in controversy from his brother does not affect the question. The date of his purchase is not shown, but it does appear from the uncontroverted evidence that during all of the time he lived on the place the land on the Smith was held and cultivated by him and constituted much the larger portion of his holdings. Appellants would just as likely have been misled by the actual situation shown in this case if defendant had never purchased the Smith land, as before stated; it having at all times constituted the greater portion of his holdings.

The second objection to the judgment above set out presents a question upon which the state of the authorities is confusing and contradictory, due to conflicting opinions by the several courts of Civil Appeals and the refusal of the Supreme Court to grant writs of error in cases the decision of which necessarily involved the decision of this question and in which the decisions of said courts were conflicting. This court prior to the decision in the case of Village Mills Co. v. Manley, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 420, 94 S. W. 102, had uniformly held in a number of cases, following the rule announced in Schleicher v. Gatlin, 85 Tex. 270, 20 S. W. 120, that one who entered upon and held the land under the belief that it was vacant public land, and with the intention of acquiring title thereto from the state, was not holding adversely to the owner of the land, and such possession and holding would not entitle the possessor to prescribe under the statute of limitation. This was the holding in the case of Norton v. Collins, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 272, 20 S. W. 1113; Beaumont Lumber Co. v. Ballard, 23 S. W. 920; Blum Land Co. v. Rogers, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 184, 32 S. W. 713; Hartman v. Huntington, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 130, 32 S. W. 502; Flewellen v. Randall, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 361, 74 S. W. 49—all decided by this court. In the Manley Case, above mentioned, this court, in an opinion by Chief Justice Gill, after citing the cases of Converse v. Ringer, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 51, 24 S. W. 705, and Longley v. Warren, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 269, 33 S. W. 304, which were in conflict with the decisions by this court above cited, followed the case of Price v. Eardley, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 60, 77 S. W. 416, in which the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fourth District, in an opinion by Justice Fly, following the decision in the case of Converse v. Ringer, held that, when one entered upon land supposing it to be vacant and with the intention of acquiring it from the state and did attempt to so acquire it, his possession under such circumstances was adverse to the owner of the land and, if continued for the time prescribed by limitation, would ripen into title. The decision of this question was necessary to the decision of the case, and, a writ of error having been denied by the Supreme Court, we felt constrained to follow it, and have in several cases decided by us since the Manley Case announced the rule to be as stated in the case of Converse v. Ringer. In the case of Hoencke v. Lomax, 119 S. W. 842, the Supreme Court in refusing a writ of error from the judgment of this court rendered in said case takes occasion to say that that court does not consider the question of whether a settler upon land believing it to be vacant public land and intending to acquire it from the state can by such possession acquire title as precluded by the refusal of writs of error in cases in which that question was decided.

Such being the attitude of the Supreme Court on the subject, we no longer feel constrained to follow the case of Converse v. Ringer and return to the doctrine announced by this court in the case of Blum Land Co. v. Rogers, supra, which fully supports appellants' contention. Under that decision and the others to the same effect before cited, the assignment complaining of the judgment upon the ground before indicated must be sustained, and the judgment of the court below reversed, and judgment here rendered for appellants.

This disposition of the appeal renders it unnecessary for us to pass upon the other assignments.

For the reason stated, the judgment of the court below is reversed, and judgment here rendered for appellants for all of the land claimed by them.

Reversed and rendered.

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 197*)—EVIDENCE.—WEIGHT—PART PAYMENT.

Proof of payment on an indebtedness so as to toll the statute of limitations may be shown by direct or circumstantial evidence, or by the debtor's admissions, the fact of payment, and not its indorsement on the instrument, which at most is only evidence of payment, which is effectual, and the debtor's admission of a payment, he being the only witness at trial to deny the payment, is proof of the strongest kind.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 726; Dec. Dig. § 197.*]

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 155*)—PART PAYMENT—PAYMENT BY AGENT.

Part payment made by an agent of the debtor tolls the statute of limitations as effectually as payment by the debtor.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 197*)—EVIDENCE.—SUFFICIENCY—PART PAYMENT.

In an action on a note, on which was indorsed a partial payment made within the period of limitations, in which defendant pleaded limitations and denied making the payment, evidence held to sustain a finding that defendant made the payment as of the date of the indorsement, so as to justify a verdict for plaintiff.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Sharp County; John W. Meeks, Judge.

Action by William M. Wiley against H. D. McAbee. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Sam H. Davidson, for appellant. David L. King, for appellee.

FRAUENTHAL, J. This was an action instituted by Wm. Wiley, the plaintiff below, against H. D. McAbee, the defendant below, for the recovery of the amount due upon a note. The defendant pleaded the statute of limitation against a recovery. The note sued on was for $33, with interest from date until paid, dated November 15, 1893, and payable one day after date. Upon the note were the following indorsements: "H. D. McAbee. Note $33.05." "Recd. on the within note $6.50 dollars, it being for 22 gallons of sorghum molasses. Nov. the first, 1898." "Recd. on the within note 4 dollars it being for 8 bus, turnips, Sept. 30, 1902." "Recd. on the within note $1.50 dollars May 10th, 1904. By R. C. Meade." "S. J. Walker, 4, 2, 1908 without recourse." "Amount due Apr. 15, 1907, $49.00." The suit was instituted on September 28, 1908. The defendant admitted the execution of the note, but denied that he had made the payment of $1.50 on May 10, 1904, as indorsed on the note, or that he authorized any one to make said payment. He did not deny any of the other payments which are indorsed upon the note. A witness on the part of the plaintiff testified: That in 1906 he presented the note to the defendant for payment, and at that time all of the above indorsements of payments were upon the note. "That the defendant took the note and read all the credits on it. When he read them over he said they were all right," and further said he could not pay the note just then. Another witness testified that he presented the note to defendant in 1906 or 1907, and that all of the above credits were then indorsed upon the note. "I read them all over to Mr. McAbee, and he said they were all right, except that he ought to have more credits for some turnips that was not on it." The issue was passed upon by a jury, which returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.

It is contended by counsel for the defendant that, when the statute of limitation is pleaded, the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show that payment was made before the statute bar attached, and that the testimony does not show when the last indorsement of payment was made upon the note. The proof of a payment on indebtedness and of the indorsement of same upon the written evidence of that indebtedness may be made in the same manner as the proof of any other fact. It may be made directly, or by circumstances, or by the admissions of the defendant. It is actually the fact of the payment that tolls the statute, and not the indorsement. The indorsement is only a memorandum, or at most an evidence of such payment, and there can be no stronger proof of such payment than the admission of the defendant himself, who at the trial is then the only person controverting it. 25 Cyc. 1374. And "the indorsements of payments admitted by the debtor himself or assented to by him even impliedly will toll the statute." 25 Cyc. 1377; State Bank v. Woody, 10 Ark. 638; Wood v. Wyls, 11 Ark. 754; Ruddell v. Folsom, 14 Ark. 213. In the case of Wilson v. Pryor, 44 Ark. 535, Judge Cockrill, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "In this case the indorsement was made with the express consent of the debtor, and his admission that the payment had been actually made was proved. These were matters for the consideration of a jury, and the court acting in that capacity was certainly warranted in the inference that the payment was actually made." A payment made by an agent is as effectual to suspend the statute as when made by the party himself. 25 Cyc. 1384.

In the case at bar it was peculiarly a question of fact for a jury to determine as to whether the payments were made, and as to whether they were made as of the dates of the indorsements. That could be proved by the admissions of the debtor. There was testimony tending to prove that the defendant saw these indorsements on the note, with their dates, and actually read them himself, and after having thus read them he admitted their correctness and assented to their actual indorsement on the note. There was therefore sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict of the jury. The defendant does not claim that any error was committed by the court in the giving or refusing to give instructions. In fact, he does not abstract or refer to them. The presumption is that the court fully and correctly instructed the jury on the issues involved in this case.

Judgment affirmed.

2. RAILROADS (§ 72*)—GRANTS—RIGHT OF WAY.

Plaintiff agreed to donate to a construction company $500, giving a note therefor, to secure the construction of a railroad within a stated time on condition that the road should not be transferred to the S. Railroad within two years. Later the time for the construction was extended on consideration that the road should not pass into the hands of the S. Road within three years and six months. Thereafter plaintiff executed to a trustee a donation deed of a right of way over his lands, and subsequently gave an option deed to the railroad agreeing to convey to it a right of way on which the railroad was already located, and also depot ground, yard room, etc., the purchase price being the $500 represented by plaintiff's note and the further sum of $200 per acre for land taken for yard room. Held, that the new agreement took up the subject-matter of the prior agreements, and no mention being made of the condition attached to the original contract regarding the note, and its refundment if the road passed into the control of the S. Road, such condition was discharged.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Washington County; T. H. Humphreys, Judge.

Action by James A. Ferguson against the Ozark & Cherokee Central Railway Company and another. From the decree, defendants appeal, and plaintiff cross-appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

W. F. Evans and B. R. Davidson, for appellants. Walker & Walker, for appellee.

HART, J. The plaintiff, James A. Ferguson, instituted this action for damages as provided by the statute against the Ozark & Cherokee Central Railway Company and St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company, alleging that said railroad companies had wrongfully appropriated for their use for railroad purposes certain of his lands in Washington county, Ark. The railroad companies filed separate answers, in which they admitted that the Ozark & Cherokee Central Railway Company had entered upon the lands described in plaintiff's complaint and constructed its line of railroad over the same. The defendants asked that the cause be transferred to the chancery court, and for grounds therefor allege facts, which, briefly stated, are as follows: They say that in the month of August, 1899, W. A. Bright and others, who constituted the Arkansas Construction Company, were promoting and endeavoring to build a railroad from Fayetteville, Ark., to a connection with the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company, and were soliciting from the property owners rights of way and donations of money, and that the plaintiff James A. Ferguson, being a large landowner, and presumably to receive great benefits from the construction of such road, on the 29th of August, 1899, gave what is called by the parties hereto a "subsidy note" to said Arkansas Construction Company, its successors and assigns, for the sum of $500. The consideration of the note was the benefit which would accrue to Ferguson in the construction and operation of a railroad, commencing at Fayetteville, Ark., and extending to and connected with the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad, within the period of 18 months from October 1, 1899, and the erection and maintenance of a depot within the corporate limits of the city of Fayetteville by said Arkansas Construction Company, its successors or assigns. The note was made payable as the work of construction progressed, and the whole was to be paid when the road was complete and in operation within the specified time. On the 26th day of September, 1899, the time within which to construct the road was extended in writing until October 1, 1902, upon condition that the railroad to be constructed should not pass into the control of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company within three years and six months from October 1, 1899. That on the 8th day of November, 1899, said James A. Ferguson, in consideration of the benefits to be derived from the construction of said railroad in the county of Washington and state of Arkansas, conveyed to said railroad company a right of way over his lands, 100 feet wide, and depot grounds to be selected and located by the engineers of the railroad company. The conveyance was made upon condition that the railroad be built and in operation within said county of Washington within one year. On the 13th day of January, 1902, said James A. Ferguson gave an option deed to the Ozark & Cherokee Central Railway Company, assignee to the Arkansas Construction Company, in which he obligated himself at any time within 60 days to convey to said railway company a strip of ground 100 feet in width for a right of way over his lands, upon which the railroad was already located; also depot grounds 100 feet wide and 600 feet long, terminal facilities, and right of way over Ferguson's addition to the town of Fayetteville; and also, in section 5 of said contract, such lands of specified dimensions as the railroad company might select over certain other of his lands for yard room and grounds. The purchase price to be paid therefor by the railroad company was the sum of $500, represented by the subsidy note of the said James A. Ferguson then held by said railroad company, and the further sum of $200 per acre for land taken by said railroad company for yard room. That on the 10th day of March, 1902, the said Ozark & Cherokee Central Railway Company served notice on the said James A. Ferguson that it would take said lands in accordance with the terms of the said contract, and made a demand for a deed to said lands under the terms and conditions of said option contract. That they have been ready and willing to pay the amount due upon presentation of a deed for said land. That the acreage taken under said contract amounts to four acres. That defendants are due plaintiff for it the sum of $800 and tenders it in court.

The plaintiff answered, alleging: That it was part of the consideration of said option contract that a depot should be constructed and maintained on said lands; that this was omitted from the terms of said contract through fraud or mistake; and that said railroad company has failed and refused to maintain said depot. The cause was transferred to the chancery court. The road was constructed and in operation westward between July and October 1, 1900. A connection was made with the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad in the spring of 1901. By February, 1903, the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company had acquired all of the stock of the said Ozark & Cherokee Central Railway Company, and in June purchased all of its bonds, on July 1, 1903, assumed control of said railroad, and has since operated it as the owner thereof. The chancellor found that the agreement of January 13, 1902, was binding upon the plaintiff, and that under it the defendant had tendered $800 in accordance with section 5 of the agreement, but that the plaintiff had refused to comply with the agreement by conveying the lands mentioned in section 5 of said agreement, and refused to assess any damages for right of way claimed by the plaintiff. The chancellor further found that the subsidy note of $500 was a valid obligation at the time of the execution of the contract of January 13, 1902, and that subsequent to that time, and before the expiration of three years and six months from the 1st day of October, 1899, the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company had obtained control of the Ozark &

Cherokee Central Railway Company by acquiring all of its stock which was contrary to the contract of August 29, 1899, and the extension thereof made September 26, 1899, and that said note thereby became void. The court entered a decree vesting the title to the lands in controversy in the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company upon payment to the plaintiff of the $800 already tendered and the $500 adjudged to be due. The defendants prayed on appeal to this court, and the plaintiff has taken a cross-appeal.

It is contended by counsel for the plaintiff that when the contract of January 13, 1902, was executed, it was a part of the consideration for its execution that the railroad company should erect and maintain a depot on his land, and that this was omitted from the contract by mistake. When the contract was made, there were present James A. Ferguson, his son, Wallace Ferguson, H. W. Seeman, general manager of the railway company, J. C. Duffin, his stenographer, and J. H. McIlroy. Both the Fergusons say that a part of the consideration for the contract was the erection and maintenance of a depot on the land. They are contradicted by Seeman, Duffin, and McIlroy. The chancellor found in favor of the defendants on this point, and his finding will not be disturbed.

The chancellor erred in finding in favor of the plaintiff on what is called the $500 subsidy note. On August 29, 1899, the plaintiff, being a large landowner, in Fayetteville, Ark., agreed to donate to the Arkansas Construction Company the sum of $500 to secure the construction and operation of a railroad from Fayetteville to a connection with the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad. The contract was reduced to writing, and by its terms the money was to be paid as the work progressed, and the last installment was to become due when the road was complete and in operation. The road was to be completed within a specified time, and the donation was upon condition that the road should not be transferred to the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company within two years from October 1, 1899. On September 26, 1899, the time for the extension of the road was extended upon consideration that the railroad to be constructed should not pass into the hands of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company within three years and six months from October 1, 1899. On the 8th of November, 1899, Ferguson executed a donation deed conveying the right of way over his lands in Washington county to W. A. Bright, trustee, to secure the construction of said railroad. When the agreement in writing of January 13, 1902, was executed, the railroad was completed and in operation from Fayetteville to a connection with the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad. The new agreement took up the subject-matter of all the prior agreements. The purpose of the new contract was to give the railroad company a 60-day option to purchase certain lands from the plaintiff for its right of way, depot and yard grounds. What is called the "$500 subsidy note" was recited as part of the purchase price, and no mention is made of the condition attached to the original contract for the subsidy note. The subsidy note was due; but the original contract provided that the amount of it should be refunded if the railroad should pass into the control of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company within three years and six months from October 1, 1899. That time had not expired when the option contract of January 13, 1902, was executed. The time limit of the option contract was 60 days from its date. The new contract does not expressly abrogate the prior agreements; but the scope of the latter takes up all matters of the earlier contracts, and covers the same subject-matter. It is inconsistent with the terms of the earlier agreements, and we are of the opinion that the condition imposed in regard to the railroad passing into the hands of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company was discharged by the execution of the new agreement of January 13, 1902. "The discharge may take the form either of a total obliteration of all contractual relations between the parties in regard to the subject-matter of the contract, or it may be effected by the substitution of a new agreement in place of the old one. In such case the new agreement takes the place of the old and consists of the new terms and as much of the old agreement as the parties have agreed shall remain unchanged; in other words, a contract may be rescinded in part and stand as to the residue. 9 Cyc. 595. To the same effect, see Page on Contracts, vol. 3, §§ 1339, 1340. The railroad company, in compliance with the terms of the option contract of January 13, 1902, tendered to the plaintiff the purchase price and demanded a deed for the right of way, depot and yard grounds. It was entitled to this.

For the error in finding for the plaintiff for the amount of the $500 subsidy note, the decree is reversed, and the cause remanded with directions to enter a decree in accordance with this opinion.

ROWE v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 1, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1208*)—STATUTORY OFFENSE—PENALTY.

Where a statute creates a new offense and prescribes a particular penalty and mode of procedure, that penalty is exclusive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3282; Dec. Dig. § 1208.*]

2. ANIMALS (§ 57*)—STOCK LAW—VIOLATION—PENALTY.

The stock law of May 23, 1901 (Acts 1901, p. 305), prohibiting stock from running at large in certain counties, provides for the impounding of stock found trespassing, and for the recovery of damages from the owner and for costs and expenses arbitrarily fixed by the statute to be enforced by a summary sale of the stock. Held, that the act provided a penalty for its violation which was exclusive, and hence an owner of stock violating the law was not subject to indictment therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

3. ANIMALS (§ 51*)—STOCK LAW—PENALTY.

The penalty imposed by the stock law of May 23, 1901 (Acts 1901, p. 305), by impounding, etc., to be enforced by a summary sale of the stock, is applicable only where stock is found trespassing on the cultivated or meadow fields of another, and does not apply to stock merely running at large.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Sebastian County; Daniel Hon, Judge.

R. A. Rowe was convicted of violating stock law, enacted May 23, 1901 (Acts 1901, p. 305), and he appeals. Reversed and dismissed.

Rowe & Rowe, for appellant. Hal L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., and C. A. Cunningham, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

MCCULLOCH, C. J. Appellant, R. A. Rowe, appeals from a judgment of conviction under an indictment charging him with a violation of the terms of a special stock law approved May 23, 1901, which is applicable to certain counties. The statute provides for an election to be held, either at the next succeeding general election or at a special election in any of the counties therein named, for the purpose of determining whether or not the provisions of the statute should be put in force in the particular counties. It further provides that if, at said election, a majority of the votes cast on the question should be in favor of the law, it shall be the duty of the county court, or the judge thereof in vacation, to make an order prohibiting the running at large of hogs, sheep, geese, and goats within such territory, that a copy of said order shall be published, and that, after the adoption of the law in the given territory, "it shall be unlawful to permit any hog, sheep, goose, or goat to run at large in said territory; provided, the prohibition of such stock running at large apply only to those living in such territory." Then follow other sections, viz.:

"Sec. 3. If any hog, sheep, goose or goat shall enter the cultivated or meadow lands of another in said counties, the owner, lessee or person in lawful possession of such land may impound such animals and detain them until his fee, and all damages caused by such animals, are paid. Provided, such stock be the property of, or in control of any resident of any territory adopting said fence law.

"Sec. 4. Whenever any stock is impounded under the provisions of this act, notice in writing shall be given to the owner thereof if known, upon payment or tender of the fees, costs or damages.

"Sec. 5. Any person impounding stock under the provisions of this act shall be entitled to ten cents a day for hogs, and five cents a day for each sheep, goose or goat. The damages done by such stock may be ascertained by any three disinterested householders in the territory chosen by the person interested, or by some justice of the peace, who shall take an oath to assess such damages fairly and honestly, and their assessment shall be final.

"Sec. 6. If the owner or agent of such impounded stock, after having received notice, shall neglect to pay fees and damages, the person impounding such stock may sell the same at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, after first giving five days' notice of the time, place and terms of said sale, by written or printed notices, posted in three public places in the territory, and by delivering a copy to the owner of such stock if known, and apply the proceeds, after deducting the cost of sale, to the satisfaction of his fees, and damages, and pay the remainder to the owner of the stock, if known. If the owner cannot be found within ten days, the overplus shall be paid into the county treasury, and be disbursed as in cases of estrays, but the county court may make an order directing the same to be returned to the owner of said stock within six months on satisfactory proof." Acts 1901, pp. 305-309.

It will be noticed that the act in question provides no penalty except that prescribed in the sections quoted above. The question then arises whether or not the appellant could be indicted for a violation of any of the terms of the statute. It is insisted on behalf of the state that the following statutes of this state authorize the indictment and conviction of appellant:

"Where the performance of any act is prohibited, or the performance of any act is required by any statute, and no penalty for the violation of such statute is imposed, either in the same section containing such prohibition or requiring such act or duty, or in any other section or statute, the doing of such prohibited act or the neglect of such required act by duty, shall be deemed a misdemeanor.

"Every person who shall be convicted of any misdemeanor, the punishment of which is not defined in this or some other statute, shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars, or by fine and imprisonment both." Sections 2447, 2448, Kirby's Dig.

Now, the first inquiry is whether or not the special statute in question prescribes a penalty for the violation of its terms; for, if it does, the sections of the digest quoted above have no application. The authorities sustain the rule that when an act "creates a new offense and makes that unlawful which was lawful before, and prescribes a particular penalty and mode of procedure, that penalty alone can be enforced." McClain on Criminal Law, § 8; People v. Hislop, 77 N. Y. 331; Commonwealth v. Evan, 13 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 426; McElhiney v. Commonwealth, 22 Pa. 365. It is really unnecessary to invoke that rule here, though it is undoubtedly applicable, as the general statute quoted above by its express terms limits its application to prohibited acts for the doing of which no penalty is prescribed. Therefore, if it can be said that the special statute in question prescribes a penalty at all, then the general statute is not applicable. We are of the opinion that the special stock law does prescribe a penalty. It authorizes the impounding of stock found trespassing upon the cultivated or meadow land of another, and mulcts the owner of the stock in damages caused by the depredation of the stock, and for the costs and expenses arbitrarily fixed by the statute, and provides for the sale of the stock in a summary manner for the purpose of paying same. This arbitrary provision can only be justified as a penalty imposed upon the owner for allowing his stock to run at large in violation of the terms of the statute. It is confiscatory, unless justifiable as a penalty.

It is insisted by the Attorney General in argument that, if this be regarded as a penalty at all, it has no application to the mere running at large of the stock, and is only applicable where the stock is found trespassing upon the cultivated or meadow lands of another person. This is true. But the Legislature deemed that to be sufficient penalty, and the courts are not justified in reading anything else into the act, and thereby impose a penalty which the lawmakers did not intend to inflict.

We are therefore of the opinion that the Legislature has not imposed a fine for the violation of the special statute, and the indictment of the appellant was therefore unauthorized.

Judgment is reversed, and cause dismissed.

STATE v. ST. LOUIS & S. F. R. CO.
(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 1, 1909.)
1. RAILROADS (§ 253*)—PASSENGER ACCOMMODATIONS—WAITING ROOMS—DRINKING WATER—INDICTMENT.

An indictment that defendant, a railroad corporation, maintaining a station with waiting rooms for passengers at B., unlawfully failed to supply such waiting rooms with wholesome drinking water, and refused to provide and keep provided and supplied such waiting rooms with any drinking water whatever, stated a violation of Kirby's Dig. § 6634, requiring all persons operating railroads within the state to keep waiting rooms at all times supplied with wholesome drinking water, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 775; Dec. Dig. § 255.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 255*)—STATION REGULATIONS—DRINKING WATER—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Kirby's Dig. § 6634, requires all railroads to keep waiting rooms supplied with drinking water, and section 6636 declares that railway companies neglecting to comply shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be fined for each day's failure, and that any agent of the railway company at such depot neglecting to comply shall on conviction be fined. Held, that the statute expressly makes both the railroad and the particular agent guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine for failure to comply with section 6634; the duties imposed thereby not being entirely personal with the agent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 255.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 241*) — EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS—STATION REGULATIONS—PENALTY.

Kirby's Dig. §§ 6634, 6636, imposing a penalty on railroad companies and their station agents for failure to provide waiting rooms with wholesome drinking water, and fixing a more onerous penalty for violation on the corporation than on the agent, was not for that reason unconstitutional as depriving the railroad companies of the equal protection of the laws.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 700, 701; Dec. Dig. § 241.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 338*)—WRIT OF ERROR—TIME—STATUTES.

Act May 5, 1909, prescribing the time within which a writ of error may be sued out, does not apply to writs to review judgments rendered prior to its enactment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1882; Dec. Dig. § 338.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lawrence County; Charles Coffin, Judge.

The St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company was indicted for failure to provide drinking water in its station, and, from an order sustaining a demurrer to the indictment, the state appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Hal L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., and C. A. Cunningham, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State. W. F. Evans and W. J. Orr, for appellee.

McGULLOCH, C. J. The grand jury of the Western district of Lawrence county returned against appellee the following indictment (omitting caption): "On the 13th day of August, 1908, the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company, being a railroad corporation, operating a line of railroad in this state, said company operating a line of railroad in and through the Western district of said county, and passing through and by the town of Black Rock, in said district and county, and said company then and there having and maintaining a station and depot at said place of Black Rock, and maintaining and having waiting rooms for passengers at said station and depot, and a waiting room for persons of the white race being situated in the said depot building near the ticket office of said defendant company, and being then and there used by the defendant company as a waiting room for white passengers, and such passengers being then and there in said waiting room, the said defendant, the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company, in said county, district, and state, did then and there unlawfully fail, neglect, and refuse to supply said waiting room with wholesome drinking water, and did then and there fail, neglect, and refuse to provide and supply, and to have and keep provided and supplied said waiting room with any drinking water whatever, against the peace and dignity of the state of Arkansas."

The court sustained a demurrer on the following grounds:

"(1) That said indictment does not charge any offense under the laws of the state of Arkansas against this defendant.

"(2) That the acts complained of are acts personal to the agent, and not to this defendant, and the duties herein imposed rest upon the said agent, and not upon this defendant."

It will be seen that the indictment charges appellee, a railroad corporation, with having refused and neglected to supply with drinking water one of the waiting rooms in the station at Black Rock, Ark. The indictment follows closely the language of the statute, and we think that it fully states facts constituting a violation of the statute, which reads as follows: "All persons who own or operate any line or lines of railroad in this state shall keep separate waiting rooms now provided for in section 6622 in all depot buildings now erected or that may hereafter be erected, for the accommodation of their passengers, open both day and night for the free and unrestricted use of their said passengers. And that said waiting rooms shall at all proper times and seasons be comfortably heated and at all times supplied with wholesome drinking water, and shall in all other respects be kept and maintained in a sanitary and clean manner." Section 6634, Kirby's Dig.

The second ground of the demurrer is equally untenable. The statute in express terms makes both the railway company and the particular agent who neglects or refuses to perform the required acts guilty of a misdemeanor, and subject to a fine. A railroad corporation can act only through agents, and it is within the power of the Legislature to inflict penalties upon corporations for the conduct of their agents in failing to perform statutory duties. In State v. St. L. & S. F. R. R. Co., 83 Ark. 254, 103 S. W. 625, this court held that the statute in question is not violative of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. It is now pointed out by counsel for appellee in their brief that the court in the opinion in that case did not state the reasons for the decision, and they insist that the reasons must have been that the court deemed that part of the statute which requires that waiting rooms be comfortably heated, and at all times supplied with drinking water, to be applicable only to the particular agent of the railway company who fails to comply with its provisions. Such a conclusion cannot be drawn from the opinion in that case, for it involves an indictment against the company itself for failure to keep the waiting room comfortably heated and supplied with drinking water. The court decided that the indictment was void for uncertainty and duplicity, but that the statute was valid in its application to railroad corporations for failure to perform the specified acts. That is the only reasonable conclusion to be drawn from the decision.

It is argued that, if these provisions of the statute be construed to apply both to the railroad corporation and the particular agent who is guilty of the negligent omission, it is void on the ground of its discriminatory effect in imposing a larger fine upon the railroad corporation than upon the offending agent. It does not at all follow that this is an improper discrimination. The aim of the statute is to punish both the principal and the agent, visiting the greater punishment upon the principal. We are clearly of the opinion that this is permissible, and that it does not constitute an unjust and unreasonable discrimination. The two classes of offenders occupy different attitudes. It is within the province of the lawmakers to determine which class shall suffer the greater punishment. In other words, neither the railroad corporation nor any other class of employers is denied the equal protection of the laws by a statute inflicting a severer punishment upon the principal than upon the agent. In Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 7 Sup. Ct. 350, 30 L. Ed. 578, Mr. Justice Field, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States does not prohibit legislation which is limited either in the objects to which it is directed, or by the territory within which it is to operate. It merely requires that all persons subjected to such legislation shall be treated alike, under like circumstances and conditions, both in the privileges conferred and in the liabilities imposed." And in Pembina Mining Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650, the same learned judge said: "The inhibition of the amendment that no state shall deprive any person within its jurisdiction of the equal protection of the laws was designed to prevent any person or class of persons from being singled out as a special subject for discriminating and hostile legislation." Mr. Justice Bradley, in Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. Ed. 989, in referring to this provision of the fourteenth amendment, said: "It means that no person or class of persons shall be denied the same protection of the laws which is enjoyed by other persons or class of persons in the same class or under like circumstances."

Counsel insist that the writ of error should be dismissed because it was not sued out within the time prescribed by the act of May 5, 1909. The judgment in this case was rendered prior to the passage of that act, and it is not applicable. Rankin v. Schofield, 70 Ark. 83, 66 S. W. 197.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer and to proceed further.

CARUTHERS et al. v. GREER.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 1, 1900.)

1. TAXATION (§ 829*)—TAX SALES—INVALIDITY—RECOVERY OF TAXES—"PURCHASER."

The word "purchaser" in Revenue Act July 23, 1868 (Acts 1868, p. 281) § 72, and in Acts 1883, p. 275, § 152 (Kirby's Dig. § 7112), authorizing the purchaser under an invalid tax sale to recover the taxes assessed against the land for which it was sold and taxes subsequently paid up to the time of adjudication of invalidity, does not limit such right to the person actually purchasing at the sale, but extends to his subsequent grantees.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1643, 1644; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 5858-5860; vol. 8, p. 7775.]

2. TAXATION (§ 833*)—SALE—INVALIDITY—RECOVERY OF TAXES.

An adjudication of the invalidity of a tax sale is a condition precedent to the right of the purchaser or his grantees to recover the taxes paid on the land, as authorized by Kirby's Dig. § 7112.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 833.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 827*)—TAX SALES—INVALIDITY—ADJUDICATION—RECOVERY OF TAXES.

Kirby's Dig. § 7112, authorizes a recovery of taxes by the purchaser on an adjudication that the sale is invalid for irregularity. Plaintiff sued to foreclose a lien for taxes on land in controversy, alleging that the tax sale had been held void by the Supreme Court. This was not denied, and at the trial plaintiff admitted that the sale was invalid. Held, that such admission was equivalent to an allegation that the sale was void, and, not being denied, the chancellor was warranted in considering the complaint as amended to embrace such allegation, so as to sustain a finding that the sale was void, required to support a decree enforcing plaintiff's lien for the taxes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 827.*]

4. TAXATION (§ 827*)—INVALID SALE—TAX LIEN—ENFORCEMENT—ESTOPPEL.

Where, in a suit by the assignee of a purchaser at a tax sale to enforce a lien on the land for the taxes, on the theory that the sale was void, plaintiff did not seek a personal decree against defendants for the taxes paid, they were not entitled to object that it was not alleged or proved that the sale was void; its invalidity being immaterial to the relief demanded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 827.*]

Appeal from White Chancery Court; John E. Martineau, Chancellor.

Suit by A. B. Greer against J. A. Caruthers and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Jno. M. Rose and Murphy, Coleman & Lewis, for appellants. Brundidge & Neelly, for appellee.

MCCULLOCH, C. J. Appellee instituted this action in the chancery court of White county against appellants to enforce a lien claimed on a certain tract of land for the amount of taxes paid thereon. He alleges in his complaint that the land in question was sold for taxes of the year 1868 duly assessed against it; that one Jno. A. Cole purchased at the sale and received a deed therefor; that appellee holds under mesne conveyances from Cole; and that he and those under whom he claims have paid the taxes on the land regularly for each year, with the exception of a few years when he failed to pay by inadvertence, since the said date of sale. The complaint contains the further statement that "the tax sale, under which other lands were sold and bought by Jno. A. Cole at the same time of the purchase of these, has been held by the Supreme Court of Arkansas to be irregular and void, and the plaintiff does not claim title to the lands herein mentioned by reason of said irregularity." The prayer of the complaint is that a lien be declared on the land in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of taxes, aggregating $165, paid as aforesaid by him and those under whom he claims. The answer of appellants contains a denial of each of the allegations of the complaint, except that concerning the adjudication by the Supreme Court of the invalidity of the other tax sales to Cole. Appellants also pleaded the statute of limitations. During the progress of the trial, appellee orally admitted in open court "that the tax sale pursuant to which the tax deed was made was void, and that the plaintiff claims no title to the land, and only seeks to recover taxes paid on said land, and to have same declared a lien thereon." This admission was recited in the final decree. Proof was adduced as to the tax sale to Cole, the mesne conveyances from Cole to appellee, and the various payments of taxes made by appellee and those under whom he claims; but no proof was adduced as to the invalidity of the tax sale further than the admission of the appellee, as aforesaid, made in open court. The court decreed the relief prayed for in the complaint, and an appeal was taken to this court.

Section 72 of the general revenue act, approved July 23, 1868 (Acts 1868, p. 281), under which the tax sale in question was made, reads as follows: "Upon the sale of any land or town lot for delinquent taxes, the lien which the state has thereon for taxes then due is transferred to the purchaser at such sale, and, if such sale proves to be invalid on account of any irregularity in the proceedings of any officer having any duty to perform in relation thereto, the purchaser at such sale is entitled to receive from the proprietor of such land or lot the amount of taxes, penalty and interest legally due thereon, and the amount of taxes paid thereon by the purchaser subsequent to such sale; and such land or lot is bound for the payment thereof." Similar provisions were embraced in the revenue act of 1871 (Acts 1871, p. 184, § 178) and 1883 (Acts 1883, p. 275, § 152 [Kirby's Dig. § 7112]), except that the later acts omitted the provision for the recovery of "interest, penalty and cost of advertising" from the specified amounts to be recovered by the purchaser from the proprietor. In Railway Co. v. Alexander, 49 Ark. 190, 4 S. W. 753, this court held that under the act of 1871 the purchaser at a tax sale adjudged to be invalid could in an action instituted for that purpose recover a personal judgment against the owner of the land at the time of the sale for the amount of the taxes, penalty, etc., for which the land was sold, and for taxes subsequently paid, and that he was also entitled to a decree against subsequent purchasers condemning the land for the enforcement of the lien. The court said that it was unnecessary to determine whether or not the act of 1883 was retroactive in its operation, inasmuch as the plaintiff's right to recover all that was adjudged to him had vested before the act of 1883 was passed. It is unimportant to determine that question in the present case, for the reason that if the appellee is entitled, under the act of 1868 which was in force at the time of the sale, to recover the amount of taxes paid prior to the passage of the later acts of 1871 and 1883, he is also entitled to recover under the later statutes the amount of taxes paid since the dates of their respective enactments. The three statutes are similar except as to the recovery of interest, penalty, and costs.

It is insisted, however, that these statutes apply only to purchasers at tax sales, and not to vendees of such purchasers. We do not think that the operation of the statute was intended to be so circumscribed, for that interpretation would, to a considerable extent, defeat their wholesome effect. The word "purchaser" in the statute was used in a broad sense, meaning, any one claiming under a purchase at a tax sale. In Hunt v. Curry, 37 Ark. 100, Chief Justice English, speaking of one of these statutes, said that by the word "proprietor," as used therein, was meant the defaulting owner or person under obligation to pay the taxes. "It would be a narrow view of the statute, and not warranted by its language, so to construe it as to confine the lien to the time the land or lot remains in the hands of him who was its proprietor at the time of the tax sale, and to hold that the lien may be defeated by a change of owners." He also declared that "the policy of the state is to favor those who pay taxes upon lands for defaulting owners." We conclude that, under a fair construction of the statute, those who claim under a purchaser at a tax sale are entitled to recover the taxes assessed against the land for which it was sold, and the taxes subsequently paid thereon up to the time of adjudication of the invalidity of the tax sale. The purchaser's right of action passes under his deed to his vendee and to subsequent vendees.

It is also contended that there were neither allegations nor proof that the tax sale in question was invalid, and that for this reason the appellee failed to make out his claim under the statute for reimbursement. In Railway Co. v. Alexander, supra, the court held, in effect, that an adjudication of the invalidity of a tax sale is a condition precedent to the right to recover the amount of taxes paid on the land. It is there said: "Our statute does not undertake to confer upon the tax purchaser any remedy for reimbursement until the sale at which he has purchased shall 'prove invalid.' The only method known to the law of proving the invalidity of a sale is by a judicial investigation, and it follows that his cause of action does not accrue until a court of competent jurisdiction has adjudged that the title is bad." In that case there had been a prior adjudication as to the invalidity of the tax sale, and the court, when using the above quoted language, was discussing the question of the statute of limitations, which had been pleaded. The adjudication as to the invalidity of a tax sale may be made in an action brought by the purchaser to recover the amount of taxes paid on the land, for two actions between the same parties concerning the same subject-matter are not required where a single one in which all of the rights of the parties may be adjudicated will suffice.

Now, we think that the decree in this case was in effect an adjudication of the invalidity of the tax sale. Appellee's oral admission was of no force as an admission, but was equivalent to an allegation that the sale was invalid; and the chancellor was warranted in so considering it, and in treating the complaint as amended so as to embrace this allegation. Appellants did not attempt to enter a denial of this allegation, but held to their contention that the appellee, not being the purchaser of the land at the tax sale, was a mere volunteer, and not entitled to reimbursement in any event. Moreover, we are of the opinion that appellants cannot complain, even if the court had adjudged the invalidity of the sale without either allegation or proof. The appellee neither sought nor obtained a personal decree against them for a recovery of the taxes paid; but he asked only for an enforcement of his lien on the land, which the court granted. Now, if the tax sale was valid, appellee was the owner of the land and was entitled to more relief than he obtained; that is to say, he should have recovered the land itself, instead of merely enforcing a lien on it for the amount of taxes paid. So the appellants could not possibly be injured by an adjudication, without sufficient proof, that the tax sale was invalid. Railway Co. v. Alexander, supra, is decisive of the contention of appellants as to the statute of limitations. The statute, it is held in that case, begins to run from the date of adjudication of the invalidity of the tax sale. As there was no such adjudication prior to the institution of the present case, the statute never began to run against appellee's claim.

Decree affirmed.

CARR v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 1, 1909.)

1. COURTS (§ 207*)—APPELLATE JURISDICTION — SUPERVISORY JURISDICTION — AUTHORITY OF JUDGE.

Const. art. 7, § 4, giving the Supreme Court general superintending control over inferior courts, and, in aid of its appellate and supervisory jurisdiction, power to issue writs of certiorari, mandamus, and other remedial writs, and giving its judges severally power to issue any of the aforesaid writs, only authorizes the judges of the Supreme Court to issue such writs in aid of its appellate or supervisory jurisdiction, such as to preserve the status quo pending appeal, etc., but not to reverse or affirm the judgment of the inferior court, and a judge of the Supreme Court could not issue certiorari to review the denial of bail by the trial court, so that his order granting bail was unauthorized.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 207.*]

2. BAIL (§ 49*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—PROCEEDINGS.

Since, under the constitutional provision making all persons bailable before conviction, except for capital offenses, where the proof is evident or the presumption is great, bail should be denied where it will not in all probability procure the attendance of the prisoner, the Supreme Court in reviewing a denial of bail, should consider that fact as well as all the evidence and the presumption of innocence, and, if the evidence is clear that an offense has been committed and that accused is guilty and will probably be punished capitally, the order denying bail should be affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bail, Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

Wood, J., dissenting.

Certiorari to Circuit Court, Pulaski County; Robert J. Lea, Judge.

George Carr was arrested and imprisoned under a charge of first-degree murder, and brings certiorari to review an order denying bail. Order affirmed.

W. H. Pemberton, F. T. Vaughan, and Palmer Danaher, for appellant. Roy D. Campbell, Pros. Atty., and Lewis Rhoton, for the State.

BATTLE, J. George Carr was accused of, and arrested and imprisoned for, murder in the first degree, committed by the killing of Adolph Topf in Pulaski county, in this state, on the 5th day of June, 1909. He applied to Robert J. Lea, judge of the Pulaski circuit court, to be admitted to bail, which was refused. On the 2d day of September, 1909, he applied to Carroll D. Wood, an associate justice of this court, for a writ of certiorari to bring up for revision a transcript of all the proceedings before the circuit judge, Robert J. Lea, including the evidence heard by him, to the end that he might be admitted to bail if he be entitled to it. Upon examination of a transcript of such proceedings and evidence, which was admitted by the parties to be a true and correct record, and upon waiver of the writ of certiorari, Justice Wood allowed him bail in the sum of $7,500. This record is now before us to determine whether the circuit judge erred in refusing to grant bail.

The first question we shall consider is: What is the force and effect of the order of Justice Wood admitting the prisoner to bail?

Section 4 of article 7 of the Constitution provides: "The Supreme Court, except in cases otherwise provided by this constitution, shall have appellate jurisdiction only; which shall be co-extensive with the state, under such restrictions as may from time to time be prescribed by law. It shall have a general superintending control over all inferior courts of law and equity; and, in aid of its appellate and supervisory jurisdiction, it shall have power to issue writs of error, and supersedeas, certiorari, habeas corpus, prohibition, mandamus and quo warranto, and other remedial writs; and to hear and determine the same. Its judges shall be conservators of the peace throughout the state, and shall severally have power to issue any of the aforesaid writs."

"In Good et al., Ex parte, 19 Ark. 410, this court held that, in the exercise of its constitutional power of superintending control over inferior tribunals, it could review, on certiorari, the decision of a circuit judge refusing bail, and indicated the proper mode of practice of bringing the decision before it for review. This decision was approved in Kittrell, Ex parte, 20 Ark. 500," and Harbour, Ex parte, 39 Ark. 126.

The circuit judge had the power in this case to admit the prisoner to bail or refuse it. The authority to review his order or judgment refusing it or set it aside is supervisory, and is vested exclusively in the Supreme Court. No appellate or supervisory jurisdiction is invested in any of its judges. They have the authority to issue certain writs in aid of the appellate and supervisory jurisdiction of the Supreme Court; and for that purpose, and subject to the restrictions prescribed by law, can issue them to stay temporarily proceedings on the judgment appealed from for its enforcement, to preserve the status in quo of the parties pending the determination of the appeal, and for the purpose of protecting its jurisdiction and making the judgment of the court effective when rendered, but not to reverse, modify, or affirm the judgment of the inferior tribunal. In the exercise of the jurisdiction of this court, no less than three of its judges can make an order affecting an order or judgment appealed from. It is obvious that one judge has not the power of three, or in the vacation of the court can exercise its jurisdiction.

The Legislature once attempted to vest a judge of this court with the power to compel a judge of the circuit court, or any circuit court, by a writ of mandamus, to grant an injunction after he or it has refused an application for such relief. This was the effect of an act entitled "An act to regulate the practice in suits for injunction and for the appointment of receivers," approved March 23, 1881 (Acts 1881, p. 185). In Batesville & Brinkley Railroad Company, Ex parte, 39 Ark. 82, this court held that the Legislature could not vest a judge of this court with such power. Judge Smith, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "So far as it (act of March 23, 1881) authorizes a single judge of this court to review the chancellor's decision, the act is certainly unconstitutional, because the concurrence of two judges is in every case necessary to a decision; and it is the court, and not the individual members thereof, that is empowered to hear and determine mandamus and other remedial writs." Mandamus is one of the writs the Constitution authorizes the judges of the Supreme Court to issue. What is said of it is true as to the other writs mentioned in the Constitution in the same connection.

The order of Justice Wood granting bail is without authority and of no effect.

Did the circuit judge commit a reversible error in refusing to grant bail? The Constitution provides: "All persons shall, before conviction, be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses, when the proof is evident or the presumption is great." Article 2, § 8. In Good, Ex parte, 19 Ark. 410, 416, this court held that the power of revising the action of a court or judge refusing bail should be cautiously exercised, and that the decision of the court or judge "should not be overturned except in cases of manifest error," etc. In Jones, Ex parte, 20 Ark.

9, and Bird and Bailey, Ex parte, 24 Ark. 275, Good, Ex parte, was approved, but the court said we should "not lose sight of the humane principle of the law that requires every reasonable doubt to go to the benefit of the prisoner." We should also not lose sight of the provision of the Constitution which declares that persons shall not be ballable in capital cases "when the proof is evident or the presumption great," and the object of bail, which is to secure the attendance of the prisoner.

In cases where it will not in all probability be sufficient for that purpose, it should be denied, and that is in capital cases where the proof is evident or the presumption great. In such cases the temptation to forfeit the bail in preference to endangering life by a trial might be beyond resistance. Hence in cases like this we should consider the evidence heard by the circuit judge as a whole, and the reasonable doubt that the prisoner will be entitled to on a trial, and, if so considering, we find that "the evidence is clear and strong, leading a well-guarded and dispassionate judgment to the conclusion that the offense has been committed; that the accused is the guilty agent, and that he will probably be punished capitally if the law is administered," the judgment or order of the circuit judge or court denying bail shall be affirmed, and, if otherwise, should be reversed.

Guided by the foregoing test and the fact that the circuit judge was present when the witnesses in the case were examined, and was more competent to judge of the credit that should be given to their statements than this court can be upon the record before it, we affirm the judgment or order of the judge denying bail. A warrant for the arrest and imprisonment of the accused, if at large, may be issued and executed.

WOOD, J., dissents.

BECKETT v. WHITTINGTON.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 18, 1909.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 513*)—FINAL SETTLEMENT—JUDGMENT OF CONFIRMATION—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Under the Constitution, giving the probate court jurisdiction as to the estates of decedents, and Kirby's Dig. § 140, providing that an administrator's account, when confirmed, shall not be subject to investigation except in a court of chancery, on a judgment of the probate court confirming the final settlement of an administrator and closing the administration, the jurisdiction of the probate court over the estate ceases, but the court of chancery may on a proper showing of fraud or mistake set aside the judgment, but until the judgment is so set aside the probate court has no further jurisdiction, notwithstanding Kirby's Dig. § 48, authorizing the appointment of an administrator in succesion before the estate has been fully administered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 513.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 516*)—FINAL SETTLEMENT—JUDGMENT OF CONFIRMATION—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where, after the final settlement of an administrator, assets remain unadministered, and debts against the estate are unpaid, a court of chancery in a suit by any heir, distributee, or creditor and on a proper showing may uncover the assets and set aside the confirmation of the final settlement, and, where there is no indebtedness against the estate unpaid, the heir or distributee of decedent may institute such a suit for the recovery of unadministered assets.

Appeal from Columbia Chancery Court; E. O. Mahoney, Chancellor.

Suit by S. C. Beckett, as administrator of J. S. Dawson, deceased, against D. C. Whittington. From a decree dismissing the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Stevens & Stevens, for appellant. McKay & Lile, for appellee.

FRAUENTHAL, J. On the 3d day of October, 1907, S. C. Beckett, as administrator of the estate of J. S. Dawson, deceased, instituted this suit in the Columbia chancery court against the defendant below, D. C. Whittington, and in his complaint alleged that the decedent and defendant were prior to decedent's death equal partners in the ownership and operation of a mill and gin, and, upon the death of Dawson in 1902, the defendant, as surviving partner, retained possession of all the partnership property and continued to carry on the partnership business, and he asked for an accounting and settlement of said partnership. The defendant in his answer alleged that, upon the death of said J. S. Dawson, the probate court of Columbia county duly appointed one O. H. V. Dawson administrator of his said estate, and that he had duly administered on said estate and had duly filed his final settlement as such administrator in 1905, and that said final settlement was duly confirmed by the Columbia probate court, and by the judgment of said probate court made in 1905 said administration of said estate was fully and finally closed and said administrator discharged; that thereafter, and in 1907, S. C. Beckett was appointed administrator of the said estate of J. S. Dawson, and that such appointment was without authority of law, and without the jurisdiction of said probate court; and that, on this account, the said Beckett had not the legal capacity to represent said estate or to institute this suit. He further alleged that, as surviving partner of J. S. Dawson, he had made a full settlement of said partnership in 1903 with the said O. H. V. Dawson as administrator of said estate.

It appears from the evidence adduced in the case that on or about January 1, 1901, J. S. Dawson and D. C. Whittington became equal partners in the ownership and operation of a mill and gin, and that the partnership business continued until the death of Dawson on August 28, 1902, and that thereafter the defendant as surviving partner retained the partnership property. On October 20, 1902, O. H. V. Dawson was by the probate court of Columbia county duly appointed administrator of the estate of J. S. Dawson, deceased, and duly qualified as such administrator. As such administrator he duly filed inventory of said estate, and made settlements thereof in said probate court. Immediately after his appointment as such administrator, and in 1902, he investigated the affairs, business, and properties of said partnership, and in 1903 he had negotiations with the defendant for the purpose of making a settlement of the said partnership. The defendant testified that a full settlement of all the assets and affairs of said partnership was made, and, in pursuance thereof, the said administrator by bill of sale transferred to defendant all the title and interest of said estate in said partnership properties and business. Upon the part of the plaintiff, the testimony tended to show that, while such negotiations for a settlement were made and a bill of sale for certain properties of the partnership executed by said former administrator, the settlement did not include all the properties of the partnership and was not fully consummated. Thereafter, on March 31, 1905, the said O. H. V. Dawson, as administrator of the estate of J. S. Dawson, filed in said probate court his second and final settlement. This settlement was at the following term duly confirmed by the judgment of said probate court, and the administration of said estate adjudged closed by the following order: "Second and final settlement confirmed. This settlement, having been filed at the last term of this court, as required by law, is this day submitted, and the court, upon examination, finding that said settlement has been duly advertised according to law, and that proper vouchers have been filed for the credits asked, and the court finds, further, that said administrator has faithfully discharged his duties as such administrator, and has turned over all moneys and other property belonging to said estate, and now asks the court to discharge him and his bondsmen from any further responsibilities as such administrator and bondsmen, and the court is of the opinion that said settlement should be approved and the administrator and his bondsmen discharged. It is therefore considered, ordered, and adjudged by the court that the settlement herein be and is hereby approved and confirmed and ordered recorded as the law directs, and it is further ordered by the court that the administrator and bondsmen herein be, and the same are hereby, discharged."

On October 3, 1907, S. O. Beckett was appointed administrator of the estate of J. S. Dawson, deceased, by the Columbia probate court, and on the same day instituted this suit. Upon the trial of this cause by the chancery court, that court found that the plaintiff had no legal capacity to maintain this action and entered a decree dismissing the complaint. From that decree, the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

The merits of this appeal are determined by the nature and effect of an order of the probate court confirming the final settlement of an administrator and closing the administration of the estate of the decedent, and discharging the administrator because of the full and final accounting of the estate. It has been uniformly held by this court that the probate courts are superior courts, and that the orders of those courts are judgments, and are final and conclusive like the judgments of any superior court. By the Constitution the courts of probate have original jurisdiction in all matters relating to the estates of deceased persons and administrators. In the administration of the estates of decedents, settlements are made by the administrator of such estates, and the probate court has the exclusive original right to pass on such settlement with administrators; and, when these settlements are confirmed and no appeal taken therefrom, they cannot thereafter be investigated except in a court of chancery for fraud or some other recognized ground of equitable jurisdiction. Section 140, Kirby's Dig., provides that: "Any person interested as heir, legatee or creditor may file exceptions to such account * * * and such account when confirmed shall never thereafter be subject to investigation unless in a court of chancery." Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 519, 44 Am. Dec. 217; Dooley v. Dooley, 14 Ark. 122; Reinhardt v. Gartrell, 33 Ark. 727; Mock v. Pleasants, 34 Ark. 63; Jones v. Graham, 36 Ark. 383; Trimble v. James, 40 Ark. 393; Currie v. Franklin, 51 Ark. 338, 11 S. W. 477; Washington v. Govan, 73 Ark. 612, 84 S. W. 792; Hare v. Shaw, 84 Ark. 32, 104 S. W. 931, 120 Am. St. Rep. 17; Nelson v. Cowling, 89 Ark. 334, 116 S. W. 890; 18 Cyc. 1119, 1188. The settlements are an accounting of the assets of the estate and of the disbursements and disposition of those assets. Provision is made for the giving of notice of the pendency of such settlements, and thereby all persons interested therein are given their day in court in the examination of and the passing upon said settlements by the court. The orders of the probate court confirming the settlements thereby become binding upon all persons interested in the estate, and are judgments, and as such judgments they are conclusive of all matters embraced in the settlements, and of all matters belonging to and within the scope of such proceedings. The final settlement is the last accounting of the assets of the estate, and in conjunction with the annual settlement filed and acted upon by the court prior thereto presents the issues that are to be determined by the probate court when it renders its judgment thereon. Those issues presented by such final settlement in conjunction with the previous settlements are that all assets of the estate have been duly reported and accounted for; that all the assets of the estate have been duly administered. And, when the probate court confirms the final settlement and closes the administration, it is a finding that all the assets of the estate have been reported and administered, and that all matters of the accounting have been fully and finally made, and that the jurisdiction of the probate court over the estate is at an end. And such judgment is conclusive of these findings. If through fraud, accident, or mistake any property of said estate has not been actually reported, accounted for, or actually administered, a chancery court has jurisdiction to investigate such charge, and to set aside such judgment confirming the final settlement and closing the administration. When that is done, the chancery court will remand the administration, if deemed necessary, to the probate court to be proceeded with. Reinhardt, Adm'r, v. Gartrell, 33 Ark. 727; Shegogg v. Perkins, 34 Ark. 117.

But, until such judgment confirming the final settlement is set aside by the chancery court, the probate court has no further jurisdiction over the estate. And it cannot, therefore, after confirmation of the final settlement and the judgment closing the administration, appoint an administrator in succession, unless the same shall be set aside by the chancery court. Under such circumstances, the order of the probate court appointing an administrator in succession would be a nullity. As is said in the case of Collins v. Paepcke-Leicht Lumber Co., 74 Ark. 81, 84 S. W. 1044: "The probate court is a court of superior jurisdiction, and within its jurisdictional limits its judgments import absolute verity, the same as other superior courts. But, where its judgment shows affirmatively on the face that the court was proceeding in a matter over which it had no jurisdiction, or acting beyond its jurisdictional limits, such judgment is void." Myrick v. Jacks, 33 Ark. 428; Meyer v. Rousseau, 47 Ark. 462, 2 S. W. 112; Wallace v. Turner (Tex. Civ. App.) 89 S. W. 432.

It is urged by counsel for appellant that the probate court is authorized to appoint an administrator in succession after confirmation of final settlement by virtue of section 46, Kirby's Dig. That section was enacted by the act of the General Assembly approved March 13, 1889 (Acts 1889, p. 49), and in that act it is a part of one section of which the following section 47, Kirby's Dig., is the other part. Prior to the passage of that act, the administrator de bonis non, or, as he is here denominated, in succession, could not sue the former administrator and the sureties on his bond for property of the estate wrongfully converted by his predecessor who had died, resigned, or been removed. State v. Rottaken, 34 Ark. 144; Brice v. Taylor, 51 Ark. 75, 9 S. W. 854. And this enactment was for the purpose of giving such succeeding administrator that power and authority. Section 46, Kirby's Dig., provides that the administrator in succession can only be appointed "before the estate has been fully administered and settled." But, when the final settlement is confirmed, it is conclusively determined that the estate has been fully administered and settled; and therefore, after such confirmation of the final settlement and while it is in full force and effect, such administrator in succession cannot be appointed. 18 Cyc. 1119. After the confirmation of the final settlement of an administrator, if there still remain assets unadministered and indebtedness against the estate still unpaid, then, upon a suit brought by any heir, distributee, or creditor of said decedent, a court of chancery upon a proper and sufficient showing for equitable relief would have jurisdiction to uncover such assets and set aside such order of confirmation of the final settlement. See cases above cited. If, however, there was no indebtedness against the estate unpaid, then the heirs and distributees of the decedent would have the right to institute a suit in the proper court for the recovery of such assets. Crane v. Crane, 51 Ark. 287, 11 S. W. 1; Winnigham v. Holloway, 51 Ark. 385, 11 S. W. 579; Sanders v. Moore, 52 Ark. 376, 12 S. W. 783; Jordan v. Hunnel, 96 Iowa, 334, 65 N. W. 302.

It follows that the appointment of the appellant as administrator in succession of the estate of J. S. Dawson after the order of the probate court confirming the final settlement of the former administrator and the closing of the administration of the estate and while said order and judgment was in full force was beyond the power and jurisdiction of the probate court; and therefore the appellant had no legal capacity to institute this action.

The decree is affirmed.

succession, and a biweekly publication did not comply with the statute.

Appeal from Miller Chancery Court; Jas. D. Shaver, Chancellor.

Action by L. A. Byrne against Gus Less and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. A. Byrne, for appellant. Jas. D. Head, for appellees.

BATTLE, J. L. A. Byrne brought this action against Gus Less and another in the Miller circuit court to recover a certain tract of land. He bases his right to recover upon a purchase at a sale of the land on the 13th day of June, 1904, for the taxes of 1903. Less denied his right to recover, alleging that the sale was void for several reasons, one of which was the notice of the sale was not given in the manner prescribed by law. Notice was given by a publication of the lands returned delinquent, of which the land in controversy was a part, "in the Weekly Texarkanian, a weekly newspaper published in Miller county, for two weeks between the second Monday in May and the second Monday in June, 1904, the first insertion being dated May 11, 1904, and the second insertion being dated May 25, 1904," 13 days intervening between the dates of the two insertions. Was the notice in compliance with the statute?

The statute provides that the delinquent list shall be published "weekly for two weeks between the second Monday in May and the second Monday in June in each year." Kirby's Dig. § 7085. "Weekly for two weeks" means two weeks in succession; for the two weeks it must be weekly. It would not have been weekly if a month had intervened between the two insertions. A newspaper published every two weeks would not be weekly, but a biweekly. In this case the publication was biweekly, and was not in compliance with the statute. Did the failure to comply with the statute render the sale void?

Judge Cooley, in his work on Taxation, says: "The first proceeding usually required of the officer who is to make sale is that he shall give public notice of his intention to do so. Under different statutes, notices in various forms are required, as may be thought most suitable to the case. * * * Whatever the provision is, it must be complied with strictly. This is one of the most important of all the safeguards that have been deemed necessary to protect the interests of persons taxed, and nothing can be substituted for it or excuse the failure to give it. The notice being a prerequisite to the officer's authority, the fact that in the particular case it can be shown that the party concerned was fully aware of the proceedings will be of no avail in supporting them. He is under no obligation to take notice of the proceedings unless notified." 2 Cooley on Taxation (3d Ed.) pp. 928-930. To the same effect, see Black on Tax Titles, §§ 82, 84, and Blackwell on Tax Titles, § 215.

In Townsend v. Martin, 55 Ark. 192, 17 S. W. 875, this court said: "The notice for the sale upon which the forfeiture to the state is based was not published for the full time prescribed by the statute by three days. It is conceded that that fact is established by the record. The previous decisions of this court upon the subject of tax titles are uniform to the effect that failure on the part of an officer engaged in the proceedings devised for raising the revenue to observe a requirement of the statute, the nonobservance of which tends to deprive the landowner of a substantial right, will avoid the deed. * * * The failure therefore to give notice in the manner or for the length of time prescribed by statute is prejudicial to the owner's interest and will avoid the sale."

In this case the notice required by the statute was not given. The owner of the land was not legally notified, and the sale is void.

There are other questions in the case which we have considered; but it is unnecessary to notice them in this opinion.

Judgment affirmed.

1. WITNESSES (§ 388*)—CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS—FOUNDATION.

The admission of evidence of contradictory statements alleged to have been made by a witness without first laying a foundation therefor, as required by Kirby's Dig. § 3139, is error.

3. DEATH (§ 32*)—SEPARATE ACTIONS—NATURE AND SCOPE.

Two causes of action arise for wrongful death—one in favor of the administrator for the benefit of decedent's estate, and the other for the benefit of the next of kin; the latter being based on the theory that the next of kin have a pecuniary interest in the life of the person killed, the administrator suing in such right being regarded as their trustee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. § 47; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 236*)—ADMISSION OF DECEDENT.

In an action for wrongful death for the benefit of the next of kin, admissions of decedent that his mother was dead, and that he did not contribute to the support of any one, were inadmissible, there being no privity between decedent and his next of kin as to their substantive right to recover for his wrongful death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—PREJUDICE.

Where the sole ground on which plaintiff could recover for decedent's wrongful death consisted in the fact that his next of kin had suffered pecuniary loss, the erroneous admission of an antemortem statement of deceased that he was not contributing to the support of any person was prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

6. EVIDENCE (§ 246*)—ADMISSIONS—ABANDONED INTERROGATORIES.

Interrogatories prepared by plaintiff's attorney not shown to have been inspired by plaintiff intended to be asked of a witness in connection with the taking of the witness' deposition, but afterwards abandoned, were inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 945-949; Dec. Dig. § 246.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pulaski County; Edwin W. Winfield, Judge.

Action by F. B. Murphy, as administrator of John H. Downey, deceased, against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railroad Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

T. G. Malloy and Palmer Danaher, for appellant. Kinsworthy & Rhoton, J. E. Williams, and Jas. H. Stevenson, for appellee.

FRAUENTHAL, J. John H. Downey was a switchman in the employ of the St. Louis Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company, the defendant below, and on the night of November 18, 1907, he was killed in the yards of the defendant at Baring Cross, Ark., while engaged in the performance of the duties as such switchman. The administrator of his estate instituted this suit for the benefit of the next of kin of said decedent, who was his mother, Mrs. Katherine Downey and in the complaint alleged that the death was due to the negligence of the defendant. The defendant denied each allegation of the complaint and claimed that the injury was due to deceased's contributory negligence, and that same was a part of the assumed risk of his employment.

The testimony on the part of the plaintiff tended to prove the following facts: A crew of four switchmen were engaged in pulling out of the track called "Rip 4" 18 cars, and deceased was one of this crew. The engine was pulling the cars towards the switch where a number of tracks converged. The deceased was at the time on a box car, which was the third car from the end, and a switchman named Sangster was on the rear car, and a switchman named Barnett was on the car next the rear car of the train. Between the track called "Rip 4" and the track next to it, called "Rip 5," there was a trestle about seven or eight feet high which was used in this yard by carpenters in the performance of their duties in repairing cars. This trestle was located in close proximity to this track 4. The deceased was on the top rounds of a ladder attached to the side of the box car in readiness to go down this ladder to leave the car in performing his duties. On account of the proximity of the trestle to this track, the deceased was struck by the trestle in the back as the train of cars was thus pulling out of the track, and was knocked down and run over by the cars. The trestle and defendant were dragged along by the train of cars for a distance of 70 to 75 feet before the train was stopped. The plaintiff introduced as witnesses in his behalf the switchmen, Sangster and Barnett, who testified in substance to the above as the manner in which Downey was injured. The testimony on behalf of the defendant tended to prove that the said two switchmen and the deceased were drinking on this night of the injury, and that the two switchmen showed signs of drunkenness immediately after the occurrence. A number of witnesses testified to circumstances and the condition of the ground next this track 4, indicating that no trestle was dragged along near this track and that the deceased fell off the car at the place where he was found, that the only trestle at this portion of the yard was between tracks Nos. 5 and 6, and that there was no trestle next or near the track No. 4 upon which the deceased was working at the time of the injury; and the defendant contended that the deceased fell from the car without any fault or negligence on its part. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant, and, from the judgment entered thereon, the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

Upon the trial of the cause the defendant introduced as a witness one W. T. Edwards, who testified in answer to questions propounded by defendant's attorney that he had had a conversation some time after the injury with the above witness of plaintiff, Sangster, and that said Sangster had stated that he did not know whether the deceased,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Downey, fell off or was knocked off the car. The witness Sangster had not been asked whether he had had the above conversation with said Edwards, and no foundation was laid for the introduction of said testimony. The plaintiff duly objected to the introduction of this testimony, and duly saved his exceptions thereto. The purpose of the introduction of this testimony was to impeach the witness Sangster by these alleged contradictory statements. Section 3139, Kirby's Dig., provides: "Before other evidence can be offered of the witness having made at another time a different statement he must be inquired of concerning the same with the circumstances of time and persons present, as correctly as the examining party can present them and, if it is in writing, it must be shown to the witness and he be allowed to explain it." The direct tendency of the testimony of alleged contradictory statements made by the witness is to impeach his veracity; and it is but just to the witness and fair to the side introducing him that his attention be first called to these alleged statements, and the witness given an opportunity to recollect the facts and to explain the nature of what it is claimed he said, and the meaning and design of the statements it is alleged he made. It may be that a word may have been imperfectly heard by the contradicting witness, or a word omitted or forgotten which might change the entire meaning of the alleged statement, or that an explanation might be made by him of the circumstances which would remove all seeming inconsistency in the statements; so that the witness would not be discredited by the jury. This rule of what is called laying a foundation by inquiring of the witness concerning the different statements alleged to have been made by him before introducing testimony as to such alleged contradictory statements is recognized in all but a few jurisdictions, and is enforced as an inflexible one. Drennen v. Lindsey, 15 Ark. 359; Collins v. Mack, 31 Ark. 684; Griffith v. State, 37 Ark. 324; Carpenter v. State, 62 Ark. 286, 36 S. W. 900; Ayers v. Watson, 132 U. S. 594, 5 Sup. Ct. 641, 28 L. Ed. 1098; 2 Wigmore on Evidence, § 1028; 1 Greenleaf on Evidence (16th Ed.) § 462. It was therefore erroneous to permit the introduction of this testimony; and, under the circumstances of this case, the error was prejudicial. The manner in which the deceased received the injury was the material issue in the case. The plaintiff contended that he was knocked off the ladder of the car by this trestle. The defendant claimed that he fell off the car. The witness Sangster was an eyewitness, as he claimed, of the occurrence, and he was therefore a very important witness upon whose credibility rested the strength of plaintiff's cause. If, therefore, there was error in permitting the introduction of this testimony which tended to impeach his veracity, that error was prejudicial to the cause of the plaintiff. The plaintiff objected to the introduction of this testimony. The only ground of his objection was this failure to lay the foundation for the impeaching testimony, and therefore the objection was duly made and saved.

Upon the trial of the cause the defendant introduced in evidence a written application for employment signed by deceased, which contained certain questions and answers, among which were the following: "Name of mother (if dead, so state). Dead. Name and address of all persons to whose support I am contributing are as follows: None." This was permitted to be introduced in evidence over the objection of plaintiff duly saved. The only theory upon which this written statement could have been introduced was that it was an admission made by the deceased; but an admission made by the deceased could not affect the rights of the plaintiff in this case. Where an administrator claims property involved in a suit in the right of the decedent, the admissions of such decedent as to the title of such property are admissible because there is a mutual and successive relationship to the same rights of the property which constitutes a privity. But there can be no such privity in the relationship between the plaintiff and the deceased to the cause of action in this case. Upon the death of a person by a wrongful act of the railroad company, two causes of action arise, one in favor of the administrator for the benefit of the estate, the other for the benefit of the next of kin; and the actions are prosecuted in different rights, and the damages are given upon different principles to compensate different injuries. The action in favor of the next of kin is based on the theory that such next of kin has a pecuniary interest in the life of the person killed, and the amount of the recovery is limited to the value of that interest, and the administrator is but the trustee of such next of kin. Davis v. Railway, 53 Ark. 117, 13 S. W. 801, 7 L. R. A. 283; Railway v. Sweet, 63 Ark. 563, 40 S. W. 463; 4 Sutherland on Damages, § 1264. The action for the benefit of the next of kin is therefore an action for an injury to the rights of the next of kin, and there could be no privity existing in those substantive rights of the next of kin between the deceased and the next of kin; so that the admissions of the deceased would not be admissible in an action by the next of kin in such case. 1 Greenleaf on Evidence (16th Ed.) § 189; 2 Wigmore on Evidence, § 1081. It was therefore error to permit the introduction of the written application signed by deceased. And the introduction of that statement was prejudicial to the rights of the plaintiff. The sole ground upon which the plaintiff could recover in this case was the fact that the next of kin had suffered a pecuniary loss. But that pecuniary loss was based solely on the contributions which the deceased would make to the next of kin, and therefore founded on the contributions which he was making before his death. This statement tended to prove that he was making no contributions whatever to the next of kin for whose benefit this action was solely brought; and on that account it tended to prove that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover anything in this action, even if the death of decedent had been caused by the wrongful or negligent act of the defendant.

We are also of the opinion that the court committed an error in permitting the introduction in evidence of certain interrogatories which had been prepared by the attorney of the plaintiff to be propounded to Mrs. Braker. These interrogatories were turned over to the attorney of the defendant for the purpose of permitting him to append thereto cross interrogatories. Subsequently the taking of the deposition of this witness upon these interrogatories was abandoned. The interrogatories were therefore never used in the case or filed. There is no testimony that they were inspired by the plaintiff. They were solely prepared by the attorney who, if he did not ask for their return entirely abandoned them, and thus withdrew them. They could not be admissible on the theory that they were depositions taken by consent, or that they were admissions of an attorney in the course of the progress of the cause; and there is no theory, in our opinion, upon which they were competent as testimony in the case. Holland v. Rogers, 33 Ark. 251; Railway v. Clark, 58 Ark. 493, 25 S. W. 504; Ong Chair Co. v. Cook, 85 Ark. 390, 108 S. W. 203; 1 Greenleaf on Evidence (16th Ed.) § 186.

On account of the errors committed by the lower court in admitting the introduction of the above testimony, the judgment is reversed, and this cause is remanded for a new trial.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lawrence County; Frederick D. Fulkerson, Judge.

Action by Annie Bouldin and others against W. S. Jennings. A verdict was directed for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Beloate & Lomax, for appellants. W. A. Cunningham and J. M. Beakley, for appellee.

BATTLE, J. On the 5th of October, 1906, Annie Bouldin and others brought an action against W. S. Jennings to recover the possession of "all that part of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 34 in township 17 north, and in range 1 E, lying east of Village creek, the bed or channel of which being the west boundary line." They state in their complaint substantially as follows: James Tillman died on the 26th day of May, 1895, leaving Annie Bouldin his widow, and Dolly Bagley, then of the age of 17, Oscar Tillman, then of the age of 15, and Effie Tillman, then of the age of 3, his only heirs; they being his children. He died seised and possessed of the land described, occupying the same as his homestead. B. A. Morris was appointed administrator of his estate, and prior to the 18th day of July, 1899, paid all the probated claims against the same, and thereafter presented a petition to the Lawrence probate court for the sale of certain lands, describing them as follows: "Part of the southwest fourth of the northeast fourth sec. 34, Tp. 17 N., R. 1 E.,"—alleging that debts probated against the estate remained unpaid. On the 18th day of July, 1899, the probate court made the order of sale, describing the lands as described in the petition. A copy of the order is made an exhibit to the complaint. The land as described was sold by the administrator, and he made report of the sale to the probate court, which was approved. The order approving is made an exhibit to the complaint. Plaintiffs further stated "that said defendant, realizing that his said deed was void for uncertainty in the description, and that same created no color of title, attempted to get the Lawrence probate court for the Eastern district to grant him an order nunc pro tunc correcting the description in said order of sale in his deed, and obtained another order." A copy of the order is filed as exhibit to the complaint.

They asked for "judgment against the defendant for the possession of the land, for cost, and all other relief."

The first exhibit shows that the court ordered "part of N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of Sec. 34, township 17, R. 1 E." to be sold.

The second exhibit shows that the administrator reported to the court that he had sold "part of N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of Sec. 34, township 17 North, Range 1 East."

The third exhibit is as follows:

"In the Matter of the Estate of James C. Tillman, Deceased.

"Comes W. S. Jennings, and, petitioning the court, would respectfully state: That at the July, 1899, term of this court, an order was made upon the petition of B. A. Morris, administrator of the estate of James C. Tillman, deceased, for the sale of certain lands belonging to said estate for the purpose of paying debts probated against said estate. That on the 19th day of August, 1899, said B. A. Morris, as such administrator, in accordance with the order of said court, offered said lands for sale, and this petitioner became the purchaser of the same for the price and sum of $450, which was more than two-thirds of the appraised value of same. That at the January term, 1901, of this court, the said administrator reported the said sale to this court, and the same was approved and in all things confirmed, and the said administrator directed to make a deed to this petitioner upon the payment of the purchase money.

"That on the 26th day of January, 1901, the said administrator in obedience to said order executed to this petitioner his deed, which is exhibited herewith. That, in the order of sale, the sale report of the same and the deed made to this petitioner the said land was described as part of the Northwest $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 34 in township 17 N. range 1 E., when the proper description of said tract of land intended to be conveyed was as follows, to wit:

"Beginning at a point on the north boundary line of Sec. 34, Tp. 17 N., R. 1 E., where the channel of Village creek crosses the said line; thence down said channel to within 15 feet of the upper side of the old bridge; thence west, parallel with said bridge, to a point where said line crosses the north boundary line of section 34; thence east to the place of beginning; and all that part of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. of Sec. 34, Tp. 17 N., R. 1 E., lying east of Village creek excepting the following: Beginning at a point S. 88 degrees E., 2.40 chains, from the quarter section corner and the N. line of Sec. 34, 17, 1 E.; thence S. 45 $\frac{1}{2}$ degrees E., 12 $\frac{1}{4}$ chains; thence N. 29 degrees E., 9.15 chains; thence S 88 degrees W., 13.30 chains to place of beginning, said except tract having been deeded to the town of Walnut Ridge, Ark.

"That since making the said deed B. A. Morris has been discharged as administrator of the estate of James C. Tillman, deceased, and on the 10th of February, 1903, J. N. Beakley was appointed administrator of the same by the clerk of this court, which appointment was by the court, at its present term, approved and in all things confirmed wherefore the premises being seen, your petitioner respectfully asks that an order be made approving the sale of the land above described to this petitioner, and that the said J. N. Beakley be directed to make deed to this petitioner for the said land as properly described and for all other proper relief.

"The within petition being this day examined, and the court being satisfied from the papers filed and the former orders of this court and from the testimony of witnesses produced that the sale of the property was regularly made, according to the law and the order of this court, but that the description of said land was not full enough.

"It is therefore considered and ordered by the court that the sale of the said lands, as set out in the correct description, be and the same is hereby approved and in all things confirmed, and J. N. Beakley, as administrator in succession, is directed to make a deed to said purchaser with proper recitals and containing proper description as herein contained."

The defendant answered in part as follows:

"That he admits that James Tillman departed this life about the date set out in said complaint, and that plaintiff Annie Bouldin was his widow, and that the other plaintiffs were his heirs at law, but states that he is not sufficiently advised as to their respective ages at the time of their father's death to either admit or deny the same.

"Defendant admits that at the death of said James Tillman he was seised and in the actual possession of the lands described in plaintiff's complaint, but denies that the description given is the correct description of the same. And he denies that said lands were at the time of his death the homestead of the said James Tillman, deceased.

"Defendant admits that the estate of the said James Tillman was administered on by B. A. Morris, but he denies that on the 18th day of July, 1899, or any other time before the sale of the lands mentioned, the said administrator paid off or satisfied all the debts probated against said estate, and he denies that at the time mentioned as the date of the order of the probate court that there was no probated debts against the said estate, but states that, when said order was made, there were debts probated against said estate which at that time remained unpaid.

"Defendant admits that on or about the 18th of July, 1899, said administrator applied to the probate court of Lawrence county for its Eastern district for an order to sell the lands described for the purpose of paying the debts probated against said estate, and that an order of said court was duly made and entered directing the said administrator to sell said lands for that purpose. In obedience to said order the lands described in plaintiff's amended complaint were, after due advertisement and appraisal, as required by law, duly offered for sale to the highest bidder on the 19th of August, 1899, at which sale this defendant became the purchaser thereof at and for the sum of $450.

"Defendant admits that at the January term of the said court, 1901, said administrator reported the said sale, and that the same was approved and in all things confirmed, and the said administrator was directed to make a deed to the defendant.

"Defendant admits that in said report of sale the lands were not fully described, but were described as part of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 34, belonging to said estate.

"Defendant further admits that he afterwards filed a petition in the probate court of Lawrence county for its Eastern district asking that an order be made correcting said order of court, and confirming said sale by the correct description, and that an order was duly made which plaintiff refers to and purports to exhibit to his complaint, but does not attach the same. * * *

"Defendant for his further and separate defense to plaintiff's purported cause of action states that the plaintiffs, after being fully advised of the facts and circumstances in and about the sale, filed a suit in the circuit court of Lawrence county for its Eastern district against B. A. Morris for the purchase money paid for the land sued for in this case. And defendant pleads such act as an estoppel against plaintiff in this suit."

The record in this case is, in part, as follows:

"On this day, this cause coming on to be heard, comes the plaintiffs Effie Tillman, Oscar Tillman, Annie Bouldin, and Dolly Bagley in person and by attorney, and comes W. S. Jennings in person and by attorney, and all parties coming ready for trial, comes a full jury of the regular panel to try same. After paneling the same, the plaintiff asked and obtained leave to amend his complaint by inserting 'occupying same as his homestead,' and the defendant amended his answer, and at the same time making an additional answer, setting up the cause wherein Oscar Tillman et al. was plaintiff and B. A. Morris was defendant as an estoppel, and the plaintiff thereupon interposed a demurrer to said answer, which upon being overruled and to the overruling of which at the time excepted, and asked that their exceptions be noted of record, which was done, and plaintiff thereupon refused to proceed further, but stood upon his demurrer. Whereupon the court directed the jury to return a verdict for the defendant, which they did in words and figures as follows:

"We, the jury, find for the defendant, Frank F. Sloan, Foreman.' After the verdict was signed, but before it was read by the clerk, plaintiff asked to be allowed to take a nonsuit, but was refused by the court, which refusal was excepted to by the plaintiffs and duly noted of record, which was done, and the verdict read:

"It is therefore ordered and adjudged that plaintiffs take nothing by this suit; that the defendant have and recover of and from said plaintiffs all his cost laid out and expended."

While the exhibits in this case form no part of the complaint, they may be referred to for an explanation of its allegations. Abbott v. Rowan, 33 Ark. 506. Using them in this manner, we find it alleged, and not denied, that the Lawrence probate court ordered part of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 34, township 17 N., range 1 E., to be sold by the administrator of Tillman's estate; that the administrator sold the land as described and reported the sale to the court as so made, and it was approved in the same manner; and that the probate court at a term held subsequently to the time when the sale was made undertook to correct the order approving the sale by the administrator by an order nunc pro tunc by describing the land alleged to be sold by metes and bounds without evidence showing that a sale of such land was ordered, made, reported, or approved, virtually making a new order as a substitute for the order actually made.

"The authority of a court to amend its record by a nunc pro tunc order is to make it speak the truth, but not to make it speak what it did not speak, but ought to have spoken." Tucker v. Hawkins, 72 Ark. 21, 77 S. W. 902; Liddell v. Landau, 87 Ark. 438, 112 S. W. 1085. Further than this a court rendering a final judgment, as a general rule, is absolutely without authority to amend it in substance or merit after the expiration of the term at which it was rendered. 17 American and English Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 816, and cases cited.

In the case at bar the order directing the sale made described no land; the description in it not being sufficient to designate any. The order approving the report of the administrator was equally defective. The order amending the latter was a new order, and was of no effect.

The court erred in directing the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendant when the pleadings showed that he had no title to the land in controversy, but, on the contrary, it belonged to the plaintiff, and there was no evidence to the contrary.

Reversed and remanded for a new trial.

2. INSURANCE (§ 124*)—CONTRACTS—NATURE.

An insurance company may fix the terms upon which it will insure persons, and, a person having accepted insurance on such terms, they constitute a contract between the company and the insured, which courts may not vary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 172, 178; Dec. Dig. 124.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 191*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ASSUMPTION OF FACTS.

Where a person was insured by an indemnity policy, giving his occupation as a cotton factor and paying the premium for that occupation, and the policy provided that, if he was injured in an occupation classified by the insurer as more hazardous, the insurer's liability should be only for such proportion of the principal sum, or other indemnity provided for, as the premium paid would purchase at the rates fixed for such increased hazard, and, in an action to recover on the policy for total disability, there was evidence that insured was a supervising farmer at the time of the accident which was classified as a more hazardous occupation than cotton factor, a charge that "total disability" within the policy means that insured was disabled from prosecuting his business as a cotton factor, and that he was not able to prosecute such business unless he was able to perform all of the substantial acts necessary, that, if the business of cotton factor required as one of its duties the sampling of cotton, and it was necessary in doing so to use both arms and hands, and that the right arm and hand of insured had been totally paralyzed from the date of the accident so that he could not sample cotton, such paralysis was a total disability under the policy and insured should recover, was erroneous, as assuming that insured was a cotton factor.

4. TRIAL (§ 191*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ASSUMPTION OF FACTS.

There being evidence to show that there were many other duties besides sampling cotton in the vocation of cotton factor, the charge was erroneous as assuming that insured was totally disabled by reason of his inability to sample cotton.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Phillips County; Hance N. Hutton, Judge.

Action by Frank H. Chew against the Maryland Casualty Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

M. L. Stephenson and R. B. Campbell, for appellant. R. W. Nichols and Moore & Vineyard, for appellee.

BATTLE, J. Frank H. Chew brought an action against the Maryland Casualty Company. Complaining he alleges in his complaint substantially as follows:

On the 29th day of May, 1906, the defendant, in consideration of $25 received by it, did issue and deliver to him a certain policy of insurance and thereby insured him in the principal sum of $5,000, and for a weekly indemnity of $25, for a period of 12 months from May, 28, 1906, against bodily injuries not intentionally self-inflicted, sustained by the assured, while sane and effected directly and independently of all other causes through external, violent, and accidental means.

Among other provisions in the policy is the following:

"If such injuries shall not result in any of the disabilities mentioned in section 1, and shall immediately, continuously, and wholly disable the assured from performing any and every kind of duty pertaining to his occupation, the company will pay him for the period of such total disability the weekly indemnity above specified, but to an amount not exceeding the principal sum."

On the 8th day of April, 1907, while the policy was in full force and effect, plaintiff, Chew, was injured by the accidental discharge of a pistol, the bullet entering his right breast, and causing total, complete, and permanent paralysis of his right arm, thereby immediately, continuously, and wholly disabling him from performing any and every kind of duty pertaining to his occupation.

He alleged that he was entitled to recover $550 on the policy for indemnity against loss on account of the accident, and asked for judgment for that amount.

The defendant, the Maryland Casualty Company, denied the foregoing allegations. It stated the facts to be substantially as follows: On the 29th of May, 1906, plaintiff made an application to it for a policy of insurance, making certain warranties. In consideration of the sum of $25 and of the application and warranties, it issued the policy sued on. He represented himself to be engaged in the occupation of a cotton factor, but at the time he made this application and warranties he was not so engaged, but in another and additional and more hazardous occupation, and by reason thereof the policy is void, and was of no force and effect on the 8th day of April, 1907, when the alleged accident occurred.

One of the provisions of the policy is as follows: "If the assured is injured fatally or otherwise in any occupation classified by this company, as more dangerous than that stated in the schedule of warranties, indorsed hereon, the company's liability shall be only for such proportion of the principal sum or other indemnity provided for herein as the premium paid by him will purchase at the rates fixed by the company for such increased hazard."

At the time of and prior to the accident plaintiff was engaged in the occupation of "supervising farmer" in addition to that of cotton factor and as a separate business, which is classified by the defendant as more hazardous than that of cotton factor and under the policy he is not entitled to the indemnity he claims as cotton factor, but as before stated.

Plaintiff, Chew, did not use due diligence to secure the recovery of his arm.

In the trial of the issues in the case the policy sued on was adduced and read as evidence. It contained the provisions set out in the pleadings and the following in addition to others:

"No. 2. Or, if such injuries shall not result in any of the disabilities mentioned in section 1 and shall immediately, continuously, and wholly disable and prevent the assured from performing any and every kind of duty pertaining to his occupation, the company will pay him for the period of such total disability the weekly indemnity above specified, but to an amount not exceeding the principal sum; or, if such injuries shall not wholly disable the assured as above, but shall immediately, continuously, and wholly disable and prevent him from performing one or more important daily duties pertaining to his occupation, the company will pay one-half the weekly indemnity above specified for the period of such partial disability, not exceeding twenty-six consecutive weeks from the date of injury; or, if such partial disability shall follow a period of total disability, the indemnity provided for partial disability shall be paid, but not for more than twenty-six weeks; nor shall the company be liable under the provisions of sections 1 and 2 for a sum greater than the principal sum."

Contained in the policy is a schedule of warranties, which, in part, are as follows: "I am F. H. Chew, of Helena, Ark., whose business is that of cotton factor. The duties of my occupation are fully described as follows: office work; classified as select."

The deposition of Dr. F. D. Smythe, which was taken by the defendant to be used as evidence in his behalf in the trial of this cause, was read as evidence by plaintiff in the trial over the objection of the defendant.

The following extracts were parts of the deposition:

"A. The patient's general condition was bad when he reached the hospital, and the idea of operating at once was not entertained, owing to the location of the injury, also its recent occurrence. I felt that life would be jeopardized by operating at that time, and so advised him. He left the hospital for his home, and I informed him that the only chance for restoration of function of the arm was by a performance of the operation for deuteropathy or nerve suffering; that the operation in this case was not without risk, and at the same time I could not assure him of success attending my efforts, but, as it offered him the only hope of regaining the use of his arm, I advised him to take the chance. Some months later he called to see me, his arm being in about the same condition, except the atrophy advanced somewhat. He had slight use of some of his fingers and thumb, but not sufficient to be of any possible use. I talked with Mr. Chew, and advised him of the importance of having the operation performed. I told him I did not think he should delay having it done. He asked me concerning Dr. Murphy of Chicago, and I stated to him that Dr. Murphy had perhaps had more experience in nerve surgery than any surgeon in America, and that he could not go to a better man. My experience in this particular line of work has been limited. The operation can be performed successfully many months and even years after the injury without injury, though it requires a longer time to restore function in case it has been long delayed. He will remain permanently injured unless a successful operation should be performed upon him. There is no assurance that the operation will be followed by a successful result, but the chances are sufficiently promising to justify the operation.

"The patient was advised to report occasionally for examination in order that the operation might be performed at the earliest possible moment with safety. I did not see or hear from him for some time after he left the hospital. There was no treatment that could influence his case, except surgical treatment, and all that could be done was to advise his physician to look after him in a general way. The patient was informed that the operation was associated with danger in his case, due to the location of the injury and the large and important blood vessels so closely related to the injured nerves. The patient was advised of such danger.

"A. I advised the patient, if I remember correctly, that an attempt to suture the nerve should be made as soon as he could be gotten in condition for its safe undertaking, and that, if we failed to succeed, his arm would be in no worse condition than if left unmolested, and that, inasmuch as there was a reasonably fair chance of success following the operation, I thought that the proper course. I do not remember whether or not I urged the operation. I know I did not urge him to have it performed by myself. I merely told him that I would do the operation if he was willing to have same performed."

The following instruction was given at the instance of plaintiff over the objection of the defendant:

"The jury is further instructed that the words 'total disability' mean that the plaintiff was disabled from prosecuting his business as a cotton factor, that he was not able to prosecute his business as such unless he was able to do and perform all of the substantial acts necessary to be done in its prosecution, that, if the prosecution of the business of cotton factor required him to do several acts and perform several kinds of labor, and that he was able to do and perform only one, he was as effectually disabled from performing his business as much as if he could do nothing required to be done. Therefore, if you find from the testimony that the business of cotton factor required as one of its duties the sampling of cotton, and that it was necessary in order to perform that duty to use both arms and hands, and that the right arm and hand of plaintiff have been totally paralyzed from the date of the accident to the 8th day of January, 1908, and that by reason thereof he has not been able to sample cotton, then that such total paralysis of said arm and hand is a total disability under the terms of the contract in the policy, and you will find for the plaintiff for the time and amount fixed by said policy."

And the court gave the following at the request of the defendant: "No. 5. You are instructed that, to entitle the plaintiff to recover damages for total disability under the terms of the policy in evidence, it is necessary for him to show by a preponderance of the evidence that he was continuously and wholly prevented by reason of the accidental injury from performing any and every kind of duty pertaining to his occupation, and, if you believe from the evidence plaintiff was able during any of the period from April 8, 1907, to July 8, 1908, to perform any of the duties pertaining to his occupation, then you should in your verdict allow him only for partial disability for such time, if any, you believe from the evidence he was able to perform any of such duties."

"You are instructed that it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to show a substantial disability to transact his business, but he must show by a preponderance of the evidence that he was unable to perform any and every kind of duty pertaining to his occupation."

And refused to give the following at the request of the defendant: "No. 2. You are instructed that it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to observe reasonable care to avoid unnecessary disability or the unnecessary continuance of disability, and, if you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff, Chew, did not observe reasonable care in following the advice of his physician, Dr. F. D. Smythe, and if you further believe from the evidence that, because of his failure to observe such reasonable care, he was disabled to a greater extent or for a greater length of time than he would have been by the exercise of such reasonable care, then you should find for the plaintiff only to the extent and for the length of time he would have been disabled if he had exercised such reasonable care."

Plaintiff recovered judgment, and the defendant appealed.

Plaintiff had no right to read the deposition of Dr. Smythe as evidence without the consent of the defendant; the same not having been taken under an agreement. Sexton v. Brock, 15 Ark. 345; Ong Chair Co. v. Cook, 85 Ark. 390, 108 S. W. 203.

The court erred in giving the instruction at the instance of the plaintiff. It is in violation of the terms and conditions of the policy sued on. The parties had the right to make their own contract, and the courts are powerless to make another or a new contract for them. As said in Standard Life & Accident Insurance Co. v. Ward, 65 Ark. 295, 45 S. W. 1063: "The insurance company had the right to fix the terms and conditions upon which it would insure appellee, and the latter had the right to accept or reject the insurance in these terms and conditions; but, having accepted the same, it was a contract between them, and, being in violation of no principle of law, nor in contravention of the policy of the law, must be enforced according to its terms and meaning; and the courts have the right neither to make contracts for parties, nor to vary their contracts to meet and fulfill some notion of abstract justice, and still less of moral obligation."

The instruction assumes that plaintiff had the right to recover the indemnity as a cotton factor, if at all, when there was evidence tending to prove that he was a "supervising farmer" at the time of the accident, and, if he was such, he was not entitled to recover as great an indemnity as he would have been entitled to had he been only a cotton factor, and also assumes that he is totally disabled by reason of his inability to "sample" cotton, when the evidence shows that there are many other duties he has to perform in pursuing his vocation of cotton factor. Then the instruction is in conflict with that given upon the same subject at the request of the defendant.

The instruction asked by the defendant and refused by the court is not entirely correct. The failure of the plaintiff to observe reasonable care in following the advice of his physician could not affect the defendant unless it increased the indemnity and defendant would have no right to complain, but this fact is not mentioned in the request. It has been held in cases of personal injury that no damages should be allowed the injured party for any impairment of health or physical condition occasioned by his neglect to observe the directions of his physician. Keyes v. City of Cedar Falls, 107 Iowa, 509, 78 N. W. 227, 229. Upon the same principle, no indemnity should be allowed to an assured in actions like this on account of an extension of the injury where such extension is occasioned by his neglect to observe such directions.

Appellant lays stress upon the evidence tending to prove that appellee was a "super-vising farmer" at the time the policy was issued and at the time the accident occurred; but this evidence was submitted to the jury upon proper instructions given at the request of appellant. As a new trial will be granted, comments are unnecessary.

Reverse and remand for a new trial.

ST. LOUIS, I. M. & S. RY. CO. v. REED.
(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 15, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 124*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—DUTY OF MASTER—SAFE MACHINERY—INSPECTION.

A master's duty to exercise reasonable care to furnish suitable and safe machinery, and to keep the same in repair, involves the affirmative and continuous duty of reasonable inspection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 235-242; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 265*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—DEFECTIVE MACHINERY—RESPONSE LOQUITUR.

While a master's failure to use reasonable care to provide reasonably safe machinery and appliances cannot be presumed from the mere occurrence of an accident in which a servant is injured, the master's negligence may be shown by proof that the defect which caused the injury was discoverable by the exercise of ordinary care, so that the master was either negligent in failing to exercise reasonable care in making an inspection to discover it, or was negligent in failing to repair it after discovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 881, 898; Dec. Dig. § 265.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 286*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—DEFECTIVE APPLIANCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where there is evidence that the appliance broke or gave way in consequence of a visible defect, or defect which could have been discovered by the master by the exercise of ordinary care, the question of the master's negligence is for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1001-1010; Dec. Dig. § 286.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 278*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—INSPECTION—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries to a servant by the breaking of the crank lever of a railroad hand car due to a defect in the cast iron of which it was made, evidence held to sustain a finding that there was a visible defect in the lever, and that defendant company was negligent in failing to discover it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 968; Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 293*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—DEFECTIVE APPLIANCE—INSTRUCTIONS—"COMPETENT INSPECTORS."

An instruction that it was not a servant's duty to inspect appliances for latent defects rendering them more than ordinarily dangerous, but that the servant was only required to take notice of such defects or hazards as were obvious to the senses; that the fact that a servant had the means of knowledge of defects would not preclude a recovery, unless he did, in fact, know of them or by the exercise of ordinary care ought to have known of them, it being the master's duty to use ordinary care in making reasonably careful inspection at reasonable times by competent inspectors for defects in appliances furnished to employes which can be discovered by the proper inspection of a competent inspector—was not objectionable as requiring inspection of the cast-iron hand car lever which broke and caused the injury by an expert in cast iron, the court having further charged that competent inspectors were such as other prudently conducted and operated railroads used in inspecting hand cars on their roads.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1153; Dec. Dig. § 293.*
For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, p. 1360.]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 168*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—INSPECTION.

Though the master owes to his servant the duty of a proper and reasonable inspection of appliances, reasonable care in the selection of men fit to make such inspection, and not men of the highest efficiency, skill, and ability, is the measure of the master's duty to the servant in that regard.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 337; Dec. Dig. § 168.*]

7. DAMAGES (§ 132*)—EXCESSIVENESS—PERSONAL INJURIES.

Plaintiff, a railway trackman, 26 years old, and fitted only for manual labor, earning before the injury $1.12½ to $1.25 a day, was thrown from a hand car by the breaking of the lever due to a defect in the material, and was run over by the car. His head above the ear was injured to such an extent that his hearing, though slightly defective, had become greatly impaired, his shoulder was bruised, and his collarbone broken; his injuries being such that he would never be able to do railroad or heavy work again. He was confined to his bed for several weeks, suffered great pain, which he also suffered thereafter whenever he attempted to do any heavy work. Held, that a verdict awarding him $1,500 was not excessive.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Marion County; Brice B. Hudgins, Judge.

Action by Thomas C. Reed against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 88 Ark. 458, 115 S. W. 150.

Kinsworthy & Rhoton, Horton & South, G. D. Henderson, and Jas. H. Stevenson, for appellant. Jones & Seawell and Hamlin & Seawell, for appellee.

FRAUMENTHAL, J. The appellee, Thomas C. Reed, who was the plaintiff below, instituted this suit against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company to recover for personal injuries caused by the breaking of the lever bar of a hand car. In November, 1907, he was in the employ of the defendant as a section hand, and, in company with a number of the section crew, was returning from work on a hand car furnished by the defendant. Upon the hand car was an upright bar, called a "lever bar," with a handle at each end, by pumping which the car was propelled. The plaintiff and the other men of the crew were engaged in pumping the car when the lever bar broke about midway, and threw the plaintiff off backwards. He fell across the rail and on the ground between the rails. The car ran over him, and he was injured on his head, and his collarbone was broken, and he was otherwise severely hurt. He alleged that the defendant was negligent in failing to exercise ordinary care and prudence in furnishing him with a reasonably safe hand car, and in failing to use ordinary care and diligence in keeping same in a reasonably safe condition; that the lever bar was defective, and was known to the defendant to be defective, or could have been known by it to have been defective by the exercise of ordinary care; and that its defective condition was unknown to the plaintiff. The defendant denied the allegations of the complaint, and alleged that, if there was any defect in the lever bar, it was as patent to the plaintiff as to the defendant, and denied that defendant was negligent in any particular. There was a former trial of this cause in the circuit court, and a verdict was returned upon that trial in favor of the plaintiff. From the judgment rendered upon that verdict the defendant prosecuted an appeal to this court. Upon the hearing of said appeal this court reversed the said judgment and remanded the cause for a new trial. The opinion of this court upon that appeal is reported in 88 Ark. 458, 115 S. W. 150. In that opinion there is set out a synopsis of the material evidence given upon the first trial and also the instructions which upon that trial were given to the jury.

Upon the second trial of this cause in the circuit court, all the witnesses who had appeared in the first trial testified, and their evidence is substantially the same as that given on the former trial. In addition to those witnesses, other witnesses gave evidence on this second trial. It appears from the evidence that the lever bar was made of cast iron, and that it broke on account of a structural defect consisting of a blowhole on the interior of the casting. This cavity was not visible from the surface of the bar, but immediately below the broken place there was on the exterior of the bar a place that appeared corroded or rusty. After the bar was broken, a rusty streak was seen running from the cavity to the surface of the bar for about an inch, and showed that the bar was cracked to the surface.

The additional evidence on the part of plaintiff upon the second trial tended to prove that at the place where the bar was broken the rusty streak "extended clear out to the surface," and that, when upon the morning after the injury the two pieces of the bar were put together, the rusty streak showed on the exterior of the bar for about one-half of an inch, and that a crack could be seen on the surface of the bar, and that this crack "was rusty and looked old." And by witnesses expert in their knowledge of this character of iron casting, and to whom was shown one piece of the broken bar, it was proved that, if the rusty streak that appeared in the piece of the bar running from the cavity to the surface would have shown on the surface when the two pieces of the bar were placed together, then the crack could have been discovered by close inspection by the natural eye. There was also evidence tending to show that there was a depression on the surface of the bar near the blowhole; and one of the witnesses testified that this would denote a defect on the inside of the iron.

At the request of the plaintiff, the court gave a number of instructions, all of which are reported in the former opinion, amongst which was the following instruction:

"(2) You are instructed that it was not the duty of an employé to inspect the appliances of the business in which he is engaged to see whether or not there are any latent defects that render their use more than ordinarily dangerous, but is only required to take notice of such defects or hazards as are patent or obvious to the senses. The fact that he might have known of defects or that he had the means and opportunity of knowing them will not prevent him from a recovery unless he did in fact know of them, or, in the exercise of ordinary care, ought to have known of them. It is the duty of the employer to exercise ordinary care and prudence in making reasonably careful examinations, searches, or inspections at reasonable times by a competent inspector for hidden defects in appliances furnished to employées which can be discovered by a proper inspection by a competent inspector."

At the request of the defendant, the court gave a number of instructions, all of which are reported in the said former opinion, and, in addition thereto, gave the following instructions at the request of the defendant:

"(12) I instruct you that by the words 'reasonably careful examination,' as used in these instructions, is meant such examinations as are made by other prudently conducted and operated railroads.

"(13) I instruct you further that by the words 'competent inspectors,' as used in these instructions, is meant such inspections as other prudently conducted and operated railroads use to inspect hand cars on their roads.

"(14) I instruct you that if you find from the evidence in this case that the method of inspection used by defendant railway company as to the time of the inspection of its hand cars, and as to the kind or class of inspectors used in its inspections of hand cars, is such as to times of inspection and class of inspectors as other prudently conducted and operated railroads use for that character of inspections, then the defendant railroad company would have fully performed its duty owed to the plaintiff in that respect, and defendant would not be liable for a failure to properly inspect the hand car upon which the plaintiff was injured.

"(15) All the instructions are to be considered by you as the law of this case."

Upon this second trial a verdict was returned in favor of the plaintiff for $1,500; and, from the judgment rendered thereon, the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

The plaintiff was in the service of the defendant as a section hand, and, while engaged in the performance of his duties upon a hand car, he was injured by the breaking of the lever bar. There was a structural defect in this bar. As is said by Chief Justice Hill in the former opinion in this cause, the right of a recovery by the plaintiff "turns upon whether a proper inspection would have disclosed the defect." It is the duty of the master to exercise reasonable care in furnishing suitable and safe machinery and appliances to the servant for doing the work in which he is employed. It is the further duty of the master to exercise the same care in keeping the machinery and appliances in repair; and this necessarily requires of the master the duty of making reasonable inspection, and examination of these appliances and machinery. "The duty of inspection is affirmative, and must be continuously fulfilled and positively performed." Houston v. Brush, 66 Vt. 331, 29 Atl. 380. In the case of Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 13 Sup. Ct. 914, 37 L. Ed. 772, it is said: "A master employing a servant impliedly engages with him that the place in which he is to work and the tools or machinery with which he is to work or by which he is to be surrounded shall be reasonably safe." And, while the master is not required to guarantee the safety of the machinery and appliances, still he is required to take all reasonable precautions to secure that safety. Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Snyder, 152 U. S. 684, 14 Sup. Ct. 750, 38 L. Ed. 597. And this precaution can only be taken by proper inspection. Where the servant is injured by the defective condition of the machinery or appliances with which he is required to work and without contributory negligence on his part, the employer should be held responsible, except it could not have been known or guarded against by reasonably proper care and vigilance on his part. It is presumed that this care and vigilance has been exercised by the company in this case; and failure to do so cannot be inferred from the occurrence of the accident. But the negligence of the company in its failure to perform its duty in this respect can be shown by the facts and circumstances in the case. It can be shown by proving that the defect that caused the injury was discoverable by the exercise of ordinary care; for, if the defect was discoverable, then the company was either negligent in failing to exercise reasonable care in making the inspection to discover it, or negligent in failing to make the repair after such discovery.

As is said in 4 Thompson on Negligence, § 3803c: "If there is any substantial evidence tending to show that the appliance which broke gave way in consequence of a visible defect, or of a defect which should have been discovered by the master in the exercise of ordinary care, then the question of his negligence will go to the jury." 1 Labatt on Master and Servant, §§ 155-157. In the case of St. Louis & San Francisco Rd. Co. v. Wells, 82 Ark. 372, 101 S. W. 738, a locomotive engineer was injured by the breaking of the drawbar which coupled the engine and tender together, and there was evidence that the drawbar had a crack in it an inch and a quarter deep and had the appearance of being old. It was held that this was sufficient evidence to support a finding that there was an observable defect in the drawbar, and that the defendant was negligent in failing to discover it. In the case of Momence Stone Co. v. Groves, 197 Ill. 88, 64 N. E. 335, an employé was injured by the breaking of a hook used in pulling cars. An employé who picked up the hook after the accident testified that there was a visible flaw in it, and that he could see that the break was old and rusty. In that case, it was held that this was sufficient evidence tending to prove that the hook was defective, and that the defect was discoverable, and should have been known by the defendant. See, also, Ultima Thule A. & M. Ry. Co. v. Calhoun, 83 Ark. 318, 103 S. W. 726; Cleveland, Cinn. & St. Louis Ry. v. Ward, 147 Ind. 256, 45 N. E. 325, 46 N. E. 462; Railway v. O'Fiel, 78 Tex. 436, 15 S. W. 33; 1 Labatt on Master & Servant, § 159.

In the case at bar, two witnesses testified that, on the morning following the occurrence, they saw the two pieces of this broken lever bar, and that there was a rusty streak that showed on the surface of the bar at the place of the breaking, and that this rusty streak was one-half inch long, and that a crack was visible upon the surface of the bar, and that the crack looked rusty and old, and that it had the appearance of having been done some time before, and that, when the two parts of the bar were placed together, the rusty streak and the crack were visible upon the surface of the bar, and showed that the streak and crack were visible on the surface before the bar broke. At the trial of the case only one part of the bar was produced. A witness, who from his experience showed expert knowledge of the subject, testified that, if the crack upon the portion then shown to him should have been visible upon the surface when the two parts were put together, then it could be observed by careful inspection, and that the defective condition of the bar would have been discoverable. The character and size of the crack thus shown this witness was of the size and appearance of the crack upon the surface of the bar as testified to by the witnesses who examined the two parts of the bar upon the morning after the accident. The jury were the judges of the credibility of these witnesses. We are of the opinion that this was sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict of the jury finding that there was a visible defect in the bar, and that the defendant was negligent in failing to exercise due care in discovering it.

It is urged by the counsel for defendant that the court erred in giving the above instruction No. 2 on the part of plaintiff, because in the latter clause of that instruction it "in effect tells the jury that the duty of inspection and ordinary care and prudence therein can be discharged only by an inspection by a competent inspector," and that this, in effect, was to say that "to be a competent inspector, * * * a man must have been an expert in cast iron." We do not think that this instruction is reasonably subject to this criticism, because the fair import of the entire instruction, taken together, is only to require the exercise of reasonable care in making a proper inspection. And to emphasize the requirement of only such an inspection as would be made by an ordinarily careful and prudent person the court in instruction No. 13, given on behalf of the defendant, told the jury: "I instruct you, further, that by the words 'competent inspector,' as used in these instructions, is meant such inspectors as other prudently conducted and operated railroads use to inspect hand cars on their roads." Reasonable care in the selection of men that are fit to perform the duties of their respective positions, and not men of the highest efficiency of skill and ability, is the measure of the master's duty to his servant in this regard. But the master owes to his servant the duty of a proper and reasonable inspection of the appliances, and, if he sees fit to have others perform that duty, that does not change the measure of his obligation to the servant, or the right of the servant to insist that reasonable precaution shall be taken to secure safety in the appliances which are furnished to him to do the work. Carlson v. Phoenix Bridge Co., 132 N. Y. 273, 30 N. E. 750; Union Pacific Ry. v. Snyder, 152 U. S. 684, 14 Sup. Ct. 756, 38 L. Ed. 597. Taking the instruction as a whole, and especially in connection with the instruction No. 13 on the part of defendant, we do not think that it required any more efficient or further duty in this respect of the defendant. Furthermore, this court upon the former appeal held that this instruction was correct, and therefore it is the law of this case. St. L. I. M. & S.-R. Co. v. York, 123 S. W. 376.

The defendant complains that the verdict is excessive. We do not think so. The plaintiff was forcibly thrown from the hand car to the ground and run over by the car. He was injured on the head above the ear to such an extent that his hearing, though slightly defective, has become very greatly impaired, his shoulder was badly bruised, and his collarbone was broken, and he is injured to such an extent that he will never be able to do railroad work or heavy labor for which he was best adapted. He was confined to his bed for several weeks, and suffered great pain, and, whenever he does any heavy work, he suffers pain on account of this injury. Before the injury he was able to earn from $1.12½ to $1.25 per day. He was unable to do any labor for a number of months after the injury. He is 26 years old; and more than a year after the injury he testified that he was unable to do any hard labor, and, without education, he is dependent upon his manual labor. These damages were the necessary result of this injury, and we do not think that the amount of $1,500, recovered, is excessive, or that it can be considered excessive by reason of the plaintiff's refusal to accept medical treatment furnished by defendant.

We find no prejudicial error in the trial of this case, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

STONEMAN-ZEARING LUMBER CO. v. McCOMB.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 15, 1909.)

1. TRESPASS (§ 40*)—ACTION FOR CUTTING AND REMOVING TIMBER—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

In an action for cutting and removing timber from several tracts of land, it is not essential to a statement of the cause of action to set forth a description and value of the timber cut on each tract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Cent. Dig. §§ 80-87; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 367*)—MOTION TO MAKE COMPLAINT MORE DEFINITE AND CERTAIN.

If, in an action for cutting and removing timber from several tracts of land, defendant deems it necessary, to prepare a defense, that the complaint should set forth the description and value of the timber cut on each tract, the particular reasons should be set forth in a motion to make the complaint more definite and certain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 1189; Dec. Dig. § 367.*]

3. PLEADING (§ 418*)—ERROR IN OVERRULING DEMURRER WAIVED BY PLEADING OVER.

Error in overruling a demurrer to a complaint is waived by defendant pleading over.

5. TRESPASS (§ 46*)—CUTTING AND REMOVING TIMBER—SUFFICIENCY OF PROOF.

In an action for cutting and removing timber, proof that some of it was cut by defendant was insufficient to charge it with responsibility for all the timber missing from plaintiff's land during an indefinite period of two or three years.

Appeal from Circuit Court, White County; H. N. Hutton, Judge.

Action by A. C. McComb against the Stoneman-Zearing Lumber Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. H. Harrod and J. G. & C. B. Thweatt, for appellant. S. Brundidge, Jr., and Cy-pert & Cypert, for appellee.

MCCULLOCH, C. J. This is an action instituted by appellee in the circuit court of White county against appellant to recover from the latter damages for cutting and removing timber from three tracts of land, aggregating 160 acres. The complaint alleged that the trespass was willfully committed, and prayed for three-fold damages. The jury found in favor of appellee, but awarded only single damages.

Appellant demurred to the complaint, because the kind, quantity, and value of the timber cut on each separate tract was not stated therein. The demurrer was not well taken, and the court properly overruled it. It was not essential to a statement of the cause of action to set forth the description and value of the timber cut on each tract of land. If appellant deemed it necessary, in order to prepare its defense, that these matters should be set out in the complaint, the particular reasons should have been set forth in a motion to make the complaint more definite and certain. Moreover, appellant waived the error of the court in overruling the demurrer, if it had been error, by pleading over. There is no question raised as to appellee's title to the land on which the timber is alleged to have been cut. The points at issue are whether the appellant or its agents cut the timber, and, if so, the quantity and value thereof.

It is insisted that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the verdict. We are unable to discover in the record any evidence legally sufficient to sustain the verdict. Appellant owned adjoining lands, and its men were cutting timber there. There is enough evidence to justify a conclusion that appellant's men got over the line and cut some of appellee's timber. But there is no way even to approximate the amount so cut. There is no direct evidence that any of it was cut at all by appellant's men, and it is only inferentially that this much may be gleaned from the testimony. Appellee relied, in order to make out his case, on the testimony of a surveyor, who went on the land after the timber had been cut and made an estimate of the amount of timber which he said appeared to have been cut within two or three years prior to that date. There is no evidence in the record to show how long appellant had been cutting timber in that locality, or whether any one else had been cutting there. It was purely a matter of conjecture, without evidence on which to base it, that appellant had cut all of the timber on the lands which had been cut within two or three years. The burden of proof was on appellee, before he could recover, to show by a preponderance of the testimony that the appellant had cut the timber. Before he can recover anything, he must prove the quantity and value of the timber cut by appellant, if any. Bare proof that some of the timber was cut by appellant's men is not sufficient to charge it with responsibility for all the timber missing from the land during an indefinite period of two or three years.

Appellant sold some of the timber on this land, the persimmon and ash, to other concerns, and the latter cut that timber. In doing so, it appears from the evidence that the men employed to cut the timber got over the line onto appellee's land and cut timber of that kind. It does not appear that appellant was responsible for its vendee mistaking the boundary lines. There is some evidence to the effect that appellant's foreman, or timber boss, directed the men where to cut the timber. But, according to the uncontradicted testimony, this man had no authority, either express or implied, to direct the appellant's vendee or the latter's employes where to cut. The responsibility was on these vendees for getting beyond the line and cutting appellee's timber. There is no evidence at all upon which any amount of appellant's liability can be fixed.

Therefore the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded for new trial; and it is so ordered.

2. REPLEVIN (§ 71*)—FRAUD—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In replevin for a mule procured from plaintiff by two men through fraudulent representations, and by them transferred to defendants, evidence that on the day the two men left plaintiff's home a witness met two men of the description of the two who had secured the mule from plaintiff, that the mule they were leading answered the description of the mule obtained from plaintiff, and that the men were driving at an unusual speed and were cutting the telephone wires as they went, was admissible to show that the two men were conscious of having fraudulently deprived plaintiff of his property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Cent. Dig. § 290; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

3. FRAUD (§ 58*)—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

Fraud need not be shown by direct evidence, but may be proved by circumstances, though fraud is not presumed, and must be proved by clear and satisfactory evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 55-59; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

4. REPLEVIN (§ 69*)—PLEADING—ISSUES—TENDER.

Where defendant in replevin set up ownership in his own right in the property in dispute and denied plaintiff's ownership, the issue of tender was not raised.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Cent. Dig. §§ 257, 264; Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

5. PROPERTY (§ 7*)—OWNERSHIP—INCIDENTS.

Where property has been obtained from the owner by a felonious act, his unqualified ownership is not changed, and he may peaceably take it in whose hands he may find it.

6. REPLEVIN (§ 71*)—FRAUD—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where the issue in replevin was whether plaintiff's animal had been procured from him through the fraud of third persons, who had transferred the same to defendants, the contents of a grip in the possession of the third persons were inadmissible, in the absence of a showing that the articles therein tended to show that the third persons had perpetrated a fraud.

Battle and Hart, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pope County; Hugh Basham, Judge.

Action by W. H. Russell against John M. Hatley, in which T. D. Brooks and others, on their motion, were made parties in place of defendant Hatley. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

This is a suit by appellant to recover of appellees a certain mule. The complaint was in the usual form in replevin, and was against John M. Hatley. The appellees filed the following motion and answer: "Comes T. D. Brooks, A. S. Hays, and J. M. Martin, and respectfully state that they are interested in the property sued for in this action, in this, that they were the sole owners of said property and have possession thereof, and they allege that the defendant has no interest in said property, and they ask to be made parties defendant and substituted in the place of the defendant Hatley, and, being so substituted, they deny that plaintiff owns said mule or is entitled to the possession thereof, and deny that he has been damaged in any sum whatever. Wherefore they pray to be substituted as defendants, that this be taken as their answer, that plaintiff take nothing by his suit, and for other relief."

The testimony of appellant is, substantially, as follows: "I live in Van Buren county. I am the owner of the mule in controversy. On the 24th day of August, 1908, two men drove up to my house in a two-horse buggy about 1 o'clock and called for dinner. The older one of the two introduced himself as Dr. Warner of St. Louis. The younger man introduced himself as Mr. Bush, and spelled his name so I would not misunderstand it, B-u-s-h. While we were putting the team away, the young man proposed to buy a 'nag' I had, and which was running in the yard. I told him I would sell her. They both came in and ate dinner. A few minutes before we went in the house, he (the young man) made mention about my looking so badly. I told him I had been in bad health. While they were eating dinner, the old doctor made mention that I was looking bad. I told him I had been under the weather, and had not worked any this summer at all. He asked what the complaint was. I said, 'Rheumatism.' My wife asked me to have an examination. The doctor said, 'I will give you an examination, if you want me to, and not charge you anything for it.' I told him I had no objection. So he gave me an examination. He pronounced me to be a pretty difficult case, and we talked on some bit, and he asked me about the case. I asked him if he thought he could cure me, and he said he could. He said he could cure me for $300 if I would go to St. Louis. I told him I did not have that much money. He said, 'That is too bad.' He said that he had four cases in this state to treat, one at Marshall, one at some other place, one on Bear creek, and one at Appleton, and they had paid him big to come over there and be their doctor, and he said he would give me the advantage of this, and that he would cure me here at my own home for $100. I told him I did not have the money, and he said you have some stock here that you can sell, haven't you? I said, 'Yes, but I have not got any money at this time of the year.' My wife insisted that I take treatment anyway, and he said, 'What is a mule compared with good health?' I said, 'Of course, it is nothing much.' So I consented to take his treatment. The young man (Bush) said he wanted the mule, but did not have the money in his pocket. He said I would have to wait on him, or take a check, or something, until he could get to the railroad and get money. So I told the doctor that I would take his treatment if he could make it satisfactory with the young man to buy the nag. He had proposed to buy her (a mare) when he first came up. The doctor said, 'If you can make the deal with the young man, you can get the treatment.' So I went and talked to this young man again, and he looked at the nag and said she was older than he wanted, and asked if I did not have a young mule I could sell. I said I had one, but it was not there, and he said, 'How long will it take to see her?' I told him it would not take a great while. He and I went and looked at her, and he remarked, 'Bring her in, I guess we can trade.' I brought her in, and there was not much more said between us until the next morning. They stayed all night. After breakfast the next morning, the old doctor asked me if we had traded. I told him we had not closed any trade. He said, 'Make up your mind what you are going to do.' The young man and I went out to the lot, and he came in $3 of the price I had offered to take for the mule. I offered to take $125, and he offered me $122, and he said, 'I have not got the cash to pay you the money now, but I can pay you part of it, $22, and the $100 you would have to pay the old doctor would make it.' And he said 'I can pay him when I get to the railroad.' He said, 'I will wire and get a check and pay him.' He gave me the $22 in money, and he and the doctor took the mule. The doctor gave me, in the presence of the young man, Bush, a written guaranty, as follows: 'Scotland, Ark., Aug. 24, 1908. Received of W. H. Russell the sum of one hundred dollars for medical treatment. The same amount to be refunded if patient under treatment is not permanently cured in sixty days from date of this contract. Dr. B. R. Warner, St. Louis, Mo.' They came to my house on Sunday, August 24th. During the same week I heard that they had been arrested. I took steps to get my mule back when I heard of this telephone cutting and their arrest. I heard of this on Wednesday of the same week. I went to Scotland and telephoned to the officers to hold the mule and party until I could get there. I came on to Russellville and found my mule in the possession of John Hatley, sheriff of Pope county. The doctor consented to the trade and said he would take the young man for the $100. The young man, Bush, told me that he first met up with the doctor at Marshall, who employed him to drive him to see these four patients and to bring him to Russellville. The young man, Bush, furthermore stated that he had taken him to see three of the patients, and had one more to go to see at Appleton, and from there they were coming on to Russellville. It was at Mr. Hatley's request that I brought this replevin suit, as he said he preferred me taking the mule according to law. I sold the mule to the young man. He gave me $22 and was to pay the doctor $100. The doctor agreed to this, and said he would take the young man for the $100. I do not know whether the doctor got the $100 or not. Don't think he could get it, as he never got to the railroad. I do not know whether or not the young man paid him. The doctor released me and took Bush for the debt. As the doctor released me, it did not make any difference to me whether the young man paid him or not, if he had cured me. I gave him the mule for $22 if he would pay the doctor $100, and I took the receipt read in evidence to show that I had paid the doctor. When I came to Russellville to begin suit, Brooks, Hays, and Martin told me that they had bought the mule from the young man, Bush. They made me a proposition, and said if I would pay back the $22 and give them $25 they would get the mule back if the young man would accept it. I don't remember of them ever offering to give up the mule if I would pay back the $22. I don't think any such offer was ever made. I have never paid back, or offered to pay back, the $22."

H. W. Russell testified, in part, as follows: "I was at the house of my son about the 24th of August, on Sunday, when the young man and the doctor were there. The old doctor talked about medicine with me almost all of the time, and said that doctoring had advanced to that stage that he did not have to doctor by symptoms any more, that he could tell what was the matter. He talked with the young man and advised with him about medicine, but said the young man did not actually help him with the doctoring. When they went to go to feed, the old doctor asked my son if they had traded, meaning the young man, Bush, and my son. The young man answered and said that they had, provided that he (the old doctor) would wait until he got to Russellville, and the old doctor remarked that would be all right. The young man, Bush, told me that he was running a livery stable in Marshall, and that he was hauling him (the doctor) for $6.50 per day, and that he had a patient at Appleton that he was going to operate on for abscess on the liver, and that the old doctor had the money in the bank to insure a sure cure guaranteed. The young man told me what the doctor had done and was going to do with the other cases. Said he had one on 'Big Flat' and another on 'Bear creek,' and I believe he did tell me that he took three ribs out of one of them. I asked the young man, 'What if he does go in to cure my son and don't do it?' And he says that, 'He gives a written guaranty to cure you.' He says, 'He does that all of the time.' I asked him what it was, and he said, 'He is rich,' and I asked him what that amounted to if a man is here and he in St. Louis? The young man said that the doctor is a millionaire.

The trade between the young man and my son was not made in my presence. The night these people stayed all night at my son's, they had a buggy which I cannot describe, and their team consisted of a sorrel and a bay horse."

Appellant offered the testimony of one P. H. Brandt, as follows: "I live at Appleton, Pope county. On Monday, August 25th of this year, I saw two men in a two-horse buggy driving a bay horse, and I did not see the other horse good, and one of the horses was leading a mule. They were traveling so fast that I took both of them to be boys. They were traveling northwest as the road runs there. The mule was tied and was leading abreast the off horse. Before we met, I suppose I was 75 yards in front of them. I was walking going home, and I heard a wire 'cling' as it broke, and I noticed the wire dangling a short distance ahead of me, and in a short distance I met this team and buggy coming meeting me. They came on and met me, and when they passed me I noticed where the wire was cut. It was fresh cut. They were traveling so fast I can hardly describe them. One was a young fellow, and he was driving. The other was an older man, well dressed, and had black mustache, looked to be 45 or 50 years old. The mule looked to be a sorrel or bay, or a kind of a mouse color. This was between the 20th and 25th day of August, on Monday. They were driving very fast, at an unusual rate. I heard the wire 'cling' and dingle and drop just before I saw them coming, but saw them immediately afterwards. I saw the young man they put in jail, but could not say that I recognized him to be the same young man. They were driving at an unusual rate of speed for a two-horse buggy." The court excluded the above testimony of Brandt, and to the ruling of the court in excluding it the appellant excepted.

Witness Hatley testified as follows: "I live in Russellville, Ark. During the month of August, 1908, my deputy arrested two parties near Dover. They were in possession of the mule here in controversy. They were arrested on one day, and I took possession of the buggy, horses, and mule the next day. I got to Dover the next morning after they were arrested. They were arrested in the night about 11 o'clock. The mule was two years old, worth about $100 or $125. I had been informed that Brooks, Hays & Martin claimed the mule. I was holding the mule as sheriff of the county, and had put the boy in jail, and, not being satisfied with his conduct, I detained him for further investigation, and about that time a replevin suit was brought for the mule. This is a friendly suit, as far as I am concerned. I brought the buggy, team, mule, and the young man all from Dover myself. I took charge of the mule believing it to be stolen property. In fact, I thought the two horses, buggy, and mule was all stolen property. There was no agreement between me and the boy whom I had in custody as to how long I would keep the property. Something was said by the boy about the price he was to pay; but I do not remember just what was said. I wanted to catch the other man (the old doctor). I never did part with possession of the mule before suit was brought. After suit was brought, I turned the mule over to Brooks, Hays & Martin, but it is understood between us that I am still in possession of the mule, but in order to save expense to them I let them take it and put it in their pasture. They are to hold me harmless for any damage that might arise out of a wrongful delivery of the mule to them." During the examination of the above witness, he was asked: "What kind of baggage or property did you find in the buggy?" He answered: "I found a grip." He was asked: "What did it contain?" Counsel for appellees suggested that the question was immaterial. The court thereupon instructed the witness not to answer, and to this ruling of the court appellant excepted.

During the examination of the witness H. W. Russell he was asked: "Now you came to Russellville and saw this young man in jail. Tell the jury what statements he made to you." Appellees objected. The court sustained the objection, and appellant excepted to the court's ruling.

At the conclusion of the evidence, the appellees moved the court to instruct the jury to return a verdict for them, which motion the court granted. To this ruling appellant duly excepted. The jury returned a verdict for appellees. Judgment was rendered for them. Appellant moved for new trial, alleging as grounds the rulings of the court to which he had excepted. The motion was overruled, and this appeal was taken.

U. L. Meade, for appellant. H. M. Jacobway and Sellers & Sellers, for appellees.

WOOD, J. (after stating the facts as above). Under our statute, one who obtains personal property from another by any false pretense intending to defraud, upon conviction thereof, shall be deemed guilty of larceny. Section 1689, Kirby's Dig. See, also, 1 Whar. Cr. Law, 916; 1 Bish. Cr. Law. We are of the opinion that, when all the facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence in this record are considered, it was a question of fact for a jury to say, under proper instructions, as to whether the two men mentioned had not entered into a conspiracy to defraud appellant by falsely pretending that the younger was a livery man and driver for the elder, and that the elder was a doctor who could and would, for the consideration named, cure the appellant of the malady with which he was afflicted. It was a question for the jury as to whether these two men were making such fraudulent representations of existing or past facts, knowing same to be false, as were calculated to induce appellant to deliver to them his mule. The facts are set out in detail, and they speak for themselves. The younger man represented that the elder was a doctor whom he had first met at Marshall, and that he was employed by the doctor to furnish him conveyance to the four patients he had in this state. He represented the doctor as a millionaire who had the money in bank to insure a cure, that he had taken the doctor to see three of his patients, that he had taken three ribs out of one, was going to operate on another for abscess of the liver, and that all the time he gave a written guaranty. The elder man "talked about medicine all the time," and said "That doctoring had advanced to that stage that he did not have to doctor by symptoms any more, that he could tell what was the matter." The appellant was so badly afflicted with rheumatism that he had not been able to work at all during the summer. The two men mentioned went to appellant's home, and through the above and other representations, as detailed in the statement, induced appellant to deliver to them his property upon the assurance that unless he was completely cured within 60 days the amount he had paid, the balance of the price of the mule surrendered, should be returned to him. After they had thus obtained his property, they left his home Monday morning, August 25th, and were soon thereafter arrested. The sheriff believed that not only the mule they had procured from appellant was stolen property, but also the two horses and the buggy in their possession. The young man was lodged in jail. The elder escaped. The sheriff "wanted to catch him," thus showing he had gone.

The testimony of Brandt should have gone to the jury for its consideration. It tended to show that, on the day the two men left appellant's home, Brandt met two men of the description of the two who had secured the mule from appellant. The mule they were leading answered the description of the mule taken. This testimony tended to show that these men were driving at an unusual speed, and were cutting the telephone wire as they went. If the men seen by Brandt were the men who had obtained appellant's mule, as this testimony tended to prove, the fact that they were cutting the telephone wire, and were driving at an unusual speed, after doing so, were circumstances to be considered by the jury. Such circumstances, in connection with the other facts in proof, tended to show that the men were conscious of having committed the crime and were endeavoring to make their escape. The testimony, because of a lack of more complete identity, was not of a very strong criminatory nature; but it was a circumstance nevertheless tending to identify them and to show that they were conscious of having fraudulently deprived appellant of his mule, and were trying to cut off telephone connection, so as to enable them the more successfully to make their escape.

Without commenting more at length upon the testimony, it suffices to say that it was for the jury to say, from the nature of the representations themselves and the other circumstances in proof, as to whether such representations were made in good faith and for an honest purpose, or whether they were made to defraud appellant of his mule. While fraud will not be presumed, and while the burden is on him who alleges it to prove same by clear and satisfactory evidence, still it need not be shown by direct or positive evidence, but may be proved by circumstances. Phelan v. Dalson, 14 Ark. 79. We do not consider the circumstances in this case so slight, and of such equivocal and unsatisfactory character, as to warrant the court in taking the question of fraudulent pretenses from the jury. Bank of Little Rock v. Frank, 63 Ark. 16, 37 S. W. 400, 58 Am. St. Rep. 65. It was for the jury to say whether an itinerant millionaire doctor of the "all cure, or no pay" variety really existed in this case, and whether the representations which he and his boosting companion made, of present and past facts, were known by them at the time they made them to be false, and whether they made them for the felonious purpose of depriving appellant of his property.

The question of tender was not raised in the pleadings, and does not arise in a case like this. Here the party who obtained possession of the mule from appellant had transferred same to third parties. These parties are being sued for the possession, and they set up ownership in their own right as innocent purchasers. They do not concede, but deny, that appellant is the owner. The only evidence in the record concerning this is by appellant, who says: "They made me a proposition, and said if I would pay back the $22, and give them $25, they would get the mule back if the young man would accept it." Under such circumstances, tender to appellees was not a condition precedent to the right to maintain the suit.

If "property has been obtained from the owner by a felonious act, his unqualified ownership is not in the least changed, and he may peaceably take it in whose hands soever he may find it." Phelan v. Dalson, supra. The appellant did not offer to prove that the grip, found in possession of the two men when arrested, contained articles that would tend to show that the men had perpetrated a fraud on appellant in getting from him the mule. In the absence of such offer by appellant, the ruling of the court in refusing to allow witness Hatley to testify as to the contents of the grip was not error.

The ruling of the court in excluding the declarations of the young man in jail was, for the same reason, correct.

For the error of the court in directing a verdict for the appellees, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for new trial.

BATTLE and HART, JJ., dissenting, on the ground that the court did not err in its ruling on the facts.

CHattel MORTGAGES (§ 265*)—FORECLOSURE—APPLICATION OF PROCEEDS.

Appeal from Cross Chancery Court; Edward D. Robertson, Chancellor.

Action by J. W. Cook against M. Collins and others. From a decree in part for plaintiff, he appeals. Reversed and remanded, for decree as directed.

J. C. Brookfield, for appellant. Smith & Smith, for appellees.

BATTLE, J. On the 8th day of April, 1905, J. C. Crabtree executed a deed of trust, and thereby conveyed certain personal property in trust to W. W. Shaver to secure the payment of two promissory notes one for the sum of $840, dated the 8th day of April, 1905, payable to M. Collins, J. B. Hamilton, and J. W. Cook, and the other for $122, payable to the order of J. W. Cook, and due May 8, 1905, and provided, if the notes were not paid on or before the 8th day of May, 1905, the trustee should be authorized to sell the property at public sale to the highest bidder for cash, and appropriate the proceeds of the sale, first, to the cost of executing the trust, and, second, the aforesaid notes, and the balance, if any, pay to Crabtree. Shaver failing to act, J. C. Harrell became trustee by the terms of the deed, and sold the property according to the terms of the deed for $787.50, which is insufficient to pay both notes. Parties differ as to how it shall be divided, and appeal to the court to decide. The chancery court decreed that it shall be appropriated to the payment of the note for $840, and any remaining thereafter to the other note; and Cook appealed.

The proceeds of the sale should be applied first to the payment of the cost of executing the trust, and the remainder should be appropriated pro rata in part payment of the two notes. Penzel v. Brookmire, 51 Ark. 105, 10 S. W. 15, 14 Am. St. Rep. 23.

The decree of the chancery court is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with directions to the court to render a decree in accordance with this opinion.

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 13*)—ACQUISITION OF TITLE.

One holding open adverse possession of land without color of title, but by actual possession within an inclosure, for more than 30 years, acquires thereby title to the land, and is entitled to a decree quieting the title as against one claiming under an agreement whereby another agreed to enter under the laws of the United States the land for a homestead for his benefit.

Appeal from Pulaski Chancery Court; Jno. E. Martineau, Chancellor.

Suit by Mary Hardy and another against Richard Samuels and another. From a judgment dismissing the complaint for want of equity, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

O. T. Lindsey, for appellants. Vaughan & Vaughan, for appellees.

BATTLE, J. Mary Hardy and Ellen Hardy brought suit in the Pulaski chancery court against Richard Samuels and S. N. Tanner to recover a certain tract of land. They allege in their complaint that they are the owners of the land, but that the legal title is vested in Richard Samuels. They ask that the title be divested out of Samuels and vested in them.

Upon a final hearing the court dismissed their complaint for want of equity, and plaintiffs appealed.

The cause was heard by the chancery court upon an agreed statement of facts, of which the following is a part:

"(2) That the father of the plaintiff, Mary Hardy, and the defendant, Richard Samuels, immigrated from Georgia to Arkansas in 1883, donated this same land and set apart this 5-acre homestead for himself and family, and he lived there until it was agreed between him and his family, on account of his old age, to give up the land and let his youngest son, the defendant, donate the same land as a homestead for the benefit of the whole family in 1889, which was done, and the defendant obtained his patent for said land in 1896, which the defendant has now, by which he claims title to said whole tract of land, including said 5-acre homestead. That the defendant has sold the east 40 acres, and told the plaintiff that he owned the west 40."

"(4) That plaintiff says she has had and lived in open adverse possession on said land, especially the 5-acre homestead described in her complaint, inclosed with a rail fence, with the two houses built thereon, for about 30 years next prior to this suit, and she is corroborated by all her witnesses in their evidence, namely, Ellen Hardy, Wesley Collier, Mary Collier, Jane Means, and Alex Samuels, as well as all the witnesses for the defendant and himself, in their testimony."

The lands were entered under the laws of the United States as a homestead. The agreement of Samuels to enter the land for a homestead for the benefit of others was a violation of the statute, and is illegal and void. Cox v. Donnelly, 34 Ark. 762; Marshall v. Cowles, 48 Ark. 362, 3 S. W. 188; Nichols v. Council, 51 Ark. 26, 9 S. W. 305, 14 Am. St. Rep. 20.

Plaintiffs have held open adverse possession of five acres of the land, without color of title, but by actual possession within an inclosure, and have thereby acquired title to the same, and are entitled to a decree quieting their title to the same as against the defendants.

The decree of the court as to the five acres is reversed, and as to the remainder it is affirmed, and the cause is remanded, with directions to the court to enter a decree in accordance with this opinion.

PINE BLUFF AERIE NO. 209, FRATERNAL ORDER OF EAGLES, v. DREYFUS.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 15, 1909.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 150*)—LEASES—PERSONAL OR REPRESENTATIVE CAPACITY.

A widow and executrix of a deceased owner of property and his only legatee and devisee, except as to $2 left to his children, executed a lease to certain of the property, styling herself "administratrix and executrix" of the estate, without any order of court. Held, that as the property had become hers under the will, and the lease thus became her individual contract, she could elect to treat the words "administratrix and executrix" as words of personal description, so that the lease should be good as her individual lease.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County; Antonio B. Grace, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Leon Dreyfus against the Pine Bluff Aerie No. 209, Fraternal Order of Eagles. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

S. A. Miller and T. M. Hooker, for appellant. Irving Reinberger, for appellee.

HART, J. This suit was begun in a justice of the peace court by appellee to recover the sum of $140 alleged to be due her by appellant on a lease contract. From the judgment rendered in her favor, an appeal was taken to the circuit court, where there was a trial de novo upon the following agreed statement of facts: "That prior to the 21st day of September, 1904, Leon Dreyfus was the owner of a building situated at 208 West Baroque street; the same being situated on a part of lot 2, block 20, original town of Pine Bluff, Ark. That prior to the said date aforesaid the said Leon Dreyfus departed this life, leaving a will making his wife, Mrs. Leon Dreyfus, executrix under said will and only legatee and devisee, excepting he left $1 each to his two children, which has been paid by her, one of which died, and the other one is married. That on the 21st day of September, 1904, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into a contract with each other, by which the entire second story of the property hereinbefore described was leased by the plaintiff to the defendant for a period of five years from that date at a rate of $20 per month, which rent was due and payable on the 15th day of each month in advance. Said lease was entered into without any order of court. A copy of said lease is hereto attached and made a part of this statement of facts. That the defendant had quiet and peaceable possession of the same, and that on the 15th day of March, 1907, the defendant tendered to the plaintiff the leased premises and keys thereto, which the plaintiff refused, and defendant at the same time gave plaintiff a written notice that it would no longer be responsible for the rent, and that said building was subject to plaintiff's order and control. That the defendant had paid rent up to and including March 14, 1907 (same being the term which defendants occupied the building), and at the time of the trying of this suit seven months had passed since the 14th of March, 1907." The circuit court, sitting as a jury, found in favor of appellee, and an appeal has been taken to this court from the judgment rendered.

The lease contract shows that it was executed by Mrs. Leon Dreyfus, administratrix and executrix of the estate of Leon Dreyfus, deceased; but the property had become her property under the will of Leon Dreyfus, deceased, and the contract thus became her individual contract. The words "administratrix," etc., were words of personal description, and the appellee might elect to treat them as such. Bailey, Adm'r, v. Gatton, 14 Ark. 180. See, also, 18 Cyc. 980, and cases cited in note 21. The record in the present case shows that appellee treated the lease as her individual contract, and that she has prosecuted this suit in her individual name and for her own benefit. The judgment, both in the justice court and in the circuit court, was rendered in favor of Mrs. Leon Dreyfus.

There is no error in the record, and the judgment will be affirmed.

JOHNSON v. JOHNSON.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 15, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 987*)—REVIEW—EVIDENCE.

In proceedings for the assignment of dower, where the decree recites that the case was heard on the pleadings, depositions of certain witnesses, records of the probate court in the matter of the guardianship of minor heirs, and the admission of counsel and oral testimony that the lands described in the complaint were a correct list of the lands belonging to the estate, thus showing that the admission of counsel and oral testimony related entirely to a verification of the list of lands owned by the estate and described in the complaint, about which there was no controversy, and the only issue of fact is whether or not the lands are susceptible of division for the purpose of assigning dower, without prejudice to the widow or heirs, as to which issue the only testimony was found in the record, the evidence must be reviewed by the Supreme Court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3896; Dec. Dig. § 987.*]

2. DOWER (§ 79*)—ASSIGNMENT—DIVISIBILITY OF LAND.

In proceedings in the chancery court for assignment of dower evidence held not to support a finding that the land could not be divided without prejudice to the widow and heirs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dower, Cent. Dig. § 303; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

3. DOWER (§ 101*)—ASSIGNMENT—SPECIFIC PROPERTY—SALE.

A widow's dower is to be carved out of the specific property of which her husband was possessed, and not out of the proceeds of its sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dower, Cent. Dig. § 348; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

4. DOWER (§ 101*)—ALLOTMENT IN LIEU OF DOWER—SALE OF LAND—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

Kirby's Dig. § 2707, provides that in proceedings to allot dower, where it appears that dower cannot be allotted out of the real estate without great prejudice to the widow or heirs, and that it will be most to the interest of such parties that the real estate be sold, the court may decree a sale thereof, free from such dower, and that such portion of the proceeds may be paid to the widow in lieu thereof, or her interest therein, secured as the court may deem equitable. Held, that the design of the statute is to prevent a denial of the widow's enjoyment of her dower because it cannot be set aside to her, and authorizes a sale where the estate cannot be divided without prejudice, but does not authorize the sale of a part of the estate for the purpose of paying to the widow the value of her dower interest, ascertained without reference to the amount of the proceeds of the sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dower, Cent. Dig. § 348; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

5. DOWER (§ 101*)—ALLOTMENT IN LIEU OF DOWER—SALE OF LAND.

The mere fact that it would be to the best interest of the widow and heirs to sell the land and divide the proceeds instead of dividing the land itself, and allotting to the widow her proportionate share, would be no ground for the sale of the land and division of the proceeds under the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dower, Cent. Dig. § 348; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

Appeal from Lonoke Chancery Court; Jno. E. Martineau, Chancellor.

Proceedings by Fannie Louise Johnson against Carl Victor Johnson for the assignment of dower. From the decree, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

George Sibly, for appellant. T. C. Trimble, Joe T. Robinson, and T. C. Trimble, Jr., for appellee.

McCULLOCH, C. J. A. V. Johnson, a resident of Lonoke county, Ark., died intestate leaving a widow, the plaintiff, Fannie L. Johnson, and several children, who are minors. He owned 1,000 acres of land in the counties of Lonoke and Prairie, and said widow instituted this proceeding in the chancery court of Lonoke county seeking an assignment of her dower. She alleged in her complaint that "the greater portion of said lands are wild, uncleared, and not in cultivation, and that it will be difficult to allot dower out of said estate without great prejudice to said petitioner or said heirs," and that it will be to the best interest of all parties that the said real estate be sold free from such dower, and "that such portion of the proceeds may be paid to her in lieu of dower as the court may deem equitable and just." She prayed that dower be allotted, and that, if the land could not be allotted in kind without prejudice, the same be sold and her share of the proceeds of such sale be paid to her. The court rendered a decree directing the lands to be sold for the purpose of allotting to Mrs. Johnson a share of the proceeds as her dower; but an appeal was taken to this court, and the decree was reversed, because two of the infant defendants had not been served with process. Johnson v. Johnson, 84 Ark. 307, 105 S. W. 869. After the case was remanded, these defendants were properly brought in by service of process, and answers were filed for all of the defendants by their guardian. The court heard the case anew and found that the widow's dower could not be allotted to her in kind without great prejudice to her and to the heirs. The court further found the total value of said real estate to be $15,000, that the present value of the widow's dower interest is $3,154.32, and directed that 520 acres of the land, describing it, be sold in order to raise funds to pay said sum to her. The heirs have again appealed.

The statute (Kirby's Dig.) which it is claimed authorizes the sale of the decedent's land for the purpose of allotting dower out of the proceeds reads as follows: "Sec. 2707: In proceedings had in circuit court, for the allotment of dower, when it shall appear to the court that dower cannot be allotted out of the real estate without great prejudice to the widow or heirs, and that it will be most to the interest of such parties that said real estate may be sold, the court may decree a sale of the real estate free from such dower, and that such portion of the proceeds may be paid to the widow in lieu thereof, or her interest therein secured, as to the court may seem equitable and just." It is contended by learned counsel for appellee that we should not attempt to review the evidence, for the reason that the recitals of the decree show that the action was heard on oral evidence, and that the same is not brought into the record. The decree recites that the case was heard on the pleadings, depositions of certain witnesses, "records of the probate court in the matter of the guardianship of said minors, the admission of counsel, and oral testimony that the lands described in the complaint are a correct list of the lands belonging to the estate of A. V. Johnson." The above recital shows that the admission of counsel and oral testimony related entirely to a verification of the list of lands owned by the decedent described in the complaint. There was, and is, no controversy about this. The only issue of fact is whether or not the lands are susceptible of division for the purpose of assigning dower without prejudice to the widow or heirs. The only testimony bearing on this issue is found in the record, and it is our duty to review it for the purpose of ascertaining whether the decree appealed from is correct.

After a careful review of all the testimony, we have reached the conclusion that there is none at all to support the finding that the land cannot be divided without prejudice to the widow and heirs. The several tracts contain in the aggregate 1,000 acres, only a small portion of which is in cultivation, and this is on the homestead. The lands are partly timbered lands and partly prairie lands; the latter being shown to be especially adapted to rice culture. Much of the land, however, is of poor quality, and not very fertile. Nothing is shown in the evidence which renders the land incapable of division. Not a witness gives a reason why it cannot be divided without impairing its value. The case seems to have been tried below on the theory that it was sufficient to show that it would be to the best interests of the widow and heirs to sell the land and divide the proceeds, instead of dividing the land itself and allotting to the widow her proportionate share. In support of this theory it was shown that much of the land is covered by timber, and that it would involve considerable expense, beyond the ability of the widow, to put the rice lands in cultivation. But this affords no reason for selling the land. The statute above quoted, authorizing the sale of real estate for allotment of the widow's dower out of the proceeds, does not mean this. The decree is inconsistent with itself in finding that the lands could not be divided without prejudice to the widow and heirs, and at the same time ascertaining the present value of the widow's dower and segregating a portion of the land for sale for the purpose of raising funds to pay the widow's dower. If the lands could not be fairly divided, it was certainly unfair to the heirs to segregate a portion of them for the satisfaction of her claim, either with or without reference to the relative value of that portion. The effect of this would be to declare a lien on the lands of the decedent in favor of the widow for the value of her dower claim, and, if this method of assigning dower should be pursued, it might result in selling the whole of the decedent's estate in order to satisfy the dower claims of the widow; thus depriving the heirs of their inheritance. Such is not the design of our statute. The widow's dower is to be carved out of the specific property of which her husband was possessed. Hill's Adm'r v. Mitchell, 5 Ark. 608; Pike v. Underhill's Adm'r, 24 Ark. 124; Tiner v. Christian, 27 Ark. 306; Hoback v. Miller, 44 W. Va. 635, 29 S. E. 1014. The design of the statute hereinbefore quoted is to prevent a denial of the widow's enjoyment of her dower because it cannot be set apart to her, and to authorize a sale where the estate cannot be divided without prejudice, so that the widow can be awarded a proportionate share in lieu of dower, or her interest therein secured.

It is unnecessary to a decision of the present case for us to say whether the operation of the statute is limited to sales of separate indivisible pieces of real estate. But we do hold that the statute does not authorize the sale of a part of the estate for the purpose of paying over to the widow the value of her dower interest ascertained without reference to the amount of the proceeds of the sale. Our statutes on the subject of dower, when read together, clearly contemplate that the widow's dower shall either be carved out of the specific property possessed by her deceased husband or be allotted out of the proceeds of a sale thereof when it cannot be divided without prejudice, and that "such portion of the proceeds may be paid to the widow in lieu thereof, or her interest therein secured, as to the court may seem equitable and just."

The decree of the chancellor is erroneous, and it is therefore reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to assign dower to the plaintiff out of said lands by allotment in kind, and for further proceedings not, inconsistent with this opinion.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; Chas. Coffin, Judge.

Replevin by the Cotton Plant Oil Company against G. W. Neeley and others, in which the Buckeye Cotton Oil Company intervened. Judgment for intervener, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

J. F. Summers and J. W. & Joseph M. Stayton, for appellant. Gustave Jones and J. W. & M. House, for appellee.

HART, J. This is an appeal from a judgment rendered in the Jackson circuit court in favor of the Buckeye Cotton Oil Company against the Cotton Plant Oil Mill Company for two cars of cotton seed. In the summer of 1906 a local lodge of the Farmers' Union wished to rent a cotton gin near Tupelo, Ark., for the benefit of its members, and a committee for that purpose was appointed. Without going into details, it is sufficient to say that Dr. W. N. Pearce, G. W. Neeley, J. A. Wilson, Thomas Hurst, T. J. Looney, and M. F. Massey agreed to rent the gin with the understanding that the members of the union should haul them their cotton. The above-named parties were to share the profits and bear all the losses of the business. The business was to be conducted in the name of Farmers' Union Gin Company of Tupelo. They rented a gin from the Tupelo Gin Company, and made and entered into a written contract with it, whereby they agreed to sell to the Cotton Plant Oil Mill Company all of their cotton seed, provided that the company would pay the customary price for the seed. The same persons owned the Cotton Plant Oil Mill Company and the Tupelo Gin Company. G. W. Neeley was elected president and Dr. W. N. Pearce was elected secretary and treasurer of the Farmers' Union Gin Company of Tupelo. It was understood that Dr. Pearce should handle all the money, and buy and sell all the cotton seed handled by the company. There is testimony tending to show that this fact was known to the Cotton Plant Oil Mill Company. Pursuant to their agreement, they began to ship seed to the Cotton Plant Oil Company; Dr. Pearce handling the business for the gin company. Some time in the latter part of October or the first part of November a controversy arose between Dr. Pearce and the manager of the Cotton Plant Oil Company, and Dr. Pearce began shipping seed to the Buckeye Cotton Oil Company. On the 15th day of November, 1906, the gin company had a quantity of seed in a house near the railroad track, and Dr. Pearce was loading the seed in the cars preparatory to shipping them to the Buckeye Cotton Oil Company at Little Rock, Ark. On the same day G. W. Neeley and M. F. Massey executed a bill of sale of these seed to the Cotton Plant Oil Mill Company, which is as follows: "$1,117.62. Tupelo, Ark., Nov. 15, 1906. Received of the Cotton Plant Oil Mill Company eleven hundred and seventeen 62/100 dollars, as an advance payment on (100) one hundred tons of cotton seed now in seed house of Tupelo Gin Company, and being loaded in (2) two I. C. Refrigerator Cars, to wit: one car No. 54053 and one car No. 54853. These seed to be shipped out as soon as said cars can be loaded and sufficient others furnished us on side track at said gin, and to be billed to the Cotton Plant Oil Mill Company at Cotton Plant, Ark., the price being twelve dollars per ton on cars at Tupelo. Farmers' Union Gin Co. of Tupelo, by G. W. Neeley, President. M. F. Massey." G. W. Neeley, J. A. Wilson, M. F. Massey, and T. J. Looney were present when the bill of sale was drawn up and approved of its execution. The cars of seed in controversy are the ones mentioned in the bill of sale. On the 16th day of November, 1906, after the cars had been loaded, Massey got the numbers of the cars, and went to the agent of the railroad company for a bill of lading. While there Dr. Pearce came up and forbade the agent to issue a bill of lading to the Cotton Plant Oil Mill Company and demanded one for the Buckeye Cotton Oil Company, which was done. On the 19th day of November, 1906, the Cotton Plant Oil Mill Company instituted a suit in replevin against G. W. Neeley and others for the possession of the two cars of seed and also the seed in the house. The seed were taken charge of by the sheriff, and afterwards the Buckeye Cotton Oil Company intervened, claiming to own the two cars of seed, and, upon giving bond, was allowed to retain possession pending the litigation. The value of the seed was $445.03. Dr. Pearce, for the intervener, testified that on the 15th day of November, 1906, he had the two cars set on the side track and commenced to load them; that he finished loading one of them on the evening of the 15th, and the other the next morning; that he got a bill of lading on the 16th and sent it to the Buckeye Cotton Oil Company. He says that he does not think that the bill of sale to the Cotton Plant Oil Company bears its true date, but does not state any fact or circumstance upon which his belief is founded. The other witnesses testify that the bill of sale bears the date that it was executed, and that the consideration named therein was a balance due the Cotton Plant Oil Mill Company by the Farmers' Union Gin Company of Tupelo. There was a trial before a jury, and a verdict for the intervener for the two cars of seed. This statement places the testimony in its most favorable light to appellee. We do not think it entitles appellee to recover. It is conceded that the agreement of Pearce, Neeley, Massey, Looney, Wilson, and Hurst constituted a partnership. A part of their business was to buy and sell cotton seed, and this made it a trading partnership. George on Partnership, p. 91.

It is earnestly insisted by counsel for appellee that there was no complete contract by virtue of the bill of sale of November 15, 1906, because by the terms of the original agreement Dr. Pearce had exclusive authority to buy and sell seed, and this fact was known to appellant. The record in this case discloses that a majority of the partners became dissatisfied with the way Dr. Pearce was conducting the selling of seed, and that in good faith for the interest of the partnership they directed the bill of sale in question to be executed. This they had a right to do. Ordinarily each partner is the general agent for the firm for the transaction of its business in the ordinary way. In this case the other partners delegated this power to Dr. Pearce. The power to grant the exclusive agency carries with it the right to revoke it. The rights of Dr. Pearce are not involved in this suit; and for this reason the authorities relied upon by counsel for appellee are not applicable to the issue raised by the appeal. There was here a diversity of opinion between the partners as to the conduct of its affairs; and a majority of them, acting in the scope of the partnership business, directed a sale of the seed in controversy, and the partners to whom this authority was given executed a bill of sale to the two cars of seed in controversy. The act of the majority of the partners governs in such cases. George on Partnership, p. 158; Story on Partnership, § 123; 30 Cyc. p. 480, and cases cited in note 57.

Again, it is objected that the bill of sale does not bear its true date. It bears the date of November 15, 1906. All the witnesses except Dr. Pearce say that was the date of its execution. Dr. Pearce only says he does not think so. He does not attempt to give its date or to detail any fact or circumstance which leads him to believe that it was not executed on that day. This was not sufficient to impeach it. From the conclusions we have reached, it necessarily follows that it was a completed sale to appellant on the 15th inst., and that, as the bill of lading to appellee was not issued until the 16th inst., the jury was not warranted in finding for appellee.

Because there was no evidence to support the verdict, the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded.

Appeal from Mississippi Chancery Court, Chickasawba District; Edw. D. Robertson, Chancellor.

Action by J. H. Carr and others against George and S. S. Fair. A report by a master found that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover a stated amount, which amount the trial court reduced, and plaintiffs appeal. Decree reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to enter a decree for the amount found due by the master.

J. T. Coston, for appellants. W. J. Driver and Block & Kirsch, for appellees.

FRAUENTHAL, J. The appellants instituted this suit against the appellees in the circuit court of Mississippi county for the recovery of the value of the timber which they alleged the appellees had wrongfully cut and removed from a large body of land in that county owned by the appellants. The appellees alleged in their answer that they had entered into a contract with the mother of appellants for the purchase of the timber, believing that she had a right to sell same, and had made payments thereon to her. They denied that they had cut and removed the amount of timber claimed by appellants; and, in order to obtain an accounting of the amount of said timber and the right to have the payments so made by them credited on the value thereof, they asked that the cause be transferred to the chancery court. This was done. Thereupon the parties entered into the following agreed stipulation of facts: "It is agreed and stipulated in this case that the defendants cut and removed from the lands of the plaintiffs ash, oak, cypress, elm, gum, sycamore, and cottonwood timber as follows: Ash, 2,934 feet; elm, 40,184 feet; cypress, 105,528 feet; sycamore, 222,007 feet; gum, 1,070,725 feet; oak, 477,343 feet; cottonwood, 3,499,412 feet. It is further agreed and stipulated that said timber was cut by the defendants and removed from said land each in equal quantities each year for the years 1898, 1899, 1900, 1901, 1902, and 1903. Said land was inherited by the plaintiffs from their father, J. J. Carr, who died intestate in the year 1897, and in the year 1898 Susie Carr, the mother of the plaintiffs, entered into a contract with the defendants, in which she attempted to authorize the defendants to cut and remove said timber from said land without any order of the probate court therefor; that afterwards the defendants paid the administrator of her estate and the estate of J. J. Carr the contract price agreed on by her for said timber as follows: Elm and sycamore 25 cents per 1,000 feet; cypress, gum, and cottonwood 50 cents per 1,000 feet; ash and oak $1 per 1,000 feet. And it is expressly agreed that said sums may be deducted from the actual value of said timber." Thereafter the chancery court, in order to determine the value of the timber and amount of the payments made thereon, appointed a special master to whom the matter was referred for the purpose of taking proof and stating the account between the parties. The master took the testimony of nine witnesses by depositions which were filed with his report. In his report he gave an abstract of the testimony of these witnesses; the interest of each in the litigation; the qualification of each of them to testify as experts on the subject of the market value of the timber. He gave in detail the market values placed by each witness on the various kinds of timber for each of the years during which the same was cut, and the values thereof as determined by him from this testimony. He made out a detailed statement showing the value of each kind of timber cut during each of the above years and the amount of each payment made thereon, together with interest calculated on the same to the date of his report. He found that, after allowing all payments so made, there was due to appellants the sum of $9,088.38. The appellees filed exceptions to the report on the ground that the master erred in charging "the appellees with the various values of the timber as found by him for the various years." The court thereupon heard and passed upon the report of the master upon the depositions that had been taken and filed with his report and the report itself. The court thereupon made the following findings and order upon said report and entered its decree in accordance therewith: "The court further finds that the finding of the master as to the value of the timber cut is without evidence to support it, and the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth exceptions to the master's report are therefore sustained, and the master's findings as to value set aside. The court finds, however, upon consideration of said report, that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover from the defendants principal and interest at this date $6,210.40," etc.

From the decree thus setting aside the findings of the master and entering a judgment in favor of appellants for only the above amount, and not for the amount found by the master, the appellants present this appeal. The questions presented by this appeal involve the weight that should be given to the findings of fact by a master in chancery, and to the findings of the chancellor relative thereto. In order to assist it in the proceedings pending before it—as for example to take testimony, to make findings of facts, or to state accounts, etc.—the court has the power within its sound discretion to appoint a master. When such master is appointed at the request and with the consent of the parties, and with their consent that he shall determine certain matters that shall be referred to him, he is known as a consent referee or master; and his findings have the weight of the verdict of a jury. A master may and is usually appointed by order of the court of its own motion. In either event, the master derives his authority from the order thus appointing him. When he is appointed by order of the court of its own motion, the report which he presents upon the evidence taken is to a great extent advisory, and the court may accept such report and approve it or disregard it either in whole or in part according to its own judgment as to the weight of the evidence. Its discretion in passing on such report should be exercised under and controlled by the rules of law, and the evidence in the case. The court cannot arbitrarily set aside the findings of such report. Kirby's Dig. § 6337, provides: "The report shall stand good, except such parts as are excepted to, unless it shall appear on the face of the report or from the evidence in the cause that it is erroneous." It is generally held that the report of a master is presumptively correct; and there is a strong presumption of the correctness of the findings of fact of the master, and, where there is conflicting evidence upon questions of fact, the findings will rarely be disturbed. In speaking of the weight that should be accorded to the report of a master, the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Tilghman v. Proctor, 125 U. S. 136, 8 Sup. Ct. 894, 31 L. Ed. 664, says: "In dealing with these exceptions the conclusions of the master depending upon the weighing of conflicting testimony have every reasonable presumption in their favor, and are not to be set aside or modified unless there clearly appears to have been error or mistake on his part." The findings of the master appointed by the court of its own motion should not be lightly disregarded by the court. They should be highly persuasive; and, when the findings are based upon conflicting evidence, they should be accorded the great weight to which they are entitled. And, if the court does not give to the findings of such master that weight which the evidence shows they are entitled to, its action will be reversed upon appeal. 17 Ency. Plead. & Prac. 1056; 16 Cyc. 453.

In this case the master was appointed by the order of the court, and his findings were subject to the review of the court. The court had the power, and it was its duty, to pass its own judgment upon the findings in the light of the evidence adduced. These findings related to disputed questions of fact, and were based upon conflicting evidence. The findings of the master should not have been disturbed by the chancellor unless they were clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. At the hearing of the exceptions to the report of the master there was no additional evidence taken, but the court passed upon the matter upon the evidence presented by the depositions which were taken before the master and which are all before this court. It has been uniformly held by this court that "the finding of the chancellor concerning a disputed question of fact, where the evidence is conflicting, is not conclusive upon appeal"; but that, if it is against the decided preponderance of the evidence, it will be set aside. Chapman v. Liggett, 41 Ark. 292; Gist v. Barrow, 42 Ark. 521; Nolen v. Harden, 43 Ark. 307, 51 Am. Rep. 563; Kelly v. Carter, 55 Ark. 112, 17 S. W. 706; Goerke v. Rodgers, 75 Ark. 72, 86 S. W. 837; George v. Norwood, 77 Ark. 216, 91 S. W. 557, 113 Am. St. Rep. 143.

In the case at bar the question of fact to be determined was the value of the timber during the several years above named. This was a disputed matter, and there was conflicting evidence taken relative thereto. Upon this question the depositions of nine witnesses were taken. Five of these witnesses were experts upon the subject of the market value of these various kinds of timber during the above years in the locality of this land. They had been engaged in the said mill and timber business for a great number of years, and they had actually bought and sold this character of timber during those years, and were familiar with the market value of such timber in that locality. They were men of intelligence and good business ability, and wholly disinterested in this case. They went into details in their evidence, and showed a great familiarity with actual prices paid for this character of timber involved in this case during the above years as well as its market value. They showed such an intelligence, experience, and actual knowledge of these values that their testimony should carry great weight. The average of the values of the timber for the various years under the evidence of these five witnesses is greater than that found by the master; and in some instances is greater to a considerable extent. Of the other four witnesses whose depositions were taken two were the appellees, and one was according to his own testimony a close friend of the appellees. But none of these four witnesses give any clear statement of the market value of the timber during these years. Their testimony is largely composed of statements of what they paid for large bodies of land on which timber was standing, or at what prices such lands were purchased by others. They give no values at all during several of the years, but only state generally that the prices of the timber advanced or declined during such years. Their testimony is not satisfactory; and, after careful examination of their evidence, we are of the opinion that it is not clear or convincing. We have carefully examined the testimony of all the witnesses in this case, and we are of the opinion that the findings of the master are sustained by that testimony, and that the findings of the chancellor are against the decided preponderance of the testimony in the case.

Counsel for appellees say in their brief that the approximate value of timber throughout the chancery district in which the chancellor who decided this case presides is a matter of common knowledge, and that the chancellor should be presumed to have that information. But this is a cause pending in a court, and the controverted questions of fact must be established by the testimony of witnesses duly sworn, and judicial knowledge cannot be taken of those facts. As is said in the case of Pierce v. Scott, 37 Ark. 308: "Values of work and of material should be proved as other facts, and not collected by the master from his own experience, * * * or from consultation with others. This would be dangerous in the first instance, and preclude a party injured from the proper mode of correction. * * * He must act upon some proof, the best under the circumstances that can be adduced." And this applies equally to the chancellor. His findings can only be based upon, and must be based upon, the evidence actually adduced in the case. In our opinion the findings of the chancellor are against the weight of the evidence in this case; and its preponderance sustains the findings of the master.

The decree of the chancery court herein is reversed, and this cause is remanded, with directions to enter a decree in favor of the appellants for the amount found due by the master, and in accordance with this opinion.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pulaski County, Second Division; J. W. Blackwood, Special Judge.

Action by J. M. McNair against J. O. Naylor. From a judgment for plaintiff upon directed verdict, defendant appeals. Reversed, and action dismissed.

Carmichael, Brooks & Powers, for appellant. Wiley & Clayton, for appellee.

BATTLE, J. On the 15th day of September, 1903, J. C. Naylor, being the owner of a certain town lot in the city of Little Rock, in this state, sold the same to H. S. Kissinger for $1,250, of which Kissinger paid $50, and for the remainder thereof executed 96 notes, each for the sum of $12.50 and 8 per cent, per annum interest from date until paid, each dated September 15, 1903, one payable on the 19th day of September, 1903, and one payable on the 15th day of each month thereafter until paid in full. When these notes shall be paid, Naylor covenanted with Kissinger to convey to him the lot by a good and sufficient deed, with usual covenants of warranty; the said agreement being evidenced by his bond for title.

On the 5th day of September, 1904, Kissinger bargained and sold the lot to Mrs. K. M. Crisman for $1,400, of which Mrs. Crisman paid $100.33, and executed six notes, each for the sum of $30 and 8 per cent, per annum interest from date, and assumed the payment of the notes executed by Kissinger to Naylor, which remained unpaid, and when all the said notes are paid Kissinger covenanted with Mrs. Crisman to convey to her the lot, by a good and sufficient deed, containing the usual covenants of warranty. This agreement was evidenced by a bond for title. Mrs. Crisman sold her interest in the lot to J. M. McNair, and he agreed to pay, and did pay, the notes executed by Kissinger to Naylor, remaining unpaid, and on the 30th day of January, 1907, Naylor and wife conveyed the lot by deed to McNair and covenanted therein with McNair to warrant and defend the title to the lot against all claims whatever and that it is free from all liens and incumbrances.

The six notes executed by Crisman to Kissinger for the lot were paid, except the last one, which was transferred for value, before maturity, on or about the 27th day of September, 1904, to Maggie E. Green. It is as follows:

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

"$30.00. Little Rock, Ark. Sept. 5, 1904.

"Eighteen months after date I promise to pay to the order of H. S. Kissinger, thirty dollars, at Little Rock, Ark., for value received, with interest from date until maturity at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, and thereafter until paid, at 10 per cent. per annum, payable annually. This note is one of six (6) given under my agreement of even date to purchase the following property in C. & P. Johnson's addition to the city of Little Rock, Ark.: Lot eight (8), block four (4).

"[Signed] Mrs. K. M. Crisman."

Indorsements on back as follows:

"Endorsed over to Maggie E. Green, for value received, September 27, 1904.

"[Signed] H. S. Kissinger."

"The time for payment of this note is extended to May 20, 1906. Filed October 17, 1907.

"[Signed] F. A. Garrett, Clerk."

On or about the 4th day of November, 1907, Maggie E. Green commenced a suit against Mrs. K. M. Crisman and J. M. McNair, in the Pulaski chancery court, to foreclose an alleged vendor's lien, alleging in her complaint, substantially, all the foregoing facts, and, by virtue thereof, claiming a lien on the lot for the payment of the note, and asked that the lot be sold to pay the lien. McNair failed to answer, and a decree pro confesso was rendered, and a commissioner was appointed and directed to sell the lot.

McNair, having paid and satisfied the decree recovered by Mrs. Green, brought an action in the Pulaski circuit court against Naylor on his covenant against liens and incumbrances, contained in his deed for the lot to McNair, to recover $49.20, the amount paid by him to satisfy the decree, and for $5 paid counsel for services in and about the suit instituted by Green, making in all $54.20.

Naylor demurred to the complaint in the last action, because the court had no jurisdiction, which demurrer the court overruled, and Naylor thereupon answered, and alleged that the lot was free from all liens and incumbrances at the time he conveyed it to McNair.

Plaintiff, McNair, alleged in his complaint that he notified the defendant, Naylor, in writing, of the pendency of the suit instituted in the Pulaski chancery court by Green against Crisman and McNair, and called upon him to defend the same, and notified him that he would rely upon his covenant and warranty, and that he wholly failed to defend against the suit. The defendant failed to deny these allegations in his answer.

All the foregoing facts were proved in the trial in this action. McNair testified, in his own behalf, in part, as follows: "That he had a written contract from Mrs. Crisman, but that he had misplaced it. That he told the defendant about it, and the defendant told him that he held the notes, and would make a deed when they were all paid.

* * * That he got a notice from Mr. Wiley that they were going to sue on the note, or had already sued on it. That he then went to see the defendant and told the defendant that it might be best to settle it up, as it might cause some trouble, and defendant said: 'No, that will not hurt us. There is no lien on the place. Nobody but me holds any papers on that place, and whenever you pay up the rest of the notes I will make you a warranty deed to the place, and it will then devolve on me to defend the place.'"

After the close of the evidence, the court instructed the jury to return a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $49.20, which they did. The defendant moved for a new trial because the verdict is contrary to the evidence. The court overruled the motion for a new trial, and defendant excepted. Judgment was rendered according to the verdict, and the defendant appealed.

The circuit court had jurisdiction to hear and determine this cause, notwithstanding the amount involved is less than $100. The issues in the case involve the determination of the question whether or not the amount paid by McNair was a lien on the lot when Naylor conveyed it to McNair, and for that reason the circuit court had jurisdiction. Sanders v. Brown, 65 Ark. 498, 47 S. W. 461.

The motion for a new trial was sufficient to raise the question as to whether the verdict was sustained by sufficient evidence. White v. Beal & Fletcher Grocer Co., 65 Ark. 278, 45 S. W. 1060.

When Naylor executed a deed to McNair, he thereby conveyed all his right, title, claim, and interest in and to the lot that he had when he bargained and sold it to Kissinger. His covenants bound him only to warrant and defend such interest and estate as he undertook to convey, and no other, against all liens and incumbrances. He did not covenant against liens thereon created by subsequent purchasers. His title was paramount to all the liens created by such purchasers. He is not affected by any notice to defend against such liens, because he did not covenant against them. The record in Green v. Crisman and McNair, instituted in the Pulaski chancery court (the complaint on file), showed that the plaintiff in that suit was seeking to enforce a lien for a note given in part for the purchase money of a sale of the lot made by the vendee, Kissinger, of Naylor, to Crisman, after Naylor sold to him. The record itself gave notice to Naylor that he had not covenanted against such lien, and that he was not bound to defend against it. Rawle on Covenants for Title (5th Ed.) §§ 121, 122. The decree in the suit instituted by Green was pro confesso and rests entirely upon the complaint, which shows the facts before stated.

Appellee attaches importance to the testimony of McNair, in which he stated that Naylor said to him that he held all "the notes and would make a deed when they were all paid," and that the suit instituted by Green "will not hurt us. There is no lien on the place. Nobody but me holds any papers on that place, and whenever you pay the rest of the notes I will make you a warranty deed to the place, and it will then devolve on me to defend the place." He evidently referred to the notes executed to him by Klesinger, and designates them as the notes held by him, and meant to say the note sued on by Mrs. Green could not affect any title he might convey as "he holds all the papers on the place." That was substantially true. He did hold all that could affect the title he subsequently conveyed to McNair.

The verdict of the jury was against the undisputed facts in the case and unsupported by the evidence.

Judgment reversed, and action dismissed.

1. SALES (§§ 161, 181*)—CONTRACT—EXECUTED CONTRACT.

Delivery of goods to a responsible carrier for transportation consigned to the buyer would be a delivery of the goods to the buyer, but, where it does not appear that goods shipped were not consigned to shipper's order, nor that the buyer received the goods from the carrier, an executed contract is not shown.

2. SALES (§ 347*)—EXECUTORY CONTRACT—DISCHARGE.

If a contract for sale of goods and a credit for part of the price for goods exchanged, was executory, the seller's refusal to give the credit upon the ground that the exchanged goods were worthless would amount to a refusal to abide by the contract, and relieve the buyer from obligation thereunder.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mississippi County, Osceola District; Frank Smith, Judge.

Action by the American Jobbing Association against Mrs. E. V. Wesson. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. T. Coston, for appellant.

HART, J. This suit was instituted by the American Jobbing Association against Mrs. E. V. Wesson, doing business under the name of the Evadale Grocery Company, to recover the sum of $115.92, alleged to be due on a contract for the sale of jewelry. The court sitting as a jury made the following finding of fact: "In this case the court finds the fact to be that the plaintiff failed to comply with the terms and conditions of contract and sale upon which it sued, and that the defendant, by reason of such breach upon the part of plaintiff, was released from liability thereunder." Accordingly judgment was rendered by the court dismissing the action. The plaintiff has appealed to this court.

The abstract of plaintiff shows the facts to be as follows: Plaintiff entered into a written contract to sell defendant certain jewelry. It was claimed by defendant that the agent of the plaintiff who made the sale agreed that plaintiff would take certain old jewelry of defendant's and credit her account with the sum of $99.22. After exchanging a few letters, plaintiff on February 2, 1906, wrote defendant, agreeing to accept the old jewelry according to her contention. Upon receipt of this letter, defendant wrote the plaintiff February 16, 1906, as follows: "Since you agreed to abide by the arrangement made here by your Mr. Hargis, we will take the case and jewelry out of the office and open up the first of March." February 19, 1906, defendant wrote plaintiff as follows: "We ship today the jewelry taken up by your Mr. Hargis. Give us credit for $99.22. We will now take the goods out of the office." February 22, 1906, plaintiff wrote defendant as follows: "We are in receipt of your esteemed favor of the 19th, and beg to state that we will accept the goods you have returned to us. We have already given your account credit for $99.22, which leaves a balance of $116.37." On the 12th day of March, 1906, plaintiff wrote defendant that the old jewelry had been received, examined, and found worthless, that the same had been returned to defendant, and said: "We supposed that you were acting in good faith with us when you made your claim as to an alleged agreement with Mr. Hargis, and when you made your statement as to the amount of goods to be sent to us for credit on account under this alleged agreement, but you know yourself that the goods you shipped to us did not at the original invoice price begin to figure up to the amount of credit that you insisted upon." The defendant then repudiated the whole contract.

The theory upon which plaintiff seeks to recover is that the contract was executed before the letter of March 12, 1906, was written; but this contention is not borne out by plaintiff's abstract of the record. It is not shown that the jewelry was ever delivered to defendant. In her letter of February 19th defendant states that she would take the goods out of the office, but it does not appear that she did so. It is true that a delivery to a responsible carrier for transportation consigned to the defendant would have been a delivery to her. Gottlieb v. Rinaldo, 78 Ark. 123, 93 S. W. 750, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 273. But from aught that appears from the abstract of the record the goods may have been consigned to shipper's order. In which event there was no delivery, and the contract would be executory. It is well settled that an executory contract may be discharged by one party renouncing his liabilities under it. Plaintiff's letter of March 12th amounted to a refusal to abide by its contract as made, and so relieved the defendant from the obligation on her part. Cochran v. Chetopa Mill & Elevator Co., 88 Ark. 343, 114 S. W. 711.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

STATE v. CLARK.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 23, 1909.)

LARCENY (§ 32*)—SUFFICIENCY OF INFORMATION—OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY.

An information charging accused "certain property, the goods and chattels of the C. Ry. Co., then and there being, feloniously did steal," etc., is insufficient to charge larceny, as failing to allege that the stated owner was a corporation or a partnership, and, if a partnership, the members thereof; the question of the ownership of the property being an essential element of the offense, and the defect not being curable by proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 84, 86; Dec. Dig. § 32.* Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 277, 281, 282.]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Livingston County; Francis H. Trimble, Judge.

William Clark was convicted of larceny, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Scott J. Miller and Fred S. Hudson, for appellant. E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and John M. Dawson, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BURGESS, J. Upon a criminal charge hereinafter set out by a count of the information to be quoted, the defendant was found guilty, and his punishment fixed at two years in the penitentiary. Going to the statement and brief for the state, it appears that the prosecuting attorney of Livingston county filed an information against the defendant, charging in the first count as follows: "Comes now John H. Taylor, prosecuting attorney within and for Livingston county, Missouri, and informs the court, on his oath of office, on his own knowledge, information, and belief, that Wallace Roland and Wm. Clark, on or about the 27th day of November, 1906, at Livingston county, Missouri, twenty-four pairs of shoes, of the value of fifty-six dollars and forty cents, of the goods and chattels of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Company, then and there being, feloniously did steal, take, and carry away, against the peace and dignity of the state." The second count was not submitted by the trial court to the jury, and further mention thereof is not necessary. To this information a proper motion to quash was filed, raising the question hereinafter to be discussed. This motion was overruled, and the defendant forced to trial, with the result aforesaid. Motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment were likewise filed and overruled. From the judgment of conviction the defendant has appealed.

The chief point is the sufficiency of the first count of the information, upon which the conviction was had. Counsel for the defendant couch their chief objection in this language: "The information in this case is faulty. In fact, there is no information at all. The information fails to allege that the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Company is either a natural or artificial person, and it has been held by the Supreme Court, in a direct case, that this of itself is an insufficient information, in failing to allege the ownership of the property." It will not be necessary to go further than this proposition. There is no allegation that the alleged party owning the property said to have been stolen is an individual, a copartnership, or a corporation. This court cannot, at least, take cognizance of the fact that the alleged owner is a corporation or a copartnership, however we might view the name in the information as indicative of an individual. In this case the name given of the alleged owner of the alleged stolen property is such that we know it is not that of a single natural individual, and it must, therefore, be the name of either a corporation or a copartnership. The information does not charge whether it is one or the other, and, if a copartnership, the respective members thereof. Not only should the information properly charge the facts in this regard, when designating the ownership of property, but the proof must accord with this required allegation. If the allegation is absent from the information, the mere matter of proof would not cure this fatal defect in the pleading.

The precise question in this case was discussed in the case of State v. Jones, 168 Mo., loc. cit. 402, 68 S. W. 567, where we then said: "This brings us to the last objection to the information, which is that it fails to aver the ownership of the burglarized property and stolen goods, in that it merely charges the store to have been the property of the Drysdale-Ulen Hardware Company, and the stolen goods to be the personal property of said hardware company, and fails to state that it was a firm composed of certain natural persons, or that it was a corporation. It has always been necessary to allege and prove the ownership of the house charged to have been burglarized and the ownership of chattels alleged to have been stolen. 2 East, P. C. 650. Where ownership is laid in a corporation, the fact of the incorporation should be alleged; and this is not affected by the fact that proof of the existence of the corporation de facto will sustain the charge. As nothing is to be left to intentment, the defendant is entitled to know whether the state intends to show ownership in a firm composed of individuals or in a corporation. In this case he raised the objection in his motion in arrest; but it has often been ruled that he may take advantage of the defect in the indictment in this court for the first time. State v. Patterson, 159 Mo. 98, 59 S. W. 1104; Wharton's Crim. Law, §§ 1828, 1833; 2 Russell on Crimes, p. 100; Wallace v. People, 63 Ill. 451; 1 Bishop's Crim. Prac. (3d Ed.) § 682; *State v. People, 5 Parker, Cr. R. (N. Y.) 330; 2 Archbald's Crim. Pl. 359; White v. State, 24 Tex. App. 231, 5 S. W. 857, 5 Am. St. Rep. 879; Thurmond v. State, 30 Tex. App. 539, 17 S. W. 1098; McCowan v. State, 58 Ark. 17, 22 S. W. 955. There are cases to the contrary in other states; but in the absence of a statute we are relegated to the common law, and we hold the information bad in substance in failing to allege the names of the copartners, if the Drysdale-Ulen Hardware Company was a firm, and, if a corporation, in not alleging it was a corporation."

This rule has been consistently followed by this court. In the very late case of State v. Kelley, 206 Mo., loc. cit. 693, 694, 105 S. W. 608, we said: "In State v. Jones, 168 Mo., loc. cit. 402, 68 S. W. 566, it was ruled by this court that it was necessary to allege and prove the ownership of the house charged to have been burglarized and the ownership of chattels alleged to have been stolen (2 East, P. C. 650), and that, where ownership is laid in a corporation, the fact of the incorporation should be alleged; and this is not affected by the fact that proof of the existence of the corporation de facto will sustain the charge. As nothing is to be left to intentment, the defendant is entitled to know whether the state intends to show ownership in a firm composed of individuals or in a corporation. In State v. Horned, 178 Mo. 59, 76 S. W. 953, the doctrine announced in the Jones Case was approved. In that case there was an attempt to charge burglary of the Mississippi & Bonne' Terre Railway; but the Attorney General admitted that the information was bad, because the information failed to show whether the said railroad company was a corporation or a copartnership, and the judgment was reversed on that ground. The doctrine of the foregoing two cases was reaffirmed in State v. James, 194 Mo. 268, 92 S. W. 679. Adhering to those two cases, it must be held that the information in this case is fatally defective, for the reason that it is nowhere alleged that the said railroad company was a corporation or a copartnership; and the same is true as to the larceny count. It does not appear whether Wells-Fargo is a corporation or a firm of individuals."

Whatever may be the rulings elsewhere, it follows that under the rulings of this court the first count of the information, upon which the defendant was convicted, is fatally defective, in not charging whether the alleged owner of the property was a corporation or a copartnership, and, if a copartnership, in not giving the individual members thereof. Defendants in criminal cases are entitled to be informed by the pleadings of the charges against them, and the question of the ownership of property in burglary or larceny is an essential element in the charge.

Further questions raised by the briefs need not be noted. This case will be reversed and remanded, to be hereafter dealt with in accordance with the views hereinabove expressed. All concur.

1. PARDON (§ 7*)—JUDGMENT OF CONVICTION—GRANTING PAROLE.

A judgment of conviction sentencing defendant to pay the costs and to be imprisoned in jail a certain time, and then providing that the court grants defendant a stay of execution on condition that she remove from the place she now occupies, and does not return thereto, and does not again violate the law, does not grant a parole; it reciting none of the essential requirements under the law regulating the granting thereof.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 993*)—REVISING JUDGMENT.

Even though a judgment of conviction, imposing as a penalty payment of costs and imprisonment for a certain time, and staying execution on condition of defendant doing certain things and not doing others, be erroneous, yet it having been partly complied with by the costs being paid, and some of the conditions being complied with, the court has no power, at least at a subsequent term, to revise it, and substitute therefor an entirely new judgment.

3. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 109*)—POWER TO ENTER NEW SENTENCE IN SUCH PROCEEDINGS.

Rev. St. 1899, §§ 2720, 3615 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 1596, 2033), providing that one shall not be discharged on habeas corpus because of the judgment under which he is confined being erroneous "as to time or place of imprisonment," but that the court, before whom the relief is sought, shall sentence him to the proper place of confinement, and for the correct length of time, give the court no power, in habeas corpus proceedings, to enter, in place of the original judgment imposing imprisonment, a new judgment imposing a fine; and, without statutory authority at least, it has no such power.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. §§ 97, 98; Dec. Dig. § 109.*]

Original habeas corpus proceedings by Florence Cornwall. Relator discharged.

This is an original proceeding pending in this court. On the 25th day of August, 1909, relator presented her petition to the Honorable Henry Lamm, one of the judges of the Supreme Court of this state, in chambers at Sedalia, Pettis county, Mo., praying for the issuance of a writ of habeas corpus. The writ was issued and the prisoner brought before the judge forthwith in accordance with the commands of the writ. Subsequently it was ordered that the return to this writ be set over until the October term, 1909, of the Supreme Court of Missouri; it being agreed that the petitioner should be released on bond. The bond was presented, approved, and the prisoner released. Upon the meeting of court in banc at the October term, 1909, this proceeding was assigned to Division No. 2. The return was duly made by the sheriff and jailer of Pettis county, Mo. Upon the return as made, the relator moved the court to discharge her from imprisonment for the reason that no legal cause is shown for her imprisonment and restraint by the return made by the respondents to the writ of habeas corpus issued herein. We deem it unnecessary to burden the statement and opinion with a reproduction of the petition or the return of the sheriff and jailer of Pettis county to the writ issued upon the petition. There is no dispute about the facts, and a statement of them will fully disclose the controverted questions involved in the record before us.

At the November term, 1908, of the criminal court of Pettis county, Mo., the petitioner was indicted by the grand jury for keeping a bawdyhouse. She employed counsel, Messrs. C. C. Kelly and E. C. White. It was first agreed between her counsel and the prosecuting attorney that petitioner should plead guilty to the charge and a fine should be imposed upon her for $250, then a stay of execution should be granted her on condition that she should leave her home and should not return thereto, and that she should not again violate the law. The question was then raised that this fine would be a lien on her real property, and she refused to plead guilty under the arrangement. It was then agreed between her counsel and the prosecuting attorney that she should enter a plea of guilty to the indictment and a jail sentence should be imposed upon her of 90 days and a stay of execution granted on condition that she should leave her home, and not again violate the law, which was concurred in by the court. With this understanding, she entered a plea of guilty on the 1st day of December, 1908, in the criminal court of Pettis county, Mo.; the same being the November term, 1908, of said court. The judge of said court, in pursuance of said understanding had between her counsel and the prosecuting attorney, imposed a jail sentence of 90 days upon her, but granted her a stay of execution on condition that she remove from the place she then occupied and did not return thereto, and that she did not again violate the law. The petitioner then paid all the costs of the suit, abandoned her then home, and did not return thereto until after the writ herein was granted. At the January and April terms of the criminal court of Pettis county, 1909, no steps were taken by the court in the cause. At the June term, 1909, of said court, to wit, on the 10th day of July, 1909, the court, on the suggestion of the prosecuting attorney, made an entry of record in which it was recited that the petitioner had violated the terms of her parole by keeping a disorderly house. The court thereupon, as the record recites, revoked her parole, and ordered an execution issued. On the 20th day of August, 1909, petitioner was arrested and committed to the Pettis county jail. On the same day she sued out a writ of habeas corpus before the Honorable Louis Hoffman, judge of the criminal court of Pettis county, returnable August 23, 1909. Upon the hearing on said writ, said court set aside the jail sentence imposed upon the petitioner upon the 1st day of December, 1908, and assessed against her a fine of $200 in lieu thereof, and ordered her in the custody of the jailer of said county until said fine was paid. She refused to pay said fine, and was thereupon committed to jail. On the same day she again presented her petition to the Honorable Louis Hoffman, judge of the circuit and criminal court of Pettis county, Mo., for her release from jail. Her petition was denied, whereupon she applied by a similar writ to the Honorable Henry Lamm, judge of this court, where her petition was granted and writ issued and made returnable on the 1st day of the October term, 1909, of this court.

Among the exhibits filed with the petition we find Exhibit A, which discloses the rendition of the original judgment against the petitioner by the circuit court of Pettis county. This exhibit is as follows: "Be it remembered that on the 1st day of December, 1908, the same being the 21st day of the regular term of the Pettis county circuit court, A. D. 1908, the following among other proceedings of the same day were had, made and entered of record, to wit: Keeping a Bawdyhouse. State of Missouri, Plaintiff, vs. Florence Cornwall, Defendant. No. 10,744. Now at this day comes the prosecuting attorney, on the part of the state, and also comes the defendant in person, attended by her counsel, and the said defendant withdraws her plea of not guilty heretofore entered herein, and enters a plea of guilty to the crime of keeping a bawdyhouse charged in the indictment herein; and the court fixes her punishment for said offense at imprisonment in the county jail for ninety (90) days. It is therefore sentenced, ordered, and adjudged by the court that said defendant be remanded to the custody of the sheriff of this county, and by him be imprisoned in the county jail for a period of ninety (90) days, and that the state have and recover of said defendant the costs of this prosecution, and that execution issue accordingly. And now the court grants the defendant a stay of execution upon condition that she remove from the place she now occupies, and does not return thereto, and that she does not again violate the law."

Exhibit B discloses the order revoking what the prosecuting attorney and the court construed to be a parole to the petitioner. This exhibit is as follows: "Be it remembered that on the 10th day of July, 1909, the same being the 15th day of the regular June term of the Pettis county circuit court, A. D. 1909, the following, among other proceedings of the same day were had, made and entered of record, to wit: State of Missouri, Plaintiff, v. Florence Cornwall, Defendant. No. 10,744. Keeping a Bawdy-house. Now at this day comes the prosecuting attorney, on the part of the state, and informs the court that the defendant, Florence Cornwall, is violating the terms of her parole by keeping a disorderly house whereupon the court revokes her parole, and orders execution issued."

Exhibit C discloses the action of the circuit court of Pettis county at the special August term, 1909, in the matter of the application of Florence Cornwall for a writ of habeas corpus. This exhibit is as follows: "Be it remembered that on the 23d day of August, 1909, the same being the 1st day of the special August term of the Pettis county circuit court, A. D. 1909, the following, among other proceedings of the same day were had, made and entered of record, to wit: In the Matter of Application of Florence Cornwall for Writ of Habeas Corpus. 9,833. Now this day this cause coming on to be heard and the court having seen the pleadings and heard the evidence doth find that the defendant on December 1st, 1908, entered a plea of guilty to this court upon a proper indictment preferred by the grand jurors of Pettis county, against this defendant for keeping a bawdyhouse, and by agreement of the prosecuting attorney of Pettis county, and attorneys for the defendant in lieu of a fine, this court then and there sentenced defendant to imprisonment in the county jail for ninety days. It is ordered that said judgment so far as it relates to the punishment at jail imprisonment, be set aside, and that the defendant pay a fine on her said plea of guilty, of two hundred dollars. It is therefore ordered and adjudged by the court that the state of Missouri, to the use of the school fund of Pettis county, have and recover of the defendant, the sum of two hundred dollars, and that she be remanded to the care and custody of the jailer of Pettis county until said fine of two hundred dollars be paid, or until she is otherwise discharged according to law, also that the defendant pay the costs of this proceeding."

The return of the sheriff and jailer shows that their custody and detention of the petitioner is predicated upon the last recited judgment of the court, marked "Exhibit C." This sufficiently indicates the nature and character of this proceeding to enable us to determine the legal propositions disclosed by the record.

Sangree & Bohling, for petitioner. Harvey D. Dow, Pros. Atty., for respondent.

FOX, J. (after stating the facts as above). The record, as heretofore indicated, which is now before us presents but one general legal proposition; that is, as to whether or not the sheriff and jailer have the legal custody of the petitioner by reason of the judgments of the circuit court of Pettis county as heretofore indicated and disclosed by the record before us. After a most careful consideration of the proposition with which we are confronted respecting the restraint of the petitioner, we are clearly of the opinion that upon the disclosures of the record the petitioner is being held illegally without any authority of law, and is entitled to be relieved from such restraint and to a full discharge from the custody of the sheriff and jailer. While it is true that the original judgment as rendered in this cause, fixing a jail sentence to be served by the petitioner, was erroneous and in fact void, and that the stay of execution as recited in such judgment was equally without force or vitality, yet it must not be overlooked that the petitioner at least partly complied with the conditions upon which the court predicated its stay of the execution of that judgment. It will be noted that the judgment recites that the defendant should be imprisoned in the county jail for a period of 90 days, and that the state have and recover of the defendant the costs of this prosecution, and that execution issue accordingly. Then follows the granting of the stay of execution upon condition that the petitioner remove from the place she now occupies, and not to return thereto, and will not again violate the law.

The record in this cause discloses that the petitioner partly complied with the requirements of that judgment. She paid the costs of the criminal prosecution, abandoned her home as was required under the conditions of the stay of execution, and did not return until after the writ herein was granted. The prosecuting attorney and the order of the circuit court made at the June term, 1909, of the Pettis county circuit court seems to have recognized that a parole had been granted the petitioner in the original judgment of the November term, 1908. Manifestly this is a misconception of the provisions of what is commonly known as the parole law of this state. There was no parole granted this petitioner in that judgment. There is an entire absence of any reference to any of the requirements embraced in the provisions of the parole law. There was no requirement on the part of the petitioner to appear before the court at any subsequent term with witnesses to make proof of her conduct, and, if the recitations in the judgment at the November term, 1908, are to be construed as a parole, then we confess it would be a parole without the recitation of a single essential requirement under the law regulating the granting of paroles. We are clearly of the opinion that there was no parole in this case, and that the court in its judgment at the November term, 1908, simply sought to grant an ordinary stay of execution, and, while it had no power to grant the stay, yet, by reason of such want of power, it would not authorize the treatment of the recitals concerning such stay of execution as an ordinary parole under the provisions of the parole law of this state. It follows from this that the order of the court made at the June term, 1909, revoking the parole of the petitioner upon information communicated to the court by the prosecuting attorney, was without any authority of law. As heretofore stated, there was no parole to revoke. However, it is disclosed by the record that upon this pretended revocation there was an execution issued, and the petitioner was taken into custody by the sheriff. Manifestly the matter for the consideration before the court at its special term in August, 1909, upon the habeas corpus proceeding, was the legality or illegality of the custody of the sheriff by reason of the arrest made by the sheriff upon the revocation of what the court denominated a parole. In that proceeding in our opinion it is clear that the petitioner was entitled to her discharge from the custody of the sheriff. However, the circuit court of Pettis county at its special term in August, 1909, in the consideration of the application of the petitioner for a writ of habeas corpus, sought to annul and did in fact embrace in an order, as set out in Exhibit C, setting aside the judgment of the circuit court rendered at its November term, 1908, sentencing the prisoner to imprisonment in the county jail for 90 days, and substituted in lieu thereof the imposition of a fine for $200, followed by the usual recitation in the judgment for its recovery.

It will be noted that the judgment of the circuit court of Pettis county at its special August term, 1909, rendered while considering an application for a writ of habeas corpus, sought to annul and set aside a judgment in a proceeding which had been rendered eight or nine months previous to the action of the court at its August term, 1909. It is upon the judgment as rendered at the special term in August while the court had under consideration the application of the petitioner for a writ of habeas corpus that the sheriff and jailer in their return predicate their right to retain the custody of the petitioner. We are unwilling to give our assent to or concur to the claim of this right by the respondent, the sheriff and jailer. The judgment of the special August term, 1909, upon which the sheriff and jailer predicate the legality of the custody of the petitioner, cannot be maintained for two reasons: First. Even if it be conceded that the judgment rendered at the November term, 1908, was erroneous, yet, such judgment and the conditions imposed by it having been partly complied with, the circuit court had no power at a subsequent term to revise it and substitute therefor an entirely new judgment. Second. The court had no power upon the hearing of an application under the habeas corpus act to enter an entirely new judgment as was done in this case. Upon the first proposition, the general rule is well stated in 12 Cyc. p. 784. It is there stated that, "after the term is passed at which the original sentence was imposed, the court has as a general rule no power to modify, amend, or revise it, particularly if the new judgment is in excess of the original sentence. Changes in the sentence, however, which do not alter the punishment but only change the time or place of its infliction, may be made at the subsequent term." It was expressly ruled in Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 163, 21 L. Ed. 872, that, where a court imposed both a fine and imprisonment, it was erroneous for the reason that the statute only conferred power to punish by fine or imprisonment, and a part of such judgment—that is, the payment of the fine—has been complied with, such court has no power even during the same term to modify the judgment by imposing imprisonment, instead of the former sentence.

In Re Johnson (C. C.) 46 Fed. 477, it seems that the district attorney suggested during the consideration of that case that, should the court come to the conclusion that the sentence was erroneous, the prisoner might be held for a new sentence in the district court. The court responded to such suggestion by saying: "But it was decided by the Supreme Court in Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 163, 21 L. Ed. 872, that an erroneous sentence, after it has been partly executed, cannot be revised by the court and a new sentence imposed, even at the same term of the court." In this case the circuit court of Pettis county in its judgment at the November term, 1908, embraced a recovery of the costs of the prosecution, and this much of the judgment, about which there is no dispute, was fully satisfied. But, in addition to this, the court sought to stay the execution of the other part of the judgment, that is, the imprisonment in the county jail—and imposed certain conditions which the record in this cause also discloses were partly complied with.

Upon the second proposition in our opinion the court was absolutely without any power to enter the new judgment imposing a fine at its special term in August, 1909. This judgment, as disclosed by the record, was rendered upon the consideration of a proceeding under the habeas corpus act instituted by the petitioner. Learned counsel for the sheriff and jailer predicate the legality and sufficiency of such judgment upon the provisions of section 2720, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1596). This section provides that "no person shall be discharged under the provisions of the habeas corpus act, nor shall any judgment be reversed or set aside by the Supreme Court, for the reason that the judgment by virtue of which such person is confined, or from which he has prosecuted an appeal or writ of error, was erroneous as to time or place of imprisonment, but in such case it shall be the duty of the court or officer hearing the case to sentence such person to the proper place of confinement, and for the correct length of time, from and after the date of the original sentence, and to cause the officer or other person having such prisoner in charge to convey him forthwith to such designated place of imprisonment." Section 3615, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2033), also provides that "no person shall be entitled to the benefit of the provisions of this chapter (that is the chapter applicable to the writ of habeas corpus), for the reason that the judgment, by virtue of which such person is confined, was erroneous as to time or place of imprisonment; but in such cases it shall be the duty of the court or officer before whom such relief is sought to sentence such person to the proper place of confinement and for the correct length of time from and after the date of the original sentence, and to cause the officer or other person having such prisoner in charge to convey him forthwith to such designated place of confinement." Manifestly these two sections have no application to the case at bar as disclosed by the record before us, and fail to render any aid or support to the maintenance of the contention that the judgment as disclosed in Exhibit C, rendered at the special August term, 1909, is a valid judgment. It is apparent that these sections have application alone to where a judgment of the circuit court is erroneous as to time or place of imprisonment. In other words, if the court should render a judgment sentencing a defendant to the penitentiary, when, in fact, upon the record he ought to be sent to the reform school, this statute would be applicable, because it is an error concerning the place of confinement; or, if the court should sentence a defendant to the penitentiary for a length of time in excess of that authorized by law, that would also be an error concerning the length of time of the imprisonment, and petitioners seeking relief by the writ of habeas corpus would very properly and justly be confronted with the provisions of the sections of the statute to which reference has been made, and the court before whom such proceeding was pending would simply in obedience to the provisions of those sections fix the proper time and place of imprisonment, and order the officer to execute its judgment. But that is not this case. The circuit court of Pettis county in its judgment at the August term, 1909, while considering a proceeding under the habeas corpus act, did not undertake to correct an error in a judgment which was erroneous simply as to time or place, but it entered an entirely new judgment which absolutely had no reference to imprisonment, nor to the correction of an erroneous judgment as to the time and place of such imprisonment. The judgment was entirely a new and different one, and sought to impose a punishment to which no reference had ever been made in the original judgment in this cause. In the administration of the criminal laws of this state, it is fundamental that one of the substantial rights of a defendant in answering to a criminal charge is to be present, not only during the progress of the trial, but at the time of the imposition of the punishment. This is a right which the petitioner in this cause had the right to demand in the proceeding in the circuit court where the criminal charge was being considered, and in our opinion the law does not contemplate that the courts of this country may upon the hearing of an application for a writ of habeas corpus for the first time assess punishment against the defendant. That was a matter within the province of the jurisdiction of the court which heard and disposed of the criminal charge. While the courts have ample power to correct errors respecting erroneous judgments as to time and place of imprisonment, as provided by the sections of the statute as heretofore indicated, yet we are unwilling to go to the extent of saying that for the first time in a proceeding under the habeas corpus act the court may then assess the punishment that was never contemplated by the original judgment or to which any reference was made by such judgment. Learned counsel for the sheriff and jailer, the respondents in this proceeding, assert that, where there is an erroneous judgment and sentence, the court will, upon the consideration of a proceeding under the habeas corpus act, enter a proper judgment and sentence. In support of that contention counsel directs our attention to numerous cases. We shall not undertake to review the cases to which reference is made, but deem it sufficient to say that we have carefully examined all the cases cited in the brief, and in our opinion they absolutely fail to support such contention. The cases of Ex parte Kenney, 105 Mo. 535, 16 S. W. 938, Ex parte Gray, 77 Mo. 180, Ex parte Cohen, 159 Mo. 682, 60 S. W. 1031, and State v. Nunley, 185 Mo. 102, 83 S. W. 1074, in no way conflict with the conclusions as herein indicated upon the proposition under consideration. All of those cases simply recognize the provisions of sections 2720 and 3615 as to the correction of erroneous judgments as to time and place of imprisonment, but none of them deal with the proposition which is now under consideration, and in no way support the contention that the court for the first time in the hearing of an application under the habeas corpus act may impose a punishment and enter an entirely new and different judgment which has no reference whatever to time or place of imprisonment. The record in this cause discloses that there was no contemplation by counsel representing the state or the defendant in the original proceeding where the criminal charge was being considered of entering a judgment imposing as a penalty a fine; in fact, it is emphasized by the disclosures of the record that counsel, both for the state and the defendant in that proceeding, were willing that the imposition of a fine should be avoided. Upon this state of the record we are unwilling to hold that a judgment is valid rendered in a habeas corpus proceeding without an opportunity of the petitioner to be heard upon the question of punishment in the proceeding where the court had jurisdiction, and was authorized to try and dispose of the criminal charge against the petitioner. The rendition of the judgment in this cause in a habeas corpus proceeding, which for the first time assessed the punishment against the petitioner, in our opinion would be depriving the petitioner of one of her substantial rights; that is, to be heard in the court that had jurisdiction of and authority to dispose of the original charge against her.

We have indicated our views upon the propositions disclosed by this record. In our opinion the relator is entitled to her discharge, and it is so ordered. All concur.

STATE v. WILSON.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2
Nov. 23, 1906.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1130*)—REVIEW OF ERRORS AS TO AN ACCUSED NOT REPRESENTED ON APPEAL.

Where accused files no brief, and is not represented on appeal, the Supreme Court can only look to the errors designated in the motion for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2970; Dec. Dig. § 1130.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 628*)—INDORSEMENT OF NAMES OF WITNESSES ON INFORMATION—WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS.

Accused cannot complain of the permission to indorse the names of material witnesses on the information after the case has been called for trial, where there is no suggestion of surprise or application for a continuance, with a view of investigating as to such witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1418, 1419; Dec. Dig. § 628.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 519*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY OF CONFESSIONS.

If there is no improper conduct of officers, or any flattery of hope, promise of immunity, or use of threats, to induce confessions, they are voluntary and admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1163; Dec. Dig. § 519.*]

4. WITNESSES (§ 277*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION OF ACCUSED—TESTIMONY AS TO CONFESSIONS.

Defendant's testimony in chief that he made confessions as testified to by different witnesses, and that he signed a written confession, but that the first were obtained by threats and duress, and that he did not know the contents of the written confession, opened a wide field for cross-examination, and it was clearly proper to cross-examine him fully as to the facts stated in the confessions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 979-981; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 404*)—DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE—ROPE FOUND AROUND NECK OF DECEASED.

In a murder case, a rope having been fully identified as the one found around the neck of deceased, and a physician having testified that death may have resulted from strangulation, it was clearly admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 891; Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1037*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—PRESERVATION OF OBJECTIONS AND EXCEPTIONS—ARGUMENT TO JURY.

An assignment of error as to improper argument to the jury is not before the court for review, in absence of proper preservation of objections and exceptions to the court's action on objections during the argument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1691, 2645; Dec. Dig. § 1037.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1119*)—TRIAL—IMPROPER ASSISTANCE OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

There is no merit in a complaint that one who was attorney for defendant in his preliminary hearing took a seat at the counsel table for the state at the trial, and began assisting the prosecuting attorney, where no more appears than the fact that defendant interposed an objection to his sitting as counsel for the state, and the court sustained it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2927; Dec. Dig. § 1119.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 958*)—NEW TRIAL—AFFIDAVITS AS TO NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

An affidavit on the subject of newly discovered evidence must be supported by oath of the accused, and by affidavits of the proposed witnesses, and an affidavit by counsel is insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2397, 2401; Dec. Dig. § 958.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 786*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—STATEMENTS MADE BY DEFENDANT.

In a murder case, the jury were properly instructed that if they found and believed from the evidence that defendant made any statement, or statements, in relation to the homicide charged in the information as to how it was committed, they must consider such statement or statements altogether; that defendant was entitled to the benefit of anything he said for himself, if true, and the state was entitled to the benefit of anything he said against himself in any statement or statements proven by it; that what he said against himself the law presumed to be true, because said against himself, and that what he said for himself the jury were not bound to believe, because it was said in a statement or statements proven by the state, but they may believe or disbelieve it as it is shown to be true or false by the evidence in the case, and it was for them to consider, under all the evidence or circumstances, how much of his whole statement or statements, proven by the state, they, from the evidence, might deem worthy of belief.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jasper County; D. E. Blair, Judge.

William Wilson was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

The defendant in this cause was charged, by information of the prosecuting attorney of Jasper county, which was duly verified, with murder of the first degree. The party charged to have been killed was one Millie Plum, and the offense was alleged to have been committed on July 12, 1908, at Carl Junction, Jasper county, Mo. The information embraces four counts, each of which charges murder of the first degree, and doubtless were embraced in the information to meet the different phases of the testimony which might be introduced upon the trial of the cause. From a judgment of conviction in the Jasper county circuit court of the offense charged the cause is brought to this court, and is now pending here upon appeal from such judgment.

The testimony introduced upon the trial of this cause substantially tended to prove the following state of facts: Defendant, William Wilson, is a negro, was about 24 years old at the date of the trial, and a native of Lafayette, La. In the spring months of 1908 the Miller Carnival Company was showing at Lafayette, and this defendant joined said company at that place, and remained as one of the employes of said company until the date of his arrest at Carl Junction for the murder of deceased. The deceased, Millie Plum, joined said Miller Carnival Company at Weir City, Kan., as an employe in the capacity of a cook, about one week prior to her death. It appears that said Miller Carnival Company had been at Carl Junction for a few days, taking part in a street fair, and closed its engagement late Saturday night, July 11th, and was getting ready to leave on the following day. Said company traveled by railroad. It had one car of its own, divided into compartments, one of which was occupied by the Miller family, one for the private dining room of the Miller family, one for the general dining room of the carnival employes, and an extra car of the railroad company was used in conveying their property from town to town.

The body of the deceased, Millie Plum, was found near an empty box car of the Frisco railroad at about 1:45 Sunday morning, July 12, 1908. When found, a rope was tied around her neck; her face was downward; a bruise was found on her left cheek; a cut around her neck five inches long, but not deep; she had on a thin skirt and a gauze shirt waist. The body had been dragged a distance of about 100 yards from the ground. The distance of the body from the Miller car was something like 200 yards. Her hands and feet showed signs that she had been dragged face downward, and the skin on the hands and feet was broken and worn. Woman's hair was found on the railroad track where the body had been dragged; a lady's comb was found about 30 feet from the Miller car. Sock-foot tracks of a man with flat insteps were found leading back to the Miller car; the size of the footprints corresponded to defendant's feet. Defendant was arrested in the Miller car soon after the body of the deceased was found, which was near the hour of 2 o'clock in the morning, and when first arrested he denied that he had killed deceased, but while in the city calaboose at Carl Junction, and only a few hours after his arrest, defendant confessed to the crime of killing deceased. After defendant was taken to the county jail at Carthage, and on that Sunday afternoon, he made a sworn, written confession to Judge Bright, who was then assistant prosecuting attorney, telling him how this crime was committed, which written confession is as follows:

"State of Missouri, County of Jasper—ss.:

"William Wilson, being duly sworn, upon his oath states: My name is William Wilson. I am 24 years old. I was born in South Carolina. I joined the J. G. Miller Carnival Company January at Lafayette, La. We showed at Weir City, Kan., last week. My duty was working at the merry-go-round and at the boarding car. At Weir City a white woman, whom they called Millie Plum, joined the carnival company. We went from Weir City to Carl Junction. We showed there last week, and we showed there the last time Saturday night, and expected to leave there Sunday morning. This white woman I mentioned cooked for the members of the company. About midnight Saturday night, July 11, 1908, I went into the car of the carnival company where Millie Plum slept. I took off my shoes. She was lying down. I asked her to let me have sexual intercourse with her. She refused. Then I hit her on the jaw, and knocked her down. I then carried her out of the car and for about 100 yards from the car. I then tied a rope around her neck and dragged her some distance to an empty box car. I tried to put her into the box car, but she was too heavy. I wanted to put her into the box car to hide her. She never hit me or cut me at any time. When first arrested I denied having killed Millie Plum. I make this statement under oath and of my own free will and accord, voluntarily and without any duress or restraint whatever and without any hope or promise of clemency of any kind.

"Witness: Wm. Weaver.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 12th day of July, 1908.

"Henry L. Bright, Notary Public. [Seal.]

"My commission expires July 23, 1911."

Dr. A. L. Carpenter, a witness for the state, who examined the body of deceased early on the morning it was found, testified as follows: "Q. There was a question I intended to ask you. What was the condition of the body as to whether or not it was alive or dead? A. It was unquestionably dead. Q. Now, after making an examination, Doctor, of the body, contusions and bruises and the rope around the neck, what, in your opinion, was the cause of death? A. Dragging it up there with the rope; it was strangulation. Q. You say, Doctor, it was caused by strangulation? A. Yes, sir. Q. That was produced by what? A. By dragging her along on her face. Q. That produced death? A. Yes, sir; I think she was struck a blow on the side of the head first. Q. Was the blow on the side of the head sufficient to cause death? A. I don't think so. Q. Then, in your opinion as a medical man, you should say it was caused by strangulation? A. Yes, sir."

H. O. Barnard, witness for the state, and the city marshal of Carl Junction at the date of this crime, and who arrested defendant, testified to defendant's confession to him as follows: "Q. Go ahead, now, Mr. Barnard, tell what he said there—use his language. A. He said she come at him with a butcher knife, and he knocked her down, and did this either two or three times—I wouldn't be positive which—and he knocked her down each time, and he said he thought he had killed her, and taken her on his shoulder; at any rate, he carried her from the car about a hundred yards west up the railroad track, and said he was tired carrying her, and he laid her down and drug her about another hundred yards to an empty box car that was standing on the siding there, and said he intended to put her in that car and close the door, and possibly she would be taken out before it was discovered. Q. What else did he say, if anything, about how he dragged her? A. He drug her with a rope he had around her neck, a rope 8 or 10 feet long. Q. Describe that rope. A. It was a small rope. I don't know just what kind it was; I don't think it would exceed half an inch rope, and possibly 8 or 10 feet long."

Frank R. Ross, a witness for the state, testified to a confession made by defendant to him, as follows: "Q. Do you remember the time Millie Plum was killed over at Carl Junction? A. I remember the circumstances; I don't remember the exact date. Q. How long was it after that time you saw the defendant, William Wilson? A. About 3 o'clock that afternoon. Q. Where did you see the defendant at that time? A. In the county jail of Jasper county. Q. Have any conversation at that time as to how this killing took place? A. I did. Q. State to the jury what the defendant said. A. Well, he said he went to the car where this girl was sleeping, and made a proposition to her and she resented it, and she came at him with a butcher knife, and he struck her in the face or neck, right back here some place, and knocked her down, and after questioning him several times over that, telling him to repeat it, he finally denied the butcher knife.

He said he struck her on the side of the jaw or neck and knocked her down, and, thinking he had killed her, he picked her up and took her out, I believe, the side door to the car, and carried her some 75 or 100 yards. He had a rope that he had been tying some papers together with, and he put that around her neck, and dragged her that much further to put her in a car, thinking he would fasten the car up and possibly she would be shipped out and no one would ever know where she went to, but after he got there he was pretty well out of wind, and, as well as I remember now, he said some two or three tramps were in the car, and that frightened him, and he left her at the side of the car and went back to the car and went to bed. Q. What car did he go back to? A. Where this girl was sleeping, or the car that belonged to the Miller Carnival Company."

J. W. Jackson, a witness for the state, testified to the following confession made to him by defendant: "Q. What did he say? A. He says, 'I can't help it; I never done it.' Q. What else did he say, if anything? A. Mr. Miller, or Mr. Barnard—I wouldn't be positive which—says: 'Well, the girl come to, Bill, and regained consciousness,' and he said 'She admitted to us and told us that you was the one that done it before she died.' Q. What did he say? A. He still denied it again, and he said he couldn't help what she said, he never done it, and Miller spoke up and says, 'Bill, whatever induced you to do that,' he says, 'you must undoubtedly have had some provocation or you wouldn't have done it.' And he says, 'Well, I tell you, Mr. Miller,' he says, 'went back to where she was laying and made a proposal to her, and she jumped out of where she was laying and come at me with a knife, and I struck her in the jaw and knocked her down, and she come at me again, and I run and she followed me out of the car, and she run at me again, and I knocked her down again, and she got up and fought at me and still struck at me with this knife, and I knocked her down again and knocked her senseless,' and I think, if I am not mistaken, Mr. Miller says, 'You knocked her senseless,' and he says, 'Yes, and then I picked her up and put her on my shoulder and carried her as far as I could, and then put this rope around her neck and drug her.' And some of the boys asked him what made him do that, or what was he going to do, and he said he was going to put her in that car, and he said she was too heavy, he couldn't get her in."

William Weaver, deputy sheriff, testified to the following confession as made by defendant to him: "Q. Did you have any conversation with the defendant in regard to the killing of Millie Plum? A. Yes, sir; several conversations with him. Q. Tell the jury what they were—what he said. A. The first conversation I had with the defendant was in the afternoon of July 12th, somewhere about 5 o'clock, probably a little later. It was in the trusty room in the county jail. After the defendant was brought to the jail on the morning of the 12th, being my Sunday off, I left and went to Carl Junction for the purpose of investigating the murder that had been committed down there, and I came back to the jail in the afternoon. Mr. Bright, the then assistant prosecuting attorney, and Mr. Ross, in charge of the jail on that day, and the defendant were in the trusty room together. Mr. Bright had come down, I suppose, for the purpose of getting a statement from the defendant—what he knew about the matter. They were together when I arrived at the jail, and I immediately went into the room where they were and became interested in the conversation. Being questioned by Mr. Bright, the defendant made a statement; that is, he commenced to make a statement as to what he knew about the matter, and he made the statement, as it was repeated to me by the constable, as he had before that, made it to him, and I spoke up to the defendant and told him, I says: 'You are lying about this; you are not telling the truth. You had better come clean because we have got the evidence.' Then Mr. Bright instructed him to make a statement as to what he knew about the matter. Then he made a statement which was written down by Mr. Bright, and later signed by the defendant, after having been read over twice, and it was read over after he signed it by Mr. Bright. Q. I hand you Exhibit A, Mr. Weaver, and ask you if that is the statement? A. Yes, sir; that is the statement he signed, and my own signature here as a witness. Q. Now, Mr. Weaver, subsequent to that statement, did you have any conversation with the defendant? A. Yes, sir. Q. State to the jury what that was. A. It was on the morning, Tuesday morning following, at about 1 o'clock in the morning. Q. This was Sunday? A. Yes; Sunday afternoon. On the Tuesday morning following at about 1 o'clock in the morning, for certain reasons I went to the cell where the defendant was confined, and he was lying on a bunk, apparently asleep. I touched him on the shoulder and says, 'Billy, get up, put on your clothes and follow me, and don't ask any questions nor speak a word,' and he done so. I took the defendant into the outer room, and left him in charge of Deputy Sheriff Cale and went to the barn and hitched up my rig. Mr. Cale took the colored man out of the jail, and met me at the corner of Fifth and Fulton streets. The defendant got in the buggy with me, and during this ride I had another conversation with the colored man. After we got out in the edge of town, I says, 'Billy, tell me all there is to this thing,' and he went over practically the same statement he made here where he signed. His statement was to the effect that he went into the apartment of the girl— Mr. Saylor: We object to that. The Court: Overruled. Mr. Saylor: We except. He told me he went into the apartment of the girl where this white woman, Millie Plum, as I understand her to be, was sleeping, for the purpose—he used the term—doing business with her. He made a proposal to her, and she was lying on the bed at the time. She resented the proposition, and jumped out of the bed, and he said he struck her with his fist on the head or neck, and she fell to the floor. He said he thought he had killed her. There was a piece of rope he said lying there, and he tied that around her neck and dragged her to the side door of the car and took her on his shoulder. He said he carried her up the railroad track west until he became exhausted and laid the body down on the ground, and he said at that point he saw the woman breathing. He said he dragged the body from there to an empty box car, which was about 100 yards further west. I asked him what he took her there for. He said he intended to hang the body in the car, so if it was found it would appear the woman had committed suicide. I asked him why he didn't hang the body in the car, and he said he thought he heard something move in the car, and left the body on the ground. He also said he was so exhausted he could not have put the body in the car if he tried. I have had other conversations since then; and, while there has been other statements made, I don't know as any that would throw any further bearing on the case."

The defendant testified in his own behalf, and he was the only witness who testified on the part of the appellant. His examination and cross-examination is quite voluminous. We have examined it very carefully and in detail, and feel that it can serve no good purpose to burden this opinion with a detailed statement of his testimony. It is sufficient to say, after a careful analysis of all his statements, that it amounts to simply this: That he absolutely denies the killing of the deceased, and denies the truth of the confessions, and also makes a denial that the confessions were made at all.

At the close of the evidence the court fully instructed the jury upon all the legal propositions to which there was any testimony applicable. It is not essential to reproduce the instructions, but will, during the course of the opinion, give those the correctness of which are challenged such attention as we deem necessary. The cause was submitted to the jury; and, after due consideration, they returned their verdict finding the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, and assessed his punishment at death. Timely motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment were filed, and by the court taken up and overruled. Sentence and judgment were entered of record in conformity to the verdict, and from such judgment the defendant prosecuted this appeal, and the record is now before us for consideration.

E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and John M. Atkinson, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

FOX, J. (after stating the facts as above). It is apparent from the disclosures of the record that this is a very serious case, being one in which the most severe punishment known to the law was imposed by the judgment of the trial court. Upon the part of the appellant we are not favored with any brief or suggestions respecting the complaints urged by the motion for new trial. However, in obedience to the requirements of the statute, we have given the entire record very serious consideration, with the view of determining whether or not there was any reversible error in the trial of this cause. It may not be out of place to say that, even in the absence of any statute requiring us to make this investigation, the importance of this case would dictate a most careful consideration of every detail during the progress of the trial. There being no suggestions on the part of the appellant, he not being represented in this court, we can only look to the errors as designated in the motion for new trial.

1. In the motion for new trial it is insisted that the court erred in permitting the state to indorse the names of material witnesses on the information after the case had been called for trial, over the objections of the defendant, and that the witnesses so indorsed were afterward introduced and examined. In this connection it is asserted in the motion for new trial that the prosecuting attorney knew, from the very time of the homicide, that these witnesses were important and material, and it is further stated that these witnesses were not previously known to the defendant to be witnesses against him. Upon this proposition it is sufficient to say that the record does not disclose that there was any motion to quash the information upon the ground that these witnesses were indorsed upon the information at the time of the trial; nor does it appear that the defendant, through his counsel, made any complaint that he was taken by surprise by reason of the additional indorsement upon the information of these witnesses. An examination of the record discloses simply an objection by counsel for appellant to the indorsement of the witnesses, and an exception to the ruling of the court in permitting such names to be indorsed on the information by the prosecuting attorney. There was no request for a continuance for a sufficient length of time to investigate concerning the additional witnesses so indorsed.

A similar proposition to the one now under consideration was presented to this court in the comparatively recent cases of State v. Bailey, 190 Mo., loc. cit. 278, 88 S. W. 733, State v. Myers, 198 Mo., loc. cit. 243, 94 S. W. 242, State v. Barrington, 198 Mo., loc. cit. 66, 95 S. W. 235, and it was expressly ruled in those cases, upon disclosures of the records very similar to those in the case at bar, that there was no error in permitting the indorsements to be made. Manifestly the defendant is in no position to complain at the action of the court in the absence of any suggestion of surprise, or an application for a continuance by reason of such surprise, with the view of making an investigation as to the additional witnesses. This proposition was exhaustively treated in the cases of State v. Myers, State v. Barrington, and State v. Bailey, supra, as well as in the case of State v. Henderson, 186 Mo., loc. cit. 482, 85 S. W. 576.

2. The appellant complains in his motion for new trial that the court erred in admitting illegal, incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial testimony. This complaint, at least partly, is directed at the admission of the numerous confessions made by the defendant concerning the commission of this offense. Upon that question it is only necessary to say that the record discloses great care upon the part of the trial court to first ascertain whether or not such confessions were obtained by improper inducements held out to the defendant. The trial court excluded the jury, and made a preliminary examination upon the question as to the inducements held out to this defendant to make the confessions, and upon such examination the court ruled that the confessions were voluntary and admissible. In our opinion the action of the court in admitting the confessions of the defendant was entirely proper. The record does not disclose any improper conduct on the part of the officers, or any flattery of hope, promise of immunity, or use of threats in order to induce the defendant to make such confessions. Hence it follows that the confessions were voluntary, and were admissible in evidence. It is hardly necessary to cite authorities upon this proposition. However it was fully treated of, and the rules clearly announced, in State v. Brooks (not yet officially reported) 119 S. W. 353; State v. Wooley, 215 Mo., loc. cit. 682, 115 S. W. 417; State v. Spaugh, 200 Mo., loc. cit. 596, 98 S. W. 55; State v. Hottman, 196 Mo., loc. cit. 127, 94 S. W. 237; State v. Barrington, 198 Mo., loc. cit. 109, 95 S. W. 235; State v. Ruck, 194 Mo., loc. cit. 437, 92 S. W. 706, and numerous other cases. It must be held that there was no error in the admission of the confessions of the defendant in this cause.

Again, under this assignment of the admission of illegal and incompetent evidence, will be embraced the complaint, lodged in the motion for new trial, that the defendant was "cross-examined about matters not testified to in chief." We have examined the disclosures of the record respecting the cross-examination of the defendant, and have reached the conclusion that there is no merit in this assignment of error. The defendant in his testimony in chief testified that he made the confessions at Carl Junction as testified to by different witnesses, and also that he signed a written confession to Judge Bright, but claimed that the first confessions were obtained by threats and duress, and that he did not know the contents of the written confession. This statement upon the part of the defendant opened a wide field for cross-examination. It was clearly proper on the part of the state to cross-examine the defendant fully as to the facts stated in the confessions, and this is all that was done. We are unable to find in the disclosures of the record any violation of the statutory rule that the defendant can only be cross-examined upon matters referred to in his examination in chief. State v. Miller, 190 Mo., loc. cit. 462, 89 S. W. 377; State v. Avery, 113 Mo., loc. cit. 498, 21 S. W. 193; State v. Wartz, 191 Mo., loc. cit. 579, 90 S. W. 838, and numerous other cases.

The next complaint embraced in the assignment of errors in the motion for new trial as to the admission of improper and incompetent evidence is that the state was permitted to introduce the rope found around the neck of the deceased upon the discovery of her body. This rope was fully identified by witness Chas. Roney as being the one found tied around the neck of the deceased; and one of the physicians testifying in this cause stated that the death of the deceased may have resulted from strangulation. We are of the opinion, that this rope, after being identified, was clearly admissible in evidence.

3. Another complaint, urged and insisted upon in the motion for new trial, is that the court permitted one of the local attorneys, Mr. Andrews, who was of counsel for the state, to make an improper argument to the jury. Upon this proposition it is sufficient to say that a careful examination of the bill of exceptions fails to disclose a proper preservation of objections and exceptions to the action of the court upon objections during the argument of Mr. Andrews. Therefore, we take it, that assignment of error is not before the court for review.

4. Appellant also lodges the complaint in his motion for new trial that one Geo. W. Crowder, who had been the attorney of the defendant in his preliminary hearing in this cause, took a seat at the counsel table for the state, and began assisting the prosecuting attorney to select a jury in this cause. A careful consideration of the disclosures of the record makes it manifest that there is no merit in this assignment of error. The record discloses simply this: Mr. Sayler, who was representing the defendant, interposed an objection to Mr. Crowder sitting as counsel on behalf of the state in this trial, on account of his being former attorney for the defendant. "By the Court: Objection sustained." This is absolutely all that is embraced in the record concerning Mr. Crowder's participation in this trial. The defendant interposed an objection to his sitting as counsel on behalf of the state in the trial, and the court sustained the objection. In other words, the court upon that proposition did what was requested by counsel for appellant. We are of the opinion that there is no merit in that complaint.

5. It is insisted in the motion for new trial, and is assigned as one of the reasons why a new trial should be granted, that upon the showing made respecting newly discovered evidence the court should have granted a new trial. The record upon this question discloses that an affidavit was filed by Walter B. Sayler in support of the motion for new trial, asserting that other evidence had been discovered since the trial, detailing in his affidavit the substance of the evidence and the names of the witnesses who would give such evidence. It fully answers the assignment of error upon this proposition to simply suggest that the affidavit upon the subject of newly discovered evidence is not supported by the oath of the appellant, or are there any affidavits filed by the witnesses whom it is alleged would give certain evidence upon a new trial of this cause. The uniform rulings of this court upon that proposition are that the affidavit by counsel for appellant upon the subject of newly discovered evidence is insufficient. In order to fully meet the requirements of the law as announced by this court in an unbroken line of decisions, the affidavit detailing the newly discovered evidence must have the support of the appellant himself, as well as the witnesses by whom he expects to establish the facts he alleges have been newly discovered. It really is not necessary to cite authorities upon this question, but the cases of State v. Fletcher, 166 Mo., loc. cit. 587, 66 S. W. 429; State v. Neasby, 188 Mo., loc. cit. 472, 87 S. W. 468; State v. Miller, 144 Mo., loc. cit. 30, 45 S. W. 1104; State v. Bowman, 161 Mo., loc. cit. 94, 62 S. W. 996, fully treat of that question, and correctly state the rules of law which have uniformly been applied to it.

6. The motion for new trial by the appellant directs attention to but one instruction of which it complains of the action of the trial court in giving it. The motion refers to this instruction as No. 8, but manifestly it has reference to instruction No. 7, for the reason that, following the number of the instruction, it is recited in the motion for new trial that the instruction "told the jury how they should construe what the defendant is alleged to have said against himself, and how they might construe what he said at the same time in favor of himself." This recitation clearly pointed to what was said to the jury in instruction No. 7, and we shall treat the complaint as referring to that instruction. Instruction No. 7 was as follows: "You are instructed that if you find and believe from the evidence that the defendant made any statement or statements in relation to the homicide charged in the information as to how said homicide was committed, you must consider such statement, or statements, altogether. The defendant is entitled to the benefit of anything he said for himself, if true, and the state is entitled to the benefit of anything he said against himself in any statement, or statements, proven by the state. What the defendant said against himself the law presumes to be true, because said against himself. What the defendant said for himself the jury are not bound to believe, because it was said in a statement or statements proven by the state, but the jury may believe or disbelieve it as it is shown to be true or false by the evidence in the case. It is for you to consider, under all the evidence or circumstances, how much of the whole statement or statements of the defendant proven by the state you, from the evidence, may deem worthy of belief." In our opinion there is no substantial ground for complaint respecting instruction No. 7. It has substantially, in the same form, met the approval of this court from its earliest history, commencing with the case of State v. Hays, 23 Mo. 287, down to the present time. In State v. Darrah, 152 Mo., loc. cit. 541, 54 S. W. 226, in discussing a complaint urged against an instruction in that case, in similar form to instruction No. 7 in the case at bar, it was said that the instruction under discussion "has been approved so often in this state that we must decline to enter upon its defense." This court has in a number of cases expressly ruled that there was no error in declaring the law substantially as it is stated in instruction No. 7, and we do not deem it necessary to burden this opinion with the citation of numerous cases supporting the conclusions as herein reached.

7. Finally, the motion for a new trial assigns, as a reason for the granting of a rehearing, that the verdict as returned by the jury is wholly unwarranted, and manifestly rendered in utter disregard of the court's instructions and the evidence before the jury. Upon this proposition it will suffice to say that we have substantially indicated the nature and character of the testimony developed upon the trial of this cause, and in our opinion it cannot be seriously contended that there was not substantial evidence tending to show the guilt of the defendant of the offense of which he was convicted. In fact, after a careful consideration of all the testimony developed upon the trial, we see no escape from the conclusion that the jury could not, with any degree of reason for it, have returned any other verdict than the one returned in this cause. This is a very serious case, and the results of it are quite important to the defendant. His counsel in the lower court presented his side of the case fairly and in a commendable lawyerlike way, and whatever may be the serious results confronting the defendant, at last it must be attributed to his own unlawful acts, which are so clearly disclosed by the record now before us. The defendant is not represented in this court, and we have, as heretofore indicated, fully considered the errors complained of in the motion for new trial, and in the consideration of the complaints of such motion we have made an independent examination of the record, with the view of ascertaining whether or not there was any substantial error by the court in the trial of this cause. With that end in view we have analyzed in detail the entire disclosures of the record, and from this examination we see no escape from the conclusion that the defendant was afforded a fair and impartial trial, and there is nothing left for this court to do except to give expression to its affirmation of the judgment.

Entertaining the views as herein indicated, the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed, and it is so ordered. All concur.

The transcript is in a most unsatisfactory shape, and we must again admonish both counsel and the clerks of the circuit and criminal courts to see that the transcript shall show that the matters of record proper are kept distinct from the bill of exceptions, as was pointed out in Stark v. Zehnder, 204 Mo. 449, 102 S. W. 992. However, we have gone through the record, and have concluded that there is sufficient therein to indicate what is record proper and that which is in the bill of exceptions.

It appears that on January 9, 1908, an affidavit was made before J. B. Hyde, a justice of the peace, charging the defendant with the crime of burglary, and on January 29, 1908, there was a preliminary hearing of the said charge, which resulted in the justice holding the defendant to answer before the circuit court at its next regular term in May, 1908, to the said charge. The transcript was duly filed with the clerk of the circuit court, and at the said May term, 1908, the grand jury investigated the charge and reported "Not a true bill." Afterwards, on the 18th of September, 1908, the prosecuting attorney filed with the clerk of the circuit court an information, charging the defendant in two counts with the charge of burglary in feloniously breaking into State Hospital No. 1, located at Fulton, Mo.—in the first count with intent to make an assault upon one of the inmates therein, and in the second with the intent to take, steal, and carry away the goods and chattels belonging to the state in said hospital then and there kept. In due time a motion to quash was filed and overruled, and thereupon the defendant was arraigned and entered his plea of not guilty on December 7, 1908. Afterwards, on December 14, 1908, by leave of court, the prosecuting attorney filed a new information, which was also in two counts. On the 7th of January, 1909, and during the said December term, 1908, David H. Harris, Esq., was duly elected and qualified as special judge of the said circuit court, and on the 8th of January, 1909, defendant was put upon trial upon the said amended information, and the jury failed to agree and were discharged, and the cause was continued until the 1st day of February, 1909, on which day it was set down for trial on Wednesday, the 3d day of February, and on the last-mentioned day the jury was impaneled, selected, and sworn, and after hearing the evidence returned their verdict, finding the defendant guilty under the first count in the information and assessing his punishment at six years in the penitentiary. In due time he filed his motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment, which were heard and overruled, and thereupon, on motion, his punishment was reduced to three years in the penitentiary, and he was sentenced accordingly.

1. The first assignment of error is that the defendant was tried upon the amended information, without having been arraigned, or any plea entered by him, or in his behalf, by order of the court. A careful examination of the record discloses that this is true, and no suggestion has been made on the part of the state that the transcript is defective in that respect. There is in our criminal practice no proposition better settled by a long line of precedents than that a trial cannot proceed against a prisoner for an offense for which he has not been arraigned and to which he has not pleaded guilty. Time and again it has been ruled that, where the record in this court shows no arraignment, the judgment must be reversed. State v. Saunders, 53 Mo. 234; State v. Boatright, 182 Mo., loc. cit. 52, 81 S. W. 450; State v. Williams, 117 Mo. 879, 22 S. W. 1104; State v. Walker, 119 Mo. 467, 24 S. W. 1011; State v. West, 84 Mo. 440. The arraignment and the entering of a plea is a matter which must be entered upon the record proper, and is not a matter of mere exception. For this error alone, if no other, the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded.

2. Inasmuch as the judgment must be reversed, and it may be the cause will be tried again, we have concluded we should express our opinion upon the admissibility of the testimony of Mrs. Bruner and Miss Peters as to statements made to them by Mrs. Arnold during the night or early morning of January 4, 1908, and after she was found out of the room she usually occupied. These statements were in no sense a part of the res gestæ. They were clearly narrative of a past transaction. They were hearsay. More than this, if Mrs. Arnold, under the showing made in this record, had been offered as a witness, she would have been incompetent, for the reason that she was insane. Having been shown to be insane, and committed to the hospital for the insane, the presumption is that she continued insane at the time she made the statements attributed to her. 30 Am. & Eng. Ency. 935, bb; Hottle v. Weaver, 206 Pa. 89, 55 Atl. 838. Without this evidence there was little, if anything, tending to establish the charge of which the defendant was found guilty, and it is apparent that this testimony was hurtful in the extreme.

Other propositions for reversal are advanced by the learned counsel for the defendant; but they are such as can be readily avoided on another trial, if it shall be deemed advisable to prosecute the cause further.

For the errors noted, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

STATE v. LINN.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 23, 1909.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 185*)—MURDER—SUFFICIENCY OF INFORMATION—MEANS OF INFLECTING WOUND.

An information, charging that accused assaulted decedent, and with a knife, which he held in his hand, struck decedent, giving him, with the knife aforesaid, a fatal wound, of which wound decedent instantly died, sufficiently charged that the mortal wound was given decedent by reason of the assault with the knife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 217; Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 341*)—APPEAL—REVIEW—INSTRUCTIONS—MANSLAUGHTER.

Where the court charged fully on murder in the first and second degrees, and that if accused voluntarily brought on the difficulty, or entered into it without any intent of killing or inflicting great personal injury upon decedent, and during the difficulty it became necessary for him to kill decedent to save himself from being killed or receiving great personal injury, he would be guilty of manslaughter in the fourth degree, the last charge being based upon the only evidence which would have reduced the homicide to manslaughter in the fourth degree, failure to more fully define manslaughter was not reversible error, especially where accused was found guilty of murder in the second degree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 721; Dec. Dig. § 341.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 825*)—INSTRUCTIONS—DUTY TO ASK.

Where accused requested a charge on manslaughter, which was given as asked, and requested no other on that subject, and saved no exceptions to the failure of the court to instruct more fully on that degree of offense, he could not complain because the court declared the law identically as requested by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2005; Dec. Dig. § 825.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 119*)—SELF-DEFENSE—FORCE REQUIRED TO REPEL ATTACK.

If accused had good reason to believe, and did believe, that decedent designed to do him great bodily harm, and that such design was about to be accomplished, he had the right to act on appearances, and cut or stab decedent to prevent the accomplishment of such design, even though such cut or stab resulted in decedent's death, and was not required to nicely gauge the force used, but could use any means that appeared reasonably necessary under the circumstances, nor was it necessary that his danger should have been in fact impending.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 172-174; Dec. Dig. § 119.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—REQUEST FOR INSTRUCTIONS—REQUEST COVERED BY CHARGE GIVEN.

Where the charge given covers the rights of accused, and states the law as fully and favorably to him as he could ask, it is not error to refuse other charges, though correct in law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 957*)—MISCONDUCT OF JURY—STATEMENTS BY JURORS.

Jurors speak through their verdict, and cannot violate secrets of the jury room and tell of any misconduct that transpired there, nor speak of methods which induced to produce the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2394; Dec. Dig. § 957.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 925*)—MISCONDUCT OF JURY—NEW TRIAL.

About half or three-quarters of an hour after the verdict was returned, and the jury discharged, a paper was found in front of the judge's desk and jury box, containing a column of 12 figures, ranging from 10 to 35, which had been added and the sum divided by 12, producing a quotient of 24, which quotient corresponded to the number of years at which the jury assessed accused's imprisonment. No other trial had intervened between the return of the verdict in the case in question and the finding of the paper. There was nothing to indicate that the figures were in the handwriting of any juror, nor to indicate that the jurors agreed in advance to adopt as their verdict the quotient resulting from dividing by 12 the aggregate of the numbers set down on the paper. Held not ground for setting aside the verdict.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Oregon County; J. L. Fort, Judge.

Ed Linn was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. M. Wiley and E. P. Dorris, for appellant. E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and Jas. T. Blair, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

GANTT, P. J. On the 29th day of June, 1908, the prosecuting attorney of Oregon county filed in the circuit court of said county an information, charging Ed Linn and John Rodman with murder in the first degree. An application for change of venue, based on the alleged prejudice of Judge Evans, was filed by Linn, and sustained. The trial was set for September 1, 1908, and Judge Fort was requested to try the cause. The defendant Linn was duly arraigned, and pleaded not guilty. The jury was impaneled and sworn, and, having heard the evidence, found the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree, and fixed his punishment at 24 years in the penitentiary. Motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment were filed and overruled, and the defendant sentenced in accordance with the verdict.

The evidence for the state tended to show the following state of facts: On February 26th a wedding was in progress at the farmhouse of Ockley Nettles in Oregon county, Mo. The house was occupied by a tenant named Morrow, and was situated about 100 yards from the residence of Ockley Nettles, the deceased, on the same farm. About 2 o'clock in the afternoon that day on which the killing occurred the defendant appeared at his father's house, procured a bottle of whisky, inquired for John Rodman, who was subsequently indicted as accessory, and immediately departed in search of him. On that afternoon defendant and Rodman appeared at the home of Mrs. Mary Nettles in a somewhat intoxicated condition. Learning from Mrs. Nettles that a wedding was to occur at Morrow's, they left the house, and proceeded towards the latter's place. Arriving at Morrow's, the defendant and Rodman did not enter the house, but went around behind it and drank some whisky that they had brought with them. Seeing the deceased, Nettles, they invited him to drink with them, and he did so. Defendant and Rodman then walked up the road with one Underwood, and returned cursing and blackguarding; the defendant boasting of their ability to whip any one present. In the meantime the deceased had returned to a position near the entrance of the house, and was leaning against a post of a shed adjacent thereto. Defendant and Rodman approached the deceased, and Rodman asked him if he had anything against him. Deceased replied that he had not. Defendant then put the same question, and received a like reply. Deceased then asked Rodman if he (Rodman) had anything against him, and Rodman said he had not. Deceased then asked defendant a like question, and defendant replied: "Yes; you ran over my father, and I am not going to take it"—and then with an oath said that the deceased could not treat him that way. Suing the action to the word, defendant drew his knife and stepped in front of the deceased. He raised his knife, whereupon deceased stooped to pick up a stick, and as he did so the defendant rushed in on him and dealt the fatal blow. At this juncture the deceased either struck, or struck at, the defendant with a stick, but apparently without effect. He then dropped the stick and grappled with the defendant, endeavoring to prevent the defendant cutting him further with the knife. They struggled for a short time until the deceased cried to a bystander "to take him off; he has killed me." Rodman then seized the defendant, and forced him from the deceased, who staggered by and behind the corner of the house. Defendant released himself from Rodman's grasp, and, saying, "I will kill him, G—— d—— him," ran after the deceased. As deceased fell, defendant struck at him again with his knife. Returning from this second assault, defendant said he "had cut him to the heart, G—— d—— him." Defendant and Rodman then left the premises. The wound inflicted by the defendant upon the deceased practically severed the femoral artery in the left thigh, death resulting in a very short time from the loss of blood. There was also evidence that some time prior to the killing the defendant, in talking to one Baker concerning a difference between the deceased and the defendant's father, had said "he was going to get right some of these days, and go down there on him." To the suggestion that the deceased might beat him, defendant answered, "I will knife him," to which Baker replied defendant would be sent to the penitentiary, and defendant answered, "I do not give a d——." On Monday, two days before the killing, defendant, while sharpening his knife, refused to swap it, saying, "I might want to kill a man with it." On the part of the defendant there was testimony to the effect that when defendant and Rodman returned to the house, just before the killing, they were talking pretty loud and ugly, and the deceased asked defendant to be quiet. Rodman then said to the deceased: "You can say what you please to the Linns and Rodmans behind their backs, but they are the stuff." Deceased said: "You are not throwing that at me are you? I ain't got nothing against you. I always thought a heap of you boys." And defendant retorted: "Yes; but you run over an old man, and by G—— I will take up for him." The defendant had clinched the deceased before the latter struck the former. The defendant's testimony corroborated that of the state as to the deceased's efforts to avoid the knife in the struggle. Some of the defendant's witnesses did not hear defendant and Rodman question the deceased as to whether he had anything against them. They described defendant's knife as a "deerfoot" knife, with a blade about 3½ inches long.

A physician, who examined defendant in the jail some time after he was in prison, testified that defendant's right wrist was swollen as if he had received a blow upon it, and the jailer testified that soon after receiving the defendant at the jail, he observed a scratch on his neck and one on his right wrist. The flesh was not discolored. The defendant testified in his own behalf that on the afternoon of February 26th he went to his father's house to get a note which had been drawn for Rodman to sign; the latter being indebted to him for a small amount. That he procured the note and a bottle of whisky and met Rodman on his way home. Rodman importuned him to go with him to the wedding, suggesting that Rosenbaum and Hornbuckle would be found there. That thereupon they proceeded to Mrs. Mary Nettles, and from there went to the Morrow's. He then detailed the occurrences at Morrow's very much as the state's witnesses had done. His description of the killing was that immediately prior thereto he heard deceased ask Rodman if he had anything against him, and Rodman said no, and Rodman then asked a like question, and deceased slapped him on the shoulder, and said: "I ain't got nothing against old John, and never did have." Deceased then asked the defendant the same question, to which defendant replied: "No, Ockley; not a thing." "You run over an old man once, but you cannot do me that way. If you do me that way, I will whip you fair." Deceased then said, "Don't throw that old thing up to me," and reached for a club, and when he did this defendant rushed on him. He declared that the deceased struck him on the head and left wrist with a stick. That his knife was in his pocket at this time and during the struggle, until deceased began choking him and attempting to "ride him down, and he seen that there was no show for him." Defendant drew his knife, opened it, and "struck one lick at his body," but did not know whether he hit him or not. That deceased seized his wrist and endeavored to cut him with the knife, which he (defendant) still held. That some one then grabbed defendant and jerked them apart and slung defendant downhill "and when I came to myself, I was standing with the knife in my hand in front of John Rodman." Defendant and Rodman then went to defendant's father's house, and thence to the justice of the peace, to whom defendant surrendered. Defendant identified the knife, which he testified was the one with which he inflicted the fatal wound.

In rebuttal the state introduced evidence tending to show that the knife exhibited by the defendant at the house of the justice of the peace, after his surrender, was not the one identified by him at the trial; that at Johnson's, the justice, defendant displayed his right wrist, and it was green all the way round; that there was no other indication of injury to it. Defendant then said: "He had stabbed the deceased first in the groin, and had 'hacked' him across the throat as they drew him loose." Defendant was cool and collected, laughing and joking until about 8 o'clock, when he went to sleep behind the stove. One witness testified that he attempted to open defendant's knife with one hand, as Rodman stated defendant had done in the struggle with the deceased, but was unsuccessful. This was substantially all the evidence in the cause. The court instructed the jury as to murder in the first degree, murder in the second degree, manslaughter in the fourth, and self-defense, to the giving of all of which instructions the defendant excepted. Defendant requested, and the court refused certain instructions on the subject of self-defense and manslaughter in the fourth degree, to which action of the court the defendant saved his exceptions.

1. Defendant assails the information as insufficient to charge any offense, in that it fails to charge that the mortal wound was given the deceased by reason of the alleged assault with the knife. The language of the information in this connection is: "That one Ed Linn on or about the 26th day of February, 1908, at and in the county of Oregon and state of Missouri, in and upon one O. H. Nettles, then and there being, feloniously, willfully, deliberately, premeditatedly, and of his malice aforethought did make an assault, and with a certain knife which he, the said Ed Linn, in his right hand then and there had and held, him, the O. H. Nettles, feloniously, willfully, deliberately, premeditatedly, and of his malice aforethought did strike, stab, and thrust in and upon the right side of the left thigh of him, the said O. H. Nettles, giving to the said O. H. Nettles then and there with the knife aforesaid, in and upon the right side of the left thigh of him, the said O. H. Nettles, one mortal wound of the length of 2 inches, of the breadth of 1 inch and of the depth of 3 inches, of which mortal wound the said O. H. Nettles then and there instantly died." The indictment itself is a sufficient refutation of the charge made against it, and contains the words which were omitted in State v. Williams, 184 Mo. 261, 83 S. W. 756, and State v. Birks, 190 Mo. 263, 97 S. W. 578, and the absence of which required the reversal of the judgment in those cases.

2. It is also assigned as error that the circuit court failed to define manslaughter in the fourth degree. As already said, the court had fully instructed on murder in the first degree and murder in the second degree, and then gave instruction numbered 6, in these words: "The court instructs the jury that if the defendant brought on the difficulty, or entered into it with the intention of killing or inflicting great personal injury upon said O. H. Nettles, then the danger, if any, in which he found himself during such difficulty would not extenuate his offense, or reduce its grade at all; but, if he voluntarily brought it on, or entered into it without any intent of killing or inflicting great personal injury upon said O. H. Nettles, and during such difficulty it became necessary for him to kill said O. H. Nettles to save himself from being killed or receiving great personal injury, then he cannot be entirely excused on the ground of self-defense, but in that case you should find him guilty of manslaughter in the fourth degree." And in another instruction the court instructed the jury that, if they should convict the defendant of manslaughter in the fourth degree, they would assess his punishment at imprisonment in the penitentiary for 2 years, or be imprisoned in the county jail for not less than six months, or by a fine of not less than $500, or by both a fine not less than $100 and imprisonment in the county jail not less than three months. It appears from the record that the defendant requested this identical instruction of the court, and requested no other instruction on the subject of manslaughter in the fourth degree, and saved no exceptions to the failure of the court to instruct more fully on that degree of offense. Under these circumstances the defendant is in no attitude to complain that the court declared the law on the subject of manslaughter in the identical words requested by the defendant. Moreover, this instruction is predicated upon the only state of facts under the evidence in this case which would have reduced the homicide to manslaughter in the fourth degree, and the defendant had the full benefit thereof. We think there was no reversible error because the court failed to define manslaughter any more fully than it did, especially as the jury did not find the defendant guilty of that grade of offense.

3. On the subject of self-defense the court gave instruction No. 7 in these words: "The court instructs the jury that, if you find and believe from the evidence that defendant had good reason to believe from the words, acts, and conduct of the deceased, O. H. Nettles, that he had a design to do him (Linn) some great personal injury or bodily harm, and that such design was about to be accomplished, then defendant had a right to act on appearances, and to cut or stab said Nettles to prevent the accomplishment of such design, even though such cut or stab resulted in the death of said Nettles; and, in this connection, you are further instructed that defendant was not required to nicely gauge the force used, but that he could use any means that appeared reasonably necessary under the circumstances. Neither is it necessary that his danger should have been real or actual, or that it should have been impending and about to fall, but if he had reasonable cause to believe, and did believe, these facts, and cut and stabbed the deceased to prevent such expected harm, then you must acquit him on the ground of self-defense." The court refused two instructions on the same subject requested by the defendant, but it is evident that the instruction above set out fully covered all the rights of the defendant and states the law as fully and favorably to defendant as he could ask; and, as it has been repeatedly held that, when such is the case, it is not error to refuse other instructions, even though they may be correct announcements of the law.

4. Finally it is insisted that the misconduct of the jurors in the method employed by them in arriving at their verdict is sufficient to justify a reversal of the judgment. In support of this assignment the record shows that one of the defendant's witnesses testified, upon the hearing of a motion for new trial, that about a half or three quarters of an hour after the verdict was returned and the jury discharged, he found in front of the judge's desk and the jury box, a paper which he identified and offered in evidence containing a column of 12 figures, ranging from 10 to 35, and 12 numbers had been added, and the sum divided by 12 producing a quotient of 24; this last number corresponding to the number of years at which the jury assessed the defendant's punishment in the penitentiary. No other trial intervened between the return of the verdict in this case and the finding of this paper by the counsel. There was no other evidence offered on this head. There was nothing to indicate that these figures were in the handwriting of any member of the jury, and absolutely nothing to indicate that they agreed in advance to adopt as their verdict the quotient resulting from dividing by 12 the aggregate of the numbers set down on said exhibit. The offer to prove by this witness a statement of one of the jurors was properly refused. This court, in State v. Underwood, 57 Mo. 40, laid down the rule that jurors speak through their verdict, and cannot be allowed to violate secrets of the jury room and tell of any partiality or misconduct that transpired there, nor speak of methods which induced or operated to produce the verdict, and this has become the settled law of this state. State v. Branstetter, 65 Mo., loc. cit. 156; State v. Coupenhaver, 39 Mo. 430; Sawyer v. R. R. Co., 37 Mo. 263, 90 Am. Dec. 382. The paper exhibit was utterly insufficient to establish any prior agreement by the jurors to be bound by the quotient verdict. Indeed the paper was not shown to have been an act of any member of the jury, and it is clearly insufficient to overthrow the solemn verdict of the jury.

It results that the judgment and sentence of the circuit court must be, and is, affirmed.

LINDSAY v. BATES.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2. Nov. 23, 1909.)

1. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 19*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—PROBABLE CAUSE.

In an action for malicious prosecution of plaintiff for arson, the issue is not whether plaintiff was guilty of the charge, but whether defendant had probable cause for commencing the prosecution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

2. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 72*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for malicious prosecution, the court instructed that, before the jury can find that defendant was justified, they must find that he had probable cause to believe that the charge made was true, and that by "probable cause" is meant reasonable grounds for believing plaintiff guilty, supported by facts and circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a prudent or cautious man in believing that plaintiff was guilty, otherwise they must find that the prosecution was without probable cause, and that the information that would justify a criminal complaint must be such that men generally of ordinary care and discretion would have been warranted in acting upon, under similar circumstances. Held, that the instructions were not conflicting as to the information which would justify defendant in making the charge against plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. § 169; Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

3. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 56*)—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action for malicious prosecution, the burden is on plaintiff to establish his case.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

4. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 71*)—EVIDENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Evidence, in an action for malicious prosecution, held sufficient to make the question of whether defendant had reasonable ground for believing that plaintiff committed the offense, for which defendant instituted the prosecution against him, one for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. § 161; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

5. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 64*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in an action for malicious prosecution, held sufficient to sustain a verdict for defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. §§ 151-153; Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

6. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 58*)—ISSUES—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for malicious prosecution for arson, instituted by defendant, evidence that defendant offered a specified sum if the building in question should be destroyed is irrelevant to the issue on trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. §§ 117, 118; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

7. EVIDENCE (§ 317*)—HEARSAY.

In an action for malicious prosecution for arson, evidence that a person, while intoxicated, told a witness that he had burned the building in question, was inadmissible as hearsay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1175; Dec. Dig. § 317.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1048*)—HARMLESS ERROR—IMPEACHMENT OF WITNESS.

The impeachment of a witness whose deposition has been excluded is harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4160; Dec. Dig. § 1048.*]

9. WITNESSES (§ 343*)—IMPEACHMENT—EVIDENCE.

The reputation of a witness who has lived nearly all his life in a certain place, until about three years before the trial of the action in question, and who had not established a residence elsewhere, can be impeached by evidence of his reputation in such place.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1124; Dec. Dig. § 343.*]

10. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 59*)—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in an action for malicious prosecution for arson, that a witness told defendant he had seen plaintiff and B. talking together on the evening of the fire, and had seen B. give M. some money the evening the fire occurred, telling the latter to give the money to another person named, and such person would know what to do with it, was admissible as bearing on the question whether defendant believed plaintiff was guilty and whether he had reason to so believe.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wayne County; Jos. J. Williams, Judge.

Action by Joseph F. Lindsay against Samuel A. Bates. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The amended petition, on which the case was tried, alleged that the defendant on the 13th day of October, 1904, appeared before the clerk of the circuit court of said county and maliciously and without probable cause charged the plaintiff with the commission of the crime of arson, by filing an affidavit charging him with the felonious burning of a certain frame building situated on lot 7 in block 12 in the city of Piedmont. It is further alleged that the information was thereupon filed by the prosecuting attorney, based on said affidavit, and a warrant issued thereon by the clerk, and plaintiff arrested thereunder, and gave his bond to appear before the circuit court of said county for trial. It is then alleged that at the February term, 1905, the prosecuting attorney dismissed said prosecution against plaintiff, being advised that the charge contained in the information was without foundation. It was alleged, further, that plaintiff had incurred expenses to the amount of $200 in making his defense to the said charge, and he prayed judgment for $5,000 actual damages, and $5,000 punitive damages. At the return term, the defendant filed his answer, which was a general denial, and also an allegation that plaintiff's general reputation for honesty and morality in the community in which he lived was bad. There was a trial by jury, and a verdict and judgment for the defendant, from which the plaintiff prosecutes an appeal to this court.

It appears from the evidence that the plaintiff lived at Piedmont in 1903, and had lived there for about 20 years; that he was an attorney at law and president of a bank in the said town. The building which was destroyed in said town was a frame building belonging to the defendant, Bates, and was occupied at the time it was burned, October 19, 1901, by one John Berryman. Some time after the house was burned, the defendant, Dr. Bates, John Berryman, and Ed Daniels were indicted for burning it; but this indictment was subsequently quashed and these parties discharged. Afterwards, on the 13th of October, 1904, the defendant made the affidavit referred to in the plaintiff's petition, charging the plaintiff with having burned the said house. The testimony was substantially as follows:

McGhee, the deputy clerk, identified the affidavit filed by the defendant on which the warrant was issued, and also stated that the defendant said that he had a good case against the plaintiff, and if he did not convict him he would leave the state.

R. H. Davis testified that he was prosecuting attorney at the time the information for arson was filed, and that he filed the same at the request of the defendant. He stated that he advised the defendant to let the matter alone; but defendant said that the statute of limitation was about to run and he must act immediately. Witness told Bates he did not want to file the information because he did not think he could make a case. The warrant issued for plaintiff's arrest and the bond given by him for bail, together with the judgment discharging him from that charge, were all offered in evidence.

Almon Ing, prosecuting attorney at the time the case was dismissed, testified that he went over the case with the defendant and Mr. Raney, who had been employed to assist in the prosecution, and told Dr. Bates there was not enough testimony to secure a conviction, and for that reason he intended to dismiss it, and did dismiss it, and that Mr. Raney agreed with him. Witness stated: That defendant made the remark that, if the case was dismissed, plaintiff would enter suit for malicious prosecution against defendant; that thereupon the prosecuting attorney went to the plaintiff and requested him not to do it; that plaintiff seemed to get mad and would not make any such agreement, but said, if defendant would sign a statement that he had lied, he would do it.

Mr. Durham, attorney for plaintiff, stated that it was probable that they would show probable cause. This witness testified that it was his understanding, when they quit talking, that plaintiff did agree not to bring suit.

Caleb Ballard testified: That defendant tried to keep his son, John Ballard, from being present at the trial of the case against plaintiff; that this testimony was denied by the defendant in his evidence, and the testimony of John Ballard shows that he was in Piedmont on the day that the prosecution against plaintiff was dismissed.

The deposition of John Berryman was read in evidence. It was taken in Texas, and he was not cross-examined. The witness testified that he lived in Nacogdoches county, Tex., and had lived there four months. He testified that the defendant told him that, if lightning struck those buildings, he would square the account of witness for $30, another account of $20 that witness stood good for, and give him $50 besides. He testified, further, that he told Ed Daniels that Dr. Bates, the defendant, would pay a man to burn the building, and that afterwards Daniels told witness that he had burned the building. Daniels was dead at the time of this trial. There is no other evidence that Daniels burned the building, and none whatever that defendant ever paid anything to any one in connection with the burning of the building, or that he was ever requested to pay anything to any one for doing so. This evidence was afterwards excluded by the court, and the jury was directed not to consider it. Berryman also testified that he owed respondent about $30, and prior to the burning of the house the defendant pressed him for the payment of it. The witness was charged jointly with the plaintiff with the arson of the building.

Joseph Lindsay, the plaintiff, testified: That he had nothing whatever to do with the burning of the house; that he was in bed asleep when the alarm was sounded; that he never had any conversation with Daniels or Berryman in reference to burning the house. He testified to his arrest in consequence of the complaint against him by defendant, to his payment of attorneys to defend the case, to his objection to having the case dismissed, and that he made no agreement with the defendant or any one else in regard to the dismissal of the case, and said he would not consent to a dismissal except upon the defendant making a written retraction of what he had sworn to in the affidavit, and that he had nothing whatever to do with the prosecution of the defendant on charge of burning the house. On cross-examination he stated: That he let a man by the name of Wilson, who was in the building, have about $200 to buy a printing outfit; that the insurance on this printing outfit was in the name of himself and Wilson; that he made the proof of the claim, collected the insurance, and got his part of it. He stated that his purpose for bringing this action was for vindication against these charges. He testified that he tried to get Berryman to attend the court in person, but he refused to come for fear that the defendant would kill him or have him killed.

C. C. Ivy testified to a conversation with the defendant, in which the latter told him he had filed a complaint against plaintiff and "would send the d---n rascal over the road," and that plaintiff had indicted him, or tried to. He testified that plaintiff's reputation was good as far as he knew. On cross-examination he stated that he heard it discussed, and some said it was good, and some said it was bad; "they talked both ways."

J. H. Clore testified substantially the same as Ivy. Other witnesses testified that plaintiff's reputation as a business man for honesty and integrity was good.

On the part of the defendant, the defendant testified denying the statements attributed to him by the witness Caleb Ballard, and stated that at the time he filed the affidavit he believed that the plaintiff and Berryman were guilty of arson, and that plaintiff had caused defendant to be indicted in order to divert suspicion from himself; that the reputation of plaintiff was very bad, as also was that of Berryman. Defendant was in Cape Girardeau the night that the house was burned. He moved back to Piedmont the last part of January, 1902, and began an investigation as to the fire, and he found that it was of incendiary origin by a statement made by Berryman. John Ballard told defendant that Berryman's reputation was bad, and he could be hired to do anything for a little money. John Mell told defendant that: "He saw a man do that. That he was coming across the Hub yard and going between Lee's warehouse, and that he got something that looked like an oil can back there, and that was about 10 minutes before the fire alarm." That Mell said that it was no one but Joseph Lindsay. The defendant testified: That Harry Bates told defendant that he had seen the plaintiff, Lindsay, and John Berryman together on the evening of the 19th of October, 1901, about 8 o'clock; that they walked up the street and down the alley towards a calaboose, and plaintiff kept John Berryman there for an hour; and that soon thereafter he (Harry Bates) saw John Berryman call one Ezra Morris and hand him some money, with directions to "give it to Ed Daniels, and he would know what it was for." He also testified that Wilson told him that he had owned the printing outfit until just before the fire, but that plaintiff had offered him such an inducement that he turned it over to plaintiff, who told him he could use it as long as he wanted to free of charge. He also testified: That one Alberts told plaintiff that he had sold the printing outfit to Wilson for a woman and received $50 in full payment for the same. That on investigation he found that the reputation of John Berryman was very bad. That he had a reputation for burning houses and blacksmith shops. That defendant had been arrested himself charged with burning the same building which plaintiff had been charged with burning. In preparing for his defense, most of the evidence given by him was ascertained. That the case against him was dismissed without trial. Several people told him that John Berryman had frequently been seen in consultation with the plaintiff. That prior to and pending this investigation there had been a great number of incendiary fires in Piedmont. That defendant had given to the prosecuting attorney lists of the witnesses and had asked that the matter be investigated by the grand jury; but the witnesses were never called before that body. That the prosecuting attorney, Ing, told defendant that he would dismiss the case against John Berryman so as to get him back to testify against plaintiff, but that was not done. That Ing stated to him that he intended to dismiss the case against plaintiff, but said, "I think you have probable cause, but I will not be able to convict." That Ing further said Mr. Lindsay will not bring a suit if this case is dismissed. Defendant collected insurance on the place that was burned.

Harry Bates testified: That he had told defendant that he had seen plaintiff and John Berryman talking together on the evening of the fire, and also told defendant that he had seen John Berryman give Ezra Morris some money the evening the fire occurred, and told Morris to give Ed Daniels the money and he would know what to do with it. That plaintiff went to Murphysboro two or three months before the trial of this case and tried to get witness to make certain statements in writing in connection with the case, which witness refused to do because they were not correct.

W. P. Toney testified that he had lived in Piedmont 48 years, and had known plaintiff 20 years, and that plaintiff's reputation for honesty and integrity was bad, but admitted that he was not on good terms with him and did not like him.

Dr. G. W. Toney testified plaintiff's reputation for morality was bad, but admitted that he had a deposit in the Exchange Bank and was the family physician of the family.

A number of witnesses testified that they knew John Berryman's reputation in the neighborhood of Piedmont up to time he lived there in 1901 or 1902, and that his reputation for honesty and integrity was bad.

In rebuttal, the plaintiff offered testimony as follows:

William Carter testified that defendant did not present him, as foreman of the grand jury, a list of the witnesses to be called on the charge against plaintiff as far as he remembered, but that the names were sent to Capt. Leaper, a member of the grand jury, in reference to the burning of the storehouse of Mr. Lindsay. He testified that the reputation of plaintiff from a business standpoint was good, but it had been talked that he burned his store to get the insurance.

R. H. Davis, recalled, testified: That, while he was prosecuting attorney, he told defendant that the testimony of John Berryman would implicate defendant; that Berryman was not put in jail after he had made a statement and sworn to it. He testified that the indictment against defendant was quashed because there was not sufficient testimony to attempt to prosecute the defendant on this charge.

John Mell testified that he did not tell defendant that he saw plaintiff in and about that building with a coal oil can for the purpose of setting fire to it, but he did say to defendant and W. S. Anthony that he had seen a man come out of the alley back of Lee's warehouse and pick up a coal oil can.

Almon Ing, recalled, testified: That, when he told defendant he intended to dismiss the indictment against plaintiff, defendant insisted on having it continued to get John Berryman and S. E. Wilson; that he told defendant Berryman's testimony would not help the state, and defendant insisted Berryman would tell a different story next time; that he had been served with notice to take the deposition of Wilson, and did not know whether he notified defendant of that fact or not.

On behalf of the defendant, John Ballard testified that he had been subpoenaed in the case for the 15th, and there was a new subpoena for the 9th, and his property was attached, and he had to go to Arkansas, and he borrowed $18 from defendant and was back in Piedmont on the 15th of February, 1905. He testified he told defendant that John Mell had told him that he was watching the Hub factory at that time, and about 10 minutes before the fire broke out he saw Mr. Lindsay go through there between Lee & Co.'s store and John Berryman's store.

Huff testified that Joe Mell said, "I am going to get all I can out of this case."

W. S. Anthony testified that he went with defendant to investigate the burning of the defendant's house some time in 1902, and they met Joe Mell in Piedmont. Mell said he had seen a man come from behind a building and get some shavings, and described the man, and witness asked if it was Ed Daniels, and Mell said, "No, I have told Dr. Bates who it was, and he knows." The description he gave was a very good one of plaintiff.

John Hall testified that John Ballard told him to tell defendant that he might have some good testimony for him for $25.

The correctness of the instructions will be considered in connection with the objections thereto.

Green & Green, for appellant. J. B. Daniel, for respondent.

FOX, J. (after stating the facts as above).

1. Counsel correctly assert that the issue was not whether plaintiff was guilty of the charge of arson, which was based upon defendant's affidavit, but did defendant have probable cause for commencing said prosecution? The circuit court instructed the jury, in plaintiff's behalf: "Before you can find defendant was justified or excused in making the affidavit against the plaintiff and causing him to be arrested, you must find that he had probable cause to believe that the charge made against plaintiff was true, and by 'probable cause' is meant a reasonable ground for believing plaintiff guilty, supported by facts and circumstances sufficiently strong of themselves to warrant a prudent or cautious man in the belief that the plaintiff was guilty of the offense with which defendant charged him, and, unless you find that defendant was so justified, then you will find that the prosecution against plaintiff was without probable cause." In this same connection, the court gave the following instruction for defendant: "The jury are instructed that the information that would justify the making of a criminal complaint, against another, for the purpose of having him arrested, must be of such character, and obtained from such sources, that men, generally, of ordinary care, prudence, and discretion, would feel authorized to act upon it under similar circumstances; and in this case, if the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant made the alleged affidavit for the arrest of plaintiff, and that he was arrested in consequence thereof, then it is a question of fact, to be determined by the jury from the evidence, whether the defendant, when he made the complaint, acted upon such information as men of ordinary care, prudence, and discretion would have been warranted in acting upon under similar circumstances." Error is predicated upon the giving of this last-quoted instruction, on the ground that it conflicts with the instruction given for plaintiff and is an incorrect statement of the law, in that it advised the jury that "information such as men of ordinary care, prudence, and discretion would feel authorized to act upon, under similar circumstances," would justify defendant in making the criminal charge against plaintiff; whereas, plaintiff insists that nothing short of a knowledge of the existence of facts sufficiently strong of themselves to warrant a prudent or cautious man to believe plaintiff was guilty of said offense would justify the institution of a criminal prosecution. We think the contention of plaintiff on this point is hypercritical. When it is said by the court that in these cases the question is not whether there was in fact a sufficient cause for the prosecution (for the acquittal shows that there was not), but whether the prosecutor as a reasonable man believed there was, they do not mean that a prosecuting witness must know of his own knowledge all the facts upon which such prosecution must rest, but that as a reasonable and prudent man he had reasonable grounds to believe the plaintiff was guilty, and in coming to such a conclusion he must have information of such a character and obtained from such sources that men of ordinary care, prudence, and discretion would feel authorized to act upon in similar circumstances. We think the plaintiff has no ground of complaint as to those two instructions. They were as favorable as he had the right to request.

2. Plaintiff complains that the verdict was not justified by the evidence. The burden was on the plaintiff to establish his case. He complains that, while defendant testified that he was the owner of the house that was burned, at the time it was destroyed he was a resident of Cape Girardeau, and when he came back to Piedmont to reside he received information that led him to believe it was burned by an incendiary. He had been charged with burning his own property; but the charge was dismissed as without foundation. He began to investigate, and found that plaintiff had a printing outfit in said building which was insured for $300, and had collected the insurance; whereas, a witness had told defendant that plaintiff had purchased the same outfit for $50 from a woman. He also produced evidence to the effect: That plaintiff's reputation for honesty and integrity was bad; that plaintiff was seen on the evening that the property was burned talking with John Berryman, whose reputation was shown to have been very bad for honesty, integrity, and burning property; that soon after plaintiff and Berryman were seen talking together, and on the same evening Berryman was seen to give Morris some money, and heard to say to him, "Give it to Daniels, and he will know what it is for." Defendant was also told by John Ballard that Joseph Mell had seen plaintiff go towards defendant's building that was burned with some shavings and an oil can about 10 minutes before the fire broke out, and defendant testified that Mell told him the same story. If the jury believed that these things were told defendant, surely the circuit court could not, nor can this court, say as a matter of law that an ordinarily reasonable and cautious man would not have believed plaintiff burned the house and had reasonable grounds for so doing. The circuit court directed the jury this was a question of fact for them to determine, and we think correctly. While Mell denied telling defendant this story, defendant was not precluded by Mell's evidence. The jury saw Dr. Bates and Mell, and it was their province to believe or reject the testimony of either or both. They seemed to have believed defendant, and rejected the testimony of Mell; but there was nothing to show that, up to the time Mell told Dr. Bates he had seen plaintiff in the compromising position near the building just before it was seen on fire, Mell was a man of bad reputation for truth and veracity or morality and integrity, and such that a reasonably prudent man would not believe his statements. We think the court properly submitted to the jury the question whether the defendant, when he made the complaint by filing the affidavit, acted upon such information or circumstances as a man of ordinary care, prudence, and caution would have accepted and believed under similar circumstances, and their verdict is not without sufficient evidence to support it, if they credited the testimony of defendant. Van Sickle v. Brown, 68 Mo. 634.

3. As to the exclusion of the deposition of John Berryman: Without reproducing this deposition, it is sufficient to say it was taken in Nacogdoches county, Tex., without any appearance or cross-examination by defendant. In substance, he testified to an offer by Dr. Bates, the defendant, to Berryman, to satisfy a debt of $30 due Bates from the witness, and another for $20 for which the witness was surety, and to pay him $50 in cash, if lightning would strike the building; that he, witness, told one Daniels that defendant would pay a sum to have the building burned; that Daniels, being drunk, a few days after the fire told witness that he (Daniels) had burned the building. Now Berryman swears he had nothing to do with the fire, nor did he cause Daniels or any one else to burn it. He never made any demand on defendant for the $50. All of this testimony was objected to when it was offered; but the court admitted it. Subsequently the court withdrew it from the jury. It requires no argument or authority to show that the alleged statements of Daniels were wholly incompetent—hearsay of the most pronounced kind. The statement of Berryman as to what occurred between him and defendant was utterly irrelevant to the issue on trial and was properly excluded. As to the impeachment of Berryman, it cannot be seen how it could have been hurtful, if there was none of his evidence left for the jury to believe or disbelieve. Moreover, the deposition had been admitted once, and the jury had heard it read. As to the proposition that it was not competent to impeach Berryman's reputation at Piedmont, where he had resided nearly all his life until about three years before the trial of this cause: Berryman had only resided at Nacogdoches for about four months, not long enough to have formed a reputation one way or the other. While this court has approved the rejection of proof of reputation after three years, it has not announced an iron-clad rule. Greenleaf, in his work on Evidence (volume 1, § 461d [1]), says: "Character is a continuous quality, not quickly changed or changeable. The character of the witness at the time of testifying is that which affects his truthfulness; but his character at another time may well be considered as evidencing his character at the time of testifying. * * *

One view, and the correct one, is that character at any preceding time is admissible, provided it is not too remote in time to have probative value. A second view is that prior character is not to be resorted to unless for some reason it is difficult or impossible to show present character." While reputation must ordinarily be proven by witnesses residing in the neighborhood in which the witness whose reputation is sought to be impeached resides, this also is subject to exceptions. Thus, in State v. Miller, 156 Mo. 76, 56 S. W. 907, a witness was offered to testify to the defendant's general reputation for truth in the neighborhood of Troy, Kan., where he and defendant had lived; but some nine years previous to the trial the witness had moved to St. Joseph, Mo., but had visited Troy from time to time, and when he lived there was sheriff of the county. He testified he knew defendant's reputation from what the people generally said about him when witness was visiting there. It was said: "This court has approved the rejection of testimony that covered a period of over three years; but the question here presented is whether a witness who has known another witness' reputation for truth for nine years and down to the period of the trial is incompetent to speak of such reputation, which has remained the same all the time. We think not." Now in this case Berryman's reputation was known in Piedmont by the witnesses who resided there up to the time of his removal from that place. Having no established residence elsewhere, we think it was no violation of the rule to permit the witnesses who knew his reputation in that place up to his removal to state what it was.

The testimony of Harry Bates stands on an entirely different footing. This was permitted because it had been communicated to defendant, and was to be considered in determining whether defendant believed plaintiff was guilty, and whether he had reason to so believe.

In our opinion the cause was properly submitted to the jury, and there is no error in the record which would justify a reversal of the judgment.

Judgment affirmed. All concur.

SOUTHERN MISSOURI & A. R. CO. et al. v. WYATT.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 23, 1909.)

1. COURTS (§ 231*)—SUPREME COURT—JURISDICTION—TITLE TO REALTY.

An appeal in a railroad condemnation proceeding should be taken direct to the Supreme Court as involving title to realty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 657; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 511*)—RECORD—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—FILING.

Where the record proper did not show that the bill of exceptions was filed in proper time, which appeared only from the bill itself, the bill of exceptions was not in the record, as such a bill does not prove itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2319, 2320; Dec. Dig. § 511.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 713*)—CONTENTS—MATTERS OF RECORD.

Matters of record proper have no place in the bill of exceptions, and their recital therein adds nothing to the validity of the bill.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2057; Dec. Dig. § 713.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 554*)—RECORD—REVIEW.

A judgment cannot be affirmed if the abstract shows error in the record proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2472-2479; Dec. Dig. § 554.*]

5. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 239*)—COMMISSIONER'S REPORT—VACATION.

An order in a railroad condemnation proceeding confirming the report of commissioners, except as to two defendants, was a sufficient order setting aside the report as to such defendants within Rev. St. 1899, § 1268 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1040), authorizing review by the court of the report of the commissioners on exceptions, and a new appraisal by jury at the request of either party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 614; Dec. Dig. § 239.*]

6. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 239*)—CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS—COMMISSIONERS' ORDER—VACATION.

Where a landowner in condemnation proceedings filed exceptions to a commissioners' report and asked for a jury to assess damages, he was entitled to such assessment as a matter of right without the formal vacation of the commissioners' report under Rev. St. 1899, § 1268 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1040), providing for such reappraisal at the request of either party on the filing of written exceptions to the report.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Dec. Dig. § 239.*]

7. TRIAL (§ 330*)—SEPARATE VERDICT.

Where there are several counts in a petition, each stating separate causes of action, there should be a separate verdict on each, unless the several counts relate to the same transaction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 777; Dec. Dig. § 330.*]

8. JUDGMENT (§ 266*)—ARREST OF JUDGMENT—PURPOSE.

The office of a motion in arrest of judgment is to direct the attention of the court to errors apparent on the face of the record proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 467; Dec. Dig. § 266.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 238*)—VERDICT—DEFECTS—MOTION IN ARREST.

A defect in the verdict cannot be considered on appeal, unless there was a motion in arrest assigning the defect as error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1369; Dec. Dig. § 238.*]

10. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 239*)—PROCEEDINGS—GENERAL VERDICT.

A general verdict, allowing damages for the taking of two separate tracts for a railroad right of way, was not erroneous on its face.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Dec. Dig. § 239.*]

11. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 262*)—DEFECTIVE VERDICT—REVIEW—QUESTION NOT RAISED AT TRIAL.

Where a verdict awarding damages for the taking of two separate tracts of land for a railroad right of way was not objected to at the trial by motion in arrest of judgment, because it did not make a separate award as to each tract, it could not be presumed on appeal, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, that the evidence did not show a condition which would make the verdict proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Dec. Dig. § 262.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Ripley County; J. L. Fort, Judge.

Action by the Southern Missouri & Arkansas Railroad Company and another against J. S. Wyatt. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

E. H. Seneff, Jas. Orchard, and W. F. Evans, for appellants. J. C. Sheppard, for respondent.

BURGESS, J. Plaintiff the Southern Missouri & Arkansas Railroad Company instituted this suit in the circuit court of Ripley county to condemn a right of way for its railroad through the lands of a number of parties, among them the respondent, J. S. Wyatt. The latter owned two tracts of land through which said railroad company attempted to condemn a right of way, one of which, designated as "parcel No. 7," is described in the petition as the south half of the northeast quarter of section 16, township 22, range 4 east; and the other, parcel No. 9, is described as the north half of the southeast quarter and lot 1 of the southwest quarter of section 19, township 22, range 4 east. Upon the petition of the railroad company, commissioners were appointed by the circuit court to view and to assess the damages to the property through which the proposed road was to run. On the 16th day of October, 1901, the commissioners made their report, which was filed in the office of the clerk of said court, in which report they assessed the damages to tract No. 7 at $75, and assessed the damages to tract No. 9 at $49. On October 31, 1901, Wyatt filed his exceptions to the report of the commissioners, and asked that said report be set aside, and that a jury trial be awarded him, and that his damages be inquired into and assessed by a jury. After the petition was filed, and before the cause was tried, the St. Louis, Memphis & Southeastern Railroad Company was, on its motion, made a party plaintiff; it having succeeded to all the rights of the plaintiff the Southern Missouri & Arkansas Railroad Company. Wyatt recovered a verdict and judgment for $800, from which judgment, after unsuccessful motions for a new trial and in arrest, plaintiff appealed. The case for some reason found its way to the St. Louis Court of Appeals, and, after argument and submission there, an opinion was handed down by Bland, P. J., affirming the judgment on the ground that the printed abstract failed to show that the bill of exceptions had ever been made a part of the record. Thereafter a motion for a rehearing was filed, and the opinion was withdrawn, and the cause transferred to this court on the ground that the Court of Appeals had no jurisdiction of the appeal.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

1. The cause was properly transferred to this court. It is a suit by a railroad company to condemn land for its right of way, and in such cases it has many times been held that appellate jurisdiction is in the Supreme Court. Title to real estate is involved in such a case. City of Tarkio v. Clark, 186 Mo., loc. cit. 294, 85 S. W. 329; Kansas City v. Railroad, 187 Mo., loc. cit. 151, 86 S. W. 190; Bauble v. Ossman, 142 Mo. 499, 44 S. W. 338; State ex rel. Railroad v. Rombauer, 124 Mo. 598, 28 S. W. 75; State ex rel. v. McCutchan, 119 Mo. App. 75, 96 S. W. 251; Railroad v. Eubank, 55 Mo. App. 335; Railroad v. McGregor, 53 Mo. App. 366.

2. We cannot consider the bill of exceptions in this case, for the reason that the printed abstract does not show that the bill was ever made a part of the record. The abstract shows that an appeal to this court was ordered on April 11, 1902, and that appellant was "given 90 days in which to perfect and file a bill of exceptions herein." Immediately following this is another record entry, which recites that on July 7, 1902, "for good cause shown, the time for filing bill of exceptions is hereby extended for a period of 60 days from the expiration of the first order." Then follows immediately the evidence of witnesses, and, after about 60 pages of testimony, immediately follow in order the instructions, the verdict, motion for new trial, motion in arrest, the affidavit for an appeal, the order allowing 90 days to file a bill of exceptions, and then a recital that on July 7, 1902, a further time of 60 days was allowed, and then a recital that appellant "presents its bill of exceptions and prays the same may be signed, sealed, and made a part of the record, which is accordingly done on this 16th day of August, 1902." Then follows the signature and approval of the judge, and the certificate of the clerk that the bill was filed on that day. It will be observed that it is only the bill of exceptions that recites that it was filed within the 60 days allowed. The record proper does not so recite. A bill of exceptions does not prove itself. It becomes a part of the record only when the record proper shows it was filed in time. The last record entry proper in this case shows that appellant was, on July 7th, given an extension of 60 days in which to file his bill. Matters of record proper have no place in the bill of exceptions, and a recital thereof therein adds nothing to the validity of the bill. Milling Company v. St. Louis, 222 Mo. 306, 121 S. W. 112; Hogan v. Hinchey, 195 Mo., loc. cit. 533, 94 S. W. 522; Harding v. Bedoll, 202 Mo. 625, 100 S. W. 638; Groves v. Terry, 219 Mo. 595, 117 S. W. 1167; Shemwell v. McKinney, 214 Mo. 692, 114 S. W. 1083; Stark v. Zehnder, 204 Mo. 442, 102 S. W. 992; Walser v. Wear, 128 Mo. 652, 31 S. W. 87; Pennowsky v. Coerver, 205 Mo. 135, 103 S. W. 542; Coleman v. Roberts, 214 Mo. 634, 114 S. W. 39. But, though there is no bill of exceptions, the judgment cannot be affirmed, if the abstract shows errors in the record proper, jurisdictional in character or otherwise. Thomasson v. Merc. Town Mut. Ins. Co., 114 Mo. App. 109, 89 S. W. 564, 1135.

Appellant assigns error as to two matters of record proper.

3. Appellant contends that "the verdict of the commissioners was never reviewed by the court, and was never set aside or affirmed." Section 1208, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1040), says that: "The report of said commissioners may be reviewed by the court in which the proceedings are had, or written exceptions, filed by either party; * * * and the court shall make such order therein as right and justice may require, and may order a new appraisalment, upon good cause shown. Such new appraisalment shall, at the request of either party, be made by a jury under the supervision of the court as in an ordinary case of inquiry of damages." The record shows that respondent did file his exceptions to the commissioners' report, and asked therein that "said report, as to him, may be set aside, and that a jury trial may be awarded him, and his damages inquired into by a jury and assessed to him by a jury." Appellant contends that, before any jury trial can be had in such case, the record must show affirmatively that the court set aside the commissioners' report, and that until set aside it is still in force, and that the record does not show in this case that the report was set aside. This assignment goes to a jurisdictional record matter, for, if appellant's contention is correct, then, until the report of the commissioners was set aside by a formal order, that report remained in full force and effect, and no jury could be called to assess defendant's damages. The point, going to the jurisdiction of the court to order a jury trial, can therefore be considered, whether or not there was a motion in arrest.

(1) The appellant's abstract shows this record entry: "Now at this day it is ordered by the court that the report of the commissioners in the above-entitled cause be in all things confirmed except as to defendants J. S. Wyatt and C. E. McKinney." This was a sufficient order setting aside the report of the commissioners as to J. S. Wyatt, the respondent. It is a formal record order refusing to confirm that report as to him, so appellant is mistaken as to the fact, and its abstract shows the mistake.

(2) But there was no need of any order formally setting aside the report. When respondent filed his exceptions to the commissioners' report and asked for a jury to assess his damages, he was entitled to a jury as a matter of right. In another branch of this same case (Railroad v. Woodard), upon this appellant's appeal from the judgment awarding damages to C. E. McKinney, it was said by Brace, C. J., for the court in banc (193 Mo., loc. cit. 661, 92 S. W. 470): "On filing his exceptions the respondent had the constitutional right to have his damages assessed by a jury, and the court had no discretion in the matter. The calling a jury to assess his damages was such order 'as justice and right required.' Article 12, § 4, Const. 1875; Railroad v. McGrew, 113 Mo. 390, 21 S. W. 201; Railroad v. Story, 96 Mo. 611, 10 S. W. 203." That decision is conclusive of this assignment in this case.

4. The next assignment is that the verdict is general, and that "there should have been a verdict assessing the amount of damages to each tract." The railroad passes through land in the south half of the northeast quarter of section 16, and in the north half of the southeast quarter and the southwest quarter of section 19, both in township 22. It will be seen that the land in section 16 is something over a mile from the nearest land in section 19. It will also be seen that land in two quarter sections of section 19 is described. The petition states that appellant "needs and seeks to acquire, for public use and purposes aforesaid, the several tracts of land, * * * described as follows: Parcel 7. One hundred feet in width in a general northeasterly and southwesterly direction, * * * through and upon the south half of the northeast quarter of section 16, township 22, which is owned or claimed by J. S. Wyatt. * * * Parcel 9. One hundred feet in width in a general northeasterly and southwesterly direction, * * * through and upon the north half of the southeast quarter of section 19, and lot 1 of the southwest quarter of section 19, township 22, which is owned or claimed by J. S. Wyatt." The petition nowhere asks for an assessment of damages to each tract separately, nor do respondent's exceptions. The jury returned this verdict, as shown by the record proper: "We, the jury, find the issues for the defendant, J. S. Wyatt, and assess his damages at the sum of eight hundred dollars. J. J. Bradshaw, foreman."

As a general rule, where there are several counts in a petition, each stating a different cause of action, there should be a separate finding on each. Cramer v. Barmon, 193 Mo. 329, 91 S. W. 1038; Brownwell v. Railroad, 47 Mo. 239; Clark v. Railroad, 36 Mo., loc. cit. 212; Russell v. Railroad, 154 Mo. 428, 55 S. W. 454. But that is not the rule where the several counts relate to the same transaction. State v. Pitts, 58 Mo. 556; State v. Jennings, 81 Mo. 185, 51 Am. Rep. 236; State v. Bean, 21 Mo. 267; State v. McCue, 39 Mo. 112. If the two tracts described in the petition are segregated and are separate and distinct tracts, then there should have been a separate finding of the damages done to each; but, if they were parts of one farm, then a general verdict was not improper, though the two tracts described in the petition are, as described, over a mile apart. Suppose the land in section 16 and that in section 19 are parts of one contiguous farm, owned by respondent, and are used by him in connection therewith; and suppose there is a perennial spring of great value in the northeast quarter of section 16, which, before this railroad was constructed, was used in connection with this farm extending southwesterly to section 19; and suppose that the railroad, as constructed, cuts off this perennial spring from all the rest of the farm—would that be a damage simply to the 80-acre tract in section 16 through which the railroad runs, or would it be a damage to the whole farm of which that 80 is a part? In such a case a general verdict would not be amiss. If it be said that we have no right to make such a supposition, by what course of reasoning can appellant have us assume that these tracts are not a part of one farm and used in connection with it? Appellant would have us assume, as a fact, without any evidence we can consider, on appeal, that, as the petition says its railroad runs through two tracts of land belonging to defendant, those tracts are entirely segregated and are not used as a part of one farm, and that therefore a judgment founded on a general verdict cannot stand. We cannot so assume. We do not know whether or not these tracts are a part of one farm and used in connection with it, and cannot know that fact, and therefore we cannot assume that the verdict is wrong. We must consider that the form of the verdict is objected to for the first time on appeal. So much of the record as we can consider does not show any objection was made to it at the trial. The record shows a motion in arrest was timely filed; but that motion is incorporated in what purports to be a bill of exceptions alone, and that bill we have already ruled we cannot consider, and hence we cannot look at the motion in arrest. As this record is presented for our consideration, we are asked to convict the trial court of error on a point that court was given no opportunity to correct. It has been the uniform ruling of this court that the trial court must be given an opportunity, by specific assignment, to correct its own errors, and, if not given that opportunity, they will not be considered on appeal. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Stephens, 169 Mo. 1, 68 S. W. 903; Coffey v. City of Carthage, 200 Mo., loc. cit. 629, 98 S. W. 562; Woody v. Railroad, 104 Mo. App. 678, 78 S. W. 658; State v. Lynn, 169 Mo. 664, 70 S. W. 127. In such case every presumption will be indulged in favor of the proceedings in the trial court.

In Wells v. Adams, 88 Mo. App., loc. cit. 228, it is said: "When a petition contains several causes of action in as many counts, and there is a verdict of the jury or a finding of the court sitting as a jury, for plaintiff, every consideration of propriety requires that there should be a verdict or finding on each cause of action or count. * * * A general judgment in such case will, on a proper motion for that purpose, be arrested. * * * But in the present case the record does not show that the defendants filed any motion in arrest of judgment. An imperfect verdict or finding, or a neglect to find on all the issues, can be taken advantage of only by a motion in arrest." To the same effect are Grier v. Strother, 111 Mo. App. 386, 85 S. W. 976, and Railroad v. Iron Works Co., 117 Mo. App. 167, 94 S. W. 726. The office of a motion in arrest is to direct the attention of the court to errors apparent on the face of the record proper (State v. Goehler, 193 Mo., loc. cit. 181, 91 S. W. 947); and no defect in the verdict can be considered on appeal unless there was a motion in arrest assigning such defect as error (Finney v. State, to Use, 9 Mo. 635; Stout v. Calver, 6 Mo. 256, 35 Am. Dec. 438; Davidson v. Peck, 4 Mo. 445; Griffin v. Samuel, 6 Mo. 50; State v. De Witt, 186 Mo., loc. cit. 68, 84 S. W. 956).

Without any knowledge of the facts except such as appear from the petition, verdict, and judgment, we cannot say that the verdict in this case is erroneous on its face. If it were erroneous, under the facts as developed by the evidence, objection should have been made to it upon its return by the jury, and if that had been done the trial court had ample power to require the jury to make a finding of damages as to each tract, and if it had refused to have the verdict corrected, and objection and exception had been made to its ruling, and that ruling made a ground of the motion in arrest, we could consider the ruling on this appeal; but the trial court having been given no opportunity to correct the error, if any there was, we cannot convict it of error.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

STATE v. ELSCHINGER.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 23, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1092*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING.

An order extending the time for filing the bill of exceptions, made in vacation after the expiration of the time fixed by a prior order, is void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2857-2860; Dec. Dig. § 1092.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1092*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—FAILURE TO FILE IN TIME—EFFECT.

A bill of exceptions not filed within the time fixed cannot be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2847-2856; Dec. Dig. § 1092.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1144*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—AFFIRMANCE.

In the absence of bill of exceptions and of any error in the record proper, it will be presumed that the accused had a fair trial, and the judgment must be affirmed.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Geo. H. Williams, Judge.

Charles Elschinger was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Harry Walsh, for appellant. E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and Jas. T. Blair, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

GANTT, P. J. The defendant was indicted on the 19th day of March, 1908, by the grand jury of the city of St. Louis for murder in the first degree of Louisa Elschinger, his wife. On the 24th of March, 1908, the defendant was duly arraigned and entered his plea of not guilty, and the cause was continued to the next term of court. At the April term, 1908, he was put upon his trial and convicted of murder in the first degree, and his punishment assessed at imprisonment in the penitentiary for life. Motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment were duly filed and overruled, and the defendant sentenced in conformity with the verdict. From that sentence he has appealed to this court. On May 5, 1908, defendant was given 90 days in which to file his bill of exceptions. No bill of exceptions was filed within the time granted, and it appears that on September 5, 1908, the following order was made and entered upon the record of the circuit court: "Saturday, September 5, 1908. State of Missouri, v. Charles Elschinger. Murder in the first degree. Now on this day, it appearing from the affidavit filed by the attorney for the above-named defendant, filed this 5th day of September, 1908, that the clerk of this court inadvertently failed to enter an order of this court made on the 5th day of August, 1908, granting additional time in which to file bill of exceptions in this cause, it is now hereby ordered by the court, subject to the action of the court, upon the application for amendment of record concerning the bill of exceptions herein, that the following order be entered nunc pro tunc and for the said date to conform with the facts and proceedings in this cause, to wit: It is this day ordered by the court that the time heretofore granted defendant to file his bill of exceptions herein, on or before the 5th day of August, 1908, be extended up to the 5th day of October, 1908, in the October term, 1908, of said court, and that when so filed the same to have the same force and effect as if filed on the 5th day of August, 1908." What purports to be the bill of exceptions in the cause was filed on October 5, 1908. If the bill of exceptions shall be considered as a part of the record, it appears that several of the jurors, upon their voir dire examination, stated that under no circumstances would they return a verdict assessing the death penalty. Thereupon, on the challenge of the state, these jurors were excused, and the defendant excepted to the action of the court.

The evidence on behalf of the state tended to show that the defendant, for about three months prior to the 6th of March, 1908, the date of the homicide, had been conducting a saloon at 738 South Broadway, in the city of St. Louis. The defendant and the deceased were married in November, 1907, and at the time of the killing of defendant's wife they were living in rooms above the defendant's saloon. They each had children by former marriages. The defendant had invested $800 of the money received by his wife from the life insurance of her former husband in his saloon business. For some time before the date on which the killing occurred, defendant and deceased had not lived harmoniously. Different witnesses testified to assaults which the defendant had made upon his wife. It seems that differences arose between the defendant and the deceased concerning the repayment to her of her money which defendant was using in his saloon business. About two days before the homicide, the defendant's wife, apparently in an effort to recover a portion of her money from her husband, took $220 from the saloon. This precipitated a quarrel, in which the defendant threatened to put his wife out of the house, but refused to permit her to remove her furniture. There was also evidence that on this occasion the defendant assaulted and beat his wife, and on the following morning another difficulty arose, in which the defendant again assaulted his wife. On the day before the homicide, the defendant and his wife engaged in an altercation in their rooms, in which it appears that the deceased assaulted the defendant with some cooking utensils. They were separated by the bartender, who took the defendant down in the saloon, and they were followed by the deceased, who attempted to attack the defendant with a cleaver. She was disarmed, and the pair engaged in a fight, which resulted in the arrest of both. This was about 9 o'clock of the night of March 5th. The evidence tended to show that the deceased, at this time, bore numerous marks of violence on her person. She gave bond and was released at once; but the authorities held the defendant, despite the fact that bond had been given for him, for fear he would renew the trouble. On the next morning the defendant was released, when he said, "I'll fix her for this." This was about 5:45 on the morning that his wife was killed. At 7:30 on the same morning, defendant secured, and had ready, a moving van, and he and his wife engaged in a heated argument about his right to remove the saloon stock. Advised by the officer that both parties would be arrested if the disturbance did not cease, the defendant left the saloon and proceeded to a pawnshop on Sixth street and attempted to purchase a revolver, but was unsuccessful. He returned to his saloon, drank some more whisky, and he and deceased went upstairs to their apartments. In a few moments thereafter shots were heard in the rooms above the saloon. When the officers, attracted by the shots, reached the apartments, they met defendant coming out of the parlor with pistol in hand. He was at once disarmed, and saying, "Louisa is dead, and I am too," fell to the floor. His wife was lying in the parlor and dead when the officers arrived. The pistol bullet had entered her head just below or behind the left ear. The defendant was entirely uninjured. Three bullet holes in the ceiling were discovered. The defendant made a statement, in which he said that, when he went upstairs just before the shooting, he went into the front room, and his wife came in and started after him with a butcher knife in her hand, and she took the gun, and he tried to get it from her, and she fired one shot at him, and that is all he remembered.
